SPORTS

Page 8 THE GUARDSMAN Thurs. June 5, 1969

Football and Soccer Head List of Fall Sports Lineup

By Pat Chan

With the end of another school year rapidly drawing to a close, all thoughts turn to September and—football season.

It's been three years since a conference football title has been won by City College and to head coach "Dutch" Elston this is tantamount to wifebeating.

Next fall Ram fans can expect a great offensive line with three top-flight linemen returning in All-GGC choice Monty Consani, Dan Parrish and Gerald Vanger. All three are thinking of transfering to four-year schools though (as if anyone at City College wasn't).

If they go Ken Despotakis, Ev Hammond, Gordon Canapa and Hilton Dillion will have to carry the load.

Returning defensive hopefuls include Carlton Thomas, Crayton Cassell, George Tinsley and Dillion. Elsewhere on defense will be All-GGC linebacker Gerald Dyson, Eddie Perkins, Jim Anderson and Vince Anderson.

In the secondary will be the Rams' top three interceptors, Mike Baines (5), Eddie Perkins and Dyson (3 apiece).

Leading the list of returning receivers will be two-way end Jim Tyree, Mike Baines (who snagged seven passes) and Paul Bolton.

CCSF will really be hurting in the offensive backfield. Gone are two-year vet QB Tom Mayfield, league rushing champ, Joe Bell, Doyle Miller (604 yards, 6.5 ypc) and Willie Lewis.

Quarterbacks Dan Martin, Chuck Ferrera and runners Ron Jones, Steve Jordan and Jim McFadden form the list of returning backfield candidates.

Due to conference rules there will be no spring training. First workouts begin in early September.

But football won't be the only sport on the fall schedule. Soccer, the college's strongest sport will be back.

In the past 20 years CCSF has taken 19 titles! Last fall was the first time the Rams had ever failed to win the state title in the six years it has been offered in competition.

San Mateo edged City College for the conference title with a 6-0-2 mark to CCSF's 6-1-1.

Among the returning veterans will be such talent as Clive Bulter, Ahmad Helmy, Jose Tovar, Harry Best, Paul Bozotsky and Peter Bozotsky.

Home games are again slated for Balboa stadium, the only ball park in America built and used ONLY for soccer. Fans should consult the GUARDSMAN next year for the schedule.

Elsewhere on the sports calendar next fall is cross country. Coach Lou Vasquez has four top long-distance men on this year's track team for a main part of the team. Jim Tracy, winner of the two-mile at the All-GGC meet this year, Humberto Hernandez, winner of the mile run at the All-GGC meet, along with Klaus Hofmann and Dave Power are the four veterans.

Water polo also returns for its second season of existence at the college.

The game got off to an auspicious start, with not a single home game (due to a lack of facilities) and a 0-10 record.

Led by Rich Glass, Dave Nelson and Bill Carter, the team hopes to avenge the indignities suffered last year.

Ramette Tracksters Close Year

Track season for the women at City College has just come to an end. But not with a bang! The unknown girls in skimpy Red and White running suits left a lasting impression at the San Jose and Humbolt State meets in more ways than one.

Good looking uniforms with good-looking legs aren't the only Women's track team attribute.

Cylia Rico took a second in the high jump at the San Jose and Humbolt meets and a third in the long jumps at both meets.

Georgia Newsome, an attractive sprinter took a fourth in the 50 yd. dash at San Jose and warmed up enough to take a fourth in the 50 and 100 yd. dashes at Humbolt.

Georgia Newsome, Cylia Rico, Martha Garcia and Carolyn Harper blistered a fast 53.0 in the 440 relay to finish in second place at the San Jose meet.

AMS Sportsnite, Athletic Banquet Cap Sports Year

The Associated Men Students' past season of activities ended in the true spirit of athletic competition as an assorted number of hoopsters and boxers battled for honors at AMS Sportsnight on May 22 at the Men's Gym.

The Black Students' Union easily burned the Alpha Phi Epsilon frat, 66-24 in the intramural championship basketball game.

In boxing individual trophies were awarded to the winners of the six scheduled matches held that night. The winners were Jimmy Baggatt, Donald Benally, Claude Moreau, Tom Duckett, Patrick Grimesy and Al Howard.

An estimated crowd of 200 fans were on hand to see the action.

Highlight of the evening were the presentation of the team Most Valuable Player awards. MVP's were given to Jesse Arterberry (basketball), John Portoni (baseball), Vince Ainsely (track), Steve Lucchesi (tennis), Rich Glass (swimming) and Ken Kundert (golf).

Everett's
of
San Francisco
STYLE SHOP FOR MEN
1418 OCEAN AVENUE - PHONES: 586-0323 & 586-5605
RAZOR CUTTING IS OUR SPECIALTY
Three Leading Barbers To Serve You
The Warrior Customers With Appointment
Jeff Mullins
Jimmy King
Clyde Lee
Bob Lewis
Regular Cut $3.00
Razor Style Cut 4.00
Children's Cut 2.50
(25c off with A.S. Card and appointment)
SAN FRANCISCO WARRIORS' TICKET OFFICE

Baseballers Repeat '68 Disaster, Finish At 8-13

By Pat Chan

It was a long, hard and disappointing trail the baseball team had to follow this year.

After a disasterous 1-6 start had knocked the Rams out of contention for the rest of the season it became a struggle simply to reach the .500 mark. But even in this the horsehiders failed.

By the season's end CCSF had repeated 1968's 8-13 disappointment, tying for fifth place with Merritt.

No doubt a big cause of the Rams' poor start were the hitting problems experienced by Jim Smith at the beginning of the year. After a slow start Smith came on strong, though, finishing with a hardy .285 BA and 11 RBI's.

It was exactly the opposite case with Manny Berrios. Coming out of the starting gate like a racehorse, he appeared to be a serious contender for All-league honors. A batting slump late in the season curtailed these hopes.

Even so he still had a .258 BA along with leading the club in RBI's (18), extra base hits (8), doubles (5) and homeruns (2).

Tom Mayfield and Dave Kline were the top two men on the attack for City College all season long with .324 and .322.

Andy Fracchia and Hans Vigil finished up with .264 and .225 BAs.

As is the consequence with second division clubs the Ram pitchers took a beating.

John Portoni had to absorb a 2-7 record along with a 3.12 ERA while Rich Heinz earned a 3-5 log with a 3.12 ERA. Fireman Irv Jones didn't rack up a decision all year but earned a 2.79 ERA.

Rick Cole was the Rams' top first year performer this past season. The ex-Polytechnic fireballer fanned 4 batters in only 34 2-3's innings on his way to a 2-1 record. He had a 3.12 ERA.

Next year Cole along with glove man Rick Escalambre will form the blunt of the club.

SCHOOL YEAR

1969 — 1970

MISSING
ISSUE (S)

O. J. Simpson: 'Young, Gifted and Black!'

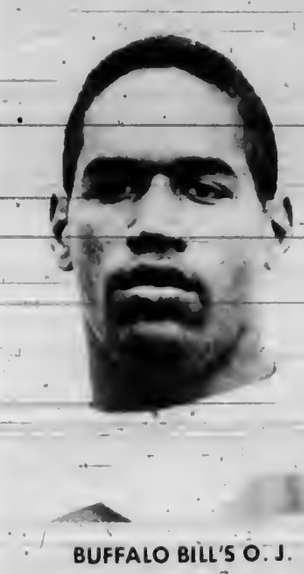
By Mike Chan
(Sports Writer)

It's natural for any craftsman to talk about his trade to his friends and fellow colleagues. In the world of pro football, Buffalo Bill Halfback Orenthal James Simpson, more commonly known as O.J., practices his craft every Sunday. Like most skilled craftsmen he loves to talk about his livelihood. Proving this point to be a fact O.J., two weeks ago at his old alma mater, Galileo High School, conversed freely with friends and the press about football and O.J. Simpson.

BLACK ADVANTAGE

On Black opportunities O.J. stated "It's an advantage today to be black, there's pressure in a lot of areas and if a Black has something on the ball they'll (the company) hire him over a white. I expect this to happen more in the future."

Considering his future O.J. said he'll be covering some college football games for ABC-TV, but he also intends to do a movie for ABC in the offseason. O.J., saying that he would "like to act" has already looked over a number of scripts. He also expressed the hope of participating in a number of TV serials as a guest star. Simpson has already appeared in "The Name of the Game," "Ironside," "Marcus Welby, M.D." and "Peyton Place."



After his football career, O.J. is thinking of going into youth work with the aid of San Francisco and Los Angeles businessmen.

'BROADWAY' JOE

Turning to the subject of his true livelihood, football, O.J. gave out an array of personal impressions.

A close friend of Joe Namath, O.J. said he "thinks a hell of a lot about Joe" and that "Joe is the most honest guy . . . on what's on his mind."

Going on about Namath, O.J. said that contrary to what's in the papers Namath is well-liked in the pros. O.J. points out that Namath still has "great potential" but is wasting it because he's a "showboat."

BUFFALO BILL'S O. J.

Simpson is also of the opinion that "Joe coaches the whole team." Futhermore O.J. said that every New York Jet has the utmost respect for Joe and would do whatever he ordered on the field.

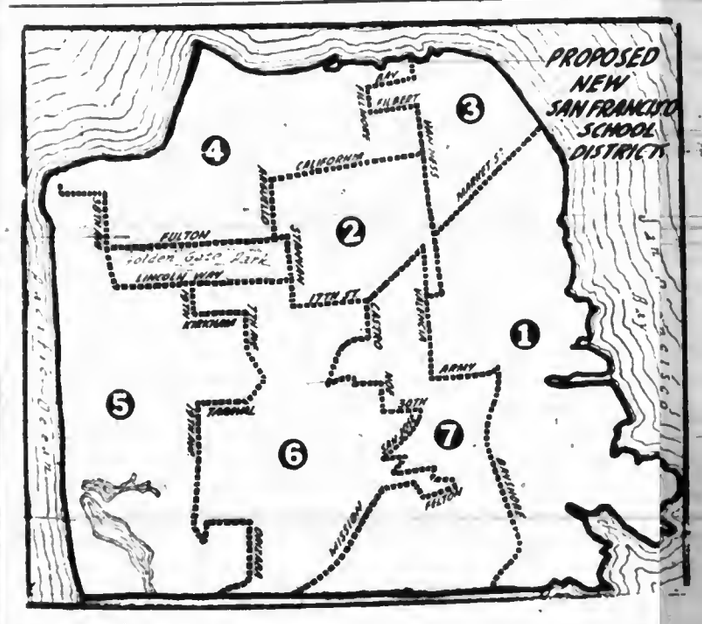
COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Off the Namath issue and into college football, O.J. said that every coach in the Pacific Eight wanted to coach one team in this conference since this college had cleaned up on all of the talent during recruiting. O.J. continued by saying that the only reason why this team wasn't number one in the league was the coach.

THE 'BILLS'

Commenting on "Earthquake" Bill Enyart, the Bill's No. 2 draft choice, O.J. said "he's a great player and fellow who somehow fits the old stereotype of non-intellectual athletes despite being a Phi Beta Kappa."

Concerning the paying public O.J. notes there's quite a difference in fans east and west of the Mississippi. The difference, he points out is the way Easterns take their games. He recalls that Buffalo fans jumped the Bills' kicker and sent him to the hospital for a year after missing an important field goal against Oakland. O.J., of course has not recently seen Kezar's beer can wielding or the batteries of anthropological phenomenas.



Stacked with fine personnel the Bills need to correct their game-losing mistakes which stem from a complicated offense and defense. Speaking from a position of knowledge O.J. said that each play is well near the length of a paragraph and that mistakes will happen until the system is down pat.

Calling it a day O.J. departed from Galileo after having the school stadium renamed in his honor and witnessing the retirement of his old uniform number 28.

The Guardsman

Official Publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 69 NUMBER 6 — SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNA — Wed., Oct. 29, 1969

DISTRICT DISTRIBUTION

1. 55% Caucasian
   28% Black
   15% Spanish Surname
   1% Chinese
   1% Other
2. 61% Caucasian
   30% Black
   5% Spanish Surname
   3% Chinese
   1% Others
3. 66% Caucasian
   30% Chinese
   2% Spanish Surname
   1% Black
   1% Others
4. 94% Caucasian
   3% Black
   2% Spanish
   1% Others
5. 96% Caucasian
   2% Black
   1% Spanish Surname
   1% Others

Propositions P&Q To Decide Board Of Education Makeup

By Jack Ruiz (News Editor)

Two controversial Propositions on the November ballot, designed to revise the present system of selecting members to serve on the San Francisco Board of Education, have caused a city-wide debate on their merits by interested citizen groups of the city of San Francisco.

The tandem propositions are: 1 — Proposition P, which is a declaration of policy — Shall the Board of Education be elective?

Proposition Q will amend the City Charter Section 134, to provide for the election of Members of the Board of Education by District. It will divide the city and county into seven districts and established boundaries.

Presently, the Board members are appointed by the Mayor and are subject to a confirmatory vote by the citizens of San Francisco. Once they are selected under this system, they are not legally responsible to the Mayor the Board of Supervisors, or even the people.

PROPOSITION P

Proponents of Proposition P claim that only a Board elected directly by the people will respond to the needs and interests of the people and adopt acceptable educational policies for the benefit and best interest of the people.

Opponents of the propostions are not against Proposition P, but are up in arms over the zoning of the seven districts by "Q," they claim that it effectively screens out minorities from the Board of Education, and prevents a voter from voting in his own district.

"I am in favor of Proposition P because of its elective policy," said Mayor Alioto. He said, however, that the district zoning should be left to the Board, but that the present city-wide systems of districts be retained. "I am against "Q" because it leaves itself open to legal action by its discriminatory district set-up," said Alioto.

PROPOSITION Q

Another generally unknown bit of information is that the proposed amendment of the Charter by Q would increase the annual cost of city government by $33,600 a year. Based on the 1969-70 assessment roll, this estimated annual increase is equivalent to fifteen hundredths (.15) cents in the tax

continued on Page 6

Students Oppose War in S.C. Poll

BY JIM BROWNING

A campus wide poll of 1250 students, sponsored by Student Council, has produced these surprising results:

- While most City College Students voted over-whelmingly (by a 6 to 1 margin) against supporting the Vietnam War, less than a half of those surveyed said that they would participate in the November 14 strike against the war.
- Sixty one percent favored immediate unilateral withdrawal from Vietnam.
- The current grape strike between growers and the Farm Workers Union failed to receive a clear majority of votes, with 8 per cent stating no opinion.
- A large group (83 per cent) voiced dissatisfaction with the present arrangement of the campus bookstore.

The poll, conducted prior to Midterms and released last week, also surveyed students on campus police, parking permits and student body cards.

On the question of the Vietnam War, students were asked, Do you support the Vietnam War?

1003 (83 per cent) responded by saying no, with 15 per cent (180 students) said that they did with only 2 per cent stating no opinion.

Students were then asked, Do you favor immediate unilateral withdrawal from Vietnam?

Sixty-one per cent answered in the affirmative with 33 per cent voting no.

Will you participate in the student strike against the Vietnam War on November 14?

Forty eight per cent replied no they wouldn't with 45 per cent saying they would and 7 per cent voicing no opinion on the subject.

(A recent national poll by George Gallup shows that 75 per cent of the American public now believes that our involvement in Vietnam is a mistake, while a majority of citizens — 58 per cent — favor New York Senator Charles Goodell's proposal to withdraw all US troops from Vietnam by the end of 1970.

Gallup also reports that 40 per cent of the public favors an immediate withdrawal of troops from Vietnam.)

On the grape strike 49 per cent supported it, 43 per cent opposed it and 8 per cent had no opinion.

Are you satisfied with the present management, polleies and prices of the A.S. Bookstore?

A whopping 83 per cent said that they were dissatisfied with the present bookstore arrangement with only 15 per cent stating that they were happy with it.

On the matter of campus police, students were asked, Should Student Council have some control over campus police?

Sixty nine per cent wanted at least some control over the police while 26 per cent said they didn't.

The students were also asked at what price would they buy an Associated Student Body Card.

Fifty three per cent of those answering favored buying cards priced at $1.00 while 83 per cent said they wouldn't buy a card priced at $5.00 or more.

Should students have to buy an A.S. Card in order to get a parking permit?

Fifty nine per cent replied no with 38 per cent stating that students should.

According to Dave Endo, A.S. vice president, the purpose of the poll was "to find out just what the students of this college were thinking and to make them aware of Student Council."

The Guardsman Editorial Page

Weekly Publication of the Students of the Journalism Department of City College of San Francisco
RAYMOND S. GIN, Editor
Circ. 184

Vol. 69, No. 6 | OCTOBER 29, 1969 | Page 2

Contact Lens

What Do You Think Should Be Done About Alcatraz?

Safari Choy, English Major

We should turn it into another Las Vegas — that way money will be coming to San Francisco. Making it into an educational institution is good too since educational facilities are needed in that area; there are students who live in the Treasure Island area who are bused here because there are no schools in that area.

Bob Fabie, General Education Major

I think that Alcatraz should be made into an educational institution (as proposed in The Guardsman). It should be a center of higher learning, especially in the finer arts, where those attending don't have to pay any tuition. As culturally oriented as it is in San Francisco should favor an idea like this. The Governor and Mayor should also favor.

Florencia Reeves, Nursing Major

How about making it into a nursing lab? We need the space for education — any type of education. The City claims that it needs revenue from Alcatraz, but I don't see the point of a space museum. It shouldn't be made into a prison; if they educated people and reformed prisoners, we wouldn't need any prisons.

Jack Falik, Optometry Major

It should be a tourist attraction consisting of an amusement park with exhibits, a museum, and rides. It would be impractical to make it into an educational institution because students would have to commute by boat, and the streetcar situation is bad enough as it is. Alcatraz is a part of San Francisco so it should be used for the people of the city.

By Lavine Lee and Paul Thiele

This Week From Student Council

Time To Get It Together!

By David Eudo, A.S. Vice-President

Recently, the members of our Student Council attended a day long conference in Menlo Park, California. This conference was a gathering of various Northern California Junior Colleges. The ideal of the conference was to find common goals among campuses and ways of implementing them. However, realistically the conference was another example of what happens when individual factions lack cooperation.

In history, conflicts have occasionally led to the "conception" of reform and change. When it finally came to actualizing reform, however, it was through cooperation that progress was achieved. (Note: the recent split of the national SDS; friction between SDS and BSU; the continual arrival of new ethnic groups exclusively seeking benefits for "their" people.) I cannot deny (nor can any common sense thinker) that reform is sorely needed in our society. My point is that lack of cooperation is a prime obstacle to human reform.

It is vital that all students realize the ultimate value of cooperation and mutual support. It is in this spirit that we invite all students, faculty members, and administrators to the Student Council meetings (held Monday and Wednesday in E-101, 12 noon.) Our desire is to carry on a level of business which is relevant to the needs of students today. At City College the student has many channels open to him in order to express his views. The Guardsman and Free Critic are "open" to the voice of the student as well as other campus publications.

The student "poll" we recently ran brought some interesting responses. Apparently, students at City College are not very satisfied with the present service of the bookstore (the Guardsman has printed a full story on the bookstore issue). Of the thousand or so students who responded to the poll, a vast majority favored an end to the Vietnam War. A smaller number indicated they would actively support the November peace activities. We plan to run another poll as soon as possible to again find out about the student "mind." Students are also welcome to see Councilmen in E-109 to discuss college affairs.

Campus Line-up

October 29 (Wednesday)
Hell Week
Student Council, Noon, E101
Water Polo-CSM, 3:30 p.m.—Here.
Drama Production, "Midsummer Night's Dream," 8 p.m. L.T.

October 30 (Thursday)
Hell Week
Cross Country-Merritt, 2 p.m. San Jose.
Water Polo-Chabot, 3:30 p.m. There.
Drama Production, "Midsummer Night's Dream," 8 p.m., L.T.

October 31 (Friday)
Hell Week
Drama Production, "Midsummer Night's Dream," 8 p.m., L.T.
Dance, Sponsored by STAR, 9 - 12 p.m., Smith Hall.

November 3 (Monday)
Student Council, Noon, E101

November 4 (Tuesday)
All Clubs Meet, College Hour.
Concert, The Denny Zeitlin Trio, 11 a.m., L.T.

Social Critic

By JIM BROWNING

(The following letter is in response to my column last week which criticized U.S. involvement in Vietnam. Because Mr. Johnson launches a vicious attack on me, I will withhold my reply until next week.)

MR. BROWNING:

Your column on the Vietnam Moratorium (October 22) will go down in history as being another communist plot against the American way of life.

Your attack on America's roll in Vietnam was certainly untrue, unfounded and smelled with the ugly odor of communist inspired lies and propaganda.

Every 5 year old child knows the true reason why our country is in Vietnam — so why do you persist in spreading your filthy lies?

Who are you to blast Reagan, Nixon and Agnew — three of this countries greatest leaders — just because they have the guts to stand up and speak out against you rotten commies?

The fact that you have a forum — and a very small one at that — to preach your propaganda to, shows just how sick part of our society really is.

—I am deeply shocked that this college has even allowed you — a devoted communist — in our school let alone write a column for the school paper.

It is indeed unfortunate that the FBI or CIA hasn't investigated your political activities and sent you back to Communist Russia where you belong, before you destroy America.

You should be permently barred — along with all the other communists in this country — from spreading your filthy destructive trash to the innocent youths of this country.

ALFRED JOHNSON

Letters to the Editor

UNCLENCH THAT FIST

Dear Editor:

I don't know what your concept or idea of peace is, but I feel that peace is not a clenched fist. A clenched fist strikes in hatred and anger.

The "fight" for Peace should not be fought with a clenched fist but rather with open minds, understanding hearts and an outstretched hand for your brother.

In this manner, I say Right on, for Brotherhood, for Love, for Peace!

Elba R. Sanchez

A CONNOISSEUR SPEAKS

Sir:

Having eaten the food in the U. S. Navy, tasted the starchy substances served to students at the U. C. dorms, and even matched my intestines against the burnt offerings served in the county jail, I now find my stomach finally meeting defeat at the hands of the Hotel and Restaurant students of Smith Hall. After two semesters of eating swill, I feel my silence can no longer be contained.

This school has the most disgusting food I have ever tasted! Not only is the flavor felonious, but upon inspection, one begins to wonder about when and with what it was made. I once even found a piece of bone in my spaghetti! I have tasted rancid custard that must have been at least a week old. This is what we are supposed to eat?

Not only is the food unappetizing, but the people who serve you don't. Agreed, they are willing to put the food (and I use the term loosely) on a plate for you, but have you ever tried to get them to refill the ice container? Or put out more rolls and butter? Impossible.

Then they have the audacity to charge outrageous prices. When you consider that the workers are not paid and the instructors are on the school payroll you begin to wonder just what the overhead of the operation is? How do they have the gall to put a 75 cent price tag on their lunches.

Congress is passing truth in packaging laws, why can't we have the same thing here? Until the food improves, I feel we have the right to know when the food was bought, when it was made, and what it was made from. Also, they should publish a list of the hotels and restaurants in which the graduates are employed, so that we can avoid them.

Thank You
Harvey Rappaport
I. D. No. E2398

THE BRASS KNUCKLE

by Brian Chin

Guardsman Staff

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students in the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304 Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

FALL 1969

EDITOR IN CHIEF — Raymond S. Gin
Editorial Asst. — Jim Browning
News Editor — Jack Ku
Managing Editor — Lavine Lee
Feature Editor — Gerry Engler, Marc Kovacs
Sports Editor — Pat Chan
Advisor — Mary Blair

Reporters: Mike Chan, Mike Colgan, Jim Furr, Abe Gunther, Joe Keale, Jeff Schanker, Paul Thiele.
Advertising: Randy Flynn, Charlene Low, Ed Lu, Lee Stewart, TY Wang.
Photographers: Larry Bozell, Jules Classens, Tony Ragadio
Guardsman Research Staff: Albert Wong, Norma Fong, Howard Jor, Raymond Jang, Shirley Mor, and Martin Wong.

The Air Pollution Plague

"Welcome Carbon Monoxide! Hello Sulfur Dioxide!"

By RAY GIN

When man is confronted with a mild turnabout in his environment, he is expertly adaptable. But when survival becomes extremely rudimentary, can man withstand the change?

These were some of the many questions that kept running through my head when I witnessed the American Museum of Natural History's centennial exhibit "Can Man Survive?", this past summer in New York.

The commemorative display revealed to true-light the frightening fact that the environment has changed so drastically that the very survival of species is in doubt. Man's survival is evident. But the irksome problem is the quality of survival.

PEOPLE'S LOBBY

A non-profit citizens group called People's Lobby Inc., based in Hollywood, has taken into it's hands to fight the problem of environmental pollution head on. By circulating state-wide petitions calling for an overhaul in enforcement and legislation against all varieties of air, land, and water pollution, this group hopes to place two iniatives on the upcoming 1970 California election ballot.

The first would place the burden of erradicating all forms of pollution on the sources involved, rather than on tax-supported control and enforcement agencies of the state.

The other is seeking an amendment to the State Health and Safety code. This would give voters a chance to approve or reject strict new measures that would give all polluters only five years, on a scaled rate, to end all emissions and discharges of contaminants.

The local chapter of the vigorious organization is called Citizen Against Air Pollution Inc. and is located in San Jose. This group is in direct opposition to the State funded Bay area Air Pollution Control District which has incorporated many lax laws. The required number of signatures for one of the iniatives is 520,276 registered voters (8 percent of the State's registered voters) and the other is 325,178.

AUTOMOBILE'S ROLE

It is at once ironic and sad that people should clamor for clean air, the essential to life. One of the areas this group seeks to control is the automobile emission of pollutants. With the problem of people over-population, we face the cancerous multiplication of cars. There are over 80 million autos on the road today.

The poisonous exhaust fumes threaten to hover and engulf every major metropolitan city in the United States. Driving a typical car in city traffic for an hour pours a pound or more of Carbon Monoxide in the air. As a frightening example, the museum's exhibit had simulated busses and cars emit a stream of fume while flashing pictures on a screen showing the poisonous pink clouds overshadowing the entire city of New York. The fearless voice on the soundtrack relates that "there are enough cars, trucks, and buses driven in N.Y. City every work day to make 8 million pounds of it."

Within one of the initatives, the Statue revision, a special section on vehicles is included to spell out the specific and intricate engineering solutions to clean up a polluting vehicle. It states that no new petroleum-powered vehicle cars are to be sold or driven in California without meeting strict, new standards.

SOOTFALL ON CITY

But another culprit in the fight against clean air is the industry. One can admire the inches of snow on Mt. Rainier but how many people realize the number of inches of soot that fell on a city last year. Chief among the elements used in creating heat energy is coal and in the U.S. last year, we used an equivalent of 10 tons in heat energy. This black snow has also invaded the city and it isn't just limited to certain season. The sootfall can be readily washed of our hands and faces but try to clean it off the walls of your lungs.

However hopeless it may seem, the public fight against the public utility is not futile. Public pressure in one major city pressured the power company to burn a different kind of fuel oil, reducing sulfur dioxide pollution it caused by one-half. Public pressure can be very effective but the worth and effect of this communal needling can only be known if it is done before destruction strikes, certainly not after.

(For clean air come up to the Guardsman office S-304 and sign the two petitions. Registered voters only please.)

Symphony Discounts

Conductor Seiji Osawa

Student tickets for the San Francisco Symphony will be on sale for two more days.

All unsold tickets will be returned to the Opera House Box office for re-sale at regular prices (which are 76 percent higher) tomorrow, Thursday, October 30th.

This season, the opening program, on December 3, will be a Beethoven Concert. Two other highlights for the season are, an All-Stravinsky concert (March 11, 1970), and when Mrs. Martin Luther King will narrate Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" honoring the Composer's 70th year. Other programs will commemorate the Beethoven Festival, Charles Ives, Xenakis and Imbrie.

Several tickets for the Orchestra seats are still available for the phenomenal price of $27.50 (all 22 concerts). For less expensive seats, Series A or Series B tickets are available.

These seasonal tickets are sold in E-207 from 8:30 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Emergency Loans Are Made, Only If Book Loans Are Repaid!

HELP US!
To Help You . . .

If you have a book loan and it's overdue, please stop by the Financial Aid Office, S-149. Maybe we can extend your present deadline or arrange for additional aid. We're open daily from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Ask for Charles or Joel

STUDY
MORE EFFECTIVELY
Triple your reading efficiency in six weekly 2½ hr. sessions or FULL TUITION IS REFUNDED

DON TERRELL'S READING SYSTEMS San Francisco Division

EMPHASIS: COMPREHENSION AND STUDY TECHNIQUES FOR STUDENTS

Don Terrell, former Director of the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Institutes in both Orange County and Santa Barbara, inaugurated his own reading improvement program to meet the more specific needs of students. Although every type of reading is included, organizational skills and study techniques are emphasized.

1. GUARANTEED RESULTS — Triple your reading speed with equal or better comprehension or you'll be given a full tuition refund.
2. LIFETIME ENROLLMENT—Refresher privileges at no extra cost, with class materials changed each six months.
3. SMALLER CLASSES—20-25 students.
4. NO MACHINES ARE USED.
5. TUITION—$125. A special $25 discount is available when tuition is paid by Lesson 1.

FALL CLASS SCHEDULE
NEW CLASSES:

SATURDAY	Nov. 1	9:30 A.M.
TUESDAY	Nov. 3	7:00 P.M.

MASTER CHARGE ACCEPTED

For further information call
LAKESIDE VILLAGE: 334-4970

We Carry
SIERRA CLUB PUBLICATIONS
As Well As Many Other BOOKS CARDS & POSTERS For Your SPIRITUAL NEEDS
As Well
As All Your Other School Needs
(Candy Too)

CALIFORNIA BOOK CO. LTD.
II PHELAN AVENUE

Swahili Destroys 'Ooga-Booga' Myth

By BiBi Elizabeth Wangari

BiBi (Miss) Elizabeth Wangari is the amiable instructor of the two existing Afro-American language courses, Swahili I and Swahili 10. Having been reared in Nairobi, Kenya, Bi-Bi Wangari received her B.A. in Biological Science at the College of Holy Names. She is presently working toward her Master's Degree in Zoology at Cal State College at Hayward. This will ultimately lead her to Berkeley for her doctorate degree in Zoology.

Swahili has been advancing towards being accepted in the public schools for over three years. It has experienced normal growing pains during this period, but its popularity has continued to increase in Bay Area high schools and in two and four year colleges. However, Swahili is the first African language to be studied by Americans on a large scale and as such has become the source of some controversy. It is the hope of this writer to brighten the future for Swahili in the public by eliminating some of the myths and misunderstanding about the language that still exist in the public mind.

LANGUAGE ORIGINS

The origin of Swahili remains disputed, but the works of the African poet, Fumo Liyongo indicate that Swahili had reached a high degree of sophistication by the tenth or twelfth centuries A.D. The language is believed to have originated on the islands of Pemba, Malinda and Zanzibar just off the coast of East Africa as an intertribal communication media, and then through the centuries to have been enriched by borrowing from the Arabic, Persian and Indian languages as traders from those countries visited East Africa. Swahili is also modern and shows evidence of continuing growth by the addition of words from German, Chinese, Portuguese, Japanese and English languages. Even though these words are foreign in origin, the meaning is strictly Bantu; just as the word "Safari" is no longer "journey" in Swahili, but a big game hunting expedition. Bwana; once a Swahili respectable name which one could call a friend brother or even one's father, has changed meanings and now means inferior when a person is addressing his superior.

WIDELY-SPOKEN

Today Swahili is one of the most widely spoken languages in Africa, and ranks twelfth in the world in terms of usage. It is spoken by over forty million people who live in the area of geographic East Africa. The international importance of the language is increasing as it has become the official language of Tanzania. In Kenya, it is used daily in trading, television and radio broadcasting, elementary schools instruction, and in government. Many nations outside of East Africa now recognize the value of Swahili, and hence, it may be found in the school curriculums in Japan, China, Western and Eastern Europe, West Africa, the U.S.S.R. and more recently in the United States.

Swahili has been taught in the United States for over fifteen years, but only in a few selected colleges and universities, language schools and governmental agencies. It has long been a part of the African Studies Programs and Northwestern University, University of Michigan, and Columbia University. Berlitz has offered instruction in Swahili for travelers to East Africa, and the Monterey Army Language School has taught Swahili to specialized personnel for some time. However, it is only within the last three years that Swahili has gained any notoriety in the public schools in America.

INTRODUCTION INTO SCHOOLS

Swahili has been introduced to the public schools as part of the popular Afro-American Studies Programs now in many junior colleges, high schools and universities. To many Black Americans, the study of Swahili and such courses as African history have been instrumental in providing them a sense of awareness and pride in the culture and traditions of their ancestors. However, it is imperative for ALL Americans to become better informed about Africa and Africans and to eliminate such myths as Tarzan and phrases like "Ooga Booga" forever. Hollywood has done much to perpetuate American ignorance about Africa. Swahili is not spoken by all Africans, but it is the most widely spoken language in Africa. However, we are aware of such phrases spoken by "natives" from all over the world, i.e. "Bwana! Bwana! Simba!" An interpreter who happens to be multilingual comes out with words like "Sir, what the chief is saying is that, if you pass by that village over the hills you will come across a river with very bad crocodiles that may sink your canoes, Sir." I understand also Sir that the natives of that area assist the crocodiles in this operation, therefore, Sir . . ."

GHETTO YOUTHS

Ghetto youths should be thanked for studying Swahili. Not only do they learn the language, but the culture, geography, history, and the people of the world as a whole. Some of them will never go there, but that is not the question. One may forget the language but after a Swahili course, no one forgets that Africa has its own history, unexploited cultures and geography which Africa today is striving to protect.

There are several texts available on Swahili literature and linguistics, history, political science, law, and such subjects as mathematics, all written in the Swahili language. Several books are coming out each year on the above subjects.

Luekemia Drive Begins

Various movie personalities are supporting causes which they believe in. There is one star who devotes as much time, if not more, to a cause than to his career. This cause is ALSAC (Aiding Leukemia Stricken American Children).

Because of a personal tribulation in Thomas's life, he decided to build a free hospital for sick children. Within a few years, he established the St. Jude Research Hospital in Memphis, Tennessee. This famous place of healing is devoted to the treatment and research of leukemia and related blood diseases. It has no accounts receivable department. Children of every creed and color are admitted free of charge.

The annual ALSAC March will be held in San Francisco and Bay Area (from San Jose to Marin and East Bay counties) on Sunday, November 9th. Young people will do 100 hours of work involved and volunteers are desperately needed to help on this date.

If you would like to march for this most worthwhile cause, contact the ALSAC headquarters in San Francisco, located at 312 Junipero Serra Blvd. (at Ocean Ave.). To become a volunteer, please call the headquarters at 586-4271 from now until November 1st.

Without volunteers, there will be hundreds of small children who may never receive the help of St. Jude Hospital and will die from leukemia.

Denny Zeitlin Trio To Play Jazz Here

The Denny Zeitlin Trio will appear Nov. 4th, 11:00 College hour in the College Theatre.

Zeitlin is one of today's most astonishing jazz pianists. He has made many T.V. and concert appearances including those at the Monterey and Newport Jazz Festivals, and performs most frequently at the Trident in Sausalito.

The second of the "First Tuesday" piano recitals will be presented by members of piano repertoire and ensemble class November 4th, 12:00 in the choral room A-133. Duets and solos will be played by students Richard Bond, John Chan, Ruth Hwang, Angela Ma and others.

Peggy Imports
New
Purple, Royal Blue, Brown Chocolate, Cocoa Gold, Beige, Rust, Mustard

Fringe Jackets	$35-50
Fringe Vests	$15-25
Floppy Hats	$6
Wool Watch Bands	$2
Leather Hats	$8
Suede Pouches	$1
Suede Coin Purses	$1.50
Suede Headbands	$2
Fringe Mini Dresses	$30
Suede Fringe Poncho	$25
Large Fringe Bags	$5-7
Suede-Leather Belts	$2-3

ALSO 1500 USED LEATHER & SUDED & FUR COATS & JACKETS

159 COLUMBUS AVE. (NEAR PACIFIC) SAN FRANCISCO

Hours 10:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m.

We Undersell Everybody

THE GROOVIEST STORE IN THE WORLD

Telephone 981-5176

STONESTOWN SHERMAN & CLAY
GUITARS — DRUMS — AMPS, — BRASS & REED INSTURCTION, Accessories
661-8180 Stonestown Shopping Center

REC RUSSEL CLASSES
MODERN JAZZ DANCE
Monday 5:00-6:00 Beginners; 6:00-7:00 Int-Adv.
Thurs. 6:00-7:30 Beginners; 7:30-8:30 Int-Adv.
Sat. 12:00-1:00 Beginners; 1:00-2:00 Intermediate; 2:00-3:00 Adv.

PERRY COMO TV SHOW	GENTLEMAN BE SEATED
Partnered Dorothy Provine	Broadway with Dick Shown
HELLO DOLLY	TO BROADWAY WITH LOVE
with Mary Martin	New York World's Fair
WEST SIDE STORY	FOLLIES BERGERE
Chicago company	Broadway
BEN FRANKLIN IN PARIS	HELLO DOLLY
Broadway with Robert Preston	with Betty Grable

I CAN GET IT FOR YOU WHOLESALE
National Company

POWELL-REILLY STUDIO
1940 OCEAN AVENUE S.F., CALIF. PHONE: 333-1011

99¢
LP Sale!
STUDENTS only. To be eligible bring in this ad. (Offer expires 11-12-69) Buy one $3.85 or $4.55 LP and get any like priced LP for only 99¢!
Limit one to a customer.
During our Grand Opening, we give you the lowest record prices in the entire Bay Area.
For only 99¢ get top artists, such as:
In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida/Iron Butterfly/Atco
Aquarius/Fifth Dimension/Soul City
San Quentin/Johnny Cash/Columbia
It's A Mother/James Brown/King
Take the trip. Fall into The Gap.
the gap
Open 7 days a week noon 'til 9, Fridays 'til midnight. Free parking.
Levi's, Records & Tapes
1950 Ocean Avenue
San Francisco
(Next to El Rey Theater)
Telephone 334-3953

Is Cafeteria A Kettle Full Of Problems?

Compiled by Guardsman Research Staff
By Albert Wong and Ray Gin

"Why is the food so consistently lousy," wrote one student. "That horrible disgrace of a pig pen has got to be cleaned up!" cried an outraged instructor.

These two individuals were talking about the quality of food and the conditions that plague our cafeteria system. Last week we presented the history and training of Hotel and Restaurant (H & R) students. This week we shall emumerate the intimate facts behind the operation and answer student questions and complaints.

If you feel that the person serving you breakfast this morning didn't look too sure about what he was doing, you might be right. The breakfast lab is composed basically of first semester H & R students. Here students learn how to cut a pie without having it fall apart on you, and when to lift the waffles out of the skillet before it burns.

LADIES IN PINK

Those ladies who wander around in pink uniforms are civil service employees. They, according to H & R instructor David Borrelli, are the "backbones of the operations." The busing and washing of the daily dishes are the responsibilities of these people.

The cafeteria, like other departments at the college, is in desperate need of new equipment. Foremost of priorities should be, according to Borrelli, given to the "serving lot" area. But because of "no money" from "Downtown," relief is not expected until California floats away in a sea of Coca Cola.

The cafeteria attempts to have enough food for all the students that desire it, without having an excess of left overs.

STUDENT BAKERY

The student bakery makes as many of the oven "goodies," as possible, with outside bakeries supplying the rest.

The faculty lunches are basically the same as those served to students. But in the Faculty Dining Room (FDR), students wait on tables as part of the H & R training programs.

The Editor of this paper recently sent its research staff out to poll student opinions on the cafeteria. The eight questions concerning service and pricing in the snack bar and lunch counter areas reached slightly more than 1150 students.

In general, most students thought the service in the two serving areas to be "adequate." Only 2 per cent of the students polled thought that the service in either area was "Superior." Almost one out of every four thought the service "poor."

PRICES TOO HIGH?

Are the prices too high? Maybe! Those students who felt that prices were "too high" ran neck-to-neck with those who felt prices to be "justifiable." 2 out of every 100 students felt the prices were "too low" at the lunch counter.

Students felt that the quality of the food in the lunch counter was better than that of the snack bar. Almost 3 out of 10 felt the quality to be "poor."

Four students out of 10 felt that the food was not prepared in a tasty manner, more so in the snack bar area.

About half of the students polled said the food was usually "lukewarm", and almost as many said the food was usually "cold."

Overall, students feel the service and food preparation is better at the lunch counter area than at the snack bar.

Do CCSF students eat "like birds?" Well, be your own judge.

ONE DAY'S CONSUMPTION
Milk — 1000 gallons
Hamburgers — 900.
Sandwiches — 500 to 700
Plate lunches — 400 to 500
Dinners — 125 to 150
Pies — 25
Coffee — 25 gallons
Donuts — 6 dozen
Snails — 12 to 15 dozen
French Fries — 100 lbs. (400 orders)

ASSET TO CITY

Last year, in an editorial, television station KGO in San Francisco praised the H & R Department at City College as being an asset to the City. There is little doubt that this is true.

The quality of the ingredients used in preparation of the food is excellent, and the faculty is of "choice stock."

In the course of our inquiries, we have discovered to our surprise, that the H & R faculty was willing to admit certain errors on their part, although they stood up to us on other charges.

The reason for the inconsistency in the food preparation may be attributed to the students who are in the H & R program. They are participating in a training program, and thus, are apt to make mistakes that result in undercooked waffles and overcooked vegetables. In theory, this would be the fault of the H & R faculty, but in reality, it is the H & R students who pours too much salt in the spaghetti.

All one can say is that we must be tolerant with our fellow student and pray that the gleaming eyes of the H & R faculty members stops a student before the salt is added to the whipped cream.

The following are answers to questions that were submitted to the Guardsman by students. David Borrelli, acted as spokesman for the Hotel and Restaurant Department.

HOW COME THE COFFEE IS SO BAD?
BORRELLI — The cafe uses Caswell — a very high quality coffee. It's the mix that causes the bad coffee.

DON'T YOU THINK THE MILK PRICES ARE TOO HIGH?
BORRELLI — Wrong. The milk prices are too low.

WHY DON'T WE HAVE LOW FAT MILK?
BORRELLI — We have yogurt as a cultured milk product. This is a sort of substitute for the low fat milk. We will bring low fat milk in only if there is a demand for it.

WHAT ABOUT ETHNIC FOODS?
BORRELLI — Last semester we had a good program for ethnic foods. This semester we are working on a good menu for ethnic foods. Last year, soul food didn't set too well.

WILL CUTTING DOWN ON THE THEFT REDUCE THE PRICES IN THE CAFETERIA?
BORRELLI — It would only reduce the losses, it wouldn't reduce the prices. We have two guards stationed in the area now, but we still have leaks.

HOW ABOUT PUTTING WAITERS IN?
BORRELLI — It's a great idea if we could change into a coffee shop. But such an idea would take a lifetime to implement because of the red tape. Diablo Valley Junior College has a coffee shop which is very successful.

SHOULD THE CAFETERIA BE OPEN ALL DAY?
BORRELLI — Just keeping the doors open is alright with me. But if the cafe has to serve food at all times, then we would have to reevaluate the cafe operation to see if we have enough manpower. I think the new Student Union building will take some of the load off the cafeteria because of its food services.

HOW COME THE COKE MACHINES ARE ALWAYS OUT OF ORDER IN THE FOUNTAIN AREA?
BORRELLI — The machines are new, but they (the machines) can't keep up with the volume.
Inside the machines are iron tanks that contain the coke mixture, and we have no way of telling when they are empty. If the iron tanks were clear it would be great. But sometimes the machines are empty right in the middle of our rush hour, at 12:30 and we're helpless.

WHY DON'T YOU HAVE YOUR STAFF EAT AT DIFFERENT TIMES INSTEAD OF 11 A.M. AND NOON?
BORRELLI — Our staff eats at 10 and 11 a.m. We have two tables reserved for the H & R students because they have to eat fast and get to their posts.

ARE THE PRICES TOO HIGH?
BORRELLI — The prices are not high enough in keeping with today's standards. Most everything is up 20 percent from last year — but the cafe has not raised its prices.

WHAT ABOUT THE COLD FOOD SERVED IN THE LUNCH AREA DURING BREAKFAST?
BORRELLI — The food is cooked in the fountain area and brought over to the cafe. The food gets cold in transit because of congestion between the two areas. The food should never be served cold.

WHAT ABOUT PICKLES AND LETTUCE FOR THE HAMBURGERS?
BORRELLI — Relish is served and it is the same as pickles, but chopped finely. We could put lettuce in the hamburgers but that would slow production which might raise more complaints.

WHAT ABOUT PUTTING A JUKE BOX IN?
BORRELLI — No objections to putting one in — but it wouldn't work because it is too noisy in the cafe and the cafe is very large.

THE PORTIONS OF FOOD ARE TOO SMALL!
BORRELLI — The portions are very good.

Results of Cafeteria Survey

1. HOW GOOD IS THE SERVICE?

	Superior	Good	Adequate	Poor	No Opinion
Snack Bar	2%	12%	36%	27%	33%
Lunch Counter	2%	16%	40%	24%	18%

2. IN KEEPING WITH TODAY'S PRICE FLUCTUATIONS, DO YOU FEEL THE CAFE PRICES ARE Too High	Justifiable	Too Low	No Opinion

Snack Bar	38%	36%	24%	2%
Lunch Counter	40%	41%	2%	17%

3. DO YOU FEEL THE QUALITY OF FOOD IS

	Superior	Good	Average	Poor	No Opinion
Snack Bar	3%	8%	41%	30%	18%
Lunch Counter	3%	13%	44%	28%	12%

4. IS THE FOOD USUALLY PREPARED IN A TASTY MANNER?

	Yes	No	No Opinion
Snack Bar	19%	40%	41%
Lunch Counter	23%	35%	42%

5. IS THE FOOD USUALLY

	Hot	Lukewarm	Cold
Snack Bar	11%	47%	42%
Lunch Counter	16%	52%	32%

6. ARE YOUR MEALS SERVED IN AN ATTRACTIVE MANNER?

	Yes	No	No Opinion
Snack Bar	20%	41%	39%
Lunch Counter	30%	44%	26%

7. IS THIS AREA OPEN LONG ENOUGH FOR YOUR EATING CONVENIENCE?

	Yes	No	No Opinion
Snack Bar	33%	39%	28%
Lunch Counter	39%	45%	21%

8. DO YOU HAVE TO WAIT AN EXCESSIVELY LONG TIME FOR SERVICE?

	Yes	No	No Opinion
	40%	34%	26%

Angela Davis: The Black Red

By Marc Kovacs

Angela Davis has that special quality called charisma. She is young. Sexy. Radical. She knows what she wants and knows how to get it. Miss Davis has something to say. And this makes her a definite threat to the old order.

About a month and a half ago her audience consisted of some sixty University of California Los Angeles philosophy students.

Suddenly Ronald Reagan's Board of Regents fired her. They declared that she was too much: Not only was she black; she was red, too.

Overnight, "Angela vs. The Regents" became a cause celebre. At stake was this question: Can the State control the political inclinations of its citizens?

Unlike many controversial cases this one managed to engender a wide range of community commitment. Ghetto residents. Students. The Academic World. They all rallied to Miss Davis' side.

Last week a Los Angeles judge ruled that her dismissal was unconstitutional.

Commenting on the decision in a speech at the Theodore Roosevelt auditorium in San Jose last Friday, Miss Davis said: "The judge saw that it was necessary to decide rapidly. Otherwise, it was going to be decided in the streets."

The speech, before an overflow crowd, was preceded by the playing of a new song, "The Ballad of Angela Davis."

In her talk, Miss Davis debunked the "myth of black capitalism," saying that what it comes down to is "A few blacks exploiting their brothers and sisters."

"We must not allow fascism to develop in this country." Phata by Kavacs

The only viable alternative, she thinks, is socialism.

"I consider myself a Marxist!" Miss Davis said. "And so do increasing numbers of people all over the country who are saying: this society is going to need a complete and fundamental change. That's how institutional racism is going to be stopped. That's how psychological racism is going to be stopped."

Miss Davis, who is working on a doctorate under Herbert Marcuse (author of One Dimensional Man), went on to warn that radicalism is leading to repression.

"Fascism is necessary to pacify and end rebellion," she observed. "And overt acts of resistance are necessary to defeat fascism."

She cited her response to the regents as an example of resistance. They had wondered if answering questions about her communist connections wouldn't incriminate her.

"I did not take the 5th Amendment," Miss Davis recalled. "I told them that my political affiliations 'incriminate you. You and the entire capitalistic system'."

The fiery assistant professor of philosophy then told the audience that "we have to go into the street because we are not going to allow fascism to develop in this country. We are going to fight. And we're going to right here and now!"

Perhaps the most impressive thing about the talk was the stage arrangement. Miss Davis stood between two black-leathered body-guards who were flanked on the left by the flag of the State of California, and to the right by the American flag. The drapes to the rear were black. But the unusual setting was not distracting. On the contrary, it made one focus directly on Miss Davis' electric style: her extemporaneous delivery, her very convincing argument.

One left the auditorium with the notion that the Board of Regents were not all that bad. After all, if they had not tried to fire Miss Davis she would not have been in the Bay Area.

The strange thing about this case is that Angela Davis is now in the vangnard of the movement to overthrow the Regents. And if that happens it won't be ironic. It'll be boomeranic.

Debate Over P&Q To Be Settled By Election

Continued from Page 1

rale, according to Nathan Cooper, Controller of the City and County of San Francisco.

PRO-P & Q

• Under the present system, the Board of Education has the power to raise school funds by taxation and this taxation is without representation as the people have no choice in the selection of the Board.

• San Francisco is the only city in California with an appointed Board of Education based not on their merits but through "political pull" and connections.

• That the archaic, political Board has left a tragic record of failures: failure to achieve quality education — failure to stem the deterioration of our school system — failure to adopt consistent and effective educational policies in accordance with community interest — failure to develop sound fiscal policies and widening the grave divisions in the community.

• That only a districted Board will assure true representation of the neighborhood, rather than merely representation of those individuals or groups with community influence or power.

ANTI-P & Q

• That a small group without any public hearing or consultation set up this plan based on old census figures that no longer apply without conferring with parents or taxpayers.

• This plan is not based on the voting assembly districts and strongly favors the "busing group" and effectively insures that minorities will be screened out of representation on the Board.

• The actual map of the proposed seven Districts shows quite clearly that a voter living in section six for example, cannot vote in section five, and therefore will have no voice to approve or disapprove of any proposed issue affecting his neighborhood.

• The possibility of a politician being elected to the Board without any previous educational background, would defeat the purpose of the Proposition and the educational goals of the people themselves. Supervisor Robert Gonzales is quite upset over the racial makeup of the districts proposed by Proposition Q, frankly that this would effectively cancel out any Spanish surnames on the Board.

He said he did not believe an elected Board would be truly representative of all the sections of the community because of the Latinos, Blacks, Chinese, and other ethnic groups. An appointed Board would be equal representation for all concerned. Gonzales went on to say that the proponents of this proposition would, if the measure passes, make the Board of Education responsive to their own personal needs and desires.

A vigorous campaign is shaping up with both opponents and supporters predicting a clear margin of victory. The issue is clear. You can vote for each proposition separately or combine them in a vote of for or against. Since there is no real opposition to "P" it should win, but the "Q" proposal will probably go down to the wire in doubt until the final ballots are counted.

BANK OF TRADE
1001 GRANT AVENUE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
94120 • 982-3570

NEW STUDENT PLAN

FREE PERSONALIZED CHECKS

NO MINIMUM BALANCES REQUIRED

MONTHLY STATEMENTS MAILED TO YOU

WE PAY POSTAGE BOTH WAYS FOR YOUR DEPOSITS

YOU ARE ELIGIBLE IF YOU ARE A COLLEGE STUDENT

MAINTAIN A $100.00 SAVINGS ACCOUNT

I am interested in the student plan. Please send me an application.

name _____ address _____ city _____ state _____ zip _____ school _____

GOLDEN INVESTMENT SAVING ACCOUNTS YIELD 5%

MEMBER FDIC

'A Midsummer Night's Dream'

Shakespeare As You've Never Seen Him

Pat Vaughn as Titania, Queen fairy; strikes a majestic pose in the bewitched woods

John Connelly as the lover Lysander looks into the horizons of Fairyland—(photos by Albert Wong and Ray Gin)

The actors rehearsing a dancing scene from "Midsummer's Night Dream"

"A Midsummer's Night Dream"
The Cast

Theseus	Simon Levy
Egeus	Dan Reilly
Lysander	John Connelly
Demetrius	Doug Harley
Philostrate	Harry Groner
Peter Quince	Richard Ryan
Nick Bottom	Max Segar
Tom Snout	Gary Godbois
Snug	Harry Coleman
Franas Flute	Barry Ybarra
Hipolyte	Susie Sweringen
Hermia	Bernice Musantes
Helena	Laura Voeth
Oberon	David Marah
Titania	Pat Vaughn
Puck	Winston Tong

BY RAY GIN

Winston Tong as Puck practices his thespian powers.

In this rather grave and somber age of ours, can an audience respond positively to a stageful of sprites, nymphs and fairies cavorting in light-hearted and frivolous play? It will be interesting to see how people will react to the playfulness and mythical likeness of the Drama Dept.'s first offering of the fall season. William Shakespeare's "Midsummer's Night Dream." It opens tonight at the College's Little Theatre for a four night run.

Audiences have become so entangled in sociological awareness in the fine arts that the tendency is to refute if not outright reject any idea of fantastical mirth. But I think the current production will provide a welcome relief from the social-conscious doldrums we've been accustomed to of late.

WISTFUL FANTASY

The production crew has worked feverishly to put over an aura of appealing fantasy. I sat in the back of the auditorium for one of their many rehearsals and found myself thoroughly immersed in the daydream-like merriment hovering over the stage.

James Haran, instructor, actor, and the show's director, chose Shakespeare because he speaks an universal language and he picked this particular play of the Bard's because of a striking parallel between the depleted generation gap of yore and the present day valley between the "under-30's" and "over-30's" groups. But do not fret, the Bard has not been chastized. Harran revealed "that other than the externals-costumes, make-up and scenery—not one character or line has been touched."

Haran also felt there was no need to over-emphasize the characterizations because the backbone of the play is "all in the lines."

TECHNICALITIES

"I chose this play because it lends itself so well to inexperienced actors. But the cast has responded extremely well and we could have postponed rehearsals a week later without injuring the production. I didn't have enough confidence in the troupe."

One major problem was the co-ordination between the technical aspects of the production to the acting. The backdrops to the show are immensely resourceful and vividly florid in design. Set designer, Winston Tong, in creating a thoroughly capricious woods for the flighty pixies to run amuck in, has accomplished a far-out, Timothy Leary-type psychedelia with the finesse of a Peter Max.

A conglomeration of costumes crafted by Evelyn Chan and Helen Chin glisten with the starry likeness of morning dew. The costumes were formulated with a "Sgt. Pepper-Yellow Submarine" likeness, Evelyn related. Direetor Haran hasn't yet decided whether there'll be a grand finale consisting of a well-co-ordinated light show.

ACTORS PIXIE-ISH?

The actors all interact with such complementing spirit that they could very well be mistaken for the shrewd and knavish sprites except for the fact that one of them was smoking a Marlboro, while another was singing "Walking in Space" from "Hair," and yet still another in the corner contemplating on his calculus homework.

Thus, it seems much of the modness of the production will be in the externals. Shakespeare—then, has not been distorted as some of his plays have been i.e. The Living Theatre's revolutionary "Macbeth" or the musical hit "Your Own Thing," which was based on "Twelfth Night."

Despite rumors to the contrary, "Midsummer's Night Dream" will not be a harum scarum type of tribal love rock revue. Hopefully, a bittersweet and comic tinge will appear.

Surrender your sanity and soberness at the door and enter the capricious woods of Haran's acting troupe. It promises to be a "cloudless" day in fairyland.

Jim King

S.F. Warriors

Everett's
of
San Francisco
STYLE SHOP FOR MEN
1418 OCEAN AVENUE - PHONES: 586-0323 & 586-5605
RAZOR CUTTING IS OUR SPECIALTY
S.F. Warrior Ticket Agency

Jeff Mullins
Jimmy King
Clyde Lee
Bob Lewis

RegularCut	$3.00
Razor Style Cut	4.50
Children's Cut	2.75

Wed. & Thurs.-Students with AS Card 50c off Razor Style Cut (By Appnt.)

Game-Of-The-Week tickets-2 for the price of 1!

WESTLAKE PIZZA SHOPPE

PIZZA
FISH & CHIPS DRAFT BEER WINE
HOT FRENCH ROLL SANDWICHES

*Student Discount for Pizza with Student Body Cards
Open Daily 11 a.m. - 2 a.m.
175 Southgate Ave.
Daly City 756-0660

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

SPECIAL ENTERTAINMENT
Friday and Saturday Nites 9 p.m. presently appearing —
NICK AND MARCO Guitar Artists

Rams Falter, Fall To Gladitors 22-14

Poloists Sink In Openers

By Joe Konte

The water polo team, although showing some fine improvement, are still without a win after two league encounters.

The team nearly pulled a big upset against Chabot in the opening match of the season, finally succumbing to the enemy, in a 16-10 defeat. Coach Curt Decker was pleased with the performance of the team as they bid for CCSF's first water polo victory. The team was down only 3-0 at the quarter, and proceeded to cut the lead to 6-4 at the half before a stronger, more experienced Chabot team shut off the rally.

After the tough match against Chabot, the team, visibly weakened, dropped their match to Foothill 20-0. Plagued by the flu bug, and the fact that they were playing their third match in four days, the team put up a determined, but useless effort against their fresh and powerful opponent.

Frank Johnson, playing his usual good game, and Rod McInnis, one of the surprises on this year's team, have paced the scoring through the two league matches. Goalie Bill Carter continues to perform effectively in the most crucial position.

The team plays CSM, possibly the league's top team, today at 3:30 at Balboa pool. Thursday, the team travels to Chabot. Although nearly defeating Chabot in the opener, the team will be at a disadvantage in playing in a wider pool against their quicker opponents.

Booters Shutout

Despite a very well played game, the Ram Soccer Team was defeated by Canada College 3-0 on October 16.

The game was fairly close with teams taking about the same amount of shots. Canada who is very aggressive shot a little better though.

Canada was sporting two of the best forwards in the Zylker brothers, who lead the league in scoring.

Errors by the Rams resulted in two of the goals. Despite this the Rams played a very good game.

Bouncing back from their Canada shutout the booters edged Skyline 2-1 on October 21.

Controlling the game pretty well until the last 15 minutes when Skyline scored, the Rams went on the defensive for the last ten minutes.

The goals for the Rams were scored by Jose Tovar on a penalty and Mike Petkoreich, both in the third quarter.

City College next tackles the College of San Mateo this Thursday afternoon at their southern campus. The Bulldogs were last year's Western J.C. soccer conference champions after walking to the title over the bodies of the Rams, 3-0 and 0-0. — Abe Gunter Jack Holleman smashes into a San Jose ballcarrier as Seth Hicks (45) and Andy Johnson (55) close in to help out.

Photo by Larry Bosel

The Guardsman
SPORTS

Offensive Line Paves Way For Ram Backs

By Mike Chan

What essentially, sends a team to paydirt time and time again is not its strong armed quarterback, or its elusive strong running backs but its interior line. The Ram offensive line may be obscured from the limelight, but you can't take away any of the credit they truly deserve in victory or defeat.

It can be said that the Ram offensive line fights in the shadows of others. For who opens the holes from which Ronnie Jones can break for daylight, and who expertly protects Dan Martin and Rick Calgano from the ever present pass rush?

The answer, of course, is the line but even the Ram line has its problems. The biggest of which is their greenness and inexperience. Coach Alex Schwartz noted that the Rams had only one veteran in a line full of green— freshmen. Schwarz further aptly pointed out that "it's a big transition from high school to college ball for these kids."

Their greenness was certainly reflected in their play against the veteran defensive lines at American River and Diablo Valley. On the brighter side of the pigskin the Rams' offensive interior line tore up San Joaquin Delta and almost sent San Jose onto the ropes.

The Rams are masters at protecting their passers, but in opening holes the line has been spotty, for in some games they were brilliant and in others they were not. However the line does learn by its mistakes and only under battle will mistakes surface. Regardless of their mistakes this season the Ram offensive line is really doing a good job.

The Ram line personnel represent one word, talent. The line is led by big Dan Parrish at guard. Schwarz refers to him as the "catalyst of the line." The experienced Parrish provides the necessary leadership the line needs when only the linemen can change the tide of battle. Being excellent at proteeting the passer, Parrish is also an excellent pulling guard.

The other guard, Ken Despotakis is an equally talented player who carries his share of the payload with top notch efficiency.

Both Despotakis and Parrish are considered by Schwarz to be All-Conference material.

At tackle is Hilton Dillion, who after a pre-season knee injury has come quite a long way. Tjhe other tackle, Martin Ronneberg, is good but green.

Big, strong Gordon Canepa fills in at center. Backing him is fireplug Chris Callen and former AAU boxer Gene Sullivan (don't ever mess with THAT guy!)

Other interior line backups are Gil Milan, Luis Cobos and Dan Greggains.

Hoop Signups

Any clubs, organizations, or groups interested in joining the intramural basketball league should see Mr. Gaddy immediately in the coaches office. Rosters should be in by Friday, October 31. The league will get underway during the first week of November.

Weak 2nd Half Fatal As League Leaders Prevail

The City College Rams, moving the ball like gangbusters in the first half, let down in the second half and lost to the Chabot Gladiators 22-14.

The Gladiators, ranked seventh in the state turned the game around on the Rams on a play that has been known to make strong men cry and weak men go to pieces.

With the score 6-0 Ram's Mike Baines caught a pass from Dan Martin and then side stepped, leaped over and strong armed numerous Gladiator defenders enroute to an apparent 74 yard touchdown. The Rams however were detected for an infraction on the play and the touchdown was nullified.

The Rams started the scoring when Don Martin spotted Frank Oross standing all alone in the end zone for a nine yard touchdown pass. The touchdown coming with 7:28 left in the first quarter as the Rams went 45 yards in nine plays. Gene Sullivan's kick for the point after went wide and the score was 6-0 Rams.

Two turnovers later, Eddie Perkins trying to return Tony Ventimiglio's punt from the ten yard line ran backward trying to get around the oncoming Chabot defenders and was tackled in the end zone for a two point safety.

The powerful Chabot Gladiators came right back, as they went 58 yards in five plays. The touchdown coming from 17 yards out on a pass from Mike Salsedo to Dave Figuerrido. Tony Ventimiglio's extra point attempt was good and the score was 9-6 Chabot.

The Rams were playing a pretty interesting game at this point. The game became even more interesting when Eddie Perkins, up to his old tricks again, picked off a Mike Salsedo pass and returned it 60 yards for a touchdown.

The point after was missed and the score was now 12-9 Rams.

The Gladiators tied up the game with 3:38 remaining in the first half, when Tony Ventimiglio's 25 yard field goal attempt sailed through the uprights.

Chabot, fighting to keep their title hopes alive, scored again when Dennis Bragonier intercepted a Dan Martin pass and ran it back 33 yards. Quarterback Mike Salsedo came in and threw a 28 yard pass to Marv Blackmond for a touchdown. Tony Ventimiglio's extra point kick was good, making the score 19-12 Chabot.

The offensive unit of the Rams has not been able to score with any regularity this year. In last week's game against Foothill, the offense scored only 17 of the 43 points the Rams had and today they scored 6 of 14 points.

Chabot scored two points for the Rams when the snap went over the punters head and through the end zone for a safety, making it 19-14 Rams.

Tony Ventimiglio, a soccer styled kicker, found the mark again for a 22 yard field goal with 12:38 left in the fourth quarter.

Ventimiglio's kicking made the difference in the game. He had 8 of the Gladiators' 22 points, and that was the margin they defeated the Rams by. Final score 22-14.

The Rams are in Oakland next week as they take on Merritt College. The game will be played at Technical High School. Kick-off is scheduled for 2:00 p.m. on Saturday November 1.

Coming Events

OCTOBER 29 (Wednesday)
WATER POLO — CSM, 3:30 p.m., Balboa Pool.

OCTOBER 30 (Thursday)
CROSS COUNTRY — Merritt, 2 p.m. There.

WATER POLO — Chabot, 3:30 p.m. There.

SOCCER — CSM, 3:30 p.m., There.

NOVEMBER 1 (Saturday)
FOOTBALL — Merritt, 2 p.m., Oakland Technical High School.

Gridders Travel To Merritt

By Mike Colgan

The City College Rams travel to the provocative city of Oakland to take on the Merritt College Thunderbirds in a grid match this Saturday afternoon.

The hapless Thunderbirds (0-3) will be looking for revenge for the 41-28 thrashing the Rams handed them last year.

Jim Ross, in his first year as head coach of the Thunderbirds, admits to a depth problem in the line. Merritt has been set back by injuries, and the offense hasn't been able to move the ball effectively.

On the brighter side for Merritt is all league halfback Jerome Taylor who gained 273 yards in one game last year, and set a college record in the process.

Larry Glenn complements Taylor in the backfield and with those two powerful runners, Merritt has one of the most dangerous groups of backs in the league.

Chuck Pittman and Mike McBee are the quarterbacks, and they will be looking for Ronnie Hill or Royce Ford to catch their passes.

The game will be played at Technical High School with kickoff scheduled for 2:00 p.m.

Jack Hansen New Prexy; 4% Turnout For Elections

By MARTIN WONG

The Associated Students' general election for the Spring 1970 semester ended on the last day of school before Christmas vacation.

A total of 458 students out of 11,347 possible voters voted or about 4 percent of the student body. Presidental candidate. John (Jack) Hansen, nosed out the other four contenders with 138 votes — 30 per cent of the votes cast. Student Council member Herb Gunther was the runner-up with 102 votes — 22 percent of the votes cast.

Al Rodier was the only candidate for Vice President and was tied for the most votes received by any candidate at 232-48 percent of the votes cast. Rodier, however, has resigned from the office because he is presently working a 40-hour week at an outside job. There had been talk that Herb Gunther would become Vice President because he received the second highest number of votes for President, but it appears that such a decision will now be left to the incoming Student Council.

Of the 14 openings on Student Council, there were only 9 contenders. Naturally all candidates were elected. Student Council is divided into seven seats for freshmen and seven seats for sophomores, but other than for election purposes, (there is no distinction), Danny Martinez received the most votes—223. The other four members of the new freshman council are John Goebel, Sanford Goldeen, Jane Killebrew, and Harvey Rappaport.

On the Sophomore Council, newcomer Steve Mendelsohn received the highest number of votes—232. The other member are Mike Devine, Judy Kay, and Renato Larin.

The Constitution amendment creating an updated Social Committee was passed, as were the amendments on deleting the office of Freshman and Sophomore Presidents, and appointing the Associated Men's and Women's Presidents instead of electing them.

Of the eight voting machines, three machines were not patronized by voters.

The following is a chart of the recent voting trend in relation to the total number of students.

Spring '68 - 1.2 percent
Fall '68 - 18.2 percent
Spring '69 - 8.5 percent
Fall '69 - 3.7 percent
Spring '70 - 4.0 percent

New A.S. President Jack Hansen

Newly elected A. S. President Jack Hansen recently gave the Guardsman a run-down on himself. The 23-year old veteran is a math major.

Hansen recently stated that he was "rushed" into student activity at Mission, but that here (meaning at CCSF), "I wanted to be part of it. A lot of people have helped me personally," said Hansen, "and now I want to help others instead of receiving help."

Hansen, who was elected by percent of those voting in the election held last December, explained the poor election turnout. "Only students voted," said Hansen. "Since students can't vote in national elections, they become disinterested in what's happening around them."

When asked what he intends to do as President, he answered, "That's a difficult question. It seems that everyone here is fighting everyone else. No one seems to want to reach a happy medium. No one seems to want to discuss things. I agree with Steve Hart, that the Administration is willing to go along with student change. I believe students and administration are coming together. I've learned that you can't buck a system, but you can change it. Most people are unaware that they have a choice. Therefore, they ignore government and become unaware."

Hansen believes he can stimulate awareness. "It is a slow process," he said. "As President, I shall initiate certain changes within the framework of Student Council. The Student Council—can work with the Administration and finally attempt to reach the students — and that takes time." Hansen further believes that there's a future for Student Government. "If you can find people who are willing to take the bumps and bruises of office. Student Government is for those who care about what is going on. And most of the people in Student Government do care."

320818 PAMPHLET

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 69 NUMBER 13 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA MON., JANUARY 12, 1970

Four New Grading Proposals To Be Reviewed By President

By LAVINE LEE

The City College Curriculum Committee voted that four of five proposals dealing with grading practices be recommended to President Louis Conlan for approval. If accepted, they will become effective by Fall 1970.

The four proposals which passed this committee were Liberalized Withdrawals, Credit-No Credit, Forgiveness of Penalty Grades, and Replacement of Penalty Grades by Repetition of Courses. These proposals were also accepted by the President's Council in its December 11, 1969, meeting.

In the area of Liberalized Withdrawals, it was agreed that the last date for withdrawing from a course be the same as that for taking a leave of absence, and that this date should be as close to the end of the semester as possible.

The proposal of Forgiveness of Penalty Grades was also passed for recommendation to Dr. Conlan. The proposal passed by this Committee states that if in a course a student has received a grade of D, F, or I, he may, on petition, have that grade automatically excluded in the computation of units attempted and completed, cumulative grade points and grade point average if subsequent to receiving the grade the student has completed 15 units with a 2.5 average or 30 units with a 2.0 average at City College.

(Except for the inclusion of D and I grades, the President's Council also passed this proposal.

Also to be recommended to President Conlan for approval will be Replacement of Penalty Grades by Repitition of courses. This proposal states that a student may repeat a course in which a grade of D or F has been received. Only the last grade earned will be used in computation of units attempted and completed, cumulative grade points and grade point averages.

The one proposal that was not passed by either the Curriculum Committee or the President's Council was the Elimination of F Grades.

Another possible addition to the grading system which Dr. Conlan will be considering for approval will be Plus and Minus grades.

In its December 10, 1969, meeting the Executive Council of the Academic Senate voted unanimously to recommend to the Administration the addition of Plus and Minus to all grades (including finals), and that grade points be increased or decreased accordingly: for a Plus grade, 0.3 grade points per unit be added; and for a Minus grade, 0.3 grade points per unit be subtracted.

Dean Robert Tealer To EOP Post

By JIM BROWNING

Dean Robert Tealer last week was appointed to head the Education Opportunity Program at the University of California at Berkeley.

Tealer, Assistant to the Dean of Students in charge of Men's Affairs, will assume his new position on February 1.

Approximately 1200 students are involved in the Berkeley EOP which provides aid and assistance to needy students who can not afford the cost of a higher education. The EOP also helps students who do not meet admission standards at a four year college or who need special guidance and counseling.

Dean Robert Tealer

Tealer had some "deep regrets" about leaving City College but added, "In the last 2½ years the College has attacked the problems of higher education to the point where this school is now far superior to most four year schools in this area in terms of faculty-student-administration involvement.

"The Academic Senate and other groups on campus have instituted some very meaningful programs—ethnic studies, the hiring of more ethnic instructors and campus workers and financial aids to needy students.

"The Financial Aids under the direction of Kenn Castellino, has continued to expand and meet the needs of the students. A year ago, to some extent; it didn't even exist."

"By taking the experience of these programs to Berkeley, it will help to establish a liaison between the College and UC in opening up new avenues of opportunity for disadvantaged students," Tealer added.

"I would also like to give special thanks to 'Coach' Hillman, Dean Brady, Dr. Balmale and Dr. Conlan."

'The Guardsman on the Guardsman'

A Survey On and a Backward Glance at Our Paper

Can a newspaper please everybody? We fear not. Editor Raymond Gin recently called on his Guardsman Research Staff to perform its last survey of the semester — a survey on the Guardsman itself.

SURVEY

Of the students we surveyed, at least 12 percent felt the content of our paper was either "unsatisfactory" or "poor. Few players bat a hundred, so we aren't really that disturbed.

Most people thought the content was "average" (45 percent) while almost as many (43 percent) thought the content was either "good" or "excellent."

The Guardsman office: Where it all takes place

How many people really read the Guardsman? Well, we print 6000 copies each issue. 63 percent of the students pick up the Guardsman personally, and according to the survey, 37 percent of the student read copies that they "find lying around." This of course, means that, theoretically, one and one third person reads each copy of our newspaper — or 8220 people read the Guardsman each week. 17 percent of those surveyed flatly said that they "do not read the Guardsman."

TOP THREE

There were seven items that appear almost weekly in our paper. Of the top three, all with a readership of over 70 percent, two are written by the same person.

The film and stage reviews, which has the highest readership of any weekly article — 78 percent, or almost 8 out of every ten people who read the Guardsman reads the reviews, is written, without exception, by editor Ray Gin. Taking in a variety of contemporary motion pictures, traditional flicks, and stage productions, Gin has attempted, and the survey showed rather successfully, to present his readers with a balanced diet of almost every conceivable type of stage and film entertainment.

Surprisingly, 71 percent of those surveyed read our editorials. Our paper hasn't printed editorials regularly, but when it does, it's usually something controversial.

"Contact Lens," or our version of the question man, has readership that is 2 percent higher than our editorials — 73 percent. Veteran reporter, Miss Lavine Lee, is the coordinator of this weekly column that attempts to seek student opinion on contemporary questions.

The "Social Critic" column, by Jim Browning, has a readership of 59 percent. Topics such as radical students, violence, and the Vietnam were also touched upon by our political writer.

We can remember when football games were well attended and when auditoriums were packed as the basketball team charged out to meet the competition. But interest in sports has changed in the past few years. Our survey showed that only 55 percent of those surveyed read the sports page.

BRASS KNUCKLE

"The Brass Knuckle," a cartoon strip about CCSF broadcasting instructor, Phillip Brown, is written by Brian Chin. The cartoon strip was inaugurated last year by Editor Tom Graham and was continued this semester. In it, we had a superman-type flying hero who attempted to do good, like capturing that villain who went around the CCSF library waking people up.

One of the major complaints about the cartoon strip was that one must strain his eyes in order to read the minute details in the drawings. We find this to be true, but one must admit the details are interesting.

The greatest disappointment to us was the low readership of the "This Week From Student Council" column. This column was another unprecedented venture by the Guardsman in an attempt to stir interest in student government. The column was written jointly by Steve Hart and David Endo, president and vice president of the Associated Students, respectively.

INTERVIEW WITH EDITOR

Many questions about the operations of this paper are still unanswered. We decided to go, as we should, right to the source for our information. The following is an interview with our editor, Raymond S. Gin.

Q: How has the paper under your editorship been different from others, or has the paper been different?

GIN: Certainly there is a marked difference between this semester's paper and others in the past. We have instigated investigative reports and touched upon controversial subjects that have never been attempted. I feel, we have tested the freedom that is allowed to the college press this semester and have been startled to see the enormous flexibility available.

The paper has tried to keep in tune with the times and has changed the format somewhat drastically. We still report the important news items but coupled with these articles that reflect the social consciousness of youths today. Physically, the paper has grown in size—from 4 pages to 8 pages to a special 12 pages. We have utilized a new masthead. This last item has particular significance for me—it symbolizes a break from tradition and evokes a contemporary feeling. That's the essence of our paper, TODAY!

Q: How were you able to find such controversial topics to write about?

Gin: Since we are a classroom of students, we feel fairly close to what students want to read. Many of our investigate reports, i.e. campus conditions and A.S. card discrepancies, were brought to our attention by concerned faculty members and students alike. The ideas were brought to us and we merely investigated. Many of the special report topics have been extremely timely, as in the case of the "Soul On Ice" article.

Editor Ray Gin

We choose what would be most interesting to students. There's no doubt we've made many errors in judgment, but I feel we've made that up by providing many varied articles. Admittedly, we have made valued judgments on the relative importance of current issues and events. There is no other barometer to decide what interests students.

Q: There have been charges that you have deliberately attempted to destroy certain institutions, like Student Government.

GIN: The paper has never attempted to "destroy" any institution on campus. If voicing dissent, as in the case of the Homecoming Queen Contest or on an archaic form of student government, is destruction, then there has been a tragic misunderstanding of motives.

We have pointed to certain areas which need overhaul, or at least review, and not in a "troublemaker" role. We are not deliberately setting out to demolish institutions, but to prescribe certain constructive measures to problems we see. Whether they are taken or not is highly subjective.

Q: Has there been censorship of any kind this semester?

GIN: No there hasn't been, in the sense that someone was overshadowing every decision I made. Working within a framework of good taste and my own conscience, there existed self-censorship. Because the Board of Education does fund our paper, I have made many decisions with them in mind. The advisor, Mary Blair, provided flexibility and offered advice, never in a restricting manner. Besides, all that has been printed this past semester were valid and relevant to the students and could not justifiably be censored.

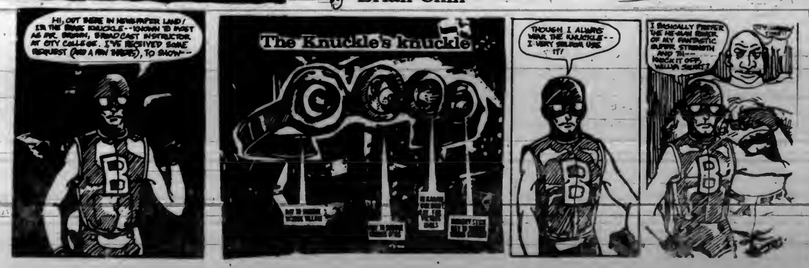
Q: One faculty member has charged that, in your surveys, you weed out the figures that you don't want, and are extremely biased.

GIN: Granted, many of the questions may not be semantically perfect or completely free of bias, but we DO NOT weed out figures that are undesirable. If, we were to concoct figures for each of our surveys, why did we bother to mimeograph survey sheets, solicit comments from students and have the survey tallied. It would be useless and foolish work if all we had to do was to manufacture figures that would please us or our cause. Every survey we've conducted has been done with integrity.

Q: What are your feelings about the Board of Publication?

GIN: The setting up of a Board of Publications seemed to be aimed at this semester's paper. Because we have undertaken so many investigative reports and have presented a series of articles with divergent views, be they radical or conservative, I can't help but feel that the proposed Board was to be an instrument in keeping the Guardsman in check.

Granted it is necessary to have an acknowledged publisher and a division of responsibilities, but will a Board stop at that? I doubt it. Authority becomes a cancerous growth and I feel it will ultimately hover over the entire paper.



OPENINGS ON

THE GUARDSMAN STAFF

For Reporters, Writers, Photographers, Bookkeepers, Copyreaders and Make-up Men. English and Business Majors welcomed.

Please contact Advisor Mary Blair in S 160 or by calling Ext. 569 for appointments.

THE BRASS KNUCKLE by Brian Chin

A Day in the Life of a Real Live Policeman

By GERRY ENGLER

In an attempt to find out how a police officer feels in the course of his duty I received permission from the Berkeley Police Department to accompany a member of their force.

The reason I picked the Berkeley Police was threefold. First, Berkely is a small city, with a small Police Force (200 men). The city would have its percentage of all elements, but the officer would not be confined to one area. I wanted to see how a cop would react in different situations in contrasting areas.

Secondly, because of clashes between students and police, and the ill-feelings between them, Berkeley was perfect.

Finally, since my brother is a Berkeley Policeman, I wouldn't have to go through any red tape. Also, I would get an honest reaction.

Steve Engler has been on the Berkeley force for two years. Raised in San Francisco, he tried to get on the San Francisco Police Department, but was turned down because he wore glasses. The Berkeley Department was less stringent, with regards to the wearing of glasses, and at the time they were paying higher wages than the S.F. police.

The officers ride alone in their cars, but at least two cars are sent to an investigation.

Officer Engler warned me that Saturday might be a bit dull, but something would probably happen in the late afternoon.

"All the cops have regular beats to cover, but they are not confined there," said Officer Engler.

The beat we would cover contained a lot of "trouble spots." It included the slums of the city, and the Berkeley headquarters of the Black Panther Party.

It was evident, while riding through this district that a lot of people did not trust this man. Young men and women would stare at us, and an occasional "pig" would ring out.

Engler pulled one car over for speeding down Shattuck Ave. and admonished the Black driver with "naughty, naughty, you mustn't do that" and let him go. My brother explained, that the driver worked at a gas station, and kept him from going on the freeway with a worn out tire.

Over the radio came a report of a theft at a Safeway store of twenty records. Witnesses gave a license number belonging to a resident of Berkeley. Five squad cars arrived at the home of the suspect within six minutes of the reported crime.

The suspect allowed one officer to come into his house and search the living room, but the rest of the house could not be searched without a search warrant. The young suspect was upset over the number of police standing around his house and "embarrassing his family in front of the neighbors."

Officer Engler knew the suspect, who lived in his beat. Once the man had been racing and totaled out his car by crashing into another auto.

The supect was brought to the Safeway store, and was identified by a woman clerk. On the way to the police station, the suspect was informed of his rights and formally arrested.

Back on the streets, my brother and I talked. He mentioned student revolts, and how scared he was walking up and down Telegraph Ave. He said they had to march in formation, if any cop was separated he would be at the mercy of the crowd. In his situation, he felt the gas was justified.

"One of the advantages of working on the Berkeley force is that you do your own detective work," Engler said, "you go around digging up clues to solve your case. But at the same time it's one of the disadvantages, you might get bogged down and get nowhere."

While riding up Telegraph Ave., we came upon two cops on foot. My brother greeted one with "Hey pig, what's doing."

About three in the afternoon there was a report about a purse-snatcher fleeing in a yellow two-door hardtop. "This," Engler said, "is the part I like the best." I spotted a yellow Maverick followed by a yellow Chevy.

Officer Engler turned on his red lights and siren to give chase. Both cars had drivers of the wrong description. Soon an announcement was sent over the air, changing the description of the car to a red Falcon or Comet. The license number was given, and within three minutes the owner and the address was known to all of the police in the area of Berkeley.

Things were beginning to happen around the city as the Saturday night people were getting restless. But that would become the problem of the third division.

The second division was preparing to go home, concluding another day in a routine policeman's life.

"I Think More Power Is Needed" Prexy Steve Hart Expands on Hot Semester

By ALBERT WONG

"To establish a common goal and purpose that will be beneficial to all students" was the overall theme of outgoing Associated Students President Steve Hart's administration.

Earlier this semester, Hart said "I want students to have meaningful existence on this campus, but people will have to get together and give of themselves. To get things accomplished, it will take student and Administration cooperation." Hart now admits that he has been somewhat befuddled by the different interest groups that were represented on Student Council.

"Knowing this, would Hart change his theme if given a chance to start over. "No, I wouldn't have a different theme, but I think more power is needed to accomplish these goals. Also, you would have to be ruthless in dealing with some people. People would have to be forced to accept anything less than what they want. But I don't think that government is worth all the bitterness that such ruthlessness would create."

A.S. President Steve Hart

Hart ran on the United Students ticket in the election held last September. Also on the ticket were David Endo, Helen Chin and Gloria Mota. All four students are part of the "United Family" which teaches the "Principles of Humanity" and runs a student house center on 8th Avenue.

It was with the "Principles of Humanity" concept that Hart and his colleagues operated under this semester. Would Hart do it all over again? "If I didn't have my class (Experimental College), I would. But under the present system, we were stifled too much. We were too idealistic to begin with. There wasn't enough people voting on caring. Men just wouldn't give up their own interest and work together. You must change the people's hearts."

"I was pleased with the actions of the Administration and I respect them. At first, I didn't think much of them, but my opinions have changed. I have faith in the Administration, more so than in the student body. They can do things, and they do. But it's up to the students to get things moving."

Hart will remain on campus for one additional semester.

Final Exams

Wednesday, 14 January 1970			Tuesday, 20 January 1970
Chemistry 1A		8-12	7-8	Daily	8-12
Chemistry 1B		8-12	7-8	MWF	8-10
Business 160		1-5
Business Ad 1A		1-5	7-8	TTh
			7-8:25	TTh	10:30-12:30
			7:45-9	TTh
Thursday, 15 January 1970
8-9	Daily	8-12	12-1	TTh
8-9	MWF	8-10	12-1:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
			12:45-2	TTh
8-9	TTh
8-9:25	TTh	10:30-12:30	Wednesday, 21 January 1970
8:45-11	TTh		9-10	Daily	8-12
			9-10	MWF	8-10
2-3	Daily	1-5
2-3	MWF	1-3	9-10	TTh
			9-10:20	TTh	10:30-12:30
2-3	TTh		9:45-11	TTh
2-3:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
2:45-4	TTh		3-4	Daily	1-5
			3-4	MWF	1-3
Friday, 16 January 1970
11-12	Daily	8-12	3-4	TTh
11-12	MWF	8-10	3-4:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
			3:45-5	TTh
11T, 11TF, 11TTh		10:30-12:30	Thursday, 22 January 1970
			10-11	Daily	8-12
4-5	TTh	3:30-5:30	10-11	MWF	8-10
4:45:25	TTh
4:45-6	TTh		10-11	TTh	10:30-12:30
			10-11	TTh 11T	10:30-12:30
Monday, 19 January 1970			5-6	Daily	8-12
8-9	Friday only	8-10	5-6	MWF	8-10
9-10	Friday only	10-12
			12-1	Friday only	1-3
1-2	Daily	1-5	1-2	Friday only	3-5
1-2	MWF	1-3
1-2	TTh		Friday, 23 January 1970
1-2:25	TTh	3:30-5:30	10-11	Friday only	8-10
1:45-3	TTh		11-12	Friday only	10-12

FILM FESTIVAL

Films by CCSF Students will be shown Thursday night, January 15, at 8 p.m. in the College Theatre.

FREE ADMISSION

Guardsman Staff

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office: 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext 346 or 447.

FALL 1969

EDITOR IN CHIEF — Raymond S. Gin
News Editor — Jack Ruiz
Managing Editor — Lavine Lee
Editorial Asst. — Jim Browning
Sports Editor — Michael Chan
Advisor — Mary Blair
Reporters: Gerry Engler, Jim Furr, Abe Gunther, Joe Konte., Marc Kovacs, Paul Thiele
Advertising: Randy Flynn, Lee Steward
Photographers: Wilson Mao
Guardsman Research Staff: Albert Wong, Norma Fong, Howard Lee, Raymond Jang, Shirley Mar, Bill Wong, and Martin Wong

BUILD YOUR CAREER FUTURE NOW!

the practical experiences you gain through our companies will be valuable to whatever field of studies you are endeavoring.

YOU CAN EARN EXCELLENT INCOME

working part-time — while going to school

FINANCIAL INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION of America offers a "Total Support Program" for Managers, Representatives and Trainees in Mutual Funds and Insurance sales.

• Guaranteed Income

. STOCK OPTION PLANS . PROSPECTS & LEADS
. HIGH POTENTIAL EARNINGS . UNIQUE PROGRAMS

For a career with unlimited future in an international organization. Call for a personal interview:

Phone: 989-1550

Our Indian Reporter on a 'Rock' Reservation

By JIM BROWNING

Three young Indians, each wearing a red arm band, stand motionless on pier 47, an aged wooden plank that serves as the loading dock for supplies and people bound for Alcatraz Island.

Their conversation, like that of so many other people's since the occupation of Alcatraz by 130 Indians began November 19 turns to the poor plight of the American Indian.

"Most people think that we are not sincere in our claim to Alcatraz and our plan to build a cultural center," said Joe Nelson, a tall Apache from the White Mountain area of Northern Arizona and a student at S.F. State.

"Unfortunately they haven't been on the Island and seen how unified and determined the people really are. The spirit there is just fantastic; there's no other way to describe it, it's just really fantastic.

"The Indians of this country have been through a lot in the last 400 years; they're certainly not going to give up the fight now and move back to the reservation."

"If you're ever been on a reservation," warned Tom Cruz, a Sioux from South Dakota, "It's just like living in pure hell.

"If you've ever been on a reservation," warned Tom Cruz, a Sioux from South Dakota, "its just like living in pure hell.

"It's about time that we spoke out against those forces which seek to destroy and imprison us. Just why we've waited this long I'll never know . . ." Cruz adds as his voice trails off into the cold morning air.

OFF THE PIER

A large fishing boat, carrying several more Indians, slides up to the pier and takes on several large boxes of food and used clothing.

Off in the distance Alcatraz lies surrounded by a thick blanket of fog as the boat leaves the pier and heads into the murky waters of San Francisco Bay.

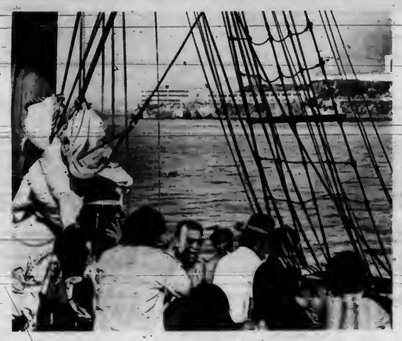
The 2 mile trip to Alcatraz is long and turbulent because of the unpredictable currents of the Bay.

As the boat carefully approaches "The Rock" an eerie silence covers the island and surrounding waters. The various buildings seem deserted and lost to the history of another era when the island housed such famous criminals as "Scarface" Al Capone and George "Machine Gun" Kelly.

The large water tower that dominates the north end of the island has been painted with the slogan "PEACE AND FREEDOM WELCOME. HOME OF THE FREE INDIAN LAND."

Now, as the boat circles to the eastern side of the island, flat cement spots on the buildings and road-ramps sprout other signs such as "YOU ARE NOW ON INDIAN LAND," and "CUSTER HAS IT COMING." A big warning sign near the dock has been altered to read "WARNING. KEEP OFF UNITED INDIAN PROPERTY. NO VISITORS ALLOWED."

Five young Indians are playing a game of touch football on the large concrete dock as the fishing boat manuevers into its mooring.



On the dock a member of the island's 30 man security force inquiries in to the nature of your visit. After presenting the proper identification —only Indians and people with valid press cards are allowed on the island—you're allowed to tour the island, but only with the aid of a guide.

THROUGH THE ROCK

"Security precautions," a short man dressed in torn overalls says as we start the long climb to the top level of the island. "After all, we do need some way of keeping off the curious and undesirable people."

Ron Taylor, the guide on the tour, is a Cheynne, and a student majoring in Native American Studies at U.C.L.A.

"I wouldn't trade my Indian heritage for anything in the world," said Taylor as we ascend the numerous weed covered concrete stairs.

Our man, Jim Browning took a tour of Alcatraz

"The occupation has helped me, and others like me, to further understand what it really means to be an Indian. It has also helped me to take a greater pride in the various customs and traditions of my culture and the problems which we have encountered in the past 350 years since the arrival of the first white man."

"Sure it's tough living on the reservation with its substandard conditions or living in the cities, working for 80 dollars a week and in conditions often not much better than those on the reservation.

"We have experienced the feeling of being second class citizens — or the invisible American, as some people prefer to call us — far too long.

"We have waited for help from the federal government to correct our problems far too long. The government has over the years not concerned itself with the grave problems of the Indians in this country. Instead the government has helped to only perpetuate them and create new ones.

"If we are to exist in today's world we have to take an active and militant role in achieving the solutions to our problems."

CELLBLOCKS

We finally reach the top level of the island and enter the decaying old cellblock, which housed 300 of this country's worst criminals until abandoned in 1963.

Below the cold swirling waters of the Bay crash ferociously against the jagged rocks, while in the distance the glass and steel buildings of San Francisco's financial district reflect the bright morning sunshine and glow in jeweled brillance.

Inside, the serene atmosphere of the cellblock is broken only by the occasional sound of young children playing.

We walk past a security office decorated with brightly colored posters that proclaim "Custer Had it Coming," "Indian Power" and "Impeach Wally Hinkel" and into a small 10 by 12 cubicle that houses the nursery, where a television set blares with commercial for a "revolutionary new drug."

Fifteen children play on the cold concrete floor with toys that were donated by private citizens, completely unaware of the tv set and its commercial message.

Upstairs on the second floor, where most of the Indians live, the rooms are small and clean. In a room adjoining what was once the prison chapel, several college students are learning to string beads from one of the older ladies.

"When we first landed here everybody thought that our occupation should be all fun and games and no work," Ron says. "But now everybody on the island is organized into work groups and doing everything from fishing, security work and cooking to cleaning the various buildings and teaching the young.

According to Ron most of the problems on the island have been overcome.

"When we first came here the buildings were dirty, the plumbing didn't work and there was no heat.

"But we've managed to clean most of the buildings, get most of the plumbing in working order so that we have running water and got two generators to provide heat and electricity."

The rest of the tour is a blur of musty, rotting, and cracked rooms — everything from the warden's house to the dungeons under the old fort.

We visit a succession of unfamiliar rooms and buildings, each littered with the garbage of another era and yet somehow managing to show the pride and unity of people attempting to change a 300 year old era of their own — the white man.

While waiting on the dock for the boat ride back to San Francisco and back into the white man's crazy world of inhumanity, you can't help wonder about the plight of the American Indian.

Will they get to keep Alcatraz? Will the Indians still on the reservation and in the urban ghettos get a chance at a better job, decent housing and a better education? Or will they be forced to live like their forefathers in a world of poverty, disease and illiteracy?

Only time will tell.

But as Ron told me as I left Alcatraz, "We have nowhere to go but up, and brother we're not going to stand for anything less than what the white man already has."

Peterson Proposed Campus Grievance Man—Action To Come From Senate

By LAVINE LEE

The establishment of an on-campus Ombudsman (grievance man) was proposed by Don Peterson, English instructor, to the Executive Council of the Academic Senate. Further discussion and action was tabled until the next meeting.

The basic function of the Ombudsman would be similar to that of a middleman or arbitrator. He would be the one called upon to resolve conflicts between students and instructors or students and administrators.

The office of the Ombudsman would be distinctly separate from the offices of faculty and administraters. He would not have any authority to take disciplinary action, reverse decisions or circumvent regulations.

The power of the Ombudsman would lie strictly in his prestige, persuasiveness and persistence in stating his views to persons involved in a grievance. He would only be able to recommend changes in policies or procedures.

Instructor Don Peterson

Peterson's Opinions

Peterson stressed the fact that the Ombudsman would simply be a supplement to the existing offices on campus, and that its proposals should not be seen as these existing offices not doing their job.

"We have such a big institution that many rules and regulations are necessary. In a sense, the situation here is similar to that of an assembly line."

"Students need to be treated as individuals, and since instructors and counselors are so overloaded, they don't have time to deal properly with the student and his problems. This is where the Ombudsman comes in," he rationalized.

Arguments: Pro & Con

The administrative critics of the Ombudsman office see it as a duplication of existing services, while faculty and student critics see it as an "administrative gimmick."

If established, the campus Ombudsman would probably be a tenured faculty member from this college. He should be experienced in teaching and advising, and be highly respected by students, colleagues and administrators.

Holiday Accident Takes Life of Rodney F. Huard

It is unfortunate that we must start the New Year with such a sad note.

One New Year's Day, CCSF engineering student Rodney F. Huard, while strolling on Bakers Beach, saw 11 year old Richard Barnard tumbling in the surf. Rodney yanked off his jacket and shoes and ran into the water towards the boy.

He battled strong waves to reach Richard, but was overcome and himself shouted for help.

Both of them then disappeared from view.

Rodney F. Huard

Roland Young: 'Power to the People!'

By MARC KOVACS

Roland Young, revolutionary radio personality and former City College student was interviewed by The Guardsman on January 5. A few days earlier he had been fired by radio station KSAN.

MK: What were you doing at KSAN?

RY: I was talking to the people about things that related to the liberation of oppressed people in this country, playing music that reflected their sentiments, having interviews that explored the ways that they're going to liberate themselves as well as just digging it.

MK: There's a story going around that the government is responsible for your being off KSAN and not the management of KSAN . . .

RY: No, that's not true. Directly. Indirectly, it may be true. The Federal government is the one that brought about the intimidation. They're the ones who served the station with the subpoena. They're the ones that are conducting the investigation on my license. So, the government's pressure caused the management of KSAN to fire me. And to that degree they're both guilty.

MK: What do you think of FM radio?

RY: FM sounds good if you have a good receiver. I like to hear it. I think a lot of people get turned on to radio because people are learning to do things at two different levels: They're learning how to read and listen to the radio at the same time and then stop reading and then go make love and then go back to reading and listening to the radio. To that degree radio is super than TV. Of course, I have a hard time talking positive about TV because I don't like TV at all. I don't dig the act of digging it. I dig radio. I listen to the radio in the car and in my house. So, I think radio has a lot of potential for putting relevant information to people and also making them feel good.

". . . the level of consciousness at City College was one of madness."

It's a feel-good media.

MK: Does the media suppress "relevant information?"

RY: The basis of the problem is who controls media and why media is what it is. I wrote an article in the Tribe four weeks ago running down exactly what media was all about: Why KSAN was what it was; why certain things were tolerated; why other things weren't. It's an economic situation. KSAN is a capitalist outfit. Things going out over the air must have a commercial value.

MK: Can you say something about your City College life?

RY: I was into some political things. In fact, I was elected vice-president. But they had a recount and I lost . . . what do you think about that?

MK: Sounds like our latest election.

RY: Yeah, it was heavy. I hated that school. The food was terrible. People were absurd. A few people really moved but overall the level of consciousness was one of madness. But I think it's changing now.

MK: What kind of change were you advocating?

RY: I was advocating my conception of forms people could take toward liberating themselves.

MK: Not necessarily the Black Panther program, though?

RY: Well, that's one of the ways, though. So, yes: Necessarily that way.

MK: Do you have anything else to say about radio?

RY: Only that I'd like to get back on the air and ALL POWER TO THE PEOPLE!

A Peek Into The St. Francis Hotel

By CHRIS ANTHONY

There are thirty male students roaming aroung the campus of City College who will be cooking your meals and making your reservations in hotels throughout the world in the near future.

These thirty men, all students of the Hotel and Restaurant Department, were the reason for the 20th annual St. Francis Hotel Tour Day.

This event, put on for City College H & R students, consisted of a complete tour of the inside complexities of a hotel, an individual orientation of the various departments, and a luncheon followed by a question and answer session.

The hotel's top brass led the CCSF group through the hotel from top to bottom, and literally inside and out.

The kitchen in the hotel is large enough for a bowling alley, and has fifty cooks employed in it who serve 9,000 to 10,000 meals a day. (Who said too many cooks spoil the broth? The luncheon was delicious.)

The hotel has its own bakery, butcher shop, a housekeeping department where the hotel's draperies are made, in addition to sales offices, reservations, executive, cafering, personnel, and room service, just to name a few.

Plans for the addition of a new 32 story tower were revealed to the group, and they were shown a mock-up room on the 12th floor to give an idea as to what the 600 additional guest rooms will look like when completed, sometime, in 1971. The entire project, which will include an underground garage, banquet and convention facilities, three major restaurants, and a new presidential suite, will cost approximately $40 million.

Speaking of presidential suites, the H & R students were shown the existing one which is located on the sixth floor. It consists of a living room, two bedrooms, a bathroom, a dining room, two color televisions sets, and a bar. Incidentally, one may rent the suite for $175 per night, or $260 for an informal cocktail party.

There are 625 existing guest rooms, and with the addition of the 600 in the new tower now under construction, the hotel will be able to accommodate about 2500 guests. If you think that is a tremendous amount of space, you're not familiar with the operation of a hotel. The St. Francis, from 1971 to 1975, has 278,000 definite bookings for rooms, and 350,000 tentative reservations. There are scheduled events in the hotel up until the year 1999.

Two members of the hotel staff, Jeff Rice (reservations), and Maria Robie (housekeeping), are former City College students. They are very pleased with their jobs, and feel that City College had a lot to do with their employment at the St. Francis.

Following the luncheon, the general manager of the hotel, William Quinn, held a question and answer session in which the students had the opportunity to ask the various department heads questions on anything that came to mind.

MONEY! MONEY MONEY!
Sell Used Books Now
Top Prices Paid on Current Editions Used Spring Semester
FREE CAMPUS PACK
WHEN YOU SELL YOUR BOOKS SELL NOW AT YOUR ASSOCIATED STUDENTS
BOOKSTORE
Conveniently Located on Campus

The Ten Best Flicks of the Year

"Cowboy" and "Horses" Ride High in 1969

By RAY GIN

The year 1969 was indeed a bumper crop year for the movies. It marked the emergence of the low budget and independent films and, at the same time, issued death notices to the big studio films. In fact, several of the major studios, notably 20th Century Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, sold many of its lots in Hollywood due to the enormous losses procured through their elephantine productions.

This was an unique year in that the low-budget, quality films reaped the biggest profits. No longer can a "star," in the sense that Rock Hudson or Julie Andrews is one, salvage a heavily flawed production out of its trough. The public has become much more discriminating and is demanding pictures that are valid and to the point. Herein lies my personal choices for the ten best films of this year.

1) Midnight Cowboy— No other film released this year can match the honest perception, psychological clarity, and subtle humor that belongs to John Schlesinger's "Midnight Cowboy." It is a contemporary tale of how Joe Buck, a naive stud from Texas, and his cohort Ratso Rizzo, a downtrodden vagrant, become victims of their own false values in a rather stoic environment.

I have never seen a surrounding treated with such malice and honesty as Manhattan has in his film. The city becomes the saboteur and the two protagonists become the victims. The towering city and the condemned buildings reflect a harshness and hostility that are at once demoralizing and true. The cement and concrete high rises are so obtrusive that they almost engulf the characters as they do to Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman."

"Midnight Cowboy's" warning is: "It is impossible to be virtuous and pure in a world that is black from corruption and evil." A fierce moving film and certainly the top film of the year. A character analysis unsurpassed in its many leveled dissections. John Schlesinger is the master doctor and his fine scalpel incisions are worthy of your notice.

2) "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" — I caught this shattering film down in Los Angeles during its recent Oscar qualifying engagement. It will open in the city sometime in February and I urge you to see it. The film, adapted from the classic 1935 Hollywood novel by Horace McCoy, utilizes the Depression and its accompanying bizarre fad of the marathon dance to present a harrowing cosmic picture of existence.

Drifting couples enter the sadomasochistic dance contest for food and a roof over their heads. The incredible stress of several thousand hours of choreographic feats reveal the emptiness and insanity of these people's lives. They become the ultimate spectacle as they wallow in human misery and torment. Director Sidney Pollack uses the dance floor as a metaphor on man's fate. Life becomes like a merry-go-round and the participants are merely horses revolving individually and aimlessly.

It becomes an awfully depressing existential view on living but the message is one you'll ponder over seriously.

And the beauty of it is that the film works on a purely melodramatic plateau also. Jane Fonda as Gloria, a product of the roving Dust Bowl gypsies who came to California in search of a new Mecca, gives the best performance by a female actress this year as she ransacks the emotions and feeling of that era. Gig Young as the master of ceremonies, Susannah York as a star-struck actress, and Red Buttons as a salty sailor-veteran with physical as well as personal anguish are all top notch in their detailed performances. "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" is one of the most macabre movie metaphors I have ever seen.

3) "Z"—Although "Z" was screened at the last San Francisco Film Festival, it has been nationally distributed. The film is to open here in several weeks. "Z" is a classically well-done movie, bathed in expert photography, terse direction, and professional acting. It is as sober and tightly controlled as any suspense film to date. "Z" is a political drama with, surpassingly, no addressing dogmatic rhetoric. It is patterned after the recent shaking down of Grecian Democracy by a taking over by the military junta. Gregoris Lambrakis, a professor of medicine at the University of Athens, was killed after a meeting of the Friends of Peace held to protest the placing of Polaris Missiles in Greece. When an investigation revealed his death as a careful governmental scheme, many of the high military officials were dismissed.

Although set in a mythical city, the insinuation is that military power in consolidating forces to suppress opposing factions can take place anywhere: U.S., Germany, France, and Greece. Told in straightfound narrative form, the power of "Z" lies in its making of political attack through human drama. Director Costa-Gavras and a cast that includes Yves Montand, Irene Pappas and Jean Louis Tristingant pool their creative resources in the name of "Z" (Freedom).

4) Hello! Dolly! — I have seen three Dolly Levis thus far. Shirley Booth, Carol Channing and Pearl Bailey, but none of them could approach the shooting star quality of Barbra Streisand's handling of the role of the earthy matchmaker from Yonkers, New York. It's rather amazing how La Streisand could have found such a large niche of magnanimous proportions.

You'd think she would be engulfed by the massive parade sequence in downtown New York ("When the Parade Passes By") or completely overshadowed by the sickening, rococco elaboracy of the Harmonia Gardens Restaurant (where Dolly makes her sentimental return to the tune of "Hello! Dolly!") or blotted out by the detailed trains, horse carriages, fashion fineries, and fabulous reconstructed sets.

But Streisand manages to make her presence felt with her insatiable talents in comedy, song and down-to-earth acting. Streisand's Dolly is her very own. No imitations here. She is still the screen's finest in one-line throwaways and weird facial contortions.

"Hello! Dolly!" is sprawlingly overblown but lends itself very well as fantastic excapist fare. This is one film in which you know where everyone of those pennies of the $25 million-plus budget went to. The film would have been just as good with half of that budget and all of Streisand.

The musical form is given a shot in the arm and when Streisand is giving the injection, why, Enjoy! Enjoy! Enjoy!

5) Medium Cool — In the area of fictional documentary, Director Haskell Wexler has blazed a new trail for filmmakers. Wexler utilized an infamous American incident—the riots in Chicago during the 1968 Democratic Convention—as a background for his film drama. He did not merely use the idea of the incident upon which to fashion his film, but in actuality his drama unfolds

(Continued on Page 8)

The mirror globe reflects the anguish of the marathon dancers in "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?"

Dustin Hoffman and Jon Voight as two down and out characters in the Best flick of 1969: "Midnight Cowboy"

Barbara Streisand as Dolly Levis

Yves Montand as the martyred peace activist in the terrifying flick "Z"

Ali McGraw and Richard Benjamin as the two mismatched Jews in "Goodbye, Columbus"

Rams Snuff SJCC In Opener

In 2nd Half Rams Pull Away

Playing tough basketball right down to the closing seconds, Coach Sid Phelan's depth-ridden Rams handed him his first victory of the 1970 GGC Basketball season, by downing San Jose City College's Jaguars 78-70.

Sparked by the hot outside shooting hands of guard Billy Metcalf and forward Darrel Johnson, the Rams turned what appeared to be a sloppy finger nail struggle in the first half to a rip-snorting blood and guts war in the final half.

The first half score listed the SJ Jaguars ahead 33-32, but that score really camouflaged the shoddy efforts of the Rams. The Rams with a slight height advantage were outrebounded 17-13. Their shooting hands were colder than sub zero weather as the Rams hit on only 12 out of 38 attempts from the field. The Jaguars on the other hand came out shooting fire. Forced to take the long ones, the hot Jaguars rolled up the points with a 50 percent shooting average. Knocking in 12 out of 24 field attempts. Numerous player-control fouls repeatedly slashed the Rams' game of catch-up ball. Trailing throughout the first half, the Rams in the half's closing minutes came to life and chopped up the Jaguar lead of 5 through the hustling tactics of guards Billy Metcalf and Calvin Peterson. Ram Center Jerry LeBlanc suddenly exploded for a string of crucial rebounds to halt the Jaguars, as half-time came on leaving the score 33-32.

In the entire first half the Rams let the Jaguars push them around like so many ten-pins, but the Rams having chopped the Jaguars lead to a point, and choking the now cool shooting hands of the Jaguars, started the second half with that intangible factor momentum.

The tempo quickly increased as both sides traded bucket. After that little exchange, the Rams exploded for seven straight points, as the Rams broke open the game behind the blazing hot hands of guard Billy Metcalf and the consistent shooting of Darrel Johnson. Gunning them in around the key Metcalf was repeatedly set free by Darrel Johnson's screens. With a cushion of points the Ram defense hounded the Jaguars into poor shots, turnovers, fouls and the little mistakes that can badly hurt a team that's hungry for points. Combine these factors and the end result is a hard nosed aggressively violent and exciting game.

Take for instance Billy Metcalf's driving 3 point play. Going neck and neck with a Jaguar toward the bucket, Metcalf pulled one step ahead to score with his opponent's arms all over his back.

Playing aggressive ball, Larry Haran reached out for a loose ball near the sidelines and was straight armed by Jaguar guard Wayne Watkins, and with no foul called, Watkins picked up the ball. After just dribbling two steps Watkins flew into the stands. It seemed Larry Haren had tripped in Watkins direction in the form of a first-rate football block.

With the Rams ahead, the Jaguars started a comeback that chipped a 7 point lead to 4 in a matter of seconds. Ram Guard Calvin Peterson came through when he was fouled, with 22 seconds left, in a player-control situation. In a one and one situation he sank both shots to bolster the lead.

San Jose came back with a quick bucket, but bowed out when the Rams took advantage of San Jose double-teaming press, for the Rams hit their open men for two quick buckets.

High men for the Rams with Billy Metcalf with 26, and the consistent Darrel Johnson who hit for 23 points. Chuck Hammond hit double figures with 12 points.

Sam Jose's high men were Jack Pierce who hit 21, Wayne Watkins hit 18, and Rich Leo scrapped in 17.

The Guardsman SPORTS

Runners Plan Big Year— Rams to Top

With the CCSF track season still more than a month away, the Rams are looking forward to a successful year.

Coach Lou Vasquez feels his team's strong point is in the long distance runners. Four key members of this year's second place cross country team will lead the team. Among these fine core of runners are Jim Tracy, Humberto Hernandez, Rod Narvarez, and Dave Powers.

Another important facet of the team will be adequately represented with sprinters Don Bruce, Glen Austin, Dave Robinson, James Brooks, and Andrew Watkins.

Other men who figure to lead their events are pole vaulter Paul Conroy, a second year man, along with a pair of first year men in long jumper Terry Bradley, and high jumper Billy Metcalf. The versatile Metcalf is also a member of this year's basketball team.

The weight men include shot putters Frank Gross and Andie Hicks.

The Rams have ample time to prepare for league play, which begins Feb. 28, with a meet against Foothill. Among the toughest teams in this evenly balanced league are Laney, CSM, and Merritt, last year's champs. Merritt should be just as tough this season off their win in the junior college medley at the All American Games at the Cow Palace. —J.K.

Rams Meet Big Merritt — Jan 13

The Ram cagers, victors in their league opener, will have their hands full when they meet explosive Merritt at CCSF Tuesday night.

The Thunderbirds, with a 4-10 preseason mark, are led by sharpshooter Mike Hammock. The 6-2 guard is the current leading scorer of the California junior colleges. Averaging over 28 points a game, the T-Bird scoring sensation has placed on the all-tourney team at the Merced and San Diego tournaments. At the latter affair, Hammock broke the tourney scoring mark with 109 points in three games, including one 44 point performance.

In Merritt's first league game, Hammock poured in 36 points in a tough 91-86 loss to Chabot.

Part of the reason for the T-Birds early problems stemmed from the loss of starting forward Larry Taylor, averaging 12 points, and leading rebounder Myron Larson due to the flu. However, to the Rams' dismay both will probably be healthy for Tuesday's contest.

Modesto Tournament
Fifth Place 30th

CCSF	40 17-57
Contra Costa	29 30-59
Hammond	5-0 10
LaBlanco	2-1 5
Matcalfe	7-2 16
Peterson	1-3 5
Johnson	5-3 13

1st Game of Modesto

CCSF	23 47
Cerritos	22 54

CCSF ahead 47-42 with 3:40 left

Peterson	2 0-4
Ham	5 1-11
Johnson	11 5-27
McVey	0 0-0
Metcalf	2 1-5

Free throw missed

CCSF 8 Cerritos 3

American River Game
Fri., Dec. 19
CCSF 80, American River 61
Halftime score 40-38
Free throw missed
UCSG 6, Arc. 6

	G	T	F
Peterson	16	7	2	3
Hammond	9	4	1	3
Johnson	15	6	3	4
McVey	4	2	0	1
Metcalf	26	13	0	4
Bradley	8	2	4	4
Taylor	0	0	0	2
Price	2	1	0	0

Golf Team Readies Bid For Title, Ram Trio Key

By Joe Konte

Coach Grover Klemmer's version of the 1970 City College golf team is in the preparing stage in its bid to capture the Golden Gate Conference title.

This year's squad will include three key figures of the 1969 team which finished fourth with a respectable 8-6 mark in conference play. The trio consists of Greg Corvi, John Susko, and Duane Cosper, all of whom averaged scores in the high 70's last year. Newcomers that Klemmer has high hopes for are the Doyle brothers, Joe and Gerry, along with Lincoln High star Bob Simpson. The team was hurt with the loss of Ken Kundert, last year's most-consistent player.

The Rams are a month away from their first match, a dual meet at Sonoma with three other schools Feb. 13. An exhibition contest on the 26th against the USF Frosh will precede the league opener the following day against Diablo.

The golfers play a 14 game league slate, with matches held on a home and away basis. The Ram's home course is hoped to be Harding Park, barring any price raise in the fees. If Harding is unavailable, Sharp Park would be the site of home matches.

CCSF can ill afford to lose their home course advantage in the tough GGC conference. This fact is proven through the domination of the league in the State Championships for the last ten years. San Jose, CSM, and Chabot, ranked 1-2-3, respectively, last year, should be the teams to beat again.

Any golfers interested in joining the golf team should contact Coach Klemmer in the men's gym immediately. Tryouts will be held during the semester break.

AMS Sports Nite To Give Door Prizes

Tonight at the Men's Gym, AMS Sports Night will make its annual appearance under the lights. The event is sponsored by the Associated Men's Students and the Men's Physical Education Department.

The doors open at 6:30 p.m. The event is open to all students on campus without charge or obligation. For the first time, door prizes will be given away free of charge.

Sportsnight will get underway at 7:00 p.m. sharp. The first event will feature the intramural championship basketball game. The participating teams have not been decided upon yet due to unexpected play-off games. The three contenders for Sportsnight berths are the Black Students Union (BSU), Alpha Phi Epsilon (A Phi E), and the Young Lions. All three teams sport top-notch personnel, including some individuals that can play college ball.

Following the game will be an expanded program of gymnastics featuring men and women from both P. E. Departments. The gymnastic activities scheduled include ground tumbling, free exercise routines, (parallel, horizontal and uneven) bar routines, the sidehorse, vaulting, and a workout on the rings.

Concluding the evening's events will be six short boxing matches by members of the boxing classes. Following the matches, the trophies for basketball and gymnastics will be distributed.

The door prizes given away free of charge include two portable AM-FM radios and basketball, coffee mug and other Knick-Knacks.

Bumper Crop Year for the Movies

(Continued from Page 6)

in the midst of the action.

Wexler had taken his own camera to the convention without any premonition that something as raucous as a riot would develop. When the ruckus did in fact occur, he was there to get the footage and later added a story line concerning the responsibilities of a cameraman, and in a wider context, the mass media in objectively reporting the news.

It is often difficult to separate the facts from the staged events and this element makes the film fascinating to watch. For once the viewer is aware he is at the actual site and that it is for Real! Not concocted or distorted, as in a movie such as "Easy Rider" where all ills and reforms are pre-fabricated.

"Medium Cool" sizzles with truth and integrity, and therein lies its strength.

6) "Goodbye, Columbus"—Although a trifle too Jewish for all to enjoy, "Goodbye, Columbus" is a modest, truthful and appealingly acted gem. It is a humorous, bittersweet love story concerning the mismatching of a middle-class Jewish young man resisting computerization and rank with a pretty college coed who is deeply rooted in her nouveau riche family background.

Despite the dated vocabulary used (the novella was written in the 1950's), the basic concepts of life—growing up, fun times, finding a place in society, love, marriage and family life—are presented with integrity and humor. It is filled to the brim with hilarious sequences that blungeon the Jews to death, i.e. the enormous Jewish wedding. It paints the cruelest of caricatures: Jews in this film become money-hungry, status-seeking, gluttonous and insensitive slobs.

Ali McGraw and Richard Benjamin become the year's most adorable couple.

7) Shame—In "Shame," Ingmar Bergmen hands to the world, its jarring death notice. Actors Liv Ullman and Max Von Sydow play a couple who resides on a mythical, somewhat allegorical island. The island becomes the object of a cancerous civil war and the couple undergo a vigorous metamorphosis. The once-weak husband and the once-strong wife reverse their roles.

Through a prolonged progression from dignity to the very primitive, Bergmen shows that pride, loyalty and ultimately, compassion are all lost when the animal instinct for survival motivates human action. Bergmen's searing message: War is hell. But living through that war is even more of a molten hell.

A brilliant and discomforting analysis of the human condition by the Swedish prophet-director.

Max Von Sydow and Liv Ullman in the haunting anti-war flick, Ingmar Bergmen's "Shame."

8) Putney Swope—Labeled as the "Truth and Soul" movie by its director "Prince" Robert Downey, "Putney Swope" is the most ruthless and daring comedy of the year. Putney Swope is the President of Truth and Soul Inc., an advertising agency which refuses to handle cigarettes, war toys and liquor while taking everything else. It is irreverent from beginning to end.

The satirical darts are tossed at advertising, WASPS, black militancy, urban life, the establishment (the President of the U.S. is played by a midget named Mr. Mimeo) and anything else that came to Downey's mind at the moment. For a movie of this type to succeed, it's useless to have a coherent whole. The scattershot lampooning of many sacred American institutions results in a multi-faceted comedy.

Although it's the antithesis of good taste, tacky, raunchy and what-have-you, Downey speaks from a gut level and it's a hilarious and healthy "black comedy."

9) "The Stalking Moon"—Robert Mulligan's "The Stalking Moon" has been shamefully neglected by critics and audiences alike. It is in the front-ranks with such superior Westerns as "High Noon," "Broken Arrow," and "Shane." The film is carefully crafted with relentless suspense. The success of the film lies in Director Mulligan's resourcefulness. Keeping the number of characters to a minimum, sparse use of dialogue, and simplicity in the story line all makes for a very taut and economic thriller.

It is a story of a scout (Gregory Peck) protecting a white woman (Eva Marie Saint) and her half-breed, no-name son from the menacing Indian cutthroat—father who wants posession of the boy. Salvaje is one of the most memorable screen villains I can recall. Although he is unseen until the final melodramatic climax, his spirit and presence is always felt. The tension is reflected as we search nervously in each frame for a visual clue or happenchance sound that may indicate Salvaje's whereabouts.

Gregory Peck as the scout in "The Stalking Moon"

10) Rain People—One of the most underrated films of the year was Francis Ford Coppola's "The Rain People," a study in responsibility. It is a strikingly poignant and sensitive film about a pregnant woman who decides to escape from human entrapment and responsibility by absconding from her husband. When the hitchhiker she picks up turns out to be an ex-football player with a steel plate in his head, and not much else, she finds herself caught up in another trap of love, understanding, need and responsibility.

After a tragic incident where the football player is killed, she acknowledges the need to be accountable.

Sell Your Books Calbook is paying TOP Dollar NOW

Beat the Rush

Calbook also buys Most discontinued Texts

REFERENCE DESK

'Conspiracy Seven' Trial Ends! 'Innocent and Guilty'

By Tom Cleaver

The Chicago Seven were acquitted of conspiracy to cross state lines with intent to incite riot. Five of them were found guilty of specific acts of crossing a state line to incite a riot at the 1968 Democratic Convention.

By splitting the verdict, the court was able to get around any constitutional challenge to the law itself. Federal Attorney Thomas Foran said he was pleased with the verdict. "It just proves that the system works. They had their day in court and received justice, no matter what they say." He went on to say that, ". . . the trial had to go to the jury and the verdict had to come in, so we could demonstrate that our system works. We showed them that everything they hate works just like we said it does."

Mayor Daley expressed his pleasure with the verdict also. "It proves what we've been saying all along. There were people who came to our city to incite a riot and engage in violence."

Defense attorney William Kunstler said of the verdict: "There were four people who were holding out for complete acquittal; they were overwhelmed at the very last and agreed to this compromise verdict. The government didn't prove it's case, and this was the best the jury could come up with."

The five found guilty of specific acts are: David Dellinger, Rennie Davis, Tom Hayden, Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin. The other two men, who were nothing more than office workers in the Mobilization Office that summer, were acquitted of everything.

San Francisco attorney Michael Kennedy, who was involved in the preliminary legal work for the case and was among those cited for contempt of court when they failed to appear at the opening of the trial, expressed hope that the convictions would be overturned on appeal. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, where the appeal will first be heard, has always been a strong defender of civil liberties. Hoffman violated every civil liberty in the book, and there's no way they can uphold that conviction." Kennedy said that as he saw it, the only way the court of appeals would uphold Hoffman was if they felt so threatened by the actions of the defendants, that they felt preservation of the system was more important than justice. the Sacco-Vanzetti case, the government felt so threatened by what these men represented that all pretense of defendants' justice was thrown to the winds. It will depend on how the government thinks the political winds are blowing.

Interviewed after the trial, Jerry Rubin said, "Every parent in the country sits there talking about law and order and decorum, and testing unjust laws, and their kids are sitting in front of the television set, rooting for us like a football team."

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 1 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., FEBRUARY 26, 1970

Women's Liberation Gaining

Liz Jones, Alexandra Lee, and Sally Moore head CCSF's Women's Liberation Movement
Photo by Eugene H. Brown

By Jim Browning
News Editor

"What we are trying to do is twofold," a Women's Liberationist said. "First, to free the women from the drudge work — basically the role as a mother and housewife — that the society has forced upon us. And secondly, to open up our mind to the fact that we should take an active role in the molding of the society instead of accepting a subservient one."

With that, Liz Jones, Alexandra Lee, and Sally Moore last week outlined the growing need for groups like Women's Liberation and their fight for the establishment of a campus child day care center.

"The woman has always been looked upon by the man as being a second class citizen," said Liz Jones. Her main purpose in life was to be the mother and housewife for the family unit. And if she did manage to break away from the family and get a job it was usually limited to low paying, dull, and often unimportant positions.

"Members of this society have long viewed the role of the woman as being only a sex object for the male and not assuming the responsibilities of determining either her own fate or the fate of the society."

According to Sally Moore, women workers "often earn less" than male workers although the particular job, and qualifications for it, may be exactly the same for both sexes.

"The woman worker earns only 58 percent of what the man will earn usually for the very same job. If a woman intends on entering a highly technical or professional career she can be expected to have at least two to three more years of formal education than her male counterpart."

"That's what we're fighting for," added Liz Jones. "We want the women to break out of that stereotyped mold and assume a greater voice in the society.

"The days of placing women in a very limited capacity are over. People are finally waking up and realizing that the woman is more than just a sex object for the male."

Why a women's Liberation group here at City College?

"Because," explained Liz Jones, "this college helps to perpetuate the myth that women are inferior to men. Many of the courses and textbooks here at City give a very negative outlook on the need for a women's struggle and her fight for total liberation.

"Many of the women workers here on campus are indeed cast in this stereotype, as they are employed either as a secretary, domestic helper, or teacher.

"In fact, there are no women included in a policy-making capacity except Dean Pope."

Although Women's Liberation is still forming, plans are being made to present various speakers and forums on the women's struggle for Women's International Day on March 8. A child day-care center is being proposed for the children of students, faculty members, and campus workers.

"The need for an inexpensive child day-care center has never been greater," said Alexandra Lee, "especially for the student or campus worker who needs an education for a professional career or who has to work but has several small children to look after."

"If a woman student or worker has small children, it is very hard for her to continue her education or work and yet find someplace where she can put the childfen while she's away from the home."

"In most cases, a student with children will either drop out of school altogether or spread her education out over a period of years."

Alexandra views the establishment of child care centers as extremely important in liberating the women from the duties of being a mother.

"If there was a child center here at City, the drop-out

(Continued on Page 5

A Special Report: The Extermination Of Brazil's Indians

By Jim Browning

Everyone knows what happened to the Indians after the white man first came to the new world. The white man ate turkey and wild vegetables with them. Then, later, he killed them for land; enslaved them for labor.

In South America alone, [illegible] slaughtered over the centuries.

True, the murder and enslavement slowed down from time to time. However, the exploitation of the native American population reasserted itself again and again. At the turn of the 19th century, for example, Brazil witnessed a great rubber boom that saw hordes of foreign businesses flock to the interior of the country in search of new raw materials and cheap labor. And cheap labor, of course, meant Indian labor. In fact, there were too many Indian laborers. So, large rubber companies — like the British owned Peruvian-Amazon Company — murdered hundreds of thousands of Indians.

That's all history—the manifestations of imperialism and capitalism from another era. People are now content in the thought that the Indians are allowed to visit on various plots of land scattered throughout the Americas. Such, however, is not the case. The agents of western economic imperialism in Brazil have not been as expeditious in expropriating the land from the Indians as they have elsewhere. So, the process of killing Indians and stealing their land continues.

The reason for the latest atrocities may be that cited by some "candid Brazilian officials," as reported by Der Spiegal, Hamburg, Germany: "... the Amazon Indians are uncivilizable and there is real danger they may become prey to Communist propaganda." Considering the political actualities, there is, really, little reason to quarrel with these "sources."

The fascist government of Brazil is heavily dependent upon the U. S. for economic and military aid, both from governmental and corporate sources. Consequently, the exploits of U. S. investors are either ignored or encouraged by the Brazilian governemnt.

One-fifth of Brazil is owned by foreign land barons — principally by U. S., Canadian and British interests. Although such large U. S. corporations as General Motors, Ford, Goodyear, Coca Cola, General Electric, Standard Oil, Chrysler, and the American Broadcasting Co. have extensive holdings in Brazil, the largest single owner of land is the American Boat Carriers Corp., headquartered in New York City and whose principal stockholder is Nelson Rockefeller.

Another U. S. firm, Selig Bros., has bought and resold to U. S. citizens over 3.3 million acres of land, including the entire northern portion of the State of Minas Gerais.

These great land owners are known to the Brazilian people as fazendeiros: "Today's fazendeiros owe their great power and wealth to the recent influx over the past two decades of European and U. S. businesses. Since the name of the business game is land, it became imperative for the foreign imperialists to move into the jungle areas of Brazil, where the remaining Indian tribes had fled following the great rubber influx.

"An example of this invasion by white businessmen is shown in the occupation of the Theresa Cristina reserve. It was a muddled, untidy operation and it turned out in the end that considerably more land had been sold on paper than existed in the actual area of the reserve. Local officials not only challenged the legality of the sale but called in vain for state troops to be sent to repel an invasion of fazendeiros supported by private armies carrying sub-machine guns." (Norman Lewis, London Sunday Times).

Today, as technological man moves into the 1970's, the Brazilian Indians stand in the way again. And the best way to remove such an obstruction is kill him en masse.

There is no doubt about it. Brazil's Indian population is being systematically and brutally exterminated at this very moment by white businessmen with the best wishes of the Brazilian "government."

Some 100 thousand Indians are all that survive from the 1930 level of 2 million. The death of this "obstacle" has even been documented by the Brazilian Ministry of the Interior in a recently released report: "The worst slaughter took place in Aripauna, where the Cintas Largas Indians were attacked from the air with dynamite ..." The report goes on to describe the terrible techniques being employed in other parts of Brazil: "The Maxakis were given firewater by the landowners who employed gunmen to shoot them down when they were drunk .... The Nambiqueras were mowed down by machine gun fire ... Two tribes of the Patachos were exterminated by giving them smallpox injections ... The Beicos-de-Pau tribe was given great quantities of foodstuffs mixed with arsenic and formicides."

The case of the Cintas Largas tribe was perhaps typical. Their tragedy, as reported by the London Times, was that "deposits of rare metals were uncovered in their territory. What these metals were, it was not clear, but newsmen have theorized that the metals were Uranium or some other radioactive material needed in the production of atomic weapons. Some sort of 'security blackout' has been imposed, only fitfully penetrated by vague news reports on the activities of the U. S. and European companies, and the smuggling of planeloads of this rare metal back to the U. S."

According to the latest reports, "aircraft and other weapons are on order to increase the efficiency of the mass exterminations." (Atlas, Jan. '70).

The Indian Protection Service, organized in 1910 to protect the Indians from the excesses of the rubber companies, had become the prime agent for the fazendeiros in the extermination of the Indians. It was disbanded two years ago when the head of the service was found to have mysteriously acquired over $300,000 during his term — which informed sources in Brazilia say came directly from several U. S. corporations as a "down payment" for the continued use of Brazilian land and for the killing of more Indians. One hundred thirty-four other employees were "arrested;" however, to date "not a single man has been brought to trial" — in fact the original Government report on the massacres has now been altered, according to staff writer for Der Seigal, Hamburg, Germany.

A Swedish documentary film released three months ago showed that the accused were still free and that the slaughter of innocent Indians was continuing unabated. Eye-witness accounts appear regularly in the foreign press but the public outery in Europe and Africa has had little effect on the Brazilian government.

Of course, the U. S. (considering its financial importance to the Brazilian government) could easily force protection of the remaining Indians. Such a policy, however, is not forthcoming. Nor is it surprising that the U. S. media has virtually ignored the entire story.

Indeed, the New York Times, the so-called "voice of liberalism," has printed only three stories on the extermination of the Indians in the last two years, while the remainder of the news media — including the television networks and the major wire services — have all but totally ignored the story.

Why are the Indians being wiped out? One answer is that with the rise of Castro and communism and the defeat of capitalism in Cuba, Brazil is viewed by the U. S. government as the key link in the defense of U. S. business interests in South America. More specifically, the large oil and mining operations in Venzuela, Colombia, Peru, Chile and Argentina.

Thus, if the U. S. were to turn its back on the Brazilian government and demand that the murder of the Indians be stopped immediately, U. S. business interests would be relegated to instant failure in South America.

". . . here is a rubber worker seated outside his wood board house with his family."

". . . Wai Wai Indians in the jungle Askaria Mountains of Brazil."

". . . A rubber plantation deep in the South American jungle."

Aftermath of Chicago: Bombs, Riot, Chaos

By Tom Cleaver

The government may have thought that by trying seven prominent leaders of the anti war movement that they could cow the rest, but such seems not to be the case.

In a televised interview February 16, the seven men discussed what they would do if convicted. Said Abbie Hoffman: "It doesn't matter if they put us in prison. We think the whole country is a prison anyway, and all they'll do is make our position official." Jerry Rubin expressed doubts that getting things started once he was sent to jail might be difficult, but all were agreed that they would continue their activities no matter where they were sent. Rennie Davis said, "I'll just be organizing prisoners to demand their rights instead of working with poor people to demand their rights." All are self-starting organizers, and said they would work with other prisoners where they were jailed together or separately.

David Dellinger, who the government has deseribed as the "architect" of the conspiracy, went to jail in 1941 for refusing to register for the draft. While in prison, he organized prison strikes and demonstrations in each of the three prisons he was sent to, protesting denial of prisoner's rights, racial discrimination, and guard brutality.

Outside the court, throughout the country, many groups seem to be telling the government that its troubles have only begun.

Friday, February 13, the Berkeley police station was bombed just as the evening shift was going off duty. It was not an attack against property. The two bombs were of an antipersonnel type, and the bombs were set in the parking lot used by the police for their private vehicles. Had it not been for a burglary in the west Berkeley ghetto shortly before the shift change, most of the off-going men would have been in the parking lot when the bomb went off.

Monday, February 16, saw a similar act at the Park Police Station in San Francisco. A bomb, filled with construction staples and bullets, went off outside the offices of the building at 11 p.m. Again, it was timed to go off just as the shifts were changing. Nine policemen were injured in the attack. Sgt. Brian McDonnell, one of the injured, died without regaining consciousness.

No clues to the identity of the attackers in either case have been found. It would seem from the evidence, however, that whoever did it knew what they were doing. The San Francisco bomb was a shaped charge, very diffieult to make without extensive knowledge of explosives, and the schedules at the stations were evidently known.

After the police bombings, the high point so far in the activity surrounding the end of the trial was the demonstration and street action in Berkeley.

After a rally in Provo Park where Judge Julius Hoffman was hanged in effigy, groups of demonstrators went into the streets, breaking into stores and cars along Shattuck Avenue south of University Avenue. The Safeway was severely damaged, and parking meters were broken out. Real estate offices also were attacked. Along Telegraph Avenue, the Park and Shop supermarket, recognized for its high prices, had its windows smashed. Banks were also attacked.

Fifteen people were arrested on charges ranging from malicious mischief and failure to disperse to assault with a deadly weapon.

In Palo Alto, a small number of demonstrators ranged along El Camino Real in the shopping district, breaking windows in stores and wrecking parking meters.

Again in San Francisco on the 16th, several attorneys from the National Lawyers Guild burned their certificates to practice in the federal courts, accusing the system of acting hand-in-glove with the Justice Department to repress "those who actively struggle for their rights in the face of intimidation and oppression."

In Chicago on the 17th, over a thousand lawyers and law students from the area demonstrated in front of the federal building against the contempt sentences handed down to the attorneys in the case.

In Seattle the same day, a thousand demonstrators stormed the federal building, broke the glass in the doors and threw tear gas into the building before being driven back by the police. Thirty were arrested and a large number were clubbed by the police.

If any message can be made from all this, it is: Putting seven men in jail is not going to stop anything, only increase it. Like John Paul Jones, the movement is saying, "We have not yet begun to fight." It would appear that, from this point, America is to know no peace until a settlement is made.

. . . both the interior (above) and exterior (right) of the Park Police Station was bombed-out after the Chicago Conspiracy jury went into closed session.

Garbage: A Campus Problem

Vast areas of the CCSF campus are littered with a variety of debris ranging from candy wrappers to cigarette butts.

"According to Barney Moran, chief custodian, there are over fifty trash receptacles around the campus with the combined capability of holding more than two thousand gallons of garbage.

Vic Vaio, campus construction official, said that garbage cans are placed where there is the most pedestrian traffic. However, there are only two cans in the back end of Cloud Circle where pedestrian traffic is often heavy and where litter is plentiful.

Litter also lies in the area alongside the Visual Arts building now under construction and on top of a hillside nearby.

"Cigarette butts are our main problem," said custodian Dave Longa. "Actually there is a litter problem, but with all of the students here, it's really not that bad. It's worse on sunny days when people eat their lunches outside and leave the wrappers laying around."

On and Off Campus

Vote

"The right to vote shall not on account of age be denied or abridged as to any person who has attained the age eighteen years, anything in the Constitution of California to the contrary notwithstanding." Thus reads the petition posted in S-304. Only registered voters can sign.

Radio

City College's radio station, KALW-FM (91.7), will broadcast Monday through Friday from noon to 2:30 p.m., Pat Crippen, Program Director, announced. Closed circuit service will be beamed into Statler Wing from 8:00 a.m. to 4 over KCSF. Studios are located in A-233.

THE SOCIAL CRITIC

By Jim Browning

A: Look, Sam, this idea of dressing up as Indians and dumping the tea into the Harbor sounds groovy, but it will only hurt our cause.

B: That's right. It will harden the King's position, and now that he's set up an ad hoc committee, there is new hope for negotiation.

Sam: We know about the last six ad hoc committees.

B: This one is different. It has been instructed to make a preliminary report within a year. So he's now taking us seriously, and it's no time to be provocative.

C: The important thing is not to antagonize the British citizenry. We need their support in our struggle. You know how John Bull worships commerce. If we disrupt it we will immediately lose his sympathies.

D: And how will our own silent majority react? When the average Bostonian misses his morning tea he will blame us rather than the King.

E: We must first dedicate our fellow patriots and increase their level of political awareness. We must vastly broaden our program of Lockean discussion groups. Then in 10 years we will have a solid base of informed support.

F: Our goal is revolution and revolution is not a tea party. Our strategy must be organized clandestine cells and cadres, while lulling the enemy into a sense of false security. Then when we strike we will be invincible.

G: Why doesn't the British citizenry support us? Because they believe that we are crude, uneducated, and irresponsible. This "Indian" thing will only confirm their stereotypes. Instead, join my group and help us finish our 1000-page "Dissertation on Governance," which will appeal to their sense of justice.

H: Sam, you know we all like you and appreciate the energy you've been getting a lot of negative feedback here, and maybe you ought to get in touch with your feelings and examine your motives. Does your penchant for the dramatic stem from a personal bitterness at having failed to make it within the system?

E: Rather than form a developed political consciousness? If Bostonians were educated to fully support the boycott no tea would be taxed because no tea would be bought.

H: Gentlemen, we have business to attend to. With your permission I would like to present to you the tentative program for tomorrow's rally.

ALL EXCEPT SAM: Hear, hear!!!

ALL POWER TO THE PEOPLE

The Engineering Lab: A Peek Inside

A scale model of a Bessemer converter used in making steel and the important mechanical pieces of an air conditioner are featured engineering exhibits in the basement of the Science Building.

The CCSF Engineering Department designed the display. They hope it will attract the attention of students interested in receiving training to build and design air conditioning equipment, computers, engines, plumbing systems, electric circuits, and many other items.

Donald Bryant, an engineering instructor, maintains that a "large percentage" of students who graduate from his department with an A.A. degree take up engineering "as an occupation." Other graduates continue their education in universities, eventually becoming specialists in one particular field of engineering.

Some of the specific areas taught here are mechanical, electrical and aeronautical engineering technology. A new field being covered is called Engineering Science. It is described as a "thorough investigation" into the intricacies of engineering.

Donald Bryant (R.) explains air conditioning unit to engineering student. (Photo by Brown)

The 1970 Census: An Expose' Of Its Political Implications

By Tom Cleaver

The Nixon Administration has a vested interest in an inaccurate census where the cities are concerned. The political base of the Republican Party is in the suburban and rural areas, with their primarily-white, population and conservative outlook. The party is basically the party of the "petit bourgeoisie," which in periods of social flux such, as now, become increasingly conservative and increasingly willing to support repressive measures in order to maintain the values they have lived with 'all their lives, values which are under attack and subject to question today.

One of the primary areas that will be affected by an inaccurate metropolitan census is in the field of legislative representation. The majority of state legislatures delayed implementation of the 1964 Supreme Court "One-Man—One-Vote" decision until after the 1970 census. In the specific case of San Francisco, the exclusion of several thousand non-English-speaking people from the census will mean their exclusion from consideration of legislative reapportionment. Already, it is said that San Francisco lost 50,000 people — mostly the white middle class — during the last decade. This drop in population means that it will be a close thing as to whether the city retains the present legislative representation it has had previously. The exclusion of many thousands of other people by not counting them will ensure that the city will lose some of its representation, both at the state and federal level.

San Francisco at present has two state senators, one Republican and one Democrat. If the census shows a big enough drop from the people who have fled the city for the suburbs, and the poor who are not counted, this representation could drop to one-and-a-half senators. This would force one of the men to run in a district that included part of San Francisco, plus part of either San Mateo or Marin counties, depending on the way the district lines were drawn in the legislature.

Senator Marks, the Republican from San Francisco, is one of the committee which will redraw the assembly and senate districts after the census. Traditionally, the party in power gets to draw the new districts when reapportionment is needed, and the redistricting is done to the advantage of the party as much as possible. If San Francisco does lose part of a senate district, this is what could happen: Senator Marks, being on the committee, would keep his present district, which is the primarily-white middle class sections in the Sunset and Richmond, and the other district would include the rest of the city — primarily the poor, non-white districts — plus part of Marin or San Mateo; these two counties are suburban, mostly white, and have traditionally sent Republican conservatives to the legislature and congress. The poor, non-white district could be expected to elect a Democrat, but with the addition of the other area, the possibility of electing a Republican through the white minority in the region of San Francisco, allied with the white majority in the suburban area. This would effectively deny representation to the poor non-white people in San Francisco, as their legislative "representative" would know that his base of support for re-election was the whites in his district.

Such a possibility is not only possible in San Francisco, but in every major city in the country. Forcing opposition candidates whose political bases are the cities to run in areas where Republicans are strong will help ensure Republican domination of national policies for the next decade. With the urban crisis what it is, the people of the cities cannot afford to allow their representation to fall into the hands of people whose interests are not in promoting and caring for the problems of the cities.

An inaccurate census will also keep down welfare costs, unemployment insurance, and will cut back on programs such as job training for city people, while increasing the amount of money available for programs of benefit to suburbanites, since they will have achieved "overrepresentation" by the fact of having an accurate census in these areas, relative to the inaccurate census in the metropolitan areas. Thus the poor are kept "out of sight," and the problem of the poor can be downplayed by the government, who can say, "see, there aren't that many poor people, so obviously things are getting better," while in fact they are moving from crisis to chaos.

The Republicans have explicitly stated their policy of appealing to the white middle class majority — at the expense of poor people of all colors living in the cities — in Kevin Phillips' book, "The Emerging Republican Majority." Phillips, in a statistical analysis of previous elections, showed that the base of power of the Republican party was in non-urban white areas of the Midwest, West, and possibly the South if the party were able to appeal to the problems of Southern Whites. After reading the book, one can see the truth of Attorney General Mitchell's statement, "there is no 'Southern Strategy.'" It is a White Strategy, specifically a suburban and rural white strategy, capitalizing on the fears of these people as a result of the social upheavals of the last fifteen years. Because the Republicans know their constituency, and because of a natural tendency to desire to remain in power, they have an interest in sliding past — and perhaps surreptitiously breaking — the laws in favor of temporary political advantage. It is for these reasons that many thousands of illiterate Chinese and Chicano people, and many thousands who are "unfindable" because of the social conditions they are forced to live under, will be excluded from the 1970 census.

Movie

The Spring Movie Weries will present, "Orphans of the Storm" on Thursday evening, Feb. 26, in the College Theater (A-152). Curtain time is 8 p.m. and admission is free.

Tobie Lurie, creator of on-the-spot poetry with the assistance of audience participation, appeared at a free-form actors', dancers' and musicians' workshop on Feb. 17 in the women's gym.

His performance included the reading of poems and various chants accompanied by music and improvisational dancing.

"Everybody has a hangup about his body," Lurie said. "You have to convince yourself that your body is beautiful."

Earl Caldwell: 'These Are Serious Times for the Press'

By Marc Kovaes

Earl Caldwell of the West Coast bureau of The New York Times has been covering the Black Panther Party for about three years.

Last month a Federal Grand Jury subpoenaed Caldwell's files on the Panthers.

Q: Does this incident have anything to do with the Vice President's recent attacks on the press?

EC: I think that, really, this is a very serious time for the press because this could very well be a part of some effort to not only make our jobs much more difficult but to maybe render us ineffective as a media.

Q: What is the Government looking for?

EC: I'm not certain what they're looking for, but I know what they've asked me for: all my files on the Black Panther Party since January 1st, 1969. Now, what specific information and what they might think I have, they have not made that clear to me. What they're trying to find I don't have any idea. The only thing I know is that they are asking me for what I consider confidential information. Information that was given to me; that I obtained for use in the newspaper. Information that was given to me in the trust of journalism.

Q: What was your response to the subpoena?

EC: Our position is that this is confidential information that was given to me not to disclose before some Grand Jury or some governmental agency but for use in the newspapers.

Q: Why have you taken this position?

EC: Well, if you were to comply with a request such as this then you certainly couldn't say you're acting as a newspaper reporter. I think I'm a journalist—not an agent of some sort.

". . . the Government wants all my files on the Black Panther Party."

Q: How will this experience affect your career?

EC: If the final disposition of this is that I have to give up these files then I might also say that I can turn in my press credentials because I certainly could not be an effective newspaperman.

Q: The Attorney General has said, "Subpoenas will not be issued without first trying to reach an agreement on the scope of the subpoenas." What does that mean?

EC: Well, I don't see how you can reach any kind of an agreement to the scope of the subpoenas because — what's that mean? You're going to give them two notebooks instead of five? Or you're going to give them one tape instead of ten? I don't think that this is something that you can negotiate. I think it's something that either you do or you have to stand on the principle and not do.

Q: Can you comment on The New York Times' coverage of the Black Panther Party?

EC: I think that The New York Times has approached its coverage to the Black Panther Party in a manner different from any other paper. I've been covering the Party almost since its inception. Having one person doing this enables you not only to become acquainted with the people involved but to gain confidences that you need to gain the insights as to what they are doing and why they are doing it; to know the people and to understand what brings them to this position. If one person does it he can become knowledgable and do something that is effective in that it does a service both to the public and their right to know and to the Black Panther Party and their being able to effectively get across what their positions are and what they have to say.

I think our coverage has been, perhaps I might be a little prejudiced here, but I think ours has been some of the most effective that there has been on the Black Panther Party and its movement. We have been consistent in our coverage and, also, I think ours has been in greater depth.

Women's Liberation

(Continued from Page 1)

dents could get the education required for a professional career without worrying about who's going to watch the children," Alexandra said. "It would also be an important step in liberating the women from the duties of being a mother and a housewife and help her to explore just what role she plays in the society."

So far, the response for a child center from students and campus workers has been "favorable" but "there are some problems concerning money" that need to be solved before the center actually becomes a reality.

"It takes money for the insurance and wages and, of course, we have to find a permanent location for the center," Alexandra said. "Right now, there is no available space on campus and the closest thing we have found is located in a church about four blocks away from school."

Women's Liberation meets every Tuesday and Thursday at 11 a.m. in the Experimental College. (Bungalow B51).

"YOU DON'T NEED A WEATHERMAN TO KNOW WHICH WAY THE WIND'S BLOWIN'"

—Bob Dylan

'Fidel' — Catalog of the Success of a Revolution

For those who prefer their revolutionaries thin, scowling, and vituperative, the documentary Fidel will come as a distinct shock.

It portrays the erstwhile revolutionary Fidel Castro as a plump, jolly, and wisecracking — a sort of Groucho Marxist of the Carribean. This is not to depreciate the film, however, for its intent is to catalog the success of modern revolution. It does this in far more palatable style than the typical product of the "social-realist" school of cinema.

'The body' of the film is a jeep progress that easyriders through the florid Cuban countryside, taking Castro and the viewer to former scenes of revolutionary sites, schools, and best of all, in among the people. "Best" because Castro is superb in a popular milieu and all that insinuates: joshing, argumentation, a foolish baseball game, complaints, and coquetry — the ideal situation where Fidel's social(ist) conscience can appear in all its dimensions. He has a conscience which will admit mistakes.

". . . There is a passing tribute to Che Guevara."

The candor of the film is positively refreshing, in that people — right out there in front of imperialist American audiences — step up to the camera and grumble about food rationing, poor busing, no ambulance service, pensions for the elderly, imprisonment, etc.

Two of the most candid interviews occur inside a prison for counter-revolutionaries and in a latter-day lineup of would-be Miami residents. The virtue of the Cuban mystique is that it recognizes slums, hand labor, illiteracy, and racism while seeking to obliterate them. This easy-going attitude is best exemplified when Castro interrupts his discussion of agricultural setbacks to pose with two lush pineapples, saying, "Here's a little propaganda. I've turned the bruised parts away from the camera."

Fidel touches political issues most gingerly. The viewer is treated to scenes of old Havana highlife, the evil luxury of which contrasts badly with the raw simplicity of new Havana. One sees gritty, black and white newsreels of Batista entering office, guerrilla warfare, street uprisings, forced nationalization of American properties, the execution of a loyalist, et. al. Castro himself recalls his youthful rebel days at the university, his arrest and confinement, and labels himself as "originally a Utopian socialist." He credits the Communist Manifesto for his later "politicization."

Reminiscing about the Bay of Pigs crisis, he merely declares that there can be "no relations" with a self-styled "policeman" of the world." American students he congratulates outright for developing a somewhat belated social conscience. But no political hellfire, no dialectic brimstone. Castro is one of the few politicos in the world who has pursued his revolution, seen it through, and led its successful aftermath. The import of the film seems to be: ideologic fireworks precede the revolt and unceremonious application succeeds it.

There are inconsistencies, of course. Fidel and his staff still pack sidearms, which look incredient at best in the humdrum of post-revolution policy making and goodwill tours. In a rehabilitation camp for political prisoners, one middle-aged internee confides that he has been senteneed to 35 years of "rehabilitation." Everywhere there are pernicious American influences. Time and again the camera zooms in on young Cuban women with their hair done in barrels a la Lady Clairol. Castro himself calls the wealthy spirited Havanans "the Americans of Cuba."

Still, this film about a most particular socialist experiment could be valuable to everyone — especially the folks back in Shredded Wheat, Iowa. It is a treat to watch, done in livid technicolor and modern cinematic flashback style, and with a soundtrack of revolutionary songs sung in fado and flamenco tune. There is even a passing tribute to Che Guevara. But the cynosure of it all is always the man, El Commandante, Fidel.

The producers had the good sense to let him do all of the talking and ad lib and in Spanish (with captions). He does the opportunity, and the Cuban scene, full justice.

—B.L.M.

Fashions at a price you can enjoy in the periodicals section of the Library . . . a bit crowded, of course, but what the?
Photo by Brown

Periodicals Room: 'Satisfies Needs Of Many Pupils.'

By Elizabeth Driscoll

"Our primary mission is to make materials available to satisfy the needs of the students and faculty," said Frank Burke, library assistant in charge of periodicals.

The periodical section of the library makes over 700 periodicals available. The magazines most in demand are those that are articulated to courses of study. Many teachers assign articles from periodicals as required reading and others assign them as supplementary reading.

The main interest of the students seems to be focused on various aspects of the applied sciences such as aviation and aeronautics.

Among other periodicals in demand are those concerning current events, sports, hobbies, fashion, and home economics.

The periodical section also carries twenty-five newspapers. Among them are two San Francisco newspapers, the Oakland Tribune, New York Times, Wall Street Journal, and the Christian Science Monitor. They also carry newspapers in foreign languages.

Also included in the periodical section is a back file system where old editions of periodicals are kept, among them discontinued magazines such as the Saturday Evening Post, Theater Arts, and the Literary Digest. These are kept for research projects of students.

The library is also starting to build up its back file in the form of microfilm because it allows greater volume and can be stored in a relatively small space, whereas paper volumes present a constant storage problem, and attrition of the materials is great.

In order to help the student find the periodical that he is looking for, the library provides the main Wilson Indexes as a guide to periodicals such as the Reader's Guide, Applied Science Index, and Technology Index, among others.

The library assistant, Mr. Burke, helps students through the use of such reference tools as directories of periodicals. Alphabetical lists of the library's holdings are provided, and a project is under way to produce printed subject lists of periodicals. When this project is completed there will be an alphabetical list of titles and an alphabetical list of subjects.

The material in the periodical section is provided by person-to-person contact between Mr. Burke and the students. If a student wishes to see a certain periodical included in the files of the section, he can tell Mr. Burke the reason why and then Mr. Burke will channel the request to Mrs. Ethel Crockett, the director of library services. If the periodical is requested by many students it will justify the purchase of the periodical.

This student won't find Rolling Stone, The Village Voice, The Guardian, Berkeley Tribe or S.F. Good Times here because it's 99 per cent "straight." Only exception: N.Y. Review of Books.
Photo by Brown

Penguin Poets: A Review

By Don Gardner

America has produced few great writers. One of the reasons for this is that the American writer usually comes from the middle class or is at least well off enough so that he doesn't have to work for a living and so can concentrate on his art. Because he is thus cut off from the great majority of people who must struggle for mere existence, two things generally happen to him. First, he develops a conceited, arrogant attitude towards life which finds expression in the "I'll go it alone," rugged individualist, anti-people and usually anti-life school of thought. For example, Ezra Pound, the poet, was very sympathetic to Nazi fascism and William Faulkner, the novelist, was in favor of shooting black people down in the streets if they became too pushy in their demands. Second, the American writer, because he is isolated from the common experiences of life, must continually come up with more and more bizarre or unusual themes and settings for his work. Consequently, we have Phillip Roth writing a 400 page ode to masturbation and James Baldwin concentrating on homosexuality in the theater.

A good example of the problem of the American writer can be found in the recent Penguin Modern Poets anthology (No. 13, $1.25) which included work by three contemporary poets: Charles Bukowski, Phillip Lamantia and Harold Norse. The first impression one gets as soon as he opens the book is one of sterility. All these poems are barren, empty. Their titles, "Old Man, Dead in a Room, "The Loss, The Loss," "Man is in Pain," "Moments in Exile," and so on, reveal the isolation, the obsession with death, the sense of exile which these writers feel. Nowhere is there any mention of joy, community, love, work, or other positive facets of life which most people experience.

Next, there is a definite attempt by these writers to cover up their basic lack of humanity by an over-emphasis on intellectual references which mean nothing to anyone. In one short poem by Lamantia there are metaphors revolving around Sicily, Ibis, Hermaphrodite, Diotina, Murasaki, Venus-Ping, Geronimo, the Roman Empire, and a kundalini somersault. Who cares? None of this garbage means anything.

All of these poems exist in a void. None of them are set in anything which resembles the social-economic world most people live in. Norse's poems are either set nowhere at all or in the Himalayan Mts. Lamantia apparently believes that everyone lives in a dessert. Bukowski is, " . . . Swimming down the green river . . . " with his hair on fire. Does anybody ever do anything human? No, all these poems are about people dropping acid, following swamis, travelling around and, in general, making no contribution to anyone or anything.

Finally, these poems are almost all about individuals acting alone, in isolation from others. Nothing is done in relation to what other people do. Bukowski wanders around in temples, Lamantia sulks through deserted streets, and Norse, gone to Paris, explores trees. The entire book reflects the writer's position of being cut off from society.

Though most American writing is similar to the junk written by these three authors, there can be better writing done. But for writing to be real, for it to be emotional, for it to be genuinely meaningful, it must be written by people in touch with the experiences of everyday life. It must be about things people can understand. Writing must come from common people; from workers or from people closely associated with their lives. Until it does, it will continue to be the stale, meaningless trivia which Lamantia, Norse and Bukowski excel in.

On and Off Campus

Tutors

Willis F. Kirk, acting assistant to the dean of students, is organizing a team of 30 students to work on a tutorial project being sponsored by the Booker T. Washington Community Service Center, 800 Presidio Ave. For further information contact Mr. Kirk in E-106.

Dance

The Ensemble, a professional dance and acting company which focuses on new works presenting an intimate relationship with the audience, is now offering a 50 per cent student discount ticket for any performance during its current season. This season's repertory includes: All God's Chillun Got Wings: An adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's prophetic nightmare; Plastics: A full-length dance work by Mila Llauger, and 2002: A space absurdity. City College student Kris Thurman, 566-9559, has additional information.

387-3575

If you are interested in alternatives to the present educational system, you can help create them. A group of concerned students and educators are now meeting to form a school or schools which will offer viable alternatives in education. The group is Springboard, an offshoot of Switchboard, and it needs concerned people. Further information is available from the Education Switchboard, 387-3575.

Lecture

Assemblyman John F. Foran, from San Francisco's 19th District, will speak at the College Theater at 11 a.m. on Feb. 26 on "The Legislative Processes by which the Environment Can Be Saved." Mr. Foran is particularly concerned with the uses to which the gasoline taxes have been put to use.

COIL

The Center of Independent Learning (COIL) is located in Room C-304, just off the College Library in Cloud Hall. It is open daily from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Staffed by students, the Center contains material which has been especially programmed to enable students to cover a topic on their own without the help of even a tutor. COIL is student-run and student motivated. The sole purpose of COIL, its staff, and its materials is to help students to help themselves through programmed instruction.

Ecology

"The Role of the Press and and of Pressure Groups in Stopping the Ruination of California" is Harold Gilliam's topic on March 3 at 11 a.m. in the College Theater. Mr. Gilliam is the author of several noted books on the San Francisco Bay Area — "The Climate of San Francisco," "The Natural History of the Bay Area;" he is also the Chronicle's ecological expert. The lecture is sponsored by the Associated Students in cooperation with the Student-Faculty Lecture Committee.

Lunch

A free luncheon for all new students and teachers at the college will be held on Thursday, Feb. 26 in Statler Wing from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Admission will consist of the ticket enclosed in the packets which were sent to all new students earlier this semester. It is sponsored by the Associated Women Students.

Music

The American Society of Eastern Arts will present Hamza El Din playing music of his native Nubia on the oud at 8:30 p.m. Friday, March 2 at the Ghirardelli Square Theater.

Rams Whip Foothill, Lead GGC

Terry Bradely (r) and Greg Price (l) in action against Foothill
Photo by Mike Li

Stubborn CCSF Victor Over Owls, 51-41

By Mike Chan

Before a crowd of 500 whooping or hooting Owl and Ram fans, the Phelan machine boys took control of the boards and hustled their way to victory downing Foothill 51-41 at City College last Tuesday the 17th.

Although the Rams led most of the way, the Owls repeatedly cut down Ram leads with spurts of buckets by Owl forward Dave Jefferson. However, Jefferson's heroics were just shots in the pan as the Rams played superb defense and cut down the Owls in their 10th league victory.

Sagging in and forcing the Owls to take the long halls, the Rams tanked in the points. All night, the Ram offense was cold as Plutonian ice, yet when the need arose, the Rams plastered the Owls and their rooters all over the floor.

The Rams ended a comical first half leading 27-21. The always dependable Ram forward, Daryle Johnson, had scored most of the Ram points on long outside jumpers. The scrappy Owls stayed in the game behind short jumpers and tough layins. However, the laughter began when the referees called practically every infraction in the book. Of course, there was a technical fout, which was slapped on Owl coach Jerry Cole, and a delaying foul against Ram Greg Price for not hurrying his feet to join the rest of the gang at the foul line.

Enough on the eagle-eyed guardians of waxed floor justice and promoters of zebra shirts. With the start of the second half the Rams seemed to roll over the hapless Owls by shooting up to a fourteen point lead. The Owls quickly snapped out of their trance and slowly cut the lead down to seven, and the game then seesawed until the closing minutes of play.

The Rams were leading by a comfortable 7 point margin with a little over 4 minutes remaining when Jefferson stole a pass to Bill Metcalfe, and streaked down to lay it in.

The Rams then inbounded the ball against a full court press. CCSF took the ball down to the key, and missed the shot, where it was snatched up by the Owls. Jefferson burst downcourt and blew the layup on receiving the pass due to the defense of Jerry LeBlanc, but Owl guard Greg Myers tossed in a fade away shot for the score.

With the Owl bucket, the roof eayed in as the Owl rooters roared their approval and Coach Phelan bellowed orders to his cagers. Even though they led by three, the Rams needed a hoop to switch the momentum.

Act two began with the Rams scattering the pressing Owls downcourt; the tumultuous Owl rooters adamantly biting their tongues.

The Rams, with complete poise, passed around looking for a shot, passed off to Ram guard Billy Metcalfe who dribbled behind a screen, was overshot by two Owls and with complete confidence gunned the ball in.

The Ram crowd roared and sensed Foothill's downfall as the Owls fell apart at the seams. The Owls quickly missed their shot and the Rams drove back and burned the Owls with another bucket.

If the Rams had choked Foothill would've had it downhill all the way to the GGC crown.

The Rams won this battle but they still have three tough battles with CSM, Chabot, and Laney in order to win the war.

More Rookies And Money In Tennis

By Mike Chan

With practice matches on the schedule and with what has been described as the largest Ram tennis turnout in five years, tennis coach Roy Diedrichsen will make his bid toward the GGC tennis crown. Even though Diedrichsen will not have the services of any of last season's Rams racketeers, there are factors this season that may pave his way to the top.

First, with a tight money policy hanging over Diedrichsen's head, he will still have money for practice matches this season. A big factor in last year's disastrous season was that Diedriehsen's budget was cut so low that his players started league play with no practice matches, and thus recorded a season's record of 1-6, the worst record Coach Diedriehsen has had in his twenty years of coaching Ram tennis. As a direct effect of last year's budget slashing, Coach Diedrichsen lost the Ram's number one player last season. The still eligible Luechesi transferred to USF due to the lack of practice matches.

Another factor that may push the Rams to the top is their numbers and their talent. From Washington comes Jim Turner, a former AAA finalist in tennis. A veteran from two years back who will return to CCSF is Paul Staffots. Also from Washington is John Lasley. The rookies from Lowell are Dennis Ja, Jeff Cornell, Hubert Wong, and Herb Lee. Galileo's Stuart Lai and Lincoln's Aaron Sinelnekoff are a few of the rookies who round out Diedrichsen's roster of fourteen members.

Swimmers Needed; Season Nears

By Joe Konte

If you can tread water, you are a candidate for the 1970 CCSF swimming team. Coach Curt Decker's mini-squad at the present includes' seven swimmers and one diver. Compare this total of eight to San Mateo's thirty man team, and you can readily see Decker's problems. Anyone who is interested in joining the team, should see the coach immediately.

However, the need for bodies does not reflect on the ability of the players on the current roster. The swimmers and their special event follows: water polo goalie, Bill Carter (freestyle); polo star and GGC's 8th leading scorer, Rod McInnes (distance); another polo1st, Bill Clark (medley); Mike McElligot (sprints); Curtis Yepez (middle-distance); Tom Keck (medley); Ken Cannavaro (breaststroke); and diver George Smith.

But even with this fine potential, the Rams are in serious trouble. And to make matters worse, CCSF has to play all their meets at the opposing school, since they have no home pool.

CSM and Diablo should be the favorites in the GGC this season. Fortunately the Rams first contest is against a weak Foothill team on March 6. Decker has been happy with the workouts of the team, but unless new faces appear around the pool, it will be another long year for the Swimmers.

Glance At Ram Rise

Since our last issue, the Ram cagers have swept through the GGC, winning all but one game. After downing Foothill (see story on right), the Rams' record went to 10-1, and they gained undisputed possession of first place.

The surge to the top was highlighted by a hard fought 48-46 win over previously unbeaten Foothill. Other big victories included a 69-63 decision against Chabot, a more explosive 62-49 pelting of Chabot, and a 63-50 win over Diablo Valley College.

CCSF's record became blemished when the Rams collided with a determined San Jose team. The Jaguars stunned the Rams early, and finally won it 89-71.

The key players in the Ram drive to the top have been their leading scorer, Daryle Johnson, along with Billy Metcalfe, Olaf Peterson, Jerry LeBlanc, and Greg Price.

Baseball Coming

The Rams baseball opener is on Tuesday, March 3, when Chabot comes to town. CCSF will be looking toward improving their dismal 8-13 record of last year. This year's squad consists of only four returnees from last year. Among these are Rick Escalambre, Pete Edwards, Vinee Anderson, and John Lawhorn.

NBA Goes Big League

By Joe Konte

Today's quiz: Name the twenty-five professional basketball teams, both NBA and ABA. Fifteen to eighteen correct, and you are a well-informed basketball fan. Nineteen to twenty-four correct, and you're a better than average follower of the game. Get all twenty-five right and you become commissioner.

Only Walter Kennedy, czar of the NBA, is probably aware of the numerous pro cage teams. At least, until last week, we thought he knew. But Kennedy's intentions to strive for quantity instead of quality has brought the gaping total of teams up four more.

Kennedy's recent plan to increase the league includes Portland, Houston, Cleveland and Buffalo. With the addition of these franchises, the already over-populated NBA will have to support eighteen clubs. At the present time, only a few of the established teams are making any headway at the gate. New York, Boston, Los Angeles and Milwaukee (Alcindor, Inc.) are the only clubs to consistently draw the crowds. Even Atlanta, the West's leading team, has been plagued by poor attendance.

Now, if one was commissioner, he might look for better ways to fill the arenas. The logical move is to build up each club and display a strong, competitive league with as many talented players on a team as possible. But that's the logical step.

Kennedy's move to expand will have a double negative effect on the league. First, it will force the other fourteen teams to give up three players from their squads, thereby creating a thinning of talent over the league. Secondly, the new members will draft the top college players in the 7-8-9-10 slots. Again, the talent will be spread vastly throughout the loop.

The NBA will not be strengthened by splitting the players to a degree where the teams may have only one big name star. There are probably not enough superstars to even go around for eighteen clubs.

So Mr. Kennedy has a problem. But wait. He has another idea: A merger with the ABA. Then we would have twenty-nine "big league" teams. If you are still a few teams short in our quiz, write to commissioner Kennedy. He might know.

Next week:

The merger of the NBA and ABA

CITY COLLEGE OF SAN FRANCISCO LIBRARY
CLEVELAND AVENUE
SAN FRANCISCO 12, CALIFORNIA
320808
PAMPHLET

Reagan Wants $150 Tuitions

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco
VOLUME 70, NUMBER 2 | SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA | WED., MARCH 4, 1970

By Jim Browning
News Editor

Governor Ronald Reagan said last week that tuition charges at the California State colleges for the 1970-71 school year are "inevitable."

Reagan, in Los Angeles for a meeting of the State College trustees, indicated that he expects the trustees to follow the lead of the Regents of the University, who recently voted to impose tuition at the university level.

Tuition at UC for the coming school year will be $150, and will rise to $300 for 1971-1972, the sums being applied on top of current student fees of $300 a year.

Existing fees, not counting the cost of textbooks, at state colleges currently average $150 per year.

Reagan's plan for tuition would be $75 for this fall and $150 in 1971-1972.

Reagan said that state college students who are unable to pay the new tuition fees should be admitted to a State college with the understanding that they repay the cost of the tuition after they graduate.

If, after graduation, the student is still unable to pay the tuition, the fees would be reduced or waived — a switch from the Governor's UC plan, which makes no such provision.

The UC plan, at Reagan's urging, simply provided that students who could not afford the increased fees could repay them after they had graduated. It made no provisions for a waiver or reduction if graduates showed they could not afford the fees.

Under existing state laws, the trustees must obtain approval from two-thirds of the state legislature to impose any tuition fees higher than $25.

The trustees will meet on March 22 to decide the final outcome of Reagan's tuition proposal.

At the meeting itself, the trustees voted new stricter controls over student elections on state college campuses.

The new student election guidelines leave to individual school administrations the responsibility for setting up specific requirements for candidates and election procedures.

The policy statement does not specify, however, that all candidates for student offices "must be students in good standing making reasonable progress toward an educational goal."

Several student body presidents from various state campuses argued that the new policy would "give the State Trustees and campus administrators an open invitation to interfere in campus wide student elections."

The new election guidelines were recommended by a committee of college presidents, student presidents, administrators and academic senators, although the students objected to the committee recommendation calling for candidates to be making reasonable progress toward a degree.

Student representatives also opposed a stipulation in the new policy that candidates for office must meet "such other qualifications as are set by each college."

The policy calls on each college to develop a student election code and set up a supervisory body to enforce it.

Council of Organizations Makes Changes

By Paul Thiele

The Council of Organizations (C.O.O.) has been abolished by an amendment to the A.S. Constitution passed in the Fall 1969 semester.

Another amendment eliminated the offices of Freshman and Sophomore class presidents because, according to Dean of Student Activities Art Samuels, they were "officers without a constituency."

Three new clubs have drawn up constitutions this semester in order to be recognized as official campus organizations. They are the Women's Liberation Movement, the Young Socialist Club, and the Arab Club. At the Feb. 25 meeting of student council, the Arab Club was voted in as an official club; representatives from the first two organizations were not present. The A. S. Constitutional Revision Committee was also established at the Feb 25 meeting and Harvey Rappaport was elected president.

The calendar of events which is currently being offered free to everyone in B-401 will be changed to a handbook next semester. It was deemed by student council to be inconvenient to use because of its large posterlike dimensions and the shortage of space for marking down important dates.

All businesses offering A. S. Card discounts this semester must sign a one year contract so that fewer complaints will be made, A. S. Card Commissioner Ed Lew said.

"It's more logical to have a contract so that students will not be refused discounts and get gypped," Lew said. "Now we're getting the head man of each company to sign the contract and if they don't, we cross them off the list."

This semester, A. S. Cards are in the form of stickers which are placed on the holder's identification card. Sidney Hymes said that the reason why the cards are not actually cards is because "nobody had them printed up when we needed them and there was no organization." He added that a secondary reason might have been that by this new method, cards cannot be used by friends of cardholders who have not bought their own.

A proposed $14,000 fireplace

(Continued on Page 7)

The Communications Commission Challenges 'Underground Radio'

By Tom Cleaver

Art Linkletter isn't the only one who thinks that what is said in rock lyrics and on "underground" FM stations that play rock music is subversive, obscene, and leading young people into immoral acts. FCC chairman Dean Burch has recently raised the question of "smut" in rock and roll lyrics, and the commission is also threatening to reopen a case against the Pacifica Corporation's KPFK-FM in Los Angeles over the issue of a supposedly "obscene" poem read over the air in a critical discussion last fall.

Tom Donahue, one of the founders of "underground radio" says that friends of his in the industry have heard rumors of a congressional investigation into the words in rock lyrics and the supposedly "biased" news coverage on FM rock stations. The object of all this, says Donahue, is to scare the corporations who own these stations "back into line."

The issue of government censorship of the media, and government pressure on the media to stay in line has become a big one since Vice President Agnew's attacks on the media last fall. Right now, the stations in the Bay Area aren't too worried, because in the past the FCC has backed off with its pressure when a station has threatened to carry the case into court over the issue of censorship. "The FCC," says Donahue, "will never take this sort of thing into the courts because they know they would lose, and by losing, lose the extra-legal power they have on the stations." This extra-legal power is usually invoked at license renewal time when the commission can become very strict in deciding whether the station is conforming to FCC regulations. The threat that this power could be exercised is usually enough to make the parent company put its own pressure on station management to get them to duck into line with the prevailing political winds.

Glenn Howell (left), an ex-City College student and (right), Reno Nevada. Both are rock-jocks with radio station KSAN-FM in San Francisco.

Congressional hearings could be worse. The nation has been treated to congressional "witch hunts" in the past, and they have been effective in stifling dissenters through the fear of publicity and guilt-by-association. The prevailing feeling in the country among the so-called "silent majority" of hear-no-evil, see-no-evil, speak-no-evil could bring this situation about once again.

Burch opened his attack in a speech at a luncheon for Big Brothers of the Bay Area a few weeks ago. Burch warned that obscene broadcast programming is a form of air pollution that could become "as serious as smog." And, like smog, he added, "the only way to control obscenity is to eliminate it entirely."

Noting what he saw as a trend in music lyrics, Burch said he was afraid it would eventually take over the airwaves. In a press conference immediately after the speech, Burch gave a specific example of what he was talking about when he named "I Can't Get No Nookie" by the Masked Marauders. Burch stated it was clearly obscene and should be banned from radio broadcast.

Burch says he does not advocate government censorship, but was suggesting "self-regulation" by the broadcasting industry. Says Donahue on this, "There's all kinds of pressures that can be brought to bear. TV and radio have cleaned themselves up before, and made themselves incredibly dull. The corporations live in a state of paranoia and will

(Continued on Page 7)

Antonio Camejo: 'Latins Must Campaign For Freedom and Justice'

Antonio Camejo, an active supporter of the Bay Area Third World student strikes in 1968-69 and at present on the faculty of Oakland's Merritt College.

By Elizabeth Driscoll

On Thursday, Feb. 18, Antonio Camejo spoke to La Raza on the organization of an independent Chicano party for the improvement of the status of Chicanos and Latinos.

The Chicano party would be a vehicle for justice and freedom from oppression, racism, and treachery of the ruling class. It intends to give Chicanos control of the communities in which they live, control of government funds allocated for renovating and constructing houses and other community facilities and improvements, and to change laws that discriminate against Chicanos and Latinos.

A campaign on the part of a group called the Socialist Workers of California is running eight candidates in the 1970 elections. Among the issues on their platform are Chicano self-determination, Women's Liberation, a socialist America, black control of the black community, and bringing back all the troops from Vietnam. Antonio Camejo is their candidate for superintendent of public instruction.

Camejo feels that the credentials required for a Latino or Chicano teacher should be waived as they are discriminatory to the people. He also said that the cause is not a matter of fighting for the poor people but for the working people, and suggested that mass registration drives be organized to bring the working class together under a Chicano or independent party. La Raza also plans to file a brief in the U. S. Supreme Court to wipe ballot laws off the books in order to enable third-world parties to get on the ballots. Camejo said that the Chicano party must be a catalyst to bring other sections of the population into action and that in order to make a socialist revolution the working class must be united.

The Chicano Party is to be formed from the ideas of the people who attend the convention. There will be no set rules made before the convention. The convention will take place over the Easter holidays from March 25 to 29 in Denver, Colorado.

Letter to the Editor

From: James W. Jackson

When a man returns from military service, he is by law guaranteed re-employment rights, at his former position and former ranking. Why is it that at City College, returning veterans who are former students are given "returning student" (i.e. low priority) status, instead of "continuing student" (high priority) status, which is what they deserve?

Low priority status ensures registration in the last days, when classes are particularly hard to get. Is this fair to the man who was put on the line in the military, while his more fortunate brethren were able to continue their schooling? The administration should consider its policies towards returning veterans and grant them the status that they are entitled to.

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco
SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . Mike Chan, Joe Konte

Staff
REPORTERS
Elizabeth Driscoll, Tom Cleaver, Bruno Forner
CONTRIBUTORS:
Brenno L. Manders, Don Gardner, Dana Reemes
PHOTOGRAPHS:
Eugene H. Brown

"The Spring Term is the Dawn of the Seventies"
Illustration by DANA REEMES

EDITORIALS

One: Free the Campus Radio Station

You probably know that City College has a Broadcasting Department. What you don't know, perhaps, is that for 150 minutes a day students here operate radio station KALW-FM, 91.7.

You might say that we're fortunate to have on-campus studios. Unfortunately, such is not the case because KALW is run as if it was an affiliate of the Armed Forces Network — not the voice of an intellectual community.

The 1970 KALW "Policy Statement," for example, is unquestionably an insult to the intelligence of everyone associated with the College's motto, "The truth shall make you free."

Take Point 4a of the Policy Statement as an illustration. It maintains that "no candidate for public office shall be mentioned on any broadcast." Does that mean that a student running for president is to be ignored by his own media? And what about this proclamation: "No controversial issue shall be mentioned on any broadcast? Does that bespeak of freedom?

To continue, Point 15 declares, "Personal opinions or statements purporting to give station opinion on controversial issues or other matters unrelated to the general program shall not be made." What kind of truth is behind that line of thought?

The lowdown really, is Point 6b: "Material not in good taste such as some comedy acts, off-color songs, etc. shall not be aired." What does that mean? Simply that a song about French Revolution, which many students on this campus have studied, cannot be played on radio station KALW — the "Voice of City College?" Where's the truth and the freedom in all that?

We suggest that there is no truth and no freedom in the 1970 KALW Policy Statement. Plainly, these "rules" are something out of George Orwell's "1984," which is doubtless classified as "controversial" by the authors of the Policy Statement.

More importantly, we think that the Statement violates the Constitutional right to freedom of speech. As such, we demand that the Statement be burned and that the authors allow free speech to flourish instead. Anything less than that we have criticism for.

★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★

Two: On Apathy Here and There

Does residence in a great city destroy all sense of personal responsibility for one's neighbor?

That question was asked following the Kitty Genovese incident six years ago. Kitty Genovese: ever hear of her? She made the headlines once. People watched her die. Remember?

Please allow us to refresh your memories:

• "For more than half an hour 38 respectable, lawabiding citizens watched a killer stalk and stab a woman in three separate attacks." — N. Y. Times.

• The neighbors had grandstand seats for the slaying of Kitty Genovese. And yet, when the pretty brunette called for help, she called in vain." — N.Y. Herald Tribune.

Yeah. It sure shocked a lot of people. The Times went so far as to philosophize, "Nobody can say why the 38 did not lift the phone while Miss Genovese was being attacked, since they cannot say themselves. It can be assumed, however, that their apathy was indeed of a big-city variety."

And that, brothers and sisters, is what we are addressing ourselves to—Apathy of a "Big-campus" variety. Because the way we see it, some colleges are synonomous with apathy. Like C.C.S.F.

—Can anyone deny it? U.S. firepower wiped out what? 700,000 Vietnamese during the sixties. How many phones were lifted in protest around here?

In Africa, 1,000,000 Biafrans starved while students here waited in lines for their Statler Wing burgers.

As you read these lines the Indian population of Brazil is being annihilated by the military dictatorship there. Is there anybody on the campus doing anything about it? The answer, of course, is that apathy is silent.

To bring the point home: Perhaps, when one million students are put into concentration camps . . .

Dig, it? Because that's about where it's at. Like, many students saw the police helicopter hovering over the College on Feb. 10, right? But who noticed the pigs who went over to Mr. Holden's Engineering 38 class to arrest one of his students.

The question was . . . does residence in a great city destroy all sense of personal responsibility for one's neighbors? Consider that interrogation this Spring—the "dawn of the seventies."

M.K.

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Associated Students of City College of San Francisco

SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . . Mike Chan, Jae Kante

Staff

REPORTERS
Elizabeth Driscoll, Tom Cleaver, Bruno Forner
CONTRIBUTORS:
Brenda L. Manders, Dan Gardner, Dana Reemes
PHOTOGRAPHS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

"The Mess Hall" —Illustration by BRIAN CHIN

EDITORIAL

We Support H & R Students

We commend and support the current movement by concerned students on this campus to improve the cafeteria service.

In particular, we back the petition recently circulated by Harvey Rappaport and Chris Rallis. The petition, which has already been presented to the Student Council, at last count contained nearly 3,000 signatures.

Among some of the specific problems of the cafeteria cited in the petition are:

- The prices in the cafeteria are too high in relationship to the minimal cost of operation.
- The hours of all the eating facilities on campus are in complete disregard of student needs.
- The food in Statler Wing is often unacceptable as far as freshness and edibility and also overpriced.

With reference to the last point we are pleased to report that the Administration has agreed, effective March 15, to operate a "snack-bar" service in the cafeteria until mid-afternoon.

Although the decision to extend the hours of the snack-bar is indeed a step in the right direction, there are some other problems which need to be solved.

Among these are:

- Hotel and Restaurant students, under the disguise of "on the job training," provide 20 free hours of labor a week to the cafeteria.
- According to Lawrence Wong, H&R department chairman, the recent price increase in the cost of cafeteria food was due to the increase of "labor costs."
- The decision to raise the cafeteria food was made at the administrative level with no concern about the wishes and feelings of the 14,000 students here on campus.

Such problems as the above have been common to the operation of the Hotel and Restaurant department and the Cafeteria for years.

And in effect the so-called "labor costs" cited by Mr. Wong never did exist primarily because the students employed in the cafeteria work for free and the women workers are Civil Service employees paid directly by the City and County of San Francisco.

With this the Guardsman would like to present some of its own demands on the cafeteria crisis:

- H&R students should be paid union wages for their work and that a union be set up for all cafeteria workers and campus workers.
- The wages and the working conditions of the Civil Service employees employed in the cafeteria should be improved so that they are on level with other Union workers throughout the State.
- That a committee of students be formed to look into the entire operation of the cafeteria and be allowed to make some decisions affecting complete reorganization of the cafeteria.
- That the profit-making motive of the cafeteria be removed and that the cafeteria be placed in the hands of the student council who will oversee its entire operation.

Such a step as a complete reorganization of the entire Hotel and Restaurant department and the cafeteria would do a lot to return the cafeteria to students and put some sanity into its operation.

CONTACT LENS

Do You Side With Student Radicals

Stuart Nakamura, Criminology Major

No, I don't because they don't represent me. I don't like the Students for a Democratic Society because they are not democratic themselves. I want to become a policeman and they don't accept radical policemen. I guess I'm part of the Establishment. I've been in it for eighteen years and that's the way it goes.

Bruce Young, English Major

I can sympathize with many of their causes but I can't agree with many of their methods. I can't condone violence because innocent people are sometimes hurt. This, I believe, harms their cause more than it helps it. Even though our system is an awkward one, I feel we should make changes within rather than without.

Ken Leeser, General Education Major

I'm for them. I think all people and groups should have a chance to express themselves and if it's from a radical point of view, that's all right. Sometimes the radical groups get too radical, like when they want straight action and demand things done their way—immediately.

By Paul Thiele

Anti-Imperialist Struggle Grows in the Philippines

By Tom Cleaver

To most Americans, the Philippines are an example of enlightened colonialism, a case of an advanced nation coming in, educating the people to run their country, and leaving when the object had been achieved. To most Filipinos, the U. S. is seen as a country that came in and took control just as the people were about to expel the Spanish colonialists, that viciously put down a struggle for national independence (in a war that was as unpopular in America as the Vietnam war is today), and left the country politically only to maintain control economically.

When the Philippines were granted independence in 1946, the constitution contained clauses granting American businesses equality of opportunity with Filipino businesses, and granting extraterritoriality for military bases. Granting economic "equality" has meant that more than 80 per cent of the business economy is under American control; the right of "extraterritoriality" has meant that no American military man has ever been tried in a Filipino court for committing a crime against a Filipino. "Thieves"— anyone who comes within range of the guards — are regularly shot around the naval base at Subic Bay, the naval air station at Sangley Point across the bay from Manila, and at Clark Air Force Base upcountry from Manila.

The country is still economically backward because of the control of the economy by foreigners. The rural districts are held under almost feudal conditions by the 100 mostly ex-Spanish families who own 85 per cent of the arable land. Other than in the field of education, life in the barrios is little changed from the Spanish period. The political situation is extremely corrupt, with elections bought and sold by the local landlord with impunity. Political assassination is an almost-everyday occurrence during election campaigns.

There have been struggles for change. After the Second World War, the Hukbalahap (People's Army) — a communist-led guerrilla force which had been among the most opposition to the Japanese occupation — began armed struggle against the government. By 1949, nearly the whole country was under their control, with the exception of Manila. The insurgency was broken by Col. Edwin Lansdale (Colonel Hillandale of "The Ugly American"), who found in Ramon Magsaysay an active reformer willing to work to better conditions and thereby defeat the guerrillas. Under Magsaysay, an extensive program of land reform was carried out, hospitals were built and staffed in the rural areas, and a liberal program to re-integrate the guerrillas as landed peasants was begun. Magsaysay's death in an airplane crash in 1953 ended all reforms, and things sank back to their former conditions. Though Louis Taruc, the leader of the HUKs had surrendered, the insurgency never really ended, and has grown greatly in recent years, and is now in virtual control of the rural areas of northern Luzon, the main island.

Agitation for reform has grown greatly in the last few years, and has manifested itself in the recent riotous demonstrations against the government and the Americans. The election of President Marcos to a second term has brought fears of the establishment of a permanent political "dynasty," completely under the control of the U. S. Marcos is the first President of the Philippines to win re-election, and there are charges of widespread corruption in the election.

Abuses by U. S. businesses and by the military of their special concessions has brought increased agitation for repeal of the "equality" provisions of the constitution and an end to military extraterritoriality. Filipinos are greatly angered by the fact that no American serviceman has ever been severely punished in an American court for killing a Filipino. These killings are almost regular occurrences, and the people are now demanding that crimes committed against Filipinos be tried in Filipino courts.

There is strong feeling against Filipino participation in the war in Vietnam. In 1966, under pressure from Lyndon Johnson, Marcos sent a force of 20,000 "volunteers"— mostly combat engineers — to Vietnam, making the Philippines one of the "allies" fighting there. Recently it was disclosed that these "volunteers" were in the pay of the United States, and the furor this raised forced Marcos to completely withdraw the force from Vietnam.

As the government becomes increasingly repressive towards reform movements, they will become increasingly militant and revolutionary in their outlook. The prospect of increased armed struggle throughout the country is becoming a definite possibility. It is now probably too late for another reformer on the lines of Magsaysay to come and deflect the demands for complete national independence — both political and economic — and the country will become another center of the nationalist struggle for self-determination being waged throughout the Third World.

CHINA TALK

"WHAT'S GOING ON IN CHINA?"

That's what Dr. John R. Wilkins will answer on Friday, March 6 at 6:30 p.m. at Temple United Methodist Church.

All interested persons are invited to make reservations for this dinner-talk by calling 586-1444.

'A Nice Luncheon'

The Associated Women's Students with the aid of the Associated Students, put on a luncheon February 26 to welcome new student and faculty members to City College. Entertainment was provided by Jerry Southern, pianist, and by Miss Lorraine Bell, who sang a number at the end of the luncheon.

Among those members attending the luncheon were Miss Edna Pope, Dean of Women; Mrs. Ethel Crockett; Mr. Fred Ilumisten, Director of Testing; Dean Kirk, Dean of Men; Mr. Jack Aldridge, Assistant Dean; and Mr. Dean Hillsman. The new faculty members are Mr. Irwin Phillips, speech teacher and a native San Franciscan; Jesse D. Wall, physics teacher from Washington; Dan Griffin, psychology instructor; Richard Leong of the X-Ray Program; John Morall, Art 60 instructor; Edward L. Davis, counselor, and Miss Mercedes M. Milton, instructor of Chinese 1 and 3.

. . . Students and faculty dine together abaut once a year . . . Photo by Brown

Autos, Emission, Assemblymen

By Bruno Forner

"Automobiles shouldn't be the only means of transportation in this state," said Assemblyman John F. Foran in an ecology lecture last Thursday.

Foran, chairman of the Assembly Transportation Committee, spoke to an audience of about 100 students on the efforts of his committee to help put an end to pollution. After giving a brief summary of the efforts of his group, he described some of the anti-pollution bills backed or sponsored by his committee.

He said that six of the eighteen bills deal directly with the automobile. Some of these bills will restrict sales of automobiles if they did not meet the standards enforced by other legislation. One piece of legislation will call for a car to meet low emission standards after it had been driven approximately 6,000 miles.

He also said that his committee wants to impose the pollution standards that would normally be enforced in 1975, now. These standards are said to return the condition of the air over California to the same as it was in the 1940's.

Foran also advocated such changes as: a decal posted on every new car to denote the emission rate of that model of auto; exemption of most agricultural vehicles from these requirements; an annual automobile inspection per vehicle. In addition, Foran said that his committee had many proposals under way that have "stepped on big industries" to help curb the problem.

Foran also mentioned a controversial measure to crack down on those perpetuating pollution. This was a $6,000 per day civil penalty fine. Presently there is a $500 fine being enforced.

There were also bills on fuel control, reduction of smoke emissions, and other uses of the gasoline tax that were mentioned by Foran.

The Independent-Journal Is Stepping on the Proletariat

By Jim Browning

John Judice, a member of the International Typographical Union and a student here at City College, spoke last Thursday on the current strike by the ITU against the San Rafael Independent-Journal.

"The I-J is using the strike in an attempt to break the union," said Judice. "So far the I-J bosses have responded to the demands of the workers with hordes of riot and security police, dogs, professional strike breakers (scabs) and numerous court injunctions, all designed to limit the union's activity and continue the newspaper's production on a daily basis.

"This is all part of the bosses' master plan to force the unions out of the newspapers business in the Bay Area. Once the unions are out of the way the bosses will be free to give the workers low wages and poor working conditions."

If the I-J does manage to force the unions out and hire only non-union employees, other newspapers in the Bay Area will be quick to follow their lead and launch an all out attack on working men and women, Judice added.

The strike against the I-J began January 7 when 85 of the newspaper's 200 employees who had been working without a union contract for 15 months walked out their jobs.

According to Judice, the workers' demands center around working conditions and job security.

"Prior to the strike," Judice said, "the I-J was bent on continued harassment of the workers with such things as job speed ups and the firing of any worker the company didn't like.

"Although most of the strike breakers have been imported from Los Angeles, where a similar strike against Hearst's Herald-Examiner has been going on for the last 3 years, some students from the College of Marin are being used to produce the paper.

"Students, hungry for a job with pay, are being enticed to work for the I-J for $200 per week," Judice said. "Little do they realize that they're caught up in this country's economic system which helps the big men with all the money (the bosses) to step on the proletarian (workers)."

"The students also don't realize that by working for the I-J bosses they're helping to suppress and destroy the struggle of working class in this country."

A mass rally and demonstration of workers and students to show support for the I-J workers will be held this Saturday at the I-J building (Fifth and B streets in San Rafael) starting at 11 a.m. Car pools from San Francisco are being formed. For more information call 824-7605 or 826-9217.

John Judice Photo By Brown

On Pollution

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Pollution is not just of the air. It is also of the water. The main causes of pollution are industry, transportation vehicles, and our large population.

Water pollution is caused by chemicals being poured into the water on top of the normal waste products. The new convenience products such as enzyme detergents that make life easier are killing off the genetic life of our waters. The natural destruction processes of the water cannot function, and eventually our water will go through an aging process called eutrophication, by which a body of water solidifies and disappears.

What can be done to curb and eliminate the causes of pollution? First, the people have to be reached and told the damage that has been done and is being done to our environment. Second, legislation has to be brought about that will stop industries from pouring chemical waste into our air and water, and will require every automobile to have a smog device.

These reforms can be brought about by increasing interest in conservation. A good sign that interest is increasing is evidenced by the growing membership in various conservation clubs.

At a symposium held last week at College of San Mateo, students and politicians debated the pollution problem. Among the speakers were Assemblyman Jesse M. Unruh, Rep. George E. Brown, Jr., of Los Angeles, and Rep. Paul N. McClosky, Jr., of San Mateo.

Suggestions given for the improvement of our environment were that students study the issue thoroughly so that they can offer constructive proposals for improvement, that corporations be taxed in proportion to the amount of pollution they generate; that preferential treatment be given to families who have no more than one child, and that American development of supersonic jet transports be halted.

On and Off Campus

. . . a scene from the "Potboilers"

Clubs

The Filipino Club meets every Tuesday and Thursday in C-220 from 11 to 12.

The Engineering Society meets in S-257 during the Tuesday College Hour.

Women's Day

The 62nd annual International Women's Day will be held in Mission Dolores Park on March 8th from 1 to 4 p.m. Speakers at the celebration include representatives from the Welfare Rights Movement, Black Panther Party, Los Siete de la Raza, Women's Liberation and Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Strike. For more information, leave message at Mission Switchboard, 863-3040. The entire affair is being sponsored by The Committee for International Women's Day, 451 Cortland Street.

Ideas

The Experimental College enters its fourth semester this Spring. Some 25 courses are being offered. Anyone with ideas in education or an interest in life may participate in its activities. To register, simply drop into Bungalow 5.

Films

Films of the 1964 Alaska and Japanese earthquakes are part of a four-part study of "Our Restless Neighbor — The San Andreas Fault" scheduled next month at Skyline College in San Bruno.

Three evening sessions on March 5, 12, and 19 at 7:30 p.m. together with a tour of the fault area on March 21 make up the program.

Joe Amuto

The Experimental College will present Joe Amuto in a special one-man show. Amuto — an actor, poet, and innovator — will be reading works of various poets in the Little Theatre on March 4 at 6:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Russia

Porter McKeever, president of the United Nations Association of the USA, will speak at a luncheon meeting March 7 at the Thunderbolt Hotel near the San Francisco International Airport.

McKeever recently accompanied Arthur Goldberg, UNA board chairman, on his trip to Russia. McKeever will discuss "A Journey to Moscow and National Policy Studies."

His speech will feature a day-long discussion program which will begin at 9 p.m.

W. C. Fields

"My Little Chickadee," a W. C. Fields film, is the feature this Thursday evening at 8 p.m. at the Little Theater, A-152. Admission to Spring Movie Series presentations is free.

Theater

"The Potboilers," a sexy musical riotous melodrama of the absurd family" is being presented this Friday and Saturday at the North Beach Gallery Cafe, 576 Vallejo Street. Students will be admitted for the special $1.00 admission. More information is available from 986-9933.

Help!

Are you having difficulties tutoring? Come to the Tutorial Center, Science Building S-142, 9 a.m. – 4 p.m. daily.

Alpha Gamma Sigma

The CCSF chapter of Alpha Gamma Sigma, national two-year college scholastic honor society will elect officers for the spring semester at its next meeting Tuesday, March 10, during College Hour in C-224.

Wallace E. Wells, AGS faculty sponsor and former Vice-President of the State Executive Board of AGS, hopes all eligible students participate in the elections next Tuesday.

"I would like to see some "new blood" serving as officers and coordinators of service projects and social activities of the club," Wells said.

Temporary membership is open to students who, in the last preceding semester of attendance, were enrolled as full-time students and maintained a 3.0 grade point (or better) average.

Any interested students may consult Mr. Wells in E205 (Counselling Office).

Duskin Spoke On Environment

Alvin Duskin, San Francisco dress designer and advocate of the Indian stand on Alcatraz, spoke Tuesday, Feb. 24 on "the role of the private citizen in the control of his environmental destiny." The lecture was the first in a series on ecology.

Duskin said that he taught a Com 65A course at CCSF in 1958 but quit because he felt that the purpose of 5A classes was to screen students for eligibility for the English 1A parallel course and that it was unfair to the students. He also felt that there was a lack of cooperation and human spirit in the college and that CCSF should be a citadel of the City's activities.

Duskin has supported the Indian stand on Alcatraz because of the moral issues involved, and he is now working with the "Save the Bay" campaign. He believes that the ecology movement is being used as a means to brainwash the people into forgetting other social problems and that the people should be concerned with the preservation of human lives as well as environment because all life forms fit together.

Among the causes of pollution in California, Duskin said that the primary ones are overpopulation and too many industries that produce a surplus of goods that we do not need. He believes that we live in a society of consummerism, and that if the people will unite instead of going on individual action, our society can be redirected toward a healthier life for all people.

When asked about politics and ecology, Duskin said that President Nixon's budget is a symbol of hypocrisy because less is spent on ecology in spite of Nixon's promises to the contrary. He also cited the fact that Pacific Gas and Electric spends more on advertising than it does on projects that are important to the conservation of our environment. Only by studying various issues of our government, he said, can the people regain control of their own lives.

Mr. Duskin's future plans are to continue working for the improvement of our environment and closing his fashion-designing business to open up a clothing shop.

Ecology

The Ecology Lecture Series presents Dr. Frank Filice speaking on "Some Alternatives to the Projected Starvation Crisis," on Thursday, March 5 at 11 a.m. in the College Theater.

On Tuesday, March 10, Dr. Thomas Harvey will deliver a talk on "The Urban Population Crisis." This event will also take place in the College Theater at 11 a.m.

The Social Critic:

What are Fascism and Dictatorship?

By Jim Browning

What are facism and a dictatorship and how do they relate to modern America and its so-called "democratic" form of government?

Fascism is defined as being a highly nationalistic form of government — authoritarian in nature — and controlled by the people. In other words, the dictator simply assumes his absolute power without the consent of the people. He rules regardless of public opinion.

"Everything is for the state, and nothing human or spiritual can exist without the state, nor have any value outside the state." Benito Mussolini, "The Doctrine of Fascism," 1932.

"We, National Socialists, as supporters of a new view of life . . . must make a sharp distinction between the state meaning only so long as it can preserve and protect the race; otherwise it is worthless. Thus the highest purpose of the state is to care for the preservation of our racial elements." Adolf Hitler, 1934.

Fascism rejects the notion that the state exists for the sake of the people or as a means of promoting their welfare. Instead, it holds the idea that the people exist only to promote and support the state.

"The state is resuming its right and its prestige as the sole and supreme interpreter of the needs of the society." Mussolini, 1934.

"The German Reich, as a state, must include all Germans, with the duty of not only preserving the most valuable racial elements among the people, but also to lead them slowly and surely to a dominating position." Adolf Hitler, 1934.

The fascist principle of leadership is uppermost in fascist tactics. At the top of the state is one man — the leader, or fuehrer, the dictator — who always leads. At the bottom are the masses, who only follow.

"The law and the will of Der Fuehrer are one." Hitler, 1933.

Under dictatorship, the citizen belongs to the state. He has no civil liberties. Dictators tell the individual what he may read, where he may travel, what he may listen to, and where and how he must work. The dictator's orders have often extended even into family life.

"Men never do good except by necessity; but where there is liberty and license everything falls into confusion and disorder." Mussolini, 1928.

"Men are tired of liberty." Mussolini, 1923.

Fascism has no use for the idea of free speech. Almost the first step of fascist dictatorships on coming into power is to suppress all publications which do not support their regime. Spies and secret police are planted everywhere, and people who have anything to complain about learn to keep quiet. The various medias are flooded with official propaganda. Ideas which are in any way critical of the rulers are suppressed. Dictators do not want people to think.

The fascist state achieves unity by wiping out its opposition. It therefore cannot tolerate any political parties except the one party that holds supreme control. Other political parties are officially banned.

Fascism usually has no particular quarrel with religion. But Fascism insists that the church, like everything else, must accommodate itself to the state's program. As a result, nearly all fascist states have been opposed by some courageous religious leaders.

There is no necessary connection between Faseism and racial intolerance. But fascism comes to power by playing on the deep-seated prejudices of the people, and race prejudice is one of the strongest. Adolf Hitler built up his power partly by the cultivation of German prejudices against the Jews.

In the fascist state, the major task of education is to drill into the young a blind loyalty to the regime in power. Fascism also seeks to teach people enough so that they can serve the state in their work, and at the same time, keep them ignorant enough never to doubt the official teachings of the regime.

War is the very heart of the fascist system. Fascism keeps the country permanently on a wartime footing, and peace is only an interval for recovery or preparation for future wars.

"The consummation of the racial state's educational work must consist in burning a sense of race into the hearts and brains of the youth . . . no boy and no girl must leave school with out having been brought to a comprehension of the necessity and nature of preserving and supporting the state and the dietatorship." Hitler, 1934.

Next week: America: a democracy or the rise of another Third Reich?

Film Review

'The Molly Maguires': Wow!

. . . SCENES FROM "THE MOLLY MAGUIRES . . . "

By Albert Parsons

At first thought, one says, "wow! How can Hollywood make such a sympathetic movie about violent revolutionaries?" The film is very sympathetic; Martin Ritt says he was trying to explain what is happening and why people will resort to actions like this to "the man in the middle," and to an extent, he does so successfully. But one cannot expect even Hollywood to dig its own grave, and the picture stays within the limits of bourgeois acceptability.

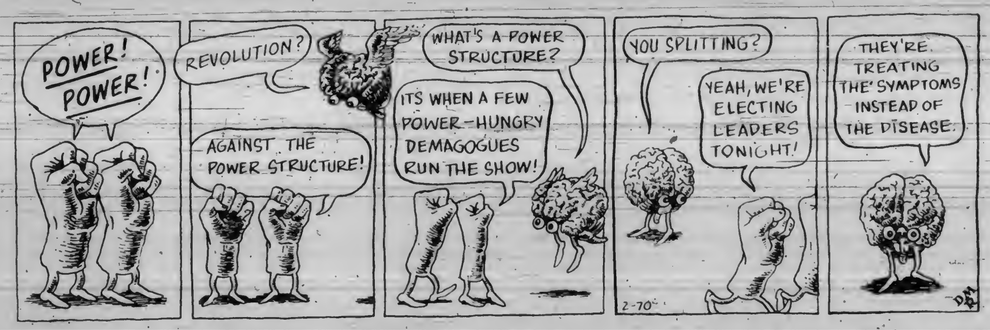
There is a myth that comes through in stories and movies in America. The myth of The Tragic Rebel; romantic, full of life, representative of all that is best in a man, and doomed always to failure. One cannot be told by a capitalist that there is a possibility of beating him, only that there is the possibility of martyrdom. The myth comes through full-blown under Ritt's direction.

Sean Connery plays the role of Jack Kehoe, the tragic leader of the Molly Maguires. Filled with a sense of purpose to right the wrongs done his people, he is The Avenging Angel of the Old Testament.

As with most rebels portrayed in liberal movies, he has the Christ element in him too, as when he says to the priest who asks him to stop all this and return to the Church, "I have not left the Church; the Church has left me." As with Christ, Kehoe is betrayed by his Judas, the Pinkerton labor spy James McParlan, played by Richard Harris.

A young Irishman selling the "IRA" newspaper outside the theatre said the movie was good, but it "made a hero of McParlan." Not so; McParlan is shown to be a fink and a rat, but a human fink. A worker, down on the bottom of life, McParlan aspires to better things. Taking what he is told at face value, he adopts the prevailing morality — "God takes care of those who take care of themselves" and sells himself to the bosses, who need a man to infiltrate the Mollies and put the finger on them. McParlan is their boy. Like Judas, he finds that what he does as a Mollie makes him feel right; shooting a cop to get out of an ambush is not part of his job, but he does it willingly. The same is true when he helps to burn the company store, a symbol of the oppression of the miners.

"I owe my soul to the company store" was very true in those days; it still is, but not so obviously. Yet he still takes his job seriously, and informs the police whenever an action is planned. After the trial, where he surfaces and condemns the men to death through his testimony, he goes to see Kehoe who sits in his cell awaiting hanging. McParlan wants absolution; he wants to be told that it is all right, that he did no wrong. He knows he has done wrong, and that nothing can save him from damnation, but still he asks. Kehoe — ever the romantic hero, the complete human — denies him the absolution he knows he can never receive, gives him the punishment he wants, and tells him that no one can ever punish him enough for what he has done, which is what he wants to be told. Judas will pay the rest of his life, but Christ will still go to the gallows. The myth stays right in line.



Martin Ritt's heart is in the right place, but he of all people should know the impossibility of doing his heroes justice in the medium he has chosen. Denied his work because of The Blacklist in the Fifties, Ritt knows what happens to The Rebel; he has calmed down now and accepted reality. Now he is allowed to work. Perhaps he can stretch the limits, as he does here, but he can never break them again. He will sympathize as much as possible, but the message still comes through: "Be a rebel, be a man, but remember that no matter what you do you will go to tragic defeat as an heroic martyr."

Be that as it may, the film is a good one, if you remember its frame of reference. The problem of violence is dealt with much more realistically and sympathetically than any other movie of late, and is realistic enough to show the life of a worker under laissez-faire capitalism. It shows that what is so "new" today isn't really that new. Police have always served the bosses, and treated the people like dirt. Bosses have always kept the workers down, and workers have always struggled. Perhaps so far all rebels in America have been tragic heroes doomed to fail, but this will not always be so.

The movie is at the New Royal, and only $2.50, go to the early show, it's less crowded.

THE G-MAN WELCOMES LETTERS AND FREE-LANCE CONTRIBUTION FROM ALL INTERESTED STUDENTS.

ADDRESS CORRESPONDENCE TO S-304

By Dana Reemes

Avrum Rubenstein: North Beach Artist

. . . weird wall painting at corner of Green and Grant . . . Photo by Nick Rescostodio

By Marc Kovacs

San Francisco's North Beach is a weird scene, man. At one and the same time it is the City's liveliest and craziest section. Like, professors mingle with prostitutes. Hired killers on leave from Vietnam brush shoulders with peaceniks.

The second thing to take note of is that there is no beach. We're talking about the three-block strip called "Upper Grant. That's where North Beach is at.

North Beach begins where Chinatown ends and where Broadway interferes — rather, intersects. Intersex?

Yeah, Broadway. Forget that world unless you want to watch a Committee satirize the people out on the neon-lit street where an endless stream of tin Mustangs search for non-existent parking slots. If that's your bag, then by all means, dig it.

On the other hand, if you think that Broadway is a plastic strip, if you don't dig the act of being watched by military police, if you think that look-but-don't-touch sex is a drag, if Broadway brings you down — in that case, go into City Lights Bookstore for a while. Get your head together. Go across the alley afterwards. Have a glass of wine. Then make it over to Upper Grant. There you will find the M.D.R. coffee house where people are grooving to the sound of underground music. Or drop in on the North Beach Gallery Cafe—not to be confused with the Coffee Gallery! There's always something happening there—poetry, theater, somebody painting the ceilings. Later, check out Gorilla Records and Posters. It will blow your mind. Take a stroll along Grant. You'll see many people — students, intellectuals, revolutionaries. Smell the incense. Enter the boutiques. Take a look at the counter-culture. Head shops. Leather stores. Enter an artist's studio, like Avrum Rubenstein's "The Scene . . ."

Q: Avrum, how long have you been in North Beach?

A: Well, let's see. I count this place for 13 years. So, that sort of puts me through a couple of eras. I mean, the gallery was here just at the beginning of the so-called Beat Era; when that died down, it remained; and now I suppose it's sort of an annex to the Haight-Ashbury, though this phase, too, seems to be passing.

Q: You must have seen many changes on Grant Avenue in the last 13 years. How does it compare now with the way it was when it started?

A: Well, it's more lively. The originals here were about three craftsmen . . . a jeweler who's still here, a woodturner who's long since gone, and a leather worker who's also gone.

They tried to attract other craftsmen and artist to the area. They've since drifted away and I've remained here. The question was about changes.

Originally, we tried to get only artists and craftsmen into the stores as they emptied, but economically it's not that easy. As you see, there are now many dress shops — boutiques they call them — junk shops . . . I own one myself.

Q: What is it that you do here at the Scene?

A: (Laughter) As you know, having looked around, everything in here is mine; all the paintings, the sculpture, and also in the past a lot of pottery.

This is the first year I haven't had enough time to turn out a great quantity of pottery. There's a little bit of it left. And the jewelry. Everything in here is mine.

Q: What attracted you to Grant Avenue? Because I take it you were one of the original craftsmen.

A: I wasn't one of the originals. Go next door to Peter Michiarini . . . he's one of the original ones. Oh, yeah, there's Gene Wright, the photographer, one of the originals also.

What attracted me to North Beach was the Bohemian area. Wow! I first moved into this area by getting a studio with another friend of mine in the old Monkey Block . . . I was still in high school . . . four or five blocks from here, but it's long since been torn down.

After I finished college, I moved over here; people that I knew used to hang around here. I started to show my paintings. When the hungry i first started, I was one of the working partners in it. When I dropped out of that, I had to scrounge around for something else to do.

I started working for a potter, who still has a studio around the corner, Mary Erkenbrecht. Then I started my own shop.

Q: Can you tell me something about your work and the kind of response it's getting? What are your projects?

A: Well, for one thing I probably am one of the first people in the country to use polyvinyl resin (also called acrylic plastics). Yeah . . . the only three painters I know of who used it earlier are Carl Zerbe in Boston and the two Siegriests in the East Bay.

Oddly, even before I had heard of them using it, I had run into it accidentally. Actually, polyvinyl resin is the same thing as your white glue. I'd used this white glue in painting three or four years earlier, but hadn't explored the idea of using it as a medium. I just poured it on as a texture over another painting.

All my paintings are very flat; there is no 3-D texture on them. I concentrate on visual texture. Projects? More of the same. I'm very interested in current movements and social trends.

That's why I like to paint as much as I can things like the Civil Rights Movement. There's a painting of Garibaldi up there on the wall. I had Judah Maccabee too, which led me into Jewish themes. That was a bad bag, because for a while people considered me very much a Jewish nationalist, which I'm not.

Q: How would you describe the present scene in North Beach? What's happening on Grant Avenue. What will happen? I'm not asking you to go into the future, but sometimes it's easy to spot trends.

A: Not really. This period right now reminds me very much of the so-called Beatnik period.

. . . Avrum Rubenstein

. . . Rubenstein's "Scene" is situated between Macchiarini's and The Shlock Shop on Grant. Photo by N.R.

"Creative People are Bohemians."

In every group, in every trend, there is always a bunch of hangers-on . . . and a few people who are doing something. Same now. I don't find anything to decry. Seems like very lively. There are always a lot of hangers-on who are sort of a drag in any case.

Q: Who are your customers? Who buys your articles?

A: Jewish doctors. (Laughter)

Q: How do you relate to these people who hang around Grant Avenue and come in here?

A: It's like anything else . . . If they come in and act like human beings, they're treated like human beings; the ones who are pretty far out hardly ever come in anyhow.

Even the worst people can have some good in them. What's happened, of course, is a spill-over from the Haight-Ashbury. When the Hashbury got so bad for the people living there, a lot of them moved over here.

The first ones tended to be the ones who were more creative, sensitive, or something. The ones that have followed are the more scroungy types. There's a high population density here . . . there's no place for them to live, so it'll never get as scroungy as the Haight.

It's a great neighborhood. It will never be anything but a great neighborhood.

Q: Were you in favor of the change or against it? It seems to disturb some people. Some merchants — for instance, the Coffee Gallery — are in favor of the New Central Police Headquarters that is being constructed here. How do you see it?

A: One: The worst thing in the world is police repression. Seven years ago I almost closed up, because we had so much police oppression that people weren't walking the streets. I mean tourists, let alone anyone else.

You can't operate a shop without foot traffic. At the height of the Beatnik eral the papers made such a thing of this being a violent, vile, agitated place that we drew all the kooks from the suburbs. High school kids from down the peninsula would come and throw rocks and eggs and things.

Fights would start. During the so-called Beatnik era — it was the most peaceful era of any that we've had around here — the people labelled Beatniks were the last people in the world to start fights.

The fights drew the cops. The cops were patrolling the streets in pairs constantly. It drove everybody away, luckily first of all the kids from down the peninsula, secondly the alleged beatniks, and thirdly the tourists. There was nothing here.

Like I say, seven years ago business was so bad that I almost closed up. If the cops start that again . . . and they pulled what I would call a terror raid about three weeks ago.

There were literally 16 cops, two abreast, on both sides of the street, sweeping the whole area. Anybody who thinks it's a good thing to have the cops do that is out of his head.

Q: Well, the Coffee Gallery says it's a good thing, because they don't want those people in the street inside their establishment. That's their standpoint. I wanted to get your viewpoint because, as I said, the Central Police Headquarters is being built around the corner. How will this affect the environment?

A: Changing the location of the police department is going to have nothing to do with the environment whatsoever. It's the attitude of a) the City Administration and b) the response of the local citizenry. I decry the bartender's viewpoint at the Coffee Gallery.

Q: Because you survive by the people that come in here and buy your work, right?

A: Right. I can't understand why this year should not be as good as last. Maybe it has something to do with the fact that there are fewer crafts and art shops and more clothing stores on the street; there are other areas where people can go for arts and crafts too.

Q: What is the most popular item here?

A: Unfortunately, some of the smaller jewelry, pendants and pin-type things.

Q: Would you like to say anything else about North Beach, your business, or what's going on around here?

A: There's going to be more of the same . . . I mean it's going to be better. I mean more people. It will never go back to being a backwash of North Beach. There was nothing here except a meat market and grocery stores, and all the rest of these empty shops.

It will never go back to that. It's going to always be one of the more attractive streets of San Francisco.

North Beach begins here and continues for three blocks on Upper Grant Avenue . . . Photo by Nick Recostodio

. . . there are some far out chicks at the corner of Union and Grant . . . Photo by N.R.

Underground .. Changes . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

probably do something like the rating service set up for films. The FCC can then just maintain the system of letting it work under pressure. I can't think of any big station owners who have the guts to take them on, but a test case would open it up a little."

A test case could come. Pacifica, whose listener-supported stations have perenially been in trouble for airing both sides of an issue, and are considered a breath of fresh air to most people who listen to them, has fought the government before. In a statement to "Rolling Stone" magazine, KPFK manager Mark Segelman said: "I think it would be exciting to confront them on the obscenity issue. I'd like to get a court case out of it. There's really no definition of obscenity in broadcasting because the FCC always charges something else to deny a license. So any decision is always a reflection of the FCC in office." Segelman further said, "Burch says he wants to reopen this question of the poem, and there isn't much guess about it being politics. They don't want people like the Black Panthers and the antiwar movement being covered in the news from any position but theirs."

The question of obscenity in rock lyrics is not a new one. The entire latter half of the Fifties saw rock and roll music persecuted as obscene, subversive of good American ideals, and generally a pain in the authorities' rear. The Fifties was a time of universal conformity, and the people who are afraid of the new — the blue noses Mr. Nixon puts in his "silent majority" — have elected a man who said he would take them back to the days of no questions.

(Continued from Page 1)

designed by Benny Bufano to be installed in the new Student Union building was approved by the 1968 student council. However, the present council would rather have an art work by Bufano and a less expensive fireplace. At least one art work in a building is a city Art Commission requirement.

The Associated Women Students' fashion show will take on a new format this year. Instead of being a display strictly for women, high senior boys and girls from public and private high schools will be invited to obtain information about semi-professional curriculums provided by the departments that ask for hrs in Smith Hall where the event will be held. There will be an hour devoted to fashions and what Dean of Women Edna Pope optimistically called "top notch entertainment."

Finally, Antonio Camejo, Socialist Workers Party candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction, has suggested that a debate between all candidates for the office be held at CCSF in the future. Camejo stresses improvement of testing procedures, including tests specially designed for non-English speaking minorities.

Rams Win Fifth Straight GGC Title

The Tipoff, The Game, The Victory

Ram's Price battles Laney's Walker.

Terry Bradley hits two of his 21 points.

Hero Daryle Johnson, 23 points, in victory.

Rams Ride To Long Beach Tourney Nearly Stalled By Stubborn League Officials

The California State Junior College Basketball tournament at Long Beach is the next stop for the Rams—champions of the GGC for the fifth straight year.

The championship impressed almost everybody except league officials, who wanted to force a possible playoff if the Rams were beaten by Laney. A CCSF loss would have put them in a tie with Foothill, a team the Rams defeated twice this year.

But instead of gaining the free ride to Long Beach the Rams would have had to play-off is still to determine the conference winner.

After Friday's win over Laney, it is difficult to understand the league officials' decision. The Rams proved beyond doubt that they were the number one team.

If that win didn't convince the league, and even if the two Foothill victories didn't impress anyone, then how about their final 13-1 mark?

CCSF's dominance of the conference was unnoticed by the league brass but it certainly had an effect on the other clubs. We know that one team in particular felt the brunt of the Rams. And that is why Foothill is number two

CCSF Number One Again, Downs Laney 80-74 in Thriller

By Joe Konte

The phenomenal Rams survived a late collapse, and won their fifth consecutive Golden Gate Conference basketball crown last Friday at CCSF with a wild 80-74 victory over the Laney Eagles.

CCSF blew all but two points of a 16 point half-time lead in the closing seconds of the game, and it took a key turnover to maintain that skight margin.

Daryle Johnson, who led all scorers with 23 points, clinched the win with a pair of crucial free throws with 18 seconds left to give the Rams a 78-74 lead.

Only seconds before, CCSF was on the verge of losing the lead, and the game. A dramatic turn by Laney's Bernard Dulaney following a wild scramble under the Eagle hoop cut the Ram lead to 76-74 with 0:40 left. After a Ram timeout, the Eagles fouled Terry Bradley, who had performed superbly throughout the contest. But Bradley missed his free throw, and the Eagles had the ball with 25 seconds remaining. The hounding Ram defense rose to the occasion, however, and forced Dulaney to throw a pass away, giving Rams possession. Laney fouled Johnson in desperation, and he calmly sank both charity tosses to ice the win.

For a time, though, it appeared the Rams would walk all over Laney. CCSF jumped to an 8-1 lead at the outset, and finally built up a commanding 22-5 advantage at the 12:20 mark. During this period, Johnson was the Ram spark, tallying 13 of his first half points.

The stubborn Eagles fought their way back to within four points at 4:19 of the opening half, but Bradley's three point play put the Rams up 35-28.

At this point, Ram coach Sid Phelan made the best move of the night. He inserted guard Larry Haren into the game. Haren suddenly took charge and made his presence known to the rallying Eagles. It took only 25 seconds for Haren to explode.

Bradley stole an errant pass and fed Haren streaking to the basket for a spectacular lay up amidst a horde of Laney defenders. Haren pumped in two more buckets, the latter coming on a 50-foot pass from Billy Metcalf with 0:02 remaining. The Ram thurry ignited by Haren saw a seven point lead spread to 16 points in only 3:45.

The second half saw the Rams continue their dominence, with only a token disturbance from the Eagles. But at 11:45, 6-7 Ram center Jerry LeBlanc fouled out. CCSF still held on until a late Laney shooting spell which narrowed the gap to 76-68 with only 1:30 remaining. The Rams almost saw sure victory slip from their grasp as Laney ran off six straight points before Johnson's climatic free throws.

For Coach Phelan, it was his seventh conference championship in eight years. And he had heroes aplenty in this GGC finale. Consider 5-9 Metcalfe, who hauled down 13 rebounds, and had four assists. Although he scored only six points, his defensive play accounted for numerous Laney turnovers.

Consider the superlative play of Haren, and Bradley. Haren hit seven of eleven shots from the floor and three of three foul shots. Bradley netted 9-11 field goals and finished with 21 points.

And consider the super Johnson, who was the factor for the Rams. The big forward scored 17 of his 23 points in the first half, and then settled down to play a great defensive game, grabbing off 15 rebounds to halt the Eagles. Johnson had been playing with strained ligaments in his knee, but his performance was not affected. It was his gutty play that typified the team's effort all year.

Rams' Thinclads Lose to Modesto in First Meet

Starting off the 1970 track season with only one practice the Ram thinclads were cut down by Modesto 75-61.

The lack of Ram practice stems from the fact that their competition, for the most part, operates on the quarter system. The Rams, on the semester system, felt one month behind in practice because of this discrepancy.

In the sprints, Modesto just chewed up the Rams. The Rams placed just one trackster, Steve O'Neal, in the 100. He took third and was clocked 10.4 seconds. The Rams failed to place anyone in the 220 sprints.

In the 120 and intermediate high hurdles the Rams placed respectively Bruce 42nd, 15.7 seconds and Derrick Williams 2nd, 60.3.

Newcomer Mike Salem an AAA finalist was the only Ram to place in the 440 yards dash. He took third and was clocked in at 51.5.

Cross-country veteran Jim Tracy was the only Ram to place in the 880. He was clocked at 1:59.8 and took second in the event.

The Rams took their revenge in the distance events. In the mile another cross-country vet Huberto Hernandez trapped up first with a 4:21.7 clocking. Dave Power, a cross-country man, took third in 4:29.4. Getting stronger the Rams swept all three places in the 2 mile event. Hernandez led the Rams. Power in second, and distance man Rodolfo Narvaez in third.

High jumper Salen set a new record when he cleared the bar at 6' 8". Teammate Ron Caldwell cleared 5' 10" for third. Ram Dave Robinson went 21' 9" to take first in the long jump.

In the shot put City placed Frank Orass in second. Orass heaved the ball 41' and 4".

The Ram discus men made a clean sweep as Andre Hicks easily took first with a 145' throw. Ram teammate's Frank Orass snared second with a 117' bomb and Bob del Torre hit a 112' to nab third place.

Modesto took first and second in the pole vault with Rani Dan Freidman in third with an 11' leaper.

Ram men corralled first and third places in the triple jump. Adrian Coleman edged out his opponent by just 2" (42' 4" jump) to snatch up a Ram first. Ram Derrick Williams jumped 41' 2" to secure third.

The Rams took the 440 relay behind the efforts of Steve O'Neal, Andrew Watkins, Glen Austin and Dave Robinson. The relay was clocked in 43.4.

Modesto took the mile relay in 3.29.4 minutes.

Hoop Merger Possible Disaster

By Joe Konte

Last week, we informed you of the recent expansion of the NBA, which would add four more teams to the fourteen-club league. The move will dilute the, teams to a point where the brand of basketball could be inferior to professional standards.

In that other league (ABA), there are eleven teams, each of which is already playing inferior basketball. So Walter Kennedy, NBA commissioner, has planned to join his eighteen teams with the ABA's eleven to form an inferior 29 team pro loop.

Such a merger would tear apart the established NBA. Whereas the ABA has nothing to lose, and everything to gain by a merger, the NBA risks the possibility of losing its reputation for solid, exciting basketball. And the addition of the new teams, plus the merger, would weaken the stronger league.

Another problem of the merger concerns the common draft. With 29 first round draft choices, the possibility of picking up more than one top-flight collegian on any one team is almost nil. For example the championship team would choose last in the draft, meaning their second choice would be the 58th player drafted. All the rounds of the draft after the second would be meaningless, since most of the promising players would be gone.

The final big in the works is the realignment of the teams into divisions, leagues or whatever. It may be easier if one more team could be added to even the total to thirty clubs. Maybe there could be fifteen two-team divisions or two fifteen-team divisions. Or possibly, all the clubs could be lumped together in one giant league, with the top twenty teams making the playoffs. At that rate, the playoffs could last until the next season, and Kennedy could make money all year-around with his brand of basketball.

City College of San Francisco Library
320806
PAMPHLET
Guardsman

Radio Station Demands Freedom

By Tom Cleaver

The City College Broadcasting Club, composed of all students in broadcasting, voted Tuesday, March 3, to officially sponsor a petition campaign to end what they term "illegal censorship" of the campus radio station KALW-FM.

The motion, which carried four to one, condemned a policy paper from Ken Nielsen, the KALW-FM transmitter-operator at John O'Connell Technical Institute, which forbids "controversy" on the station.

According to Pat Crippen, KALW Station Manager and President of the Broadcast Club, the issue has been building for quite some time. At the beginning of the semester, when the policy statement was handed out in class, many students protested the provisions for censorship, but were told by the instructor, P. K. Brown, that there was little if anything they could do about the problem.

Mike Berman, Program Director of KALW, says: "What we are particularly opposed to is abritrary censorship by one man, Ken Nielsen, with no provision for a process of appealing his decisions."

At one time, Nielsen cut off the broadcast of a program featuring Dick Gregory, though there was no obscenity, no call to get guns, and very little except Gregory's explanation of how he came to be where he is. Several records with what Nielsen terms "suggestive" lyrics have been censored on the music shows too.

The petitions will be circulated on and off campus throughout the rest of the month, seeking a broad base of support from students, faculty, and other people who may have some influence. The petitions will be presented to the San Francisco Board of Education in early April. The students do not expect to get rid of all censorship, but they do hope that a future censorship statement, to be issued by the Board of Education, will be drawn up by all persons concerned — students, faculty, administration, etc., and that an appeal procedure will be put in to keep away from arbitrary decisions by whoever will be in charge of enforcing the new code.

Specifically, the petitions ask that censorship from the people at John O'Connell cease, that any policy governing KALW come from the Board of Education, and that it reflect constitutional protections of speech and press freedoms and normal regulations of the Federal Communications Commission.

At present, there is little listener response to KALW, primarily because the station operates only during those hours when most students are in classes. Additionally, the censorship regulations made by Nielsen make for a rather dull, colorless format. Because students probably do not feel strongly about the issue of censorship of something they do not listen to, the broadcasting students will have to get support from the Faculty Senate on the issue of censorship as a point of ethics, and support from influential off-campus people in the broadcasting industry and in local politics.

"This campus is Apathy U," says Crippen, "but people have to come together on some point or there won't be anything to stop them from censoring everything."

Watch for the petitions and sign them. Arbitrary censorship affects everyone sooner or later.

Patrick Crippen, KALW-FM Station Manager (forefront) and Mike Berman, KCSF Program Director. Both want an end to censorship of their programming. —Photo by Kovacs

the guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco
VOLUME 70, NUMBER 3 . SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED. MARCH 11 1970

This photo, by Mark J. Kelleher, is part of an exhibit of student work now on display on the third floor of Cloud Hall.

'We're In An Ecological Revolution' — Hal Gilliam

In the third of a series of lectures on our environment, Harold Gilliam, writer for the San Francisco Chronicle, spoke on the consequences of overpopulation and industrialization of our environment.

Gilliam gained his experience when he worked for the Department of the Interior in Washington, D. C. While there, he learned about the political processes of getting legislation on our environment through our government.

"We are in the midst of what might be called an ecological revolution," Gilliam said. "We hear the word 'ecology.' We hear the word 'environment'."

According to Gilliam, the increase in sudden interest in our environment are television's documentaries on pollution and politicians' revamped platforms which include environment, causing the American people to realize that something horrible is happening to the land and air around us.

Gilliam became involved in the pollution problem because of the destruction being done to the California animal and plant life. For example, DDT has killed pelicans, cormorants, fish, and other forms of animal life.

"I think that we have really committed a form of genocide on these species," Gilliam said in reference to the pelicans on the Santa Barbara coastline that were killed by DDT which the birds picked up from fish that had been permeated by the chemical.

"DDT has been found by scientists to cause tumors in mice," he continued, "but it has not yet been proven to cause cancer or leukemia in humans. Scientists feel that DDT and other such chemicals may produce mutations in human beings of future generations."

The extermination of one type of animal life can lead to overpopulation of another, Gilliam pointed out. For example, when birds are exterminated the insect and mice species that they held in control will have a population explosion causing man to use more chemicals to exterminate them.

The oxygen that is produced by our plant life is being used at a rate that is several thousand times more than the oxygen we breathe. Some scientists believe that industrial plants are using more oxygen than our plant life is capable of producing. The effects of this exploitation of our oxygen could be compared to breathing air at levels of 10,000 to 20,000 feet.

Among the fallacies in our society that have caused pollution are that everyone has "done his own thing" without consideration for the effects that it has had on our environment. Pesticides have affected various forms of life. The feeling that "growth is good" is inevitable, but when a new industry comes to the city and brings more families with it, a need for more housing arises and the feeling that growth is progress sets in.

In conclusion, Mr. Gilliam said, "We have to develop a reverence for the earth and its plants and its creatures because we are a part of it and we can't survive without it."

What Happened at U. C. Santa Barbara?

(The following is an account of the Santa Barbara-Isla Vista uprising as reported by Steve Plevin and Jim Gregory of the UC Santa Barbara student newspaper, "El Gaucho.")

Isla Vista is a specially-built college community, with large slum-like apartment houses and three food stores with remarkably high prices. It's ten miles from Santa Barbara, with the university on one side of town, the ocean on the other. Mostly students and those who live off the student populace. The average income of a UCSB student's parents is $22,000.

Rent for the disintegrating plastic apartments ranges from $140 to $270 a month. Chancellor Moser, chairman of the board of Goleta Valley Savings and Loan, which finances some of the Isla Vista development projects, helped with the conversion of the old U. S. Marine Base into the campus, and purchased one-third of Isla Vista for Signal Oil. At the same time as Moser was grabbing off his share, six realtors formed about six interlocking partnerships, took over the planning commission and succeeded in building an isolated community where twenty-five thousand students would have to live — and spend.

When the community felt the pinch and screamed in outrage, urban renewal came in. And who got the renewal funds? The Goleta Savings and Loan Co. Ninety per cent of the rentals are controlled by these same six realtors. Santa Barbara realtors refuse to rent to students, thereby increasing the squeeze at Isla Vista.

On a usually quiet campus, the police have had ample time to concentrate their efforts on busting for dope and otherwise harassing students. And on a campus where probably seventy per cent of the students turn on, they lacked no material.

Some time before William Kunstler came to speak, incidents occurred that began to fester in the community's side. A guy in front of a pool hall flips the bird at a cop. The cop chases him, two of the guy's friends interfere and the guy gets away. Later he's caught, and his two friends are arrested for aiding and abetting a fleeing fingerer.

On Tuesday, before Kunstler spoke, police arrested Jim Trotter, known movement sympathizer, shortly before a pig car was burned. Trotter was charged with the fire. Two people who attempted to help Trotter were arrested. That night, the Radical Union held a rap session about Trotter and took a collection to help with bail.

People set fire to a mattress at the scene of the arrest. A police car drove by. A few of the seventy people assembled threw rocks. Five more cops drove by, and each time they were met by more rocks. The assembled persons waited for more police, and the crowd swelled to about five hundred people.

At 11:30 p.m. two hundred people assaulted the Bank of America and broke out every window. At 1 a.m. one of the realty offices was hit.

Wednesday, Kunstler came to town. He spoke to about 3,500 people. His speech was not particularly inflammatory; he said he couldn't condemn breaking windows. The crowd gave him a standing ovation.

Later that day, Rich Underwood, a member of the Resistance, was arrested and brutally beaten in front of a number of people, then charged with six counts of felonious assault — on three cops. The arrest was an attempt to break up a proposed rally in which Underwood was heavily involved. More cop ears were stoned.

(Police were later to accuse demonstrators of stockpiling rocks, but a good share of the landscaping in Isla Vista is of the rock-garden variety, and Isla Vista has one of the most plentiful rock collections ever assembled.)

At dusk, people started to chase the black and white police cruisers, behaving in guerrilla street tactic-inspired manners, moving in, destroying a realty office or attacking a cop car, then running for another one.

Wednesday night, the people went back to the Bank of America. Windows had been boarded up, so a trash can was set on fire. Three fraternity types put the fire out. At 10 p.m., the police came in force, with the sheriff's posse arriving in a bus.

The police began to form up behind the bank, then charged the assembled crowd, chasing them about a block. Then the people stopped.

The Isla Vista terrain is ideally suited for street fighting in that there are a thousand ways out of most situations. You can't be trapped. The people fought back with rocks, and, when the police charged again, they stood and fought, then charged the police.

Immensely surprised, the police huddled together, then broke and ran. Back to the buses, three blocks, chased by an angry mob of eight hundred people. All the bus windows were smashed. The police retreated. A police cruiser was abandoned and later destroyed by the crowd. Between 11 p.m. and midnight, the police made short forays, throwing teargas, but teargas security was relatively poor and the crowds could not be dispersed. There was partying in the streets, and barricades were thrown up.

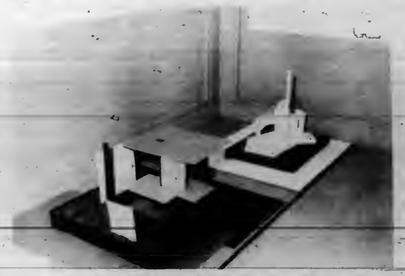
At 12:30 a.m. Thursday, a trashcan was set on fire outside the Bank of America, and, after smashing the door with a motorcycle, rebels moved the trashcan into the building. Seven hundred people stood by and kept the police and fire department officials off for the two hours it took for the Bank of America to go up in smoke. Flames roared sixty feet into the air. At 2 a.m. a helicopter flew over, warning the crowd below that they were an illegal assembly, and all but two hundred went home to bed.

The police moved in immediately, and thirty-five were arrested. Police invaded people's houses without search warrants. An announcer for KCSB, the campus radio, was roused out of bed and arrested.

The daylight hours Thursday were quiet, but bonfires sprang up to welcome the police at nightfall. A crowd of five-hundred charged forming police lines, badly damaged another police car, and was only forced back by another busload of police. That night, street action raged. Rebels charged police barricades repeatedly, and another thirty people, mostly non-demonstrators and passing motorists, were arrested. Police cordoned off downtown Isla Vista, and the guerrilla street tactics used earlier were again employed. The police seemed at a loss as to how to fight against this type of action.

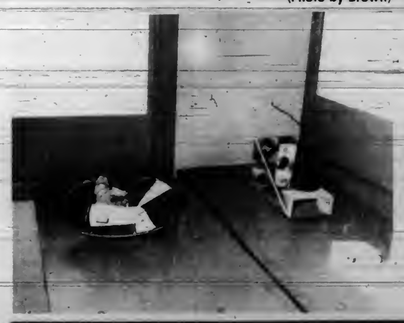
Under attack by rebels, the police began to throw rocks back, but the guerrillas merely armed themselves with garbage can lids and continued the assault. Several Molotov cocktails were thrown at police lines, but no police were burned. The police retreated again. Casualties for the evening included one police officer paralyzed and one with a caved-in chest.

A 35-year-old UC employee was shot by police while on his way home in his car.



Police retreated and left the field to the demonstrators. As each car pulled away, it was pelted with rocks. After building barricades and dancing in the streets, most of the victorious demonstrators went home. At 12:30 Friday morning, a helicopter flew over warning that National Guard troops were arriving. The Guard arrived at 1 a.m. and arrested thirty people, mostly out of passing cars.

Isla Vista was slapped under a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew, and indiscriminate arrests and illegal entry into people's homes has become a common occurrence. People are being arrested in the middle of the night and charged with assault and concealing deadly weapons. Seventy people were arrested Friday, though there was no street action. Police are attempting to identify rebels from pictures.



Isla Vista looks like an occupied city in a war zone. But for two nights running, the streets really did belong to the people.

Right on.

A Three-Dimensional Experience

. . . two of the many models on display in Cloud Hall. (Photo by Brown)

The current exhibit of the architecture students at CCSF can easily be classified as a three dimensional experience. The exhibit in room C-207, is devoted to concepts of design and "space."

The main feature of the exhibit are models of space modulators, constructed by the students. These have been described as a means of creating "space." Since there are two tables of them, a wide variety of their use is very apparent. The accompanying photographs show several of them.

Also shown are features on how color can be used as a whole medium that can project power and value. The signboards feature some examples of these in such a way as to expand the abstract meanings of light, color, and space in laymen's terms.

The exhibit isn't devoted to just these points. Also featured are posters and drawings showing how the following tie in with architecture: design, materiels, volumes, mass, contours, and light. There is also news of an American Institute of Architecture competition for SF high school students to find the best design for a teenage center.

'We'll Use Any Force Available'—Reagan

By Jim Browning, News Editor

Governor Ronald Reagan last week blasted the state's university and college administrators for "not meeting the serious threat of student dissent head-on."

Reagan told his weekly news conference in Sacramento that he supported the recent "get tough" announcement of Chancellor Vernon Cheadle of UC Santa Barbara that any student participating in a campus disorder or riot would be immediately suspended and prohibited from attending another state university or college.

'NO JUSTIFICATION'

"No issue," declared the governor, "can justify or warrant students resorting to violence and the destruction of property and endangering human life.

"It's high time this country stood back and took a look at itself and how far we've gone down the road to try to run the government by seeing who can make the loudest noise in the streets.

"There are normal, reasonable channels," the governor added, "for redress of grievances and the last place in the world we should expect this kind of violence is in the academic community.

"There is no excuse for it."

When asked if meeting the problem of campus disorders included the calling of the national guard and army troops onto college campuses, Reagan replied, "Yes, if it is absolutely necessary to keep the college open, we'll use any force available.

SANITY??

"Even if it takes the army to quell a riotous mob of anarchist students we'll use them. That's the only way sanity is going to return to the colleges and universities of this state."

Reagan then lashed out at the Santa Barbara riots saying that the riots were created by "a little bunch of storm troopers, many of whom were not from the Santa Barbara campus, although some were."

Alternatives to the Projected Starvation Crisis

Dr. Frank Felice of U.S.F. spoke on Thursday, March 5, in the Little Theater on "Alternatives to the Projected Starvation Crisis."

The view he presented was that the point of over-population has not been reached yet and that it probably never will.

He blamed the lack of distribution of Modern Technology to the underdeveloped nations as the cause of starvation.

He said that with our highly industrialized state we can produce more than enough food for the populations projected in the foreseeable future. An example of using our technology to increase food production is in his references to San Francisco Bay's usefulness in producing oysters

Two and one half thousand pounds per acre of oysters were taken from 4,000 acres of Bay water at the turn of the century. Dr. Felice noted that there are 170,000 acres of tide land suitable for oysters in the Bay. With that area, 400 million pounds of oysters could be harvested. The last time oysters were harvested from the bay was in 1935. This is due to a combination of industrial waste, sewage, and agricultural wastes.

Dr. Felice's position was very optimistic compared to Dr. Thomas Harvey's or Dr. John Thomas', next week's College Hour speakers.

Southeast Asia: Struggle Builds in Laos

By Tom Cleaver

The long, drawn-out civil war-national war of liberation in Laos is coming to a head. At this point, not even massive American troop intervention could probably save the situation if it were possible to send troops to the country, which it isn't.

With the recent capture of the strategic Plain of Jars — named for the crematorial urns scattered over the plain from an earlier civilization — by the Pathet Lao with assistance from North Vietnamese troops, the inability of the American-supported elements to hold their own has been amply demonstrated. The plain was taken by the so-called "secret army" of General Vang Pao late last summer, after Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese troops had withdrawn in the face of massive American air raids in the region. Vang Pao's troops merely occupied territory that had been vacated, with none of the struggle that would mark the action as the great "victory" that was proclaimed in the American press. The retaking of the vital plain in the face of the most massive American aerial bombing of the entire Southeast Asian war, shows the ability of the opposing forces to do whatever they want in the country.

The war in Laos has continued intermittently for 25 years, since the declaration of Laotian independence from France in 1945. Overextension in Laos on the part of the French army was one of the decisive factors leading to the French defeat at Dienbienphu; the fort had been placed there to try to stop infiltration from Vietnam into Laos. When the struggle began anew in the late 1950's, it precipitated the first international crisis in the region since the French defeat in 1954. U.S. involvement through the CIA in attempting to clandestinely overthrow the neutralist regime heated up the civil war between rightists — supported by the CIA, neutralists — supported by "world opinion," and the leftists — supported by large numbers of the people and receiving military aid from Vietnam. The 1962 Geneva accords supposedly gave power to the neutralists under Prince Souvana Phouma, though fighting between the neutralists and rightists — while the Pathet Lao quietly rebuilt their forces — continued until 1964, when the rightist elements were installed in government, nominally recognizing the authority of Souvana Phouma, who had to publicly acquiesce to the presence of American troops in civilian clothes under the control of the CIA.

Direct American military involvement began shortly after the assassination of Ngo Dinh Diem in the fall of 1963. This involvement, which was primarily bombing and reconnaissance flights from Navy carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin, was not exposed until May 1964, when a Navy reconnaissance jet was shot down by Pathet Lao forces and the pilot captured.

Starting from a force of less than a battalion in early 1960, the Pathet Lao now controls nearly three-fourths of the country, with the exception of the royal capital of Luang Prabang, the administrative capital of Vientiane, and the area south of the Thai-Lao border on the Mekong River. Since 1964, they have controlled the centrally-located Plain of Jars at will.

The Americans talk a lot about the lack of fighting spirit among the Laotians. This is true about the American-controlled forces, which are manned by press gangs who go into the refugee centers, grab any able-bodied man of military age, and bring him back to the camps. All refugees are fleeing American terror bombing against the villages in the hills of the eastern part of the country, and have little love for their Western "benefactors." The Laotian army did not even contest this latest take-over of the Plain of Jars. The commander of the Royal Lao Army was seen in the nightclub of the American hotel in Vientiane with his two mistresses the day of the Vietnamese attack; the Royal Lao Defense Ministry was closed to celebrate Buddha's birthday, with two sleeping guards being the only military presence to be seen. This has been the story of Royal Lao military policy since the beginning of the struggle in 1960.

Many Senators are now publicly worried about American involvement in the war, and talk about preventing any buildup of American ground forces in Laos. This actually skirts the issue, since the American military commanders in the region know that an American military ground action would be a very difficult undertaking, since Laos is a landlocked country, and supplying the necessary backup for the highly-technological army would be exceedingly difficult without a port and with no major airfield adequate for cargo planes in the country that would be safe from enemy attack. At present, there are something in excess of 5,000 U.S. Army Special Forces in the country, operating under the control of the CIA, attempting to organize Meo tribesmen into guerrilla units or into Vang Pao's mercenary army. Unless the Administration is stupid enough to believe that it can send men into land-locked Laos with the overwhelming supply difficulties this would present when they have been so unsuccessful in Vietnam where access for resupply is relatively easy, this covert military presence and the massive bombing attacks will be the extent of involvement. The Pathet Lao and the Vietnamese have already shown that this effort is totally useless.

. . . This recently circulated leaflet points out that more bombs are falling in Laos than were dropped in North Vietnam. It was distributed by the Filipino Club. . . .

defeat u.s. imperialism!

'Some Broadcasters Capitalize on the Good Times of Today's Society'

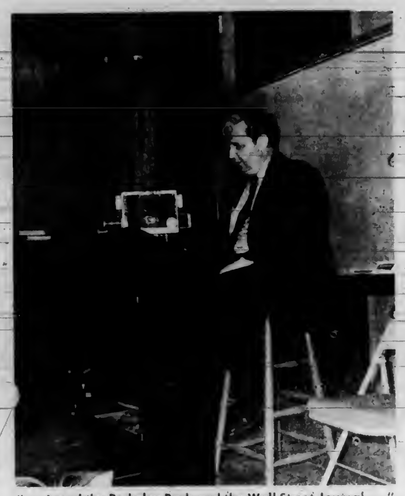
By Elizabeth Driscoll

Last Thursday Bob Vanowski, Director of Public Affairs and editorial writer for KCBS radio, spoke to the KCSF broadcasting students. He has worked for KCBS radio for five years.

Mr. Vanowski spoke on the increased need for versatility on the part of the reporter. The reporter for a small newscasting station must be able to cover all subjects from sports to PTA meetings. In the smaller radio stations, there is no room for the specialist because the news market is not worth the expense of hiring one.

A good, versatile reporter who has perspective and knows his community is worth more to the station than the specialist, who only has perspective on one subject. Perspective must become a habit with the reporter, whether he is interested in the subject or not, because it is his job to give the public an overview of events in their community.

About 80 percent of news made today is in some aspect of our government, and therefore, any student who presumes to become a career journalist must learn the politics of the city he reports on and have a solid knowledge of civics.



The need for "responsible," courageous news reporters is growing because the people are demanding to be told the truth about what is going on in the world. The reporter today cannot plead ignorance of his responsibility to the public because of the public's demand for the truth.

However, there is a great deal still wrong with much of the news media. There are broadcasters who capitalize on the good times and good living of today's society. Mr. Vanowski called these people parasites and said "Parasites we don't need, produeers we do."

In reference to Vice President Agnew's remarks about the press, Mr. Vanowski said he felt that what Agnew said needed saying.

When asked why KCBS does not change their news format as KSAN did recently, he said that KSAN's change was unique and different, but that it was irresponsible of the needs of its audience.

In conclusion, Mr. Vanowski said that the news broadcast has a wide scope of listeners, that the attention span of the listener is limited, and that news writers should follow a motto of "write tight," that is, using short, direct sentences to get the point across now, not two minutes later.

". . . I read the Berkeley Barb and the Wall Street Journal . . ." (Photo by Kovacs)

CONTACT LENS

What Should Be Changed Here At City College?

Donna Paul, Nursing Major

Overcrowded classes. Sometimes when you try to get a class, they're all closed. I've had to take other classes and wait for the ones I wanted until the next semester. Only two of the classes I am required to take are helping me. The others aren't. I still want to take two classes and they're still closed out.

Vince Moon, General Ed. Major

Nothing really. I'm here only half of the day — I go to my classes and then I split. I used to eat in the cafeteria last semester but the food was hardly edible and the prices were too high for the kind of food served. It's also too crowded. I don't go down there any more.

Conrad King, Psychology Major

Class schedules. The hours of classes should be closer together so that people can work in the morning and go to school in the afternoon and the other way around. I also think we need a new librarian because you can't get a drink of water without her bothering you because she has to water her plants.

Charlotte Sisenwein, Art major

I don't like the way the classes are set up with the teacher up in front leeturing—especially in my Art History class where the instructor stands in front and raps all semester without even knowing the names of the students. I think there's a basic alienation between students and teachers here.

—By Paul Thiele

Student Council Inches Forward

By Paul Thiele

The Women's Liberation Committee was voted in as an official campus organization at the Student Council meeting on March 2.

Women's representative Sally Moore, read the committee's constitution to the council members who approved it by a vote of seven Yes, zero No, and two abstentions.

I.D. Buttons

A proposal that all student council members have identification buttons was tabled until definite designs are presented. Arguments against the buttons were that they were "labels" and that some members may be "ashamed" to wear them. The advocate of the buttons, Charles Smith, said, "Student Council is really invisible on this campus. Nobody knows who Student Council is." He added that people with problems could ask council members for advice if they knew who the members were, thereby helping people and making themselves "more visible on this campus."

Gumball Machines

Kenneth Knight, who received blood donations from fellow CCSF students during a kidney transplant last year, offered 40 percent of the gross profits from 15 or more of his small candy and gum vending machines which he will set up around the school. The council approved of the offer unanimously.

Young Socialists

Sally Moore, a representative of the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA) also, asked for approval of the organization at the same meeting, however, she encountered some disapproval this time from Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels.

"I think that it's in violation of the educational code," Samuels said. He explained that YSA is the youth division of the Socialist Workers Party which is not officially listed on the California state ballot as the code requires.

Councilman Roger Cassell made a motion to the effect that YSA should be made official but at the organization's own risk of being overruled by the college's president, Louis G. Conlan. The issue was tabled until the Wednesday, March 4, meeting.

Councilman Quits

The first order of business on March 4 was the resignation of councilman Sanford Goldeen.

"I feel constrained because we have too many leaders and no workers, which I admit being guilty of," Goldeen said. "I don't see any constructive work coming out of this group." He also mentioned that the Administration is "carrying too heavy a hand on us."

Sally Moore—Again

Once again, Sally Moore came before the council, this time to read the constitution of the YSA before it was voted upon. Discussion over YSA ensued and Sally explained the purpose of the organization.

"We will have our own independent finances and make our own decisions," Sally said. "We are not affiliated with the Socialist Workers Party although we may support some of their activities."

"We support a society that provides for the needs of the nation's people, like medical aid, food and shelter."

After the YSA was approved by a 3-2-2 vote, Art Samuels again reminded the decision may break the educational code, but all parties were willing to take the risk.

Fashion Show Woes

In other business, Associated Women Students President, Lorraine Bell, made a request for a total of $435 for the upcoming fashion show and career day. The council, noting that $435 made up about 50 percent of their current budget, asked that the amount requested for food, $250, be broken down into specific items so that they could attempt trimming the figure at the next meeting.

Lorraine said that the show is expected to draw an attendance of around 800 people.

Honor Society Trip

Finally, Emily Harvey of honor society Alpha Gamma Sigma requested $270 for a statewide convention which five student members, a counselor, and Advisor Wallace Wells will attend. Voting on the request was put off until the next meeting.

Pollution Control Conference

More than 3,000 authorities in the pollution abatement field are expected to contribute to discussions on air, water and noise pollution and treatment of solid and nuclear waste, on April 1, 2 and 3 at the Fairmont Hotel.

The theme of the conference is "The Environment 1980: Management, Cost and Technology" sponsored by the National Pollution Control Conferenee.

One of the speakers will be Frank P. Sebastian, a leading industrialist: His theme will be "Tahoe and Windhoek: Promise and Proof of Clean Water."

'Zabriskie Point' Is Far Out!

Michael Antonioni's latest (and first American) film has the deceptively mild moniker "Zabriskie Point," but for European distribution it could well be subtitled, "Los Angeles: It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog." For the film is an unremitting slander on that scabland to the south, only occasionally mitigated by the superimposed plot. We say "superimposed" because Antonioni's shots of the itchy, bald L.A. landscape, breaking out into eczema patches of sub-standard housing and swathed all over with yellow smot, could stand alone as the ultimate in anti-travelogues.

The plot is nonetheless genuinely original. It opens on a militant students' meeting which is debating the shutdown of the school. One of the youths, seemingly out of it all, suddenly clamors, "Are you willing to die in this?!" — and races out while the others mouth startled denials. He buys a gun, attends the next day's riot, and maybe does-doesn't kill a policeman (the film is obscure here). Fleeing his conscience or perhaps the cops, he pinches an airplane and flies off into the Arizona badlands ("Zabriskie Point"), where he contrives a raucous, athletic love bout with a girl who just happens along. Then he throws away his guns, flies back to the airport, and is shot dead by a grim constabulary welcoming committee. They do things differently; as they say, in L.A.

"Point" speaks to its audience on several levels. It is anti-Establishment in that it turns a jaundiced eye on those institutions that loom largest against the city skyline, i.e., skyscraper-big business and the police. You see the latter in all their flourishing variety: cycle cops, patrol cops, highway, city, and campus cops (plus Best of Breed: the tae squad), plain cops, fancy cops, cops smiling, frowning, gassing, beating, shooting, and dying. Cops who leave gun stores smirking. Cops who book an arrested "associate professor of history" as "clerk" because his formal title is too long for the dotted line. Cops who unsmilingly ask him how to spell it when the hero says his name is Karl Marx. It's a good bet Antonioni will never hereafter receive complimentary tickets to the annual L.A. Policemen's Ball.

"Point" is anti-materialist. It specializes in showing denigrating shots of that school of U.S. advertising fondly named Contemporary American Bleech; in close-ups of city architecture uniformly housing computers which light up and say howdy as people pass by; in a last-reel demolition of a flossy cliff house, photographed from 15 different angles. "Point" is pro-Alienated Youth. Despite his milieu, Mark, the hero, never convinces the viewer that he's a militant student, socially aware, or even particularly committed.

He does a lot of cussed things likely for pure cuss. "Point" is pro-Love, as evidenced by a desert fantasy love-in that was alternately so steamy or balletic, the audience laughed in nervous relief at its conclusion. Finally, "Point" is simply good Wilderness Conservation propaganda. Frame after frame of noxious mewed-up urban sprawl is contrasted with the sunny, spacious desert wastes, land that patently is "bad" only in name. The juxtaposition of the two landseapes and the 'love sequenee comically brought to mind the Biblieal injunetion, "Babylon was a great city; her merchandise was of gold and silver and the souls of men . . . Flee from the midst of Babylon and go out of the land of the Chaldeans; be as he-goats before the flock."

If causes aren't your bag, go see the movie just for the great little sidebar vignettes that spiee its progress. See beautiful panther-eyed Kathleen Cleaver in a cameo as chairman of the strike committee, displaying just why she is a woman worth rebelling for. See how to bypass the gun laws by whispering insinuatingly to the gun-shop owner that you live in "a borderline neighborhood" — immediately he sells you a .38 with comradely advice, "You can defend your home. If you shoot anyone in your back yard, say later that you argued in the house first." See the tremendous denouement in which Daria the heroine hears of Mark's death and fantasizes the explosion of her corrupt, Establishment boss' pleasure dome . . . a detonation that presently discards all sound and parades in slow motion the descent of materialist debris: lawn chairs, a glossy fridge, coke bottles, a t.v., a plucked chicken, reams of cheap literature, etc. It is a marvelous sequenee, the ticky-tacky Los Angeles fraud proved gross for all time.

Finally, watch for the film footage of the State riots interlaid into the midst of a supposedly L.A.-based student revolt. It is all your worst memories, in livid technieolor with blood upon the ground and recognizable friends going under the truncheon. When we saw "Point," the audience's winces and gasps of "That's State" had to be hushed by the manager.

Antonioni's perceptions never flag. He handles the eamera as though it were the viewer's eye, now blinking, now staring, now just noddling along. His soundtraek is a conglomerate of kitschy songs to back up small-town-America scenes, of computerized bips, poks, and squitters for the Big-Business motif, of the latest, hardest hard-rock as the youth theme. He includes mementos of every eampy happening of the last five years, youthquake, Freedom Now, reactionism, radicalism, rock, the military-industrial complex, hip clothes, student rebellion, poliee brutality, pot, pierced ears, sexual freedom, the return-to-the-land ethic, and even an odd ease of psyehedelie painting. "Zabriskie Point" is one man's compendium of all the latter-day American social attitudes fit to film.

—B.L.M.

. . . Daria Halprin talks to a "peace officer" who has seen her car parked "Zabriskie Point" and comes to "investigate."

"Magic Flute" Will Open On March 12

By Shirley Fogarino

Mr. Narman Hearn during a "Magic Flute" rehearsal. —Photo by P. Kipnis

The music and drama departments of City College are collaborating this Spring to present Mozart's enchanting opera-classic, "The Magic Flute".

It will mark the first operatic production the college has undertaken in well over a decade and it will be presented in the little theater on March 12th, 13th and 14th at 8 p.m. Admission is $1.00.

Coordinating the production are Dr. Walter Krumm and Mr. James Haran of the drama department and Mr. Norman Hearn, the opera's orchestral director.

"The Magic Flute" is an enchanting story of the quest of Prince Tamino (played on alternating dates by John Stephan and Larry Bodini) to win a beautiful Princess, Pamina (Marina Fenner). The Prince's attendant, Papageno (John Chan), accompanies him and together they must undergo many trials in order to free Pamina from the temple of the Priest of Isis.

At the beginning of the quest, the attendants of the Princess' mother, the Queen of the Night (who is played by Liz Logorio), present Tamino with a magic flute and Papageno with enchanted chimes. The magic instruments are to aid them in their encounters.

Upon arriving at the temple, Papageno, in outlandish garb, rescues Pamina from an evil Moor, Monastatos (Ronald Denny), and informs her that the Prince is on his way. Papageno and the Princess try to escape from the temple but are stopped by the Moor, Sarastro, Priest of Isis (Chris Moody), appears suddenly and punishes the Moor for his unworthy intentions toward Pamina. He then decrees that both the Prince and Papageno must prove their worthiness by passing through the ordeals of the temple.

One of the ordeals is a test of silence under temptation. The Prince and his attendant are tempted by the three assistants of the Queen of the Night (the assistants are played by Mary Jo Condrin, Theolea Rutledge and Jessie Allen). They resist the temptation. Papageno, however, finally relents to the temptations as Prince Tamino remains ever-silent — even when Pamina addresses loving words to him.

Pamina, thinking that the Prince's love for her has faded, contemplates suiéide but does not take her life because of the supposed faithlessness of the Prince. Papageno also desires to end his life but is told to use his magic chimes. He does so and his sweetheart, the beautiful Papagena (Lucy Fannon), appears before him. The three characters are then transferred before water and a cavern of fire. The Prince appears with his armored soldiers. Pamina is then reunited with Prince Tamino, who may now speak, and with the help of the Magic Flute, all pass harmlessly through the fire and water. The Queen of the Night and the Moor are then banished forever by Sarastro.

On and Off Campus

Movie Series

Movies are shown every Thursday evening in the Little Theater, A-152, at 8:00. Admission is free. Here are the dates of upcoming movies and where they were made:

March 19 — "The Big Sleep" (USA).

April 2 — "The Seventh Seal" (Sweden).

April 9 — "The Battle of Algiers" (France).

April 16 — "On the Waterfront" (USA).

April 23 — "Lavender Hill Mob" (England).

April 30 — "The Transport" (Germany).

Russian Film

"Resurrection," a Russian epic based on Leo Tolstoy's novel, will have its West Coast premiere March 12 at the Gateway Theater, 215 Jackson, off Battery. The Guardsman review will appear in the forthcoming issue.

Enlightenment?

The Psyche Forum, sponsored by the Experimental College, will be held on a regular basis every Tuesday at 4:45 p.m. in B-5. It is described as an open seminar for anyone who is interested in attaining self-actualization or enlightenment.

American Film

Ronald Reagan stars in the film "Bedtime at Bonville" to be shown on Friday, March 13, at the University of California Medical Center Auditorium at 7:30. Special student admission price is 75c.

Newsreel

Free films are being shown every Tuesday night at 8:00 by "S.F. Newsreel" at Intersection-Center, 756 Union St. "Strike City" and "Medical Committee for Human Rights" will be shown on March 17.

Lecture

The Ecology Lecture Series will present Dr. John Thomas on Thursday, March 12, at 11 a.m. in the Little Theater. The topic is "The Immorality of Too Many of Us."

Flick

The world premiere of Jean-Luc Godard's controversial film "One Plus One" will be held tonight at the Palace Theater, Powell and Columbus Streets.

The film features revolution and the Rolling Stones (see picture) recording their hit, "Sympathy for the Devil." The movie is being sponsored by the Cinema Workshop, a new association of Bay Area filmmakers.

Flower Power

A grant of $250 will be awarded to students in their last year of high school by the Retail Floristry Foundation at CCSF. The objective of the grants is to encourage students who feel that retail floristry is the field for them and help them finance their junior college educations. The grant will be given over a 2-year period. Call Mrs. Maryhope Jacks for more details.

Toronto Peace Festival Scheduled For Summer

By Erik Heldfond

Across the frozen wasteland of the Aretic Circle, the cold wind sweeps along its southerly course. Down the jagged cliffs of the peaking Rockies, the wind warms and becomes but a gentle breeze that floats over the vast city. The moon casts long and swooping shadows upon the vacant field. The grass seems to glow with luminescent light of its own as it tosses about in the midnight air. So the city sleeps caressed by the Winter gales.

But meteorological breezes are not the only ones that have touched this metropolis; for the city of Toronto has become engulfed in the winds of change.

In January 1970, a statement was issued from the Savile Row Offices of Apple Corporation in London. The statement divulged a plan that provided for the largest demonstration of "youth power" the world has ever seen. Devised by John Lennon following his recent Toronto appearance at the 1969 peace festival, the groundwork began to be laid for a "Give Peace a Chance Festival."

The basic purpose for such a gathering, according to John Lennon, is to support the inauguration of the year One A.P. — After Peace — another vision which has been revealed to him. To every musical connection in the world, Apple coordinators have visited to enlist publicity, money, and entertainment. Although trivial plans are still up in the air, the basics have been arranged. The Toronto Exhibition grounds have been selected as the spot from which the sound of every major musical influence on music, past and present (Beatles, Stones, Elvis, Led Zeppelin, etc.) will spread out of Toronto and around an unbelieving world. Admission, if not free, will be nominal, with all proceeds going to the newly established Lennon-Ono Peace Foundation; no profit will be received by anybody — hopefully.

But many problems plague the organizers, the primary one of which is the people themselves. One cannot expect a minimal number of spectators at the first Beatle appearance in five years. It is estimated that between two and six million people will attend (six million is twenty-four Woodstocks). The problems this factor presents are enormous. Traffic, food, lodging, etc. must be provided. With that tremendous number of people, it would be wise for the coordinators to study the living lessons of Altaniont and Woodstock.

With the golden summer sun they shall come. Six million worshippers setting forth on a pilgrimage. In the early part of July, the quiet, tranquil field of Winter shall become the altar upon which the old ideas and customs of a to be passed generation will be sacrificed. But what is to be accomplished one might ask? There is no goal that the festival will set to strive for; there exists no type of moral or philosophical construction to be done. It is merely a demonstration to the masses of humanity upon this celestial rock, that the power and energy which one day will govern the Earth, has been fused.

Rally for Striking Workers

The students for a Democratic Society (SDS) last week staged a support rally for the strikers at the San Rafael Independent-Journal.

The strikers, members of the International Typographical Union, have been on strike since January 7, when the I-J management brought in non-union strike breakers in an attempt to break the union and suppress the workers' struggle for better wages and working conditions.

City College of San Francisco
Associated Students present
THE CONCERT BAND
Joseph Alessi, Director
AND THE STAGE BAND
Gerry Olds, Director
IN CONCERT
Dr. Edwin Kruth, Guest Conductor
Wed. March 18, 1970
Little Theater (PHELAN AT JUDSON)
8:00 p.m. $1.00 Admission
All Proceeds to the Associated Students of C.C.S.F.

Johnson, Phelan Honored

Sid Phelan, GGC Coach Of The Year

Ram Pair Voted Tops In GGC

By Mike Chan

The laurels of victory have fallen upon the recipients of the Golden Gate Basketball Conference Crown. Honored for the first time as Coach of the Year is Ram Coach Sid Phelan.

Star Ram forward Daryle Johnson received the tremendously prestigious honor of Player of the Year. And, as if you didn't know, the Rams took the conference with a 13 and 1 record through the workhorse coaching of Sid Phelan and the ever consistent performances of an ailing Daryle Johnson.

Johnson, a 6'6", 190 pounder from Evanston, Illinois, was the fifth leading scorer in the league and the Rams' number one point man. In 14 league games Johnson hit 88 field goals and 66 free throws for a combined total of 242 points and a 17 point average per game.

What surprised most observers was the fact that Johnson usually led a well balanced scoring attack, where 3 to 5 Rams would score in double figures. Billy Metcalfe, a second team all-GGC selection this season, had a 12-point average while Rams Larry Haren and Terry Bradley had solid averages of 11 points per game.

Even though a team may be the best on paper, as Laney was, the extra spark needed to ignite a team to championship stature is the coach. Take, for instance, the Sid Phelan formula of taking the best available players and drilling them into a five pronged machine that will exhibit a hard-nosed defense and a playmaking offense. Of course, the formula won't work every time. Coach Phelan's machine has led CCSF to just its seventh title in eight years of league play.

CCSF Drops Baseball Opener, 8-3, To Chabot

Chabot capitalized on an array of Ram miscues to win the league opener, 8-3, on March 3 at Hayward. CCSF committed a horrendous total of nine errors while fumbling their way to defeat.

Ram hurler Rick Escalambre was victim of the defensive collapse, lasting only six innings while suffering the loss. Escalambre allowed five runs and seven hits in between the errors, before reliever John Farrel bailed him out in the seventh frame.

The game started out innocently enough when CCSF jumped to a 1-0 lead in the first inning. Escalambre keyed the score, as he singled, stole second, and came home on Vince Anderson's base hit.

Chabot bounced back with a pair of runs in the second and fourth innings before the Rams could get back on the scoreboard. Greg Sikora led off the fifth with a single and stole second a few pitches later. Again Escalambre delivered with a run-scoring single to narrow the gap to 4-2.

But the Rams made more errors and Chabot scored more runs. CCSF finally tallied once more in the 8th while trailing 8-2. Anderson doubled and Ray Spediacci walked to open the frame. But after Pat Fera grounded out, Edwards stroked a saerifice fly, bringing Anderson home with the final run.

Escalambre banged out three hits, and Anderson had two to pace the offense. However, Anderson also made two errors, and third sacker Jim Daly booted three for the faltering Rams.

CCSF finished their preseason schedule at 2-4. A 6-4 win over the University of California JV's was the highlight. Spediacci, who will share starting assignments with Escalambre, went the distance allowing only six hits in picking up the win. Red Ramos drove in three runs with two hits to spark the Rams.

Upcoming games for CCSF are: Thursday, March 12, at Foothill; Saturday, March 14, Laney at CCSF; and Tuesday, March 17, San Jose at CCSF. Saturday's contest starts at 11 a.m. and Tuesday's game begins at 3 p.m.

—Joe Konte

Fleet Feet Lose

City College of San Francisco finished well in back of Merritt's spikers in the eighth annual Golden Gate Conference Relays held February 28 at Foothill.

Final scores were Merritt 82, Chabot 76, Laney 67, Diablo 60, CCSF 47, San Mateo 44, San Jose 42, and Foothill 40.

Merritt took first place in six of the 16 events, while the Rams' best effort included only three second-place finishes. CCSF's trackmen were number two to Chabot in the distance medley relay with a time of 10:20.1, only seconds behind the winner's 10:18.3.

The Rams were runnerup to Merritt in the sprint medley relay, with a 3:35.9 clocking compared to the victor's 3:29.2. That mark established a new meet record formerly held by San Mateo in 1963.

Another second place mark by CCSF came in a close race in the four mile relay, won by Chabot. The Rams' time of 18:12.1 was good enough to break their own meet record set last year, but Chabot bettered them with an 18:09.1 finish.

The best individual performance from CCSF was produced by Don Bruce, who captured first place in the triple jump with a leap of 44'2".

Glen Austin, CCSF sprinter, also performed well, taking fifth place with a 10.3 mark in the 100-yard dash.

The Rams also had three third-place finishes, those coming in the long jump, triple jump, and discus. Dave Robinson of the Rams placed fourth in the long jump with a 20-11 leap.

Next meet for the Rams is on Friday, March 13, against Chabot at 3:30.

Girls' Basketball; GG Ram Boxer

The girls' basketball team of CCSF will hold its first game on March 11th at U.C. Medical Center's gym at 7:30. Admission is free.

Girls' basketball manager Alicia Thorpe, openly challenges CCSF students to come and find out the quality of the team. Who knows? A female Maravich-Murphy-Mount type may be prancing about!

Ram freshman Sam Helmer, a San Francisco Golden Gloves champ in the 178 pound class, may be heading for the Las Vegas Golden Gloves if Coach Roy Diederichsen can pull it (don't worry, AS people, Helmer will pay his way).

In his first GG bout, Helmer took a decision over San Jose's Gil Martinez. In the finals, Helmer used his fine footwork and devastating left hook to take unanimous decision over Napa's Peter Johnson. Helmer nearly KO'ed Johnson in the third.

Ram Golfers Win One, Lose One While Susko Shines On

Ram aces John Susko and Bob Simpson led the golfers to a 28-26 win in the league opener over Diablo Valley at Sharp Park on February 27.

Simpson fired a 78 over the tough, oceanside layout in Pacifica, but it was the consistent play of Susko which was the key. Susko's 77 tied Diablo's Bill Ament for the day's best round. Greg Corvi shot an 81 to round out the top three.

The Rams' victory celebration was cut short, however, when they traveled to Contra Costa for the rematch on March 2. Diablo gained revenge with a 30-24 victory, despite a brilliant 72 by Susko. Simpson shot a 75 to place him in the runnerup position behind Susko. Ironically, DVC's Greg Hetzer led his team with a 78. But the consistent work of Diablo eventually won out, with Joe Doyle and Corvi shooting 83 and 84, respectively, for the Rams.

USF's frosh snuck by CCSF in a pre-season tuneup at the Meadow Club on February 26, with a 30-24 win. Again, it was the play of Susko, who was medalist with a 74, that led the team. Teammate Corvi fired a very respectable 77 to back him up.

The remarkable play of Susko over the first three matches is no surprise to any follower of this fine player. In the recent San Francisco City Golf Tournament, Susko qualified for the first flight with a 75, but lost to Dr. Jack Lucetti in the first round.

Upcoming matches include a 1 p.m. contest against the USF frosh today at Sharp Park, and a league duel with Chabot at the Lake Chabot course on Friday.

Spring Training Exhibitions: A Folly

By Joe Konte

Twenty-four major league camps have opened in the spacious resorts of sun-flooded Arizona and Florida. The event, of course, is the opening of baseball spring training.

The practice of spring training is as American as apple pie or the girl next door, depending on your tastes. Spring training is evcrything. It is the patch of green grass and soil, an oasis in a barren desert. It is the 25 acres of ground molded into a complex of fields, clubhouses and offices.

But spring training is more than a pad of pure beauty and pleasure. It is that time of year when grown men run, throw, and hit in preparation for the long climb up the ladder of another rigorous 162 game schedule.

From the rawbone, rookie righthander trying to make the big club to the aged veteran attempting to convince himself that he has "one more year," spring training signifies the beginning of an eight-month baseball vigil.

Many argue that the regular season is prolonged and dragged out. Although possible, it must be reasoned that the schedule includes only eight more games than it did when baseball was at its peak in the 1920's and 30's. However, eight months of the "Grand Old Game" could be too much of a good thing.

The exhibition season is now with us as teams battle daily under the sun in a variety of meaningless contests. For many of the teams, an average preseason schedule will include about 26 games. Add that to the 162 regular season duels and the total is 188. Now the division playoff winner could play up to 12 more games, including five in the divisional battles and seven in the World Series. The sum of this onslaught of games is 200.

The point is not in reducing the regular season or the playoffs, but in removing the drudgery of the exhibitions, in which participants simply go through the motions. This lack of effort in such contests that do not affect the standings hurt baseball.

The players may be relaxed in their plush settings in the sunshine, but the fans are on edge. Baseball is successful because of the striving competition it generates. When that element is eliminated, the sport is thrown into jeopardy.

The Social Critic: Is America Fascist?

By Jim Browning

America: a "democracy" or the rise of another Third Reich?

Certain conditions within the last 5 years indicate that America is rapidly losing what little democracy it had and becoming a fascist state similar to Hitler's Germany and Mussolini's Italy.

Among the numerous factors which I feel are leading America down the road to fascism are:

- Vice President Agnew's recent harsh attacks on the "liberal" news medias and dissident groups in this country.
- The battle cry of the Nixon administration for "law and order."
- The harassment and imprisonment of certain left wing elements like the Black Panther Party and the American Communist Party.
- The continuance of US imperialistic efforts in South Asia and the Middle East and the ever burdening presence of US troops and American business interests in every non-Communist country in the world.
- The increased use of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) in infiltrating all leftist organizations in this country.

In a "true democracy" the freedom of speech to present an opposing viewpoint, the right to free assembly, the freedom to read any newspaper or to listen to any radio broadcast are all fundamental elements designed "by the people and for the people."

But Americans today are finding their civil liberties — freedom of speech, assembly and newspapers — virtually nonexistent because of recent laws enacted at Federal, state and local levels. In California alone last year there were over 500 laws passed to limit these "sacred" freedoms.

In the fascist state the first step of fascist dictatorships on coming into power is to suppress all publications which do not support their regime.

While President Nixon has not suppressed any publication yet, he has, however, allowed Spiro Agnew to attack the news medias for "not supporting the administration," issued subpoenas to news reporters for their notes and records on left wing groups and even suggested recently that the news medias be licensed by the Federal Government.

Nixon's call for more "law and order" is indeed a close parallel to the tactic used by Adolf Hitler in the early 1930's in his rise to dictator of Germany. With more and tougher laws all aimed to suppress civil liberties of the people and the dissident element, "law and order" could and possibly would lead to the establishment of a fascist state in this country.

The fascist state achieves unity by wiping out its opposition. It therefore cannot tolerate any political parties except the one party that holds supreme control.

Since Nixon became president, the Federal government has instituted a program of wiping out all opposing political parties. The Black Panther Party alone has witnessed numerous attacks on its people and offices and seen most of its leaders either jailed or murdered by federal authorities.

War is the very heart of the fascist state.

Since World War II ended 25 years ago, the United States has been engaged in two bloody wars — Korea and Vietnam — and the supplying of arms and ammunition to most of the countries of the world. (The US accounts for 75 per cent of the total world's supply of arms produced each year.)

In the fascist system spies and secret police are planted everywhere, and people who have anything to complain about learn to keep quiet.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, recently acknowledged that FBI and CIA agents have infiltrated every left wing group in the country. Their plan, according to Hoover, is "to cause friction within the group so that the members end up fighting among themselves."

Fascism comes to power by playing on the deep-seated prejudices of the people, and race prejudice is one of the strongest.

Public outrage at the government's decisions to force busing whether or not the people want it has sparked heated debates and in some areas of the South armed struggles between Black and White people. Forced integration has for the most part hurt the Black movement while deepening the white man's racial hatred of his Black brothers and sisters.

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . Mike Chan, Joe Konte

Staff
REPORTERS
Elizabeth Driscoll, Tom Cleaver, Bruno Farner
CONTRIBUTORS:
Brenno L. Manders, Don Gardner, Dana Reemes
PHOTOGRAPHS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

EDITORIAL

Free the Imagination!

A number of ominous things are going down on this campus.

To begin with, The Guardsman has learned that the Administration wants a four-page newspaper for its 14,000 students. We think that the students on this campus deserve eight pages — at the very least. However, because the Administration treats the student body here as if it was still in high school, a struggle will have to be waged to keep the Guardsman at eight pages. We trust that you will respond to this call for support. At the same time, we are encouraging our readers to back the petition being circulated by the students who operate the campus radio station, KALW-FM. They, too, are in need of your support. More specifically, an end to censorship is being demanded.

We think that the Administration wants an unfree radio station and a four page newspaper because it doesn't want to read or listen to what the students have to say. Further, we believe that nothing less than your right to freedom of expression is being threatened.

Now is the time to get it together. Support the Guardsman. Support the campus radio station. Free the media. Free the imagination!

On quite another matter we want to call your attention to a recent World Affairs Council press release:

"The World Affairs Council announced last week that Mr. John Holdridge, senior staff member of the National Security Council in charge of East Asian Affairs, will be one of the major speakers at the Young Adult Forum Spring Seminar on "China and the Outside World" which will be held at the Asilomar Conference Grounds March 14-15.

"Before assuming the key position on Mr. Kissinger's staff, Mr. Holdridge was with the State Department's Intelligence and Research Division on East Asia and the Pacific and has also served in the Department of States Office of Chinese Affairs as the Officer-in-Charge of Mainland China Affairs and Republic of China Affairs. He will address the conference on the subject of "Current U. S. Policy Toward China."

The weekend conference will be structured around the major aspects of Communist China's relations with other nations. The speakers will discuss in depth the history of Chinese foreign relations, China's relationship with the rest of the Communist world, her current relations with non-Communist countries, and her internal political dynamics. Finally, the seminar will concentrate on discussion of present and future U. S. policy toward China and the question of recognition. For information regarding the seminar call the World Affairs Council at 982-2541.

Well, now you know. The conference takes place over the weekend. We think it is important enough to attend. And we can't think of a better way to spend the weekend. See you at the conference!

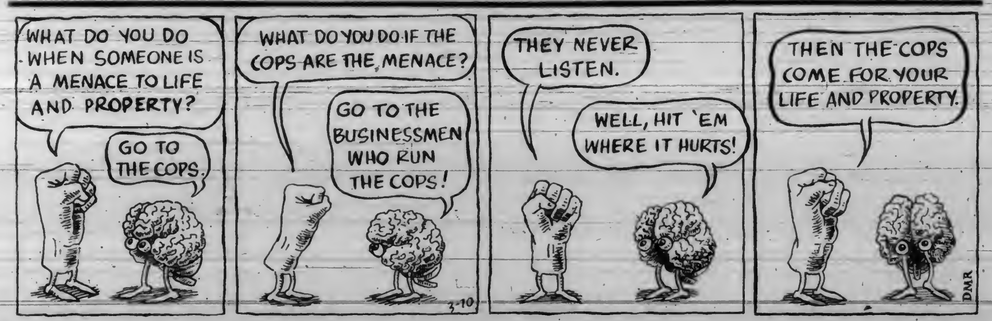
—M.K.

Where Is the Silent Majority?

By Joe Konte

The term "silent majority" has become a trite expression across the nation. Richard Nixon's connotation of the word deals with that part of American society which supports his administration. But I question the true existence of such a group.

If the "silent majority" is as gravely concerned with the problems of today as Nixon feels they are, then why haven't these people spoken out? No member of this majority, if it is present, has appeared. A few discuss things happening today, and are disturbed at what they see. But they don't react to them.



So the problem arises: "Silent majority, if you are real, let us see your faces. Without your aid, the future of the country is turmoil."

To those citizens who really care, I direct the question: Where are you?

- Where were you when a gang of maniacs marched up Shattuck Avenue, hurling bricks through windows of businesses, forcing the owners to suffer great financial losses? Didn't you know the cost of one large window is nearly $300?
- Where were you when a band of senseless cowards destroyed a bank by fire, burned police cars, and forced officers to retreat at their advance?
- Where were you when the courts let five dangerous criminals, found guilty of inciting riots, free to roam the streets again?

"Silent majority": Wake up! The sick degenerates of society are insulting and destroying everything that the United States stands for. Time has arrived for the "majority" to rise up, and become vocal. You must be heard, so the madmen running loose on your streets can be put away. Stop waiting for the "other guy" to act. You must take the initiative now to speak out against the crime and violence that plagues our land.

"Silent majority": You are the last hope. Act now before your silence kills.

By Dana Reemes

PAMPHLET
320817
City College of San Francisco Library

Teachers Join Campus Workers In General Strike

. . . Newsman Jim Browning (right) joined picket line in front of the College last Friday . . .

By Jim Browning
News Editor

A strike by 200 campus workers hit City College last week forcing the cancellation of several classes and closing the cafeteria.

The strike involved members of the City and County Employees Local 400 which represents clerical and cafeteria workers, the Building Maintenance Union Local 66A which represents custodian and maintenance workers and Local 39 of the Operating Engineers Union.

The strike began last Friday after last minute negotiations between the various unions and the city failed to reach a settlement on the workers demands for a 10 per cent wage increase. The Board of Supervisors at its March 9 meeting had offered the workers a 5 per cent pay hike.

Picket lines were quickly thrown up around all city owned property including City College where by Friday morning there were 35 pickets at the seven entrances to the college.

According to an administration spokesman, "quite a few classes had to be cancelled" when students and teachers failed to cross the picket lines.

About 55 per cent of the college's 15,000 day students and 20 per cent of the teachers stayed away from class last Friday.

The normal Friday absentee rate for student is between 10 to 15 per cent.

The American Federation of Teachers (AFT) had earlier in the week instructed its members to support the strike by not crossing the picket lines. And last Saturday Patrick King, president of the non-union Classroom Teachers Association asked that all CTA members also support the city workers strike by honoring the picket lines.

The Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) were also asking that students boycott their classes and support the strike by city workers.

"What students don't realize," said an SDS member, "is that this is the most important strike to hit this city in quite a while. And by students crossing the picket line they're actually hurting the workers' strike by helping to keep the college open."

Although food services in the cafeteria and snack bar were curtailed by the strike, Smith Hall and Statler Wing were open for use as a student lounge area.

Despite the large number of students and teachers missing from classes and the lack of food services campus officials decided to keep the college open.

An administration spokesman cited numerous reasons for not closing the college — including midterm tests in most classes, the loss in state funds by closing and that it would be unfair to the teachers and students who did show up for classes to close down the school.

City College was the only school in San Francisco to remain open. All senior and junior high and elementary schools were closed by school officials after absentee rates of 30 per cent were reported at many schools.

By late Friday the effects of the strike were being felt on campus. Certain jobs like collecting trash around campus or cleaning the restrooms were being neglected or in the case of cleaning up the cafeteria being done by Hotel and Restaurant Department students.

On the picket linc itself the enthusiasm of the workers is high. "I don't care if we stay out for weeks," said a striking janitor. "We are finally fighting back against low wages and poor working conditions.

(Continued on Page 5)

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 4 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., MARCH 18, 1970

. . . George Woo addressing students: "The Chinese people should not allow anyone to tell them what to do . . ." (Photo by Eugene H. Brown)

'Yellow Destiny and Chinatown Today'

By Elizabeth Driscoll

On Tuesday, March 10, George Woo spoke to the Chinese Students Association about "Yellow Destiny and Chinatown Today." Mr. Woo was formerly a photographer for Sunset Magazine until he came to Chinatown to work for the Chinese people.

Mr. Woo said that the Chinese people should remember their own traditions and culture. He reminded the audience that the Chinese people have been put down and kept in one section of the city.

"What can you do when you are down to Chinatown? Nothing really. The first thing you have to do is to help yourself." By this, Mr. Woo meant that the Chinese people ought to study hard in school, work hard on their jobs, and when they are teachers or counselors or whatever, to remember the culture they came from, and to do all they can to help those less fortunate than they.

"The Chinese people should not allow anyone to tell them what to do, not even me," said Mr. Woo. "They must make their own choice about what they will do with their lives."

It is up to the Chinese to bring about improvements in their living standards. Mr. Woo thought that the Chinese in Chinatown can bring about improvements because they are more in touch with the situation of poverty and overcrowding.

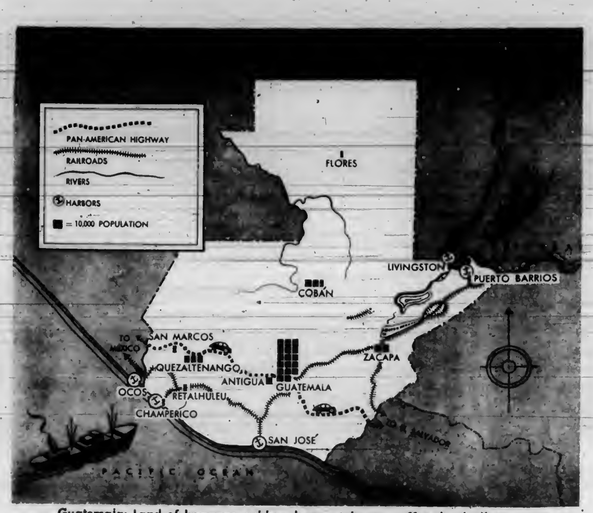
"You have got to see where you fit in the picture and you have the duty of making the world better for you and for me." The beginning of making the world better, Mr. Woo said, is by developing selflessness, because if you only think of yourself, you are not a visionary.

In conclusion, Mr. Woo said, "What you can do now is very little compared to what you can do in the future. When you finish school and are a teacher, social worker or counselor, you should consider whether you will be like your teachers, social workers and counselors who told you what to be, or whether you will remember and be better than they for all people."

Guatemala:
Trouble in United Fruit's Gardens

By Tom Cleaver

The long struggle for national self-determination in Guatemala has taken a big upsurge in recent months. The country, long considered the United Fruit Company's private banana plantation, has been racked with renewed civil strife over the recent election campaigns. This is not the first time this has happened, by any means.



Throughout the early part of the century, the country was ruled by various men totally beholden to the United Fruit Company. Holding more than half the arable land in the country, United Fruit is the real power behind the scenes in Guatemala; if the company doesn't want something, it doesn't happen.

The first challenge to the lord of the manor occurred in 1944, with the election of Juan Jose Arevalo as President of Guatemala. A thorough-going democrat, Arevalo began programs to bring prosperity to the people, many of whom exist almost totally outside the money economy except during the banana harvest, when they work dawn-to-dusk for less than a dollar a day. In the late forties, Arevalo was overthrown by a military coup covertly financed by United Fruit, but he returned to power in the elections held in 1950.

The first official U.S. governmental involvement came in 1954. Arevalo was succeeded by his lieutenant, Jacob Arbenz, who was pledged to continue and expand Arevalo's reforms. When he came to power in 1954, the first step was to institute a land reform program.

United Fruit, which owned most of the land, used only about 10 per cent of its holdings actively, holding the rest in "reserve," unused. Arbenz nationalized these reserve holdings, promising to pay the company in government bonds and guaranteeing that the active holdings would not be expropriated. He wanted to give each peasant family 50 acres of land, to bring them into the economy. Naturally, United Fruit was upset. With John Foster Dulles — a former corporation lawyer for United Fruit — as Secretary of State with his exenophobic policy of anti-communism, the company cried that Guatemala was in danger of a communist takeover, citing the Arbenz land policy as the first step of this "international conspiracy." Dulles used his influence with Eisenhower, who stated that if the situation "worsened" — i.e., if the land policy was carried out — he would have to invoke the Monroe Doctrine to prevent the development of a government "associated with a foreign power" in The Americas. The government was saved the trouble of official military intervention when a CIA-sponsored military coup overthrew Arbenz and reseinded the land reform program. Arbenz lost also because of his unwillingness to trust the people — who considered him a national hero for opposing United Fruit — and arming them as a militia to oppose the coup. The rightists were only a small force, and could have been easily defeated with decisive leadership on the part of Arbenz.

In the late fifties, guerrilla warfare broke out, under the control of the National Liberation Front, which was partially dominated by the Guatemala Worker's Party. This reformist leadership, dominated by soviet-style party hacks, did not pursue a firm policy of opposition, and a "maoist" splinter group, the Armed Forces of National Liberation (FALN) began warfare in earnest in the back country. A re-uniting of forces came in 1963-64, and today most of the countryside is controlled by the guerrillas, apart from the area under control of United Fruit, which operates its own private army.

. . . Guatemala: Land of bananas, rubber, beans, tobacco, coffee, lead, silver, copper and sarsaparilla . . .

Special Forces advisors appeared in the country in 1963, and a policy of training Guatemalan army officers at the Special Forces school in the Canal Zone was begun. Today, most of the Army leaders are graduates of this school.

The junta which came to power in 1954 was overthrown in 1956 by a group even more hard-line in their desire for repression of popular will; in 1960, this group was overthrown by "moderates" with the support of the U.S. Embassy, and power has seesawed between the two groups throughout the decade.

The extreme rightists have instituted terrorism against labor leaders, newspaper publishers, and any group that they consider "communists," which includes some groups of the ruling moderate rightists.

The FALN instituted urban terrorism shortly thereafter, as a response to the terrorism and assassinations of the extreme rightists, and many gun battles between the opposing groups have been fought in Guatemala City.

A majority of the students in the University support the FALN. Using what is left of the traditional autonomy and sanctuary of South American universities, they have used the campus as a haven from the police and as a base for guerrilla operations in the city.

Terrorism against American officials is comparatively recent. In 1964, an army advisor was shot while on his way to the embassy. It has never been established whether the murder was done by the left or the right. In 1967, two other military advisors were killed when bombs were placed in their cars, and in 1968, the American Ambassador was pulled from his car and killed by machine guns on the main street in the capitol, Guatemala City.

In recent months, several American officials have been kidnapped and held as ransom to get members of the FALN released from prison. This has been done mostly by members of the urban terrorist Turcios Brigade, named for Louis Turcios, a former lieutenant in the Guatemalan Army who founded the FALN in 1961 and was killed in a firefight with army units in 1966.

The guerrillas see the Americans as the main enemy, for without the support of the United Fruit Company, backed by the power of the U.S. government, the ruling rightists would have little chance of maintaining control of the country. Because of this, kidnappings and political assassinations will become more and more directed toward American officials. With an administration in power in Washington that is deeply under the influence of the legacy of Dulles, the possibility of more direct intervention in Guatemala is stronger than at any point in the last ten years.

However, with the growing opposition of the American people to more foreign wars, on the model of Vietnam, its powers are more restricted, and probably the only response will be more military aid and an influx of more advisors.

If anything definite happens and the present government is overthrown, the response will most likely be like that in Peru and Bolivia, unless the FALN is in open control.

Multi-Colored Shrubbery Part of Redevelopment

. . . this is the Horticulture Department's idea of "beautification" . . .

By Shirley Fogarino

An assortment of multi-colored plants and shrubbery are now being emplanted around the CCSF campus by the horticulture and landscaping students.

The plan to beautify the college campus was put into effect approximately one year ago when Dr. Harry Buttimer, Educational Management Coordinator at City College, asked the Ornamental Horticulture Department to do something about beautifying the campus' grounds. Mr. Harry Nelson, one of the OH directors, was put in charge of the program.

Presently, target areas for the planting project include those around the new building site near Judson Avenue, and the soil borders surrounding Smith Hall.

An herb garden will be planted along side the Educational Services Building so that the Hotel and Restaurant Department will have fresh herbs to cook with. The garden and all the other planting around the Educational Services Building should reach completion within the next three weeks.

According to Harry Nelson, the OH students are putting "a tremendous amount of effort into the project, over and above their required labhours." Students are divided into groups with a foreman at the head of each group. These students then clean, plan, and prepare the landscaping of their assigned section. Many of them learn to lay brick, pour cement, plan a landscape design and build fences and borders before the semester ends.

"By the time the student has contributed to his assigned project," said Nelson, "he is well-rounded in the field of horticulture and landscaping."

Instructors, too, are contributing their extra time to the project. "Mr. Broucaret is trimming the trees on Ocean, Judson and Phelan Avenues. Mr. Lewin is prefabricating benches to be placed in certain areas for the convenience of the students. Redwood is being obtained through the cooperation of Dean Hillsman."

Despite the wind and water problems, (there is too little water on the CCSF campus, since the college is on a hill and moisture tends to drain downward) the long-term project is progressing well. Former plans of transplanting already grown shrubbery and plants were abandoned.

On Top The Science Bldg.

It's not as elaborate or as fancy as the set-up at Morrison Planetarium in Golden Gate Park, but under that silver dome on the roof of the Science Building is a special auditorium where star shows can be seen.

According to Edwin Duckworth, astronomy instructor, the planetarium is currently being used to train honor students in astronomy and to give special showings to grammar, junior high, and high school students.

The $20,000 Spitz projector (pictured at right) is not the only piece of equipment in the planetarium. Outside the door there is also a four-inch telescope.

Asked whether the teleseope was used to view the eclipse that occurred earlier this month, Duckworth explained that the sun's shadow was not seen here because it fell at a certain angle, centered over Mexico.

The auditorium, which also contains a special control panel, a tape player, and a small chalk board, is able to seat about fifty people.

. . . the $20,000 Spitz projector . . . (Photo by Brown)

KCSF Broadcast Club Recants

The KCSF Broadcasters Club voted last Thursday to withdraw their sponsorship of a petition opposing censorship of student programming. The move came following an address by Mr. Henry Leff, chairman of the broadcasting department.

Leff asserted that the petition might have adverse effects. Specifically, he cited the possibility of losing the 2½ hours of air time currently allotted to the students.

Patrick Crippen, KALW-FM Station Manager backed the vote to recant. "The KCSF Broadcasters," he declared, "has no affiliation with any petition being circulated at this time, nor with persons circulating same."

Originally, the KCSF Broadcasters Club had voted by a 4-1 margin to sponsor the petition which demanded an end to censorship and condemned the station's policy of forbidding controversy.

In his talk to the radio students, Mr. Leff said that dissatisfactions with station policies might be worked out through his offices, thereby eliminating the need for a petition.

Movie

This week's movie series features The Big Sleep. It will be shown in the College Theater on Thursday evening, March 19, at eight o'clock.

Explosions and Implosions

. . . Dr. Thomas Harvey of San Jose State. (Photo by Brown)

By Bruno Forner

About 200 students turned out to hear Dr. Thomas Harvey speak on the "Population Explosion and Implosion." Dr. Harvey is an assistant dean at San Jose State College and a member of the "Save The Bay League."

Harvey began his talk by noting that the present population of the Earth is 3.7 billion and that it is increasing by some 70 million per year.

Localizing his subject, Harvey noted that although San Francisco's population has decreased since 1950 the population density in the City is still four times that of San Jose.

Switching to another problem, Harvey said that 90 per cent of San Francisco Bay is contaminated, and, in addition, 65 per cent of the Bay Area's sewage treatment plants are capable of handling only "primary services."

Harvey's next war cry was "Smog Kills!" He showed how smog can kill indirectly by citing the following: the rate of lung cancer in San Diego County alone is four times higher than the average for the rest of the state; San Francisco, with the exception of its air, has worse pollution than Los Angeles; lung cancer has increased in all counties of California by fifty to sixty per cent. He also stated that emphysema has increased tenfold, but failed to mention between what two dates the comparison was made.

Next, Harvey said that sound is a pollutant because the body reacts in a certain way when the noise reaches 70 decibels. He said that San Jose is trying to build an airport to accommodate 747 jets. For this they will need 10,000 acres of land (they have 7,000) and about 15 feet of fill to absorb the impact of the noise.

Los Angeles International Airport is currently being sued by the L.A. school system for $93 million for soundproofing. They also face $3 million in other lawsuits on noise pollution charges.

Harvey concluded by commenting on what man should do about his future. Asking, "Do you care about the quality of human life?" he urged members of the audience to join an environmental organization. "We should try to change our 'archaic' laws, improve our abortion laws, send letters to the legislators, and give women a reward for not having children," he said.

He also proposed that every woman be limited to having two children.

Guardsman Faces Council Harassment

By Paul Thiele

After a week and a half of questioning and dickering with Associated Women Students (AWS) officers, Student Council finally allocated money for the AWS fashion show and career day at the March 11 meeting. However, the council, suspecting that the $435 request by the AWS was "padded," only parted with $350 feeling that it was a reasonable amount. The show will take place on Thursday, April 30 from 3-5 p.m. in Smith Hall.

The mood of the council was strictly "tight money" until councilman Harvey Rappaport expressed his viewpoint at the Monday, March 9 meeting.

"Since nobody on the council has any idea how to use the money we DO have, I move we accept the AWS request," Rappaport said.

Earlier in the meeting, honor society Alpha Gamma Sigma was given $270 for a statewide convention that they are participating in. Also, Victoria Reiter was installed as a council member replacing the seat vacated by Sanford Goldeen.

The Friends of the Progressive Labor Party was made an official campus organization at the Wednesday, March 11 council meeting. The Friends read their constitution at the March 9 meeting but made it clear that they wanted to make some changes. Their revised constitution was read at the Wednesday meeting and, after discussion for and against from the council and audience, the club gained a favorable vote and thereby was made official.

The purpose of the Friends of the Progressive Labor Party will be to discuss working class history and to "guarantee the working class better living and better working conditions." Anthropology instructor, Cedric Robinson, is the advisor.

After reading the March 11 issue of the Guardsman, the council expressed its opinion on the newspaper.

"There should be a change of attitude towards school activities. The paper should focus on activities, rather than national and international news," said AS President, Renato Larin. "The Guardsman should publicize more campus events," he added.

Larin was not the only disgusted councilman.

"The Guardsman is like an eighty year old man attempting rape;" said Harvey Rappaport, "it's not doing anything."

Councilman Charles Smith then made a motion that the editors of the Guardsman be invited to appear at the Wednesday, March 18 meeting of Student Council to discuss the newspaper's policy. The motion was passed by a vote of eight Yes, zero No, and one abstention.

The meeting will be held from 12-1 p.m. in B-401 behind Smith Hall. The student body is invited to attend all Student Council meetings.

On and Off Campus

Tour

A photography course is being planned for the summer of 1970 whereby a minimum of 45 students will spend 40 days on a guided tour of Europe, led by photography instructors B. J. Pasqualetti and Morrie Camhi.

The course, when completed, will give students four units of credit which may be transferred to student records at other accredited colleges.

The students who take the course will learn various aspects of photography, evaluation of all major color films, general evaluation of cameras and exposure meters, and problems of low light levels. On the 40-day jaunt, the students will take in the sights of cities in Italy, Greece, France, and Yugoslavia. Cost of the tour is $1095. For complete details call 587-7272, Extension 651.

New Magazine

The G-Man went to a press luncheon last week. It was put on by Warren Hinckle III (see photo). The purpose of the meeting was to announce a brand new magazine, Scanlan's Monthly. It is an unusual publication because it contains no advertizing, and addresses itself to the so-called radical community. The first edition features stories on Altamont, Vietnam, the New Left and the CIA-FBI-CBS involvement in Haiti.

Curriculum

The Curriculum Committee meetings scheduled on Tuesdays and Thursdays at eleven in C-229 are open meetings. Interested people are urged to attend. Decisions to change or modify curricular offerings will be made at these meetings. If you do not attend and voice your opinions, you cannot expect to have justification for criticizing any aspect of the curriculum.

Singing Fireman

Eugene Jones, accomplished Bay Area singer and Oakland Fireman as well, will present a one hour-program during College Hour March 19, at 11 a.m. in the Little Theatre. The program, entitled "A Black Man Speaks," will be in poetry, monologue, and song. It is being sponsored by the Associated Students and the CCSF Music Department.

European Club

A new club is forming on campus. It's called the United European Club. Interested people are to go to room 231 in Cloud Hall on Tuesdays or Thursdays for further information.

The cast of the "Magic Flute" takes a bow after the curtain dropped on the opening night performance last week. There will be an additional staging of this Mozart opera on April 10th at 8:00 p.m. at the Scottish Rite Temple, 19th Avenue and Sloat Blvd.

Discounts

The following companies are offerning discounts to Student Body Card holders during the Spring 1970 semester:

Tibbs Typewriter Company, 821 Market St., 15 per cent; Franc's Jewelers, 2644 Mission St., 10 per cent; The Clothes Horse, 2644 Mission St., 10 per cent (except sale items); Elle of North Beach, 1554 Stockton St., 10 per cent; Miki's Dress Shop, 1315 Grant Ave., 10 per cent; Music City, 817 Columbus Ave., 15 per cent; Home Yardage, 3301 Geary St., 10 per cent; Sabatini's Ice Cream Parlor, 501 Columbus Ave., 10 per cent; Podesta Baldocci, 224 Grant Ave., 50 per cent Prom Corsages — 20 per cent Flowers; Brooks Cameras, 45 Kearny St., Variable discount; Mission Camera Shop, 2623 Mission St., 10 per cent on purchases above $5; B.S.C. Cleaners, 691 Portola Dr., 10 per cent on dry cleaning only; California Trophy and Engraving, 659 So. Van Ness Ave., 20 per cent; Farber Brothers Jewelers, 760 Market St., 20 per cent; Jebe's Photo Shop, 4561 Mission St., 15 per cent (not on rentals or repairs); Castle Lanes Bowling, 1750 Geneva Ave., Free shoes; Pinelli's Flowerland, 714 Clement St., 20 per cent; Texadahl & Johnson Sporting Goods Company, 571 Mission St., 20-40 per cent; King Norman's Toys, 645 Clement St., 20 per cent (not including sales items); Sports Center Bowl, 3333 Mission St., 20 per cent; Kray's Auto Parts, 160 Seventh St., 40 per cent; Sierra Ski Shop, 2123 Junipero Serra Blvd., special consideration to those bearing AS cards: Throphy Master, 809 Broadway St., 40 per cent on all trophies; Elson's Office Equipment, 1932 Ocean Ave., 10 per cent to all faculty and students; El Rey Restaurant, 1923 Ocean Ave., 10 per cent discount; El Rey Music Shop, 1608 Ocean Ave., 10 per cent on non-sale items; De Rose Cleaners, 1625 Ocean Ave., 10 per cent discount; Savoy Auto Parts, 1540 Ocean Ave., 30 per cent off list price; Everett's Barber Shop, 1418 Ocean Ave., 50 cents off by appointment; Leo's Men's Shop, 968 Market St., 10 per cent discount; Columbia Music Company, 1080 Market St., 10-25 per cent off list price; Britex Fabrics, 146 Geary St., 20 per cent discount; Music 5, 887 Market St., Double Discount on all items; Swiss Ski Sports, 550 Clay St., 10 per cent on rentals only.

Art Exhibit

An exhibit titled "World of Peter Max" is currently on display at the M. H. de Young Memorial Museum.

The exhibit includes posters, graphics, paintings, and other works by the versatile artist and designer. Some of Max's work appears on the side of muni buses, (see photo).

Film Review: 33⅓ Revolutions Per Minute

By Erik Heldfond

Eight years ago, currents of a raw and violent sound cascaded upon the American continent with a vigor matched only by a rival Liverpool foursome. These were the musical spectrums created by an English group whose appearance, then, seemed as odd as their name: The Rolling Stones.

Since those bygone days, the Stones have become the Barons within the Beatles' domain. Uniting their unique creative genius they have not only produced a long line of successful albums, but have established their own music company (Lemon Records) and established a booking agency that is one of the most lucrative in Britain.

The most recent of the Stones' ventures premiered in San Francisco last week, a film entitled "Sympathy For The Devil" ("One By One"). The film, directed by the highly esteemed Jean-Luc Goddard, is a series of theoretical episodes which in no way really relate to one another.

Despite the frequent scenes concerning a woman, Wiazmesky, who is constantly confronted with both left (Black Panthers) and right (Nazis) radicals, the primary and by far the most entertaining portion of the show, deals with an actual Stones recording session.

The scene portrays the vast amount of time and effort that goes into the production of a record. The session starts out slowly; Jagger is stony and lackadaisical and the musicians are separated by a sea of wires and a large set of massive sound booths. They sing off-key or out of rhythm; they get disgusted and start over, and stop, and start again, until frustration passes into tedium, and tedium evolves into litany. At the completion of the song, which happens to be "Sympathy For The Devil," the tension of the film is released, and there is a sense of achievment that prevails. Although this in itself seems quite dull, coupled with the scenes of revolutionary action, a unique symbolic comparison is drawn.

Goddard compares the revolutionary activities of the "young" generation with the production of a record. Both strive forward to accomplish a specified, theoretical goal. Much work is involved in the realization of this goal, but as Goddard depicts, the results in both are worth the trouble.

The film then is a collection of words, acts and situations which have some revolutionary symbolism. Only in the Stones' recording session does the action seem to move in any direction; and the impending completion of the song gives the other episodes momentum.

"Sympathy For The Devil," despite its insistence on revolutionary politics, isn't a message film. It doesn't try to polemicize or radicalize or even tell the audience the revolution is coming. Goddard takes that on faith and then goes on to ask: what kind of revolution?

In answering he weaves rock music, black power, dope, graffiti, guns and sex into a celluloid tapestry that is a "must" for all to see.

Faculty Polled on Grades

The faculty last week voiced its approval via questionnaire of three proposed changes in college grading policy.

● A proposal that would allow repetition (without penalty) of courses in which D, F, or I grades are received, drew 266 yes votes to 31, no's.

● A proposal that would allow repetition (without penalty) of courses in which B or C grades are received, tallied 186 yes votes: 108, no's.

● A proposal that students be allowed under certain circumstances to petition for exclusion of D, F, and I grades, received 232 affirmatives: 57 no's.

SINGLE MIDTERM

A proposal to change from the present two-midterm-grade reports to a single midterm grade, received 183 favorable responses as compared to 108 against.

The single midterm grade would be submitted near the end of the eighth week of the semester.

OTHER AREAS

Faculty opinion was also solicited on proposals in other areas which have been of growing interest and concern.

The first of these was a proposal to begin the academic year in mid-August rather than in early September as a means of concluding the Fall semester before Christmas vacation.

Eighty-seven faculty members favored the mid-August date: 187 favored continuing the early September start.

The second concerned the need for an Ombudsman on campus. Responses to "Should the position of ombudsman be established?" were 78 yes; 190 no.

Faculty members also responded to a series of 15 questions concerning Final Exam Week.

A final query read: "I would have preferred to have discussed these issues in a plenary session of the Academic Senate." Forty-three replied, yes: 215, no.

72 PER CENT RESPONSE

"Four-hundred-twenty questionnaires were distributed," Victor Graff, chairman of the Executive Council, said, "and we had 303 — or a 72.1 per cent response."

The 4-page questionnaire was designed to determine faculty opinion in several areas without the costly interruption of the instructional program entailed by a plenary session.

Responses will be used by the Executive Council in recommending changes in college policies.

The Administration has been awaiting faculty opinion before initiating several changes which have been under consideration for some time.

The Student Mobilization Committee

. . . Last Fall the S.M.C. staged numerous anti-war rallies on campus and more are scheduled this spring because the war has not stopped . . .

S.M.C.'s Anti-War Plans

At a meeting last week, the Student Mobilization Committee (S.M.C.) met to discuss their plans for campus activities against the war in Vietnam.

As the first order of business, Sally Moore told of the results of an anti-war conference held in Cleveland by the S.M.C. The majority of the 4,000 people at the convention voted to call for a week of anti-war activities from April 13 to the 18th. The main focus of the activities will be April 15 when campus strikes will be held culminating in massive demonstrations during the evening. S.M.C. plans to join with other anti-war coalitions such as the Bay Area Peace Action Committee. Students for a Democratic Society, and Women's Liberation.

On the CCSF campus, S.M.C. plans to have a teach-in April 16 with speakers on the war and ecology, some of whom will be faculty members. The location of the rally has not been decided upon yet, but it may be either outdoors, in Statler Wing, or in S-105 where the S.M.C. rally was held last semester.

The Cleveland Conference which Sally Moore participated in was "the biggest, broadest, most democratic gathering of the anti-war movement yet," according to a recent issue of The Militant.

"There were 3,469 people who formally registered for the conference, and committee representatives estimate there were actually close to 4,000 present. They converged on Case Western Reserve University from 39 states and the District of Columbia. There was representation from some 300 college and university campuses," The Militant adds.

The turn-out for the conference definitely established that the Student Mobilation Committee is the student wing of the anti-war movement. This was attested to by the extensive media coverage, the messages received from around the world and by the greetings delivered at the conference by other sections of the movement.

Special Report:

Strike in the City!

By Tom Cleaver

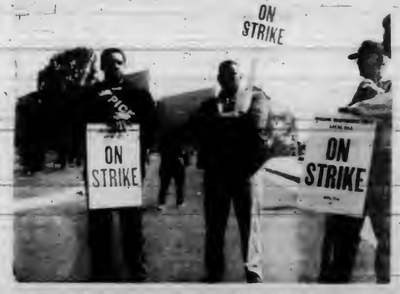
The first strike by municipal employees in the history of San Francisco is now part of that history. Thousands of people got a four-day weekend — maybe even more — all the school kids got half a day off, and every cabbie in town went home a rich man.

Muni was shut down, and a lot of people learned how to walk; even more found out that it really isn't dangerous to pick up a hitch hiker; he's just a cat that wants to get from A to B. Tranquilizers must have had their biggest day of sales in a long time, as traffic snarled — perhaps moaned? — through downtown. It might take only twenty minutes to get to Mission and South Van Ness from wherever you were, but it took twenty more to get to Eighth Street. The Fifth and Mission Garage was filled to brimming by 7:15 a.m.

On campus, there were a lot of happy people; something for everyone! Students who hadn't studied found their test cancelled; others got a two or three-day reprieve as tests were set back. The rads were overjoyed. A REAL STRIKE by REAL WORKERS . . . and they got the chance to pass out leaflets in SUPPORT of WORKERS, and have a mental orgasm over the opportunity to NOT cross a picket line. Journalism students had a ball running around trying to find out what was going on, then went through paranoia wondering if there would still be a strike on by printing day; yesterday's strike is probably more stale than month-old bread. Professors didn't have to raise their voices to wake the sleeping multitudes; the multitudes were safely home in bed, sleeping it off.

All kidding aside, the fact of public employees going out on strike is an important one. If nothing else, the "employers" — the public — realized just how dependent they are on these people for services rendered. The financial district was crowded with people walking, many of whom had walked quite a distance; it was lucky the weather was good. San Francisco's Muni, with all its problems, is still one of the best in the country as far as extent of service; the city would not have grown as it has without the Muni to bring people to and from work. The need for and even wider Muni service was clearly demonstrated by the lack of service.

The workers weren't just going out for a 10 per cent pay raise and some added fringe benefits. At San Francisco General Hospital, the demands included better care of patients and more observance of basic human decency in the patient-hospital relationship, more awareness of the needs of the community the hospital serves, and end to racial discrimination, the providing of opportunity for people to advance themselves in training, and an end to police beating of prison patients and better medical care for prisoners in the city and county jails.



People became aware of the importance of "little people," "unimportant people," the janitors that no one ever notices, the streetcar cleaners, the telephone operators, the women who clean up cafeterias, the bedpan changers and wheelchair pushers, the men who operate the heating systems, and the animated office machine operators — the secretaries. All the people who are conspicuous in their absence . . . the people who are really important, far more so than the omnipotent administrators who are useless without someone to carry out their from-on-high decisions.

Suprisingly, there was not as much opposition to the strike as one might have expected. People were put out, and their routines were disrupted, but they understood that the workers were striking only as a last resort after all other means had failed, and that their demands had justice. Hitch hiking home from school, this reporter was given rides by three "Middle Americans" — the kind who were against the State strike the kind who don't normally pick up hitch hikers. They were working people, and they understood how inflation could drive people to take the actions that had been taken. If they weren't for it, they also weren't against it — "it's a change in the old routines . . . gives you something new to talk about . . . gives you something different to do with yourself." The Supervisors may be expecting the support of good old "Middle America" who doesn't want its taxes increased to meet the demands, but "Middle America" is suffering from inflation and rising prices, and knows that what people are making today just isn't enough. The popular view seems to hold the strikers in good account.

The workers are getting it together in many ways. One thing being called for by some groups in the unions is an end to the Vietnam War. Workers at the hospitals are calling for worker-patient committees, to work out administrative rules in a way that makes them relevant to the community the hospital serves. The issues are no longer strictly bread-and-butter; people are worried about how the job is done, as well as how much it pays.

The city says it can't meet the demands, that there is no money to make the settlement the workers are demanding. In the last three years, taxes on the corporations downtown have been DECREASED $29,000,000.00; here's where the money is! According to Supervisor Robert Mendelson, this came about when the state government acted to help the corporation presidents. That may be, but the city has certainly taken its time to find some way of regaining that money. Reinstitution of those tax monies, which certainly weren't driving the corporations into receivership before, would meet all pay demands of the workers, and a lot more. And not one cent of property taxes would be increased. The city government is failing its oath of office to serve the people as long as it says there isn't any money while this situation exists.

The longer the strike lasts, the more everyone is going to start hurting. The longer it lasts, the more widespread is going to be news about available money left untapped, and that certainly isn't going to help any of the incumbents next election.

. . . Campus workers joined teachers blocking driveway to the Science Building . . . scabs did manage to penetrate the picket line, however . . .

Teachers . .

(Continued from Page 1)

This is a tremendous strike for all working men."

Besides asking for a 10 per cent wage hike the unions are also demanding that certain salary inequities be corrected, real collective bargaining be developed and that the automative step increases be restored.

'I Don't See Another Revolution in America'—Butler

By Marc Kovacs

Patrick M. Butler teaches Russian history at CCSF. He is a graduate of Stanford University. A few days ago he conversed with the Guardsman about revolution, Russia, and America.

Q: What do you think prompted the wife of the U.S. Attorney General to remark that the Vietnam Moratorium demonstration in Washington last fall looked like, "the Russian revolution?"

PB: I suspect that the average impression an individual of that generation has of the Russian revolution is pretty much of the Devil's advocate point of view. We're looking at somebody who was educated during the time of the failure of our China policy, the involvement in Korea, and the whole McCarthy era.

Q: You're not placing too much importance to that remark?

PB: No, it was a flip comment of somebody whose knowledge of the Russian revolution is about as scanty as some of my students'.

Q: Why is so much talk being generated lately about a "second American Revolution?"

PB: It's an interesting question to raise because at the same time as many radicals are calling for a second revolution in Russia it's a very interesting parallel that we're calling for a second revolution in America.

A demand for a second revolution implies that the first one went awry. That's certainly the case with the thought of many radicals now that Russia is ready for a second revolution — that the first one fell into the ways of authoritarianism and never got out of it; that the so-called dictatorship of the proletarians never became anything other than the dictatorship of the party. Your demand for a second revolution in the United States is predicated on the fact that the first one went astray, particularly that the ideas of the Declaration of Independence have never been somehow realized.

Perhaps some of this demand stems from the fact that every generation wants its own revolution. Sooner or later it gets tired of having its ancestors' revolution passed on, and the ideological tenets of the father's revolution have to be mouthed over again by the new generation. It wants in fact its own.

On the other hand, I certainly would be in sympathy with assertions in both countries that there has been a straying from the path of the ideals. But I would question whether in fact this is not the state of man — that often there's a considerable discrepancy between his ideals and what he practices.

". . . every generation wants it own revolution . . ."

Q: Do you see incidents like the Santa Barbara uprising, the New York skyscraper bombings or the jailing of black and white Panther leaders as the seeds of something that will grow into another "Storming of the Winter Palace?"

PB: Well, the growth of Russian radicalism in the late 19th century paralleled the growth of terror and bombings that were not unlike some of the bombings that are occurring here now. But whether or not this is going to plant the seeds of the "revolution — that's something else again.

They did not in Russia. Terror, in fact, had the reverse effect of that intended by the terrorists, and as the result of tremendous adverse public opinion, it was abandoned in Russia, particularly after the assassination of the Tsar in 1881. It wasn't really the terror in Russia that was the trigger of the revolution, but rather a popular climate of disgust with the government, a disgust with the Tsar, the conditions, particularly agriculture conditions, as well as some of the conditions in factories. Terror was never really a lever for this. In fact, terror had a negative revolutionary effect. So, no, I can't see that terror can produce anything but an adverse public reaction and can only have a negative effect in terms of planting a seed of revolution.

Q: What are your thoughts about "violent revolution?"

PB: One thing that I think might be a lesson of revolutions in very complex societies is one that Paul Goodman occasionally refers to. When you've got super-organized societies, as they are today — extraordinarily complex — when you immediately overthrow — when you have a revolution — when you throw out the so-called establishment — when you seek to rebuild institutions from the ground up — totally new institutions — that society comes so completely unglued that it requires a dictatorial hand to put it back together. And the ideologues who would overthrow government and restructure it, I think, would perhaps, by their own admission, be unwilling to take over that dictatorial hand, and this can lead to extremes such as you experienced in post-revolutionary France, Cromwellian England, or Stalin's Russia. And this is something that I think all too many revolutionaries don't think enough about.

Q: 1970 marks the 100th anniversary of Lenin's birth. What does this centennial mean in the context of present-day America?

PB: Lenin's ideas are being polished up by certain groups generally considered to be left-wing. I suspect that many of his ideas are being resurrected because of the fact that the revolutionary response that radicals might desire has not been forthcoming. And of course, Lenin's answer to this is that the masses are not inherently class-conscious — are not going to be spontaneously class-conscious as a result of the product of historical forces that Marx talked about. So his answer was the tightly knit, highly disciplined party — the Vanguard. Lately, Eldridge Cleaver has been saying some very, very Leninistic things about the role of the Panthers as the vanguard of Black liberation, and even of white liberation.

The blacks are currently the most class-conscious group as a result of being the most exploited. The Panthers serve the same role as the communist party did in terms of eliciting a class-conscious response on the part of the proletariat and leading that proletariat to revolution. So Lenin's ideas, I think, are very much worthy of study these days insomuch as they are becoming kind of an underpinning of many revolutionary groups, particularly in the Third World.

Q: Do you see a violent revolution in the immediate future?

PB: No, I don't think so. You're talking about total change. The total restructuring of our society. To the extent that revolution is a term much in the common currency it seems to me to be not much more than wishful thinking on the part of many people who would like to see one come.

Duplicating the events in Russia in 1917 in this country is an historical impossibility, for many reasons . . . We've got different cultures, different histories, different times.

Q: What future do you see, then, for "revolutionaries?"

PB: I suppose home in the suburbs, kids, and a process of mellowing that comes with years. In a way this would be too bad because the role of these people, as I see it, is not one of bringing revolution but rather keeping on the heat that makes it impossible to duck serious questions and serious problems that confront our society.

Our American form of politics is often described as the politics of moderation. One which keeps serious social injustices and discontents from surfacing. The function that I think people of this nature perform admirably is one that keeps us from taking a rest from blinding ourselves to these things. There is, however, one danger, too, in a kind of revolutionary abandon. And that is the tendency to oversimplify some of these problems. All too often the oversimplication of complex human problems leads to very human solutions.

CONTACT LENS

Is There Need For A Southern Crossing?

Frank Lem

It will cut the traffic jams down more on the Bay Bridge. I think that building a southern crossing would solve some of the problems but not all of them. At least it would release some of the pressure off the traffic jams. It should benefit the people who drive over here and save them time. I think it's good.

Mark Semans:

I think it's getting yourself one foot deeper in the mud. The problem doesn't lie in accommodating for cars, it lies in accommodating for easier, more efficient transportation than the car. The money involved should go for a better technical effort in transportation for the city and the Bay Area.

Doris Galea

I think it's O.K. Everybody should have his own ideas and if they think the bridge will give faster transportation they should go right ahead. If BART serves mainly the downtown area I think that people in the East Bay should be able to get to any part of the city without having to go downtown first.

Fred August Dusel III

With the traffic problems we have now, any improvement or additions to existing communications lines across the Bay are highly needed. As long as companies are manufacturing automobiles for human beings to drive around in, we might as well build some place for them to drive. Unfortunately, BART just doesn't go everywhere.

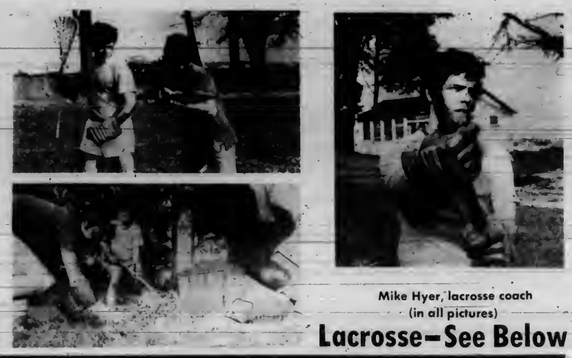
By Paul Thiele

No Parking!

By Ron Wilkinson

As student enrollment has increased so has the parking problem, not so much as to available space, but as to muschievous students who park without permits and ignore prohibited parking areas.

Lt. Anthony Berry, of the Campus Police said that some students will park in faculty parking areas every day, which causes them to get citations every day. Berry also stated that when some students are asked to move, they remain in their auto; watch patrolmen write and place the citation on the car, then roll down the window and call the patrolmen pigs.



The main job of campus police is "traffic control." Students who park out-of-stall, without permits and in prohibited areas keep police on their job.

Parking permits are easily obtainable; all a student needs is vehicle registration, student ID, driver's license and A.S. card.

If tickets are not paid within 11 days, the amount of money for the violation increases. Eventually a warrant will be issued for the arrest of the student or other citation holder. The most expensive citation given on campus is the fire hydrant violation which is fifteen dollars.

A parking regulations sheet showing what areas are permissible with permit can be obtained at Police headquarters in Cloud Hall, Room 119.

Incidentally, for all you slicks and beat-the-systemers, campus patrolmen have a hot sheet which lists all the stolen parking-permit stickers.

Mike Hyer, lacrosse coach (in all pictures)

Lacrosse—See Below

Thinclads Lose to Foothill

In a meet where old records were erased or equaled, the Ram thinclads were mopped up by the Foothill Owls 82-54 at Foothill on March 6th.

The only bright highlights that the Rams could muster up was their share of new meet records and their complete dominance in the distance events.

Sprinter Steve O'Neal took the 100 in 9.9 seconds. His time tied Foothill's present meet record. Teammate Glen Austin placed third with a 10 second effort.

O'Neal was the only Ram to place in the 220. He picked up third place with a 22.5 showing.

The Rams came on strong in the high hurdles. In the 120's they took both second and third places. Donny Bruce cracked the wire at 15.9 followed by Fred Brooker who put in a 16.9 time.

In the intermediate HHs the Rams were out of it, as Foothill easily swept the first two places. Coming in third for the Rams was Fred Brooker in 59.3, Bill Askey grabbed fourth with a 62.1 clocking, followed by Derrick Williams who was a distant fifth with a 66.3.

Ram thinclad Mike Salem shot the gap in a flat 50 to take second in the 440.

Setting a new meet record, Humberto Hernandez took the heat in 1:55.6 minutes. His teammates John Hogue and Fred Bratcher took the following fourth and fifth places.

Tearing Foothill apart in the distance events, the Rams' Dave Power corralled a first place in the mile with a 4:24.3 time. The bearded Ram, Jim Tracy, grabbed second in 4:26.2.

The Rams swept the 2-mile taking the first six places. Head of the Ram pack was Dave Power who clocked in at 9:39.1, followed by Rudolfo Narvarez, Jim Tracy, Paul Brickley, Darrel Jeong, and Gil Rocha.

In the high jump Ron Caldwell took second for City with a 6' leap.

Rams Adrian Coleman and Bill Askey grabbed the second and third spots in the long jump with respective 22'11½" and 21'3" jumps.

Shot putter Frank Oross was the only Ram to place in that event. He took second with a 42'7" throw.

Audre Hicks came through in the discus department as the stout Hicks placed second with a 134'6½" stam.

Pole vaulter Ken Friedman chalked up a 11'6" leap that was good enough for third place.

Ron Coleman finished second in the triple jump after going 43'3".

In the 440 relay the Rams were left behind with a 43.4 clocking.

The same result occurred in the mile relay as the Rams finished behind Foothill with a 3:26.6 showing.

Wet Loss

CCSF's gutty, but small squad of swimmers were overcome by multi-talented Foothill, 83-12, in their league opener on March 6.

Foothill, rated among the top three teams in the conference, overwhelmed the Rams in every phase of the meet. The local swimmers enjoyed only a few moments of glory in the long afternoon at the victor's pool. Among those who showed promise was the long diver, George Smith, who missed a possible first place finish by only four points, eventually settling for third. Tom Keck took a third place in the 200-fly, bettering his career high. Rod McInniss and Ken Canavarro performed their best personal times in the breaststroke, but were still stymied by a strong Foothill effort. Bill Clark, the veteran of the team at 24 years old, is working his way into shape in the individual medley.

But individual efforts will not solve the major problem, which is a man shortage. Like this season's water polo team, the swimmers can't be expected to win with only a few members. This lack of bodies hinders the squad in various ways. First, there are some events in which the Rams are unable to field participants, including the important 500 and 1000 yard races. Secondly, there can be only one entrant in many of the categories, compared to the opposition's chance to enter two or three men. The third problem concerns the stress put on other members of the team who must compensate for the lack of bodies by performing in more than their own specialized event.

Couple these disadvantages with the lack of facilities to practice at, and the situation worsens. Fortunately, Jack Severson, the new coach at SF State, has lent their pool to CCSF. The large pool and the three meter diving board will help the team, but the real problem, the shortage of swimmers, still exists.

The Rams next battle San Mateo on May 20.

Rams Nine Perfect 0-3

The Ram baseballers cut their error total in half, but still managed to boot away the ball and the game as Diablo Valley crushed CCSF, 8-3, on March 10. The loss was the third in a row for the sloppy-fielding Rams.

After committing eight miscues in an 8-1 loss to San Mateo, the Rams worked hard to cut that margin to four. But it was still four too many according to coach Ernie Domecus. CCSF's hitting, which has failed to compensate for their error - plagued defense, jumped on DVC for three runs in the first two innings. However, the Vikings had pounded CCSF starter Rich Dumont for three tallies in the first.

Rich Escalambre singled with two out in the first, and moved to third on a Diablo error. Ray Spediacci then drove home Escalambre with a base hit for the Rams' first run. The Rams tallied two more runs in the second when Red Ramos and Escalambre drew bases loaded walks. Greg Sikora's leadoff double in that frame sparked the rally.

But the 3-3 affair suddenly turned to a rout as CCSF was blanked with only one hit for the last seven innings. Meanwhile, Dumont was knocked from the box in the fourth with a four-run Diablo uprising. Dumont allowed seven runs on only four hits as Ram errors told the story. John Farrell came on to quiet things down, giving up only one run in his five inning stint.

CCSF had fallen victim to Barry Woodruff of San Mateo on March 5, as he tossed a five-hitter. The lefthander later no-hit San Jose in his next outing, so the sting of his dominance over the Rams could be lessened. But again, it was the errors, eight of them, that scaled the Rams' doom.

Ray Spediacci allowed only seven hits in going the distance for the Rams, but was hindered by an assortment of bobbles of and errant throws. For example, San Mateo's four run second inning was highlighted by four consecutive errors. And it took CSM's lone error of the game for the Rams to score their run in the fifth.

The total of errors in three league games for the Rams is now twenty-one. They have scored only seven runs and compiled a mere seventeen hits in the three losses.

Fastest Sport on Two Feet Here

What is the national sport of Canada? What sporting equipment is exclusively made by American Indians for this sport? And finally what rivals the slowest national past-time, baseball in Eastern America?

The one and only answer is Lacrosse. The sport, developed by the American Indian, is extremely popular in Canada and along the Eastern seaboard, and if you didn't know, the sport has finally reached the confines of City College. The CCSF players practice almost daily at about 3:00 in the afternoon on the practice field opposite the football stadium.

Lacrosse is a hard fast game that combines certain elements of football, basketball, and hockey together. Any football block is legal in Lacrosse as long as you have both hands on your "crosse" (or stick). Lacrosse uses the ploys of basketball through its use of picks and screens. From hockey, Lacrosse gets its goals, sticks, and penalty system.

The sport is played with sticks that have a net at one end. The object of the game is to throw, scoop, or kick a small sponge-rubber ball into an opposing team's goal. The word Lacrosse comes from the two French words lacrosse which means the stick.

Players wear helmets, gloves, arms pads, cleated shoes, and shorts. The City College sponsored lacrosse club provides its players with sticks, arm pads, and helmets.

The game played by the American Indian was hard and brutal, for it trained their warriors in the art of war. It wasn't unusual to have thousands of warriors competing over miles and miles of terrain. It was really picked up by the Canadians and was eventually picked up by the Americans.

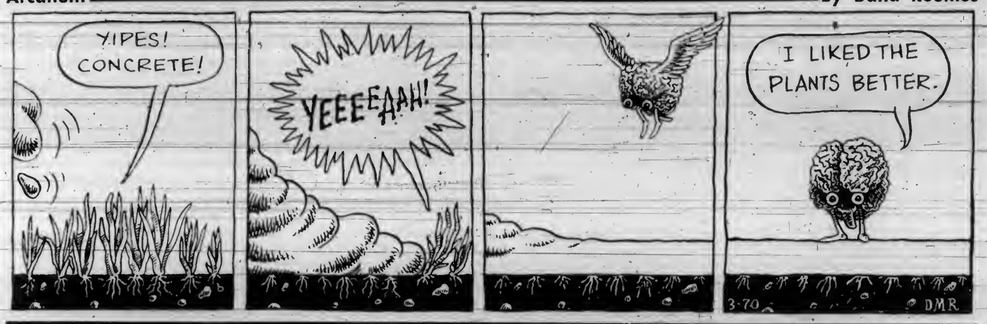
A Case For Long Haired Athletes

By Joe Konte

A recent court decision ruled that four members of the Redwood High School track team would have to cut their hair to a determined length during the season.

Actually, Chief US district Judge George B. Harris was quite reasonable in his solution. He simply ordered the athletes to cut their hair above their eyes, ears, and shirt collar, or quit the team. And Redwood athletic director Bob Troppman said the decision was "for the good of athletics and the future of athletics."

The reason for the ruling was vague, of course. An apparent attempt by the athletic department of Redwood to save the stereotype of the rah-rah coach and his crew cut athletes appears to be a major factor.



But reasons such as these are meaningless, since they fail to reach the main point of the athletes. The four members argue that their performances will be unaffected by the length of hair they wish to wear. This is an argument which is hard to fight.

However, one could arrive at many logical reasons for short hair. Imagine the horror of a sprinter losing sight of the finishing line because of his unruly locks. Or picture the javelin thrower getting his spear stuck in his hair just as it is released. And we could see the tragedy of an errant, long-haired shot putter who hurls a ten pound weight in the direction of some innocent bystanders. The results could drive even the hairiest of athletes to a hasty retreat into the barber's chair.

To my knowledge, this has not occurred as yet. Long hair does not detract from the performances of these or any other athletes. Big name professional stars in three separate sports are operating with success, even though they could not play on any of Troppman's teams. Football's Joe Namath, baseball's Ken Harrelson, and hockey's Derek Sanderson are "long hairs" who play well despite their lack of haircuts. Even if one questioned the talent of these athletes, he must admit that cutting their hair would not improve their performances.

The athletes should not resent to people like Troppman who feel that "you can't tell a player without a haircut."

Arcanum — By Dana Reemes

The Social Critic: Is America Racist?

By Jim Browning

Eldridge Cleaver in a recent statement to the Berkeley office of the Black Panther Party called for black people to unleash a total "race war."

"Our brothers are being murdered in their sleep," declared Cleaver, Panther Minister of Information. "The fascist Nixon administration has unleashed the FBI on us. Our officers are subject to military attack. Hundreds of party members are being picked up on false political charges.

"It is nothing but an attempt to sabotage the 400-year struggle of our people for liberation. We black people must unleash the ultimate political consequences on this nation—race war."

Unfortunately, Mr. Cleaver's theory on "race war" contains several grave and tragic misconceptions that, along with a basic analysis of what racism is and how it's used, need to be fully explained.

No person is ever born a racist or with racist ideas or opinions. Like everything else we encounter in our every day lives we are taught various attitudes, emotions and reactions through the course of our education.

The people of this country are fed a continuous and never ending flow of racist propaganda through the mass medias — magazines, newspapers, television, radio and books. Thus by the time a student enters a college or university they have been totally subjected to this daily bombardment of racist propaganda for over 18 years.

The ruling class (those extremely wealthy businessmen like the Rockefellers, Hunts and Morgans who control the economic and political branches of this country) who also control and operate the mass media, use racism to play off one ethnic group against another thereby dividing and weakening all groups.

By presenting totally inaccurate myths that Black people are "lazy stupid bums" or that Latinos are "only good for cheap farm labor" the ruling class can and does keep the people of this country at constant war between themselves.

And while the people are at "war" among themselves and not attacking the ruling class who are perpetuating this division between the races, the ruling class is free to strengthen its position of exploiting people in this country and spread this exploitation to include people in foreign countries. (This exploitation of foreign people is called imperialism.)

. . . Eldridge Cleaver . . .

In the workers movement itself Black and other Third World people are often given the lowest paying and most difficult jobs.

White workers, although not as super oppressed and exploited as Blacks and Third World people, are nevertheless being oppressed by the same ruling class with low wages and poor working conditions.

With just this basic analysis of racism, it's easy to see that a "race war" as suggested by Cleaver would attack only the after effects of racism — namely the people — and not a direct assault on the ruling class, who institute and use racism to divide the people.

In fact such a thing as a "race war" as indeed doing exactly what the ruling wants: to keep the people in a constant state of turmoil so that the handful of people in actual power are not attacked and exposed for what they really are.

To combat the "fascist Nixon administration" with a racist and highly nationalistic Black movement — which certain Black leaders and especially the Black Panther Party have pledged to do — is in itself a tragic mistake that only leads to the establishment of yet another fascist state.

In order to defeat fascism you do not resort to similar fascist tactics used by the ruling class of this country.

Cleaver seems to indicate that racism and oppression of this country belongs exclusively to Blacks.

But what about the Latinos, Indians, Orientals and whites in this country? Are they not also exploited by the ruling class' use of racism?

A "race war" between whites and Blacks would do absolutely nothing to dissolve the racism and oppression against these aforementioned groups.

The only sensible way to defeat racism is to institute a class struggle of all oppressed groups against the ruling class.

Instead of each group "doing their own thing" as Cleaver stated, all oppressed groups should join together and present a truely united front against the racist tactics of the ruling class.

Only after banding together and overthrowing the ruling class will all groups live in total racial harmony.

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman

SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . Mike Chon, Joe Konte

Staff

REPORTERS
Elizabeth Driscoll, Tom Cleaver, Bruno Forner
CONTRIBUTORS:
Brenna I. Manders, Dan Gardner, Dono Reemes
PHOTOGRAPHS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

Editorial: Power To The People!

Three editorial commentaries are offered this week: one — we condemn the broadcasting students who recanted from their previously stated committment to oppose all ceasorship of the airwaves; two — we applaud the various movements involved in the General Strike; three — we review the events surrounding "Armed Forces Day" at S.F. State College a few days ago.

With reference to the situation at the radio station we must say that things will probably get worse before they get better. Two weeks ago the KCSF Broadcast Club decided to sponsor a petition aimed at putting an end to censorship of the programming. Last week, the KCSF Broadcast Club decided to withdraw the petition. What happened? Simply this: the chairman of the department, for the first time in months, addressed his students. In effect, he said that the petition would not affect the operation of the station because it must conform to the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission. In its own way this analysis makes sense. If you think that the FCC is God, that is. And that's the whole point. We believe that the FCC is not reflecting the desires of the new consciousness emerging all across the nation. Like, people dig the Jefferson Airplane nowadays. But on KALW-FM "controversial" Airplane cuts are scratched off the album with a knife. That's the kind of censorship we are opposed to. And the reason we are disappointed with the Broadcaster's Club latest action is because they are not addressing themselves to this kind of which will also bring the War censorship. Or, to put it another way, we think that putting a knife to the recordings of the Jefferson Airplane is more obscene than anything the Airplane sings about.

. . . aftermath of Armed Forces Day . . .

This brings us to the matter of a General Strike. Last week, the campus janitors, cafeteria workers and members of the American Federation of Teachers joined the Municipal Railway drivers, workers at S.F. General Hospital and other public employees on the picket lines. We support them because we support the concept of a General Strike. We support it because mass action of this nature can bring about positive results. Note the May 1968 revolution in France. It seems to us that this is the only way that basic and fundamental changes are going to be brought about in this country. We have in mind a General Strike which will not only improve the conditions of the working class but Machine to a grinding halt. We believe that if the six million students in this country got together with the workers, the war in Vietnam, the war in Laos and all wars against the peoples of this planet could be stopped. Further, there is a strong possibility that mass action of this sort might also result in the people taking over control of their own destinies. Any struggle that moves in that direction must be supported by these columns. And, we trust, by our readers.

That leaves us with Armed Forces Day. Wow. What a farce that was. The War Machine coming on campus demanding constitutional protections for their campaign to recruit hired killers. Yeah. We'll let them do that when they allow us to recruit for peace on their bases. Until then, we must say: "War Machine off campus! All power to the people!" That's what 3,000 students at S.F. State said, as can be appreciated in the photograph. —M.K.

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 5 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., APRIL 8, 1970

REFERENCE DESK

Accuse Dean of 'Strikebreaking'

By Tom Cleaver

Prior to the municipal employees strike last month, most CCSF custodians thought that if they had one friend in the campus administration, it was Dean Ralph Hillsman. Not so anymore.

On Friday, the first day of the strike, Dean Hillsman was the only administrator to take any active role in the strike. This consisted of going around from picket station to picket station, telling the striker that the school was closed and that there was no need for them to remain on the picket lines. According to CCSF custodians, only about three men believed him and left the lines; all the rest stayed. The dean seemed concerned that the people were honoring the picket lines, and also tried to get the strikers to move their lines down away from the campus entrances, where they would not be so obvious.

Dean Hillsman
(Photo by Brown)

The CCSF chapter of Union Local 400 maintained the policy throughout the strike that anyone who honored the picket line and wanted to show support for the demands of the strikers could walk the line with a picket sign. Many did, but the presence of a certain few seemed to agitate the dean very much. According to the custodians, Hillsman came down and told them, "don't let SDS take over the picket line." The custodians say that Hillsman also threatened to call in the police and use force to move the picket lines if they continued to allow SDS members to man the lines. Throughout the strike, SDS passed out leaflets addressed to the campus community outlining the aims of the strikers, and speaking about the need of students who would soon be workers themselves to honor the lines and support the strikers.

According to spokesmen from CCSF Local 400, the picket lines were about 85 percent effective. No union drivers crossed the lines to make deliveries on-campus. Instructors from both the AFT local and the Classroom Teachers Association walked the lines in support, even though many non-tenured faculty told the strikers that they had been threatened with loss of their jobs if they honored or walked the lines. Dean Hillsman made no comments about the teachers on the line, evidently hoping that if the strikers believed his story about school being closed and left, that the teachers would leave, too.

When reached for comment about the custodians' charges, Dean Hillsman said, "it's a false lie that I intimidated anybody on the picket lines."

He also denied having suggested that the police would be called to scare the pickets away.

"My job as an Administrator," explained Hillsman, "requires that I keep the College open as required by law." That, he said, is all he was trying to do by checking the picket lines.

Only one City College Union member — an electrician — crossed the picket lines. All the IBM operators, who are technically not members of the union but whose wages would be affected by the outcome crossed the lines. "All those women are going to get the same raise we will," says one custodian who asks to remain anonymous, "but not one of them would risk displeasing their bosses by honoring our line." All the office secretaries but one refused to honor the line either. The one who did, from the school nurse's office, walked the line all day both days until the strike was over.

On Monday, the last day of the strike, Dean Hillsman was back at the same old stand, trying to convince the workers that the school was closed and then later trying to convince them that the strike was over. Again he went from station to station, "just like a picket captain, man . . .", telling the strikers not to let the SDSers back on the line. Hillsman and Dean Brady also came out of the administration building several times to see who of the teaching staff was walking the line, in an attempt to intimidate them, according to spokesmen for the strikers. Hillsman, though, was the only administrator who tried to "disrupt" the picket lines.

Most of the custodians are shocked and hurt by Hillsman's performance during the strike. "Man, he is one guy who's always coming around, putting his arm around you while you're working, and telling you how he understands what you're up against, because he worked his way through school by being a janitor," says one custodian. Says another, "He's got one hand around you tellin' you how good a job you're doin', and the other is around behind your back, stickin' that dagger right

(Continued on Page 5)

"Transcendental Meditation as Taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi" is Frank Schmit's topic tomorrow at 11:00 a.m. in S-100.

Schmit, who was trained by Maharishi in India, will attempt, to answer the question: Exactly what is this strange practice and why is it enjoying widening popularity?

"Transcendental Meditation" has been described as "a science by which an individual approaches truth. The aim of all Yoga practice is to achieve truth wherein the individual soul identifies itself with the supreme soul, or God . . . When man realizes truth and-or his real nature, he will discover that he is immortal. He will be free from death, pain, sorrow, old age, disease and rebirth."

Taken as a whole, the many facets of yoga constitute a well-ordered, scientific method for transcending individual awareness and identifying the self with the universal self, which is God. It is not occult mysticism but a tangible method which has been used since pre-Christian times."

Guardsman Staff Interrogated by Student Council

By Paul Thiele

Discussion about the purposes and objectives of "the Guardsman" staff members monopolized the Wednesday, March 18 Student Council meeting in Bungalow 401.

Councilman Steve Mendelsohn began the session when he asked Guardsman Head Coordinator, Marc Kovacs, why there are not more campus news articles in the paper. Mendelsohn said that he preferred last semester's paper because it dealt with topics such as "The Bookstore Dilemma" and the operation of the Hotel and Restaurant Department.

"Why aren't there more articles that affect students economically?" Mendelsohn asked.

"I'm not an economist," Kovacs answered. "I'm a journalist who is trying to put out an interesting newspaper."

Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels, expressing his unhappiness with an article dealing with the situation in Laos asked reporter Tom Cleaver if he had ever been in Laos. Cleaver answered that he had spent three years in Southeast Asia.

CAMPUS NEWS

The discussion swung back to City College news.

"If you take any back issue of the Guardsman from our files you'll see that the same campus news was reported over and over again for 35 years," Kovacs noted. "We're trying to get away from all that by putting out an intellectually stimulating paper."

Tom Cleaver reenforced Kovacs' statement.

"The food services and the bookstore never really change," said Cleaver. "I've looked at some old papers and all of the news is the same. News is news once — not for ten years."

PROGRESS

Associated Students President, Renato Larin, reminded that the AS Bookstore Committee is currently making slow but steady progress. He also mentioned that no reporter has ever appeared at a Curriculum Committee meeting this semester.

Councilman Harvey Rappaport's opinion differed from those of most council members who made their views known.

"Although I think the paper is dull and often not very factual, I do not think that it should be the voice of Student Council, but the voice of the journalism students. Rappaport said. Councilman John Goebel also thought that the content of the paper should be up to the staff.

JUMBLED COVERAGE

Councilwoman, Judy Kay then complained about last semester's coverage of candidates' platforms in the paper. She said that it was completely jumbled and unorganized.

"You're lucky that we cover Student Council at all," Kovacs replied. "According to your own statistics, only four percent of the student body voted in the last election."

'YELLOW JOURNALISM'

The final topic brought up concerned the front page article in the March 11 issue of "The Guardsman" headlined "Radio Station Demands Freedom." Art Samuels read part of a list of complaints submitted by TV and Radio Department Chairman, Henry Leff. In it, Leff pointed out factual discrepancies in the article sentence - by - sentence. The writer of the story, Tom Cleaver, contended that the information he received was basically from a press release given to him by KALW-FM Program Director, Patrick Crippen. He added that he just took 5 typewriter to it.

Besides being "misinformative," it was felt that the article had properties of "yellow journalism." "especially the last paragraph which directly told readers to "watch for the petitions and sign them." Ironically, the quote was from Crippen's press release.

Batmale: CCSF To Be Separate From S.F. School District

By Bruno R. Forner

City College will soon become the San Francisco Junior College District, and with it may come some misconceptions about the new setup.

To set things straight, the Guardsman went to CCSF Vice-President Dr. Louis F. Batmale.

Dr. Batmale was asked if the new district will be independent from the San Francisco Unified School District: "Yes," he replied, "but it will have the same board as the San Francisco Board of Education. It will also have, at least for the moment, the same superintendent."

When queried as to where the district will obtain its money, he said: "Our financing will come from the Junior College District and from our Junior College District Board of Education. It will come from the same sources . . . from the local tax rate and from the State of California."

Batmale went on to say that he feels the changeover will affect the existing City College very little.

"What will happen is, we will take over the Adult Division and the Vocational Division and they will be more dignified as part of a junior college than they were as adult high schools.

"I think that in light of that, many of the students who are coming here may decide to take some of the trade-related programs and other programs in the Adult-Vocational Division, and this may divert some students from here to there.

"As far as our strong emphasis on our collegiate program of transfer to state colleges and universities, as far as our strong occupational programs such as criminology, hotel and restaurant, and engineering technology, these programs will continue pretty much as they are; always improving in the best interests of the community and the students."

Concerning administrative changes, Batmale said, "The President of City College is to be head of both the college here and the Adult-Vocational program. There will certainly be an administrator over the whole campus. There will certainly be one in charge of the campus. Titles and personnel haven't been selected yet."

What brought about the need for reorganization? Batmale explained that " . . . for a number of years . . . it's been felt that the junior colleges are a unique type of educational institution. And although there are many advantages in working closely with the other segments of a unified district, it was felt the college was different enough so that it should be administered differently. As a result, the State Legislature passed a bill two years ago stating that all junior colleges districts be separated from unified districts . . . At that time there were only five junior colleges left in the state that were a party of unified districts and interestingly enough they were in large cities including Long Beach, San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco."

Batmale revealed that the new JC district hopes to do more "on the campus improvement program, but of course, for that we'll need money."

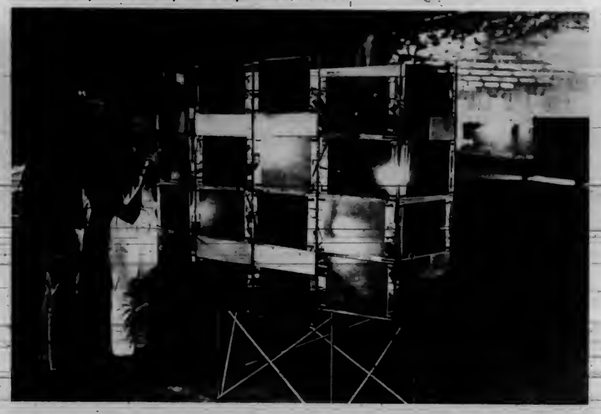
'Science Exploratorium' Blows Tech Minds

By Shirley Fogarino

"There is an increasing need to develop public understanding of science and technology," claims Dr. Frank Oppenheimer, director of San Francisco's Palace of Arts and Sciences. "There is, thus, a growing need for an environment in which people can become familiar with details of science and technology . . . by controlling and watching the behavior of science-oriented apparatus and machinery."

Dr. Oppenheimer, former physicist at the University of Colorado, long had the idea of developing a Science Exploratorium in which public participation would be motivated. In 1965, with the aid of a Guggenheim Fellowship, the doctor traveled to Europe. Noticing that European countries offered to their populace more insight into the development of scientific technology through museums, Oppenheimer formulated the idea of a Science Exploratorium in which people would actually become involved.

The Fall of 1969 saw an idea turn into a reality. On the picturesque site of the 1915 World's Fair, San Francisco's Palace of Arts and Sciences came to life. "It is a beautiful spot," said Oppenheimer, "to blend nature, the arts and sciences."



Supported by federal and private funds, the Exploratorium is the only museum of its kind in the Bay Area. It is growing rapidly, with workable displays being constantly added or exchanged. The south-end of the Exploratorium will house a multi-purpose theater which will be used for scientific demonstrations as well as periodical cultural presentations.

The Bay Area seems to be falling hard for this new type of science museum. An average of 4,000 persons per week come to observe and operate the many displays at hand. From "Albert," an electronically operated device which mysteriously follows viewers as they pass by, to a Paleoparadoxian 'foot' (The paleoparadoxia was supposed to have lived on Japanese soil billions of years ago. It stood nine feet long and weighed in at 2,000 pounds. Although Paleoparadoxian bones were commonly found in Japan, a skeleton of the Paleoparadoxia was discovered recently in North America on Stanford University grounds — U.S. archaeologists must have hailed the surprising discovery as a "paleoparadox").

ABOVE: KS-4, a scientific sculpture programmed by tapes, is one of the permanent displays at the Science Exploratorium.

BELOW: A sculpture of letters-in-motion, Amor Voluptas, was designed and contributed to the Exploratorium by university student, Ken Cox.

Exploratorium displays are contributed regularly through various sources. "Amor Voluptas," for example, is a sculpture of letters contributed by a university student, Ken Cox. England and Japan have submitted an unusual display of computerized art and music. Japan's claim is that the computer is an "artistic medium" and that today, computer-produced images seem to be relevant in the field of visual arts."

Exploratorium art also includes a platform drawing machine with which one can make interwoven patterns.

If one is in the market for observing optical illusions, he will not want as he surveys the many which are on display at the Exploratorium. One mechanism reverses distance perception so that an object which may be nearest the viewer seems far-removed, while another object which seems far-removed, looks nearest to the viewer.

A light-and-sound device called KS-4, is programmed by tapes. Contributed by Carson Jeffries, it interacts to people to "find out" what they are doing and when.

Along the same line as KS-4 is a Chronoluxite Organ that consists of three rows of multi-colored light bulbs which are sensitive to sound. It is operated by an electronic music box which the observer manipulates. From London, England, these two devices depict how music boxes operate.

One of the most impressive displays at the Exploratorium is a slide series entitled, "Signals in the Environment." It poses a glimpse into the promises and threats of technology. Presented through the American Institute of Housing and Urban Development, it compares the beauty of man's past and present accomplishments, to his thoughtless and destructive creations ("This is what I've done with my tools in the past . . .").

Adding a bit of nostalgia to the many up-to-date Exploratorium exhibitions is a pre-Wright brothers plane invented by a gentleman named Montgomery.

And speaking of nostalgia, a display called Raymond Lull's Logic Machine developed in 1270 A.D., was supposedly one of man's first attempts at creating such a device. Its many intermingled diagrams and directions deal with the attributes of God, the states of the soul, and the seven deadly sins.

"The Science Exploratorium," says Dr. Oppenheimer, "can be a place in which people achieve the satisfaction of individual discovery."

Formerly the Palace of Fine Arts, the Exploratorium is open to the public on Wednesdays through Sundays from 1:00 p.m. until 5:00 p.m. The 30-Stockton bus will take the visitor within two blocks of the center. If there are any questions concerning the Exploratorium, phone 563-7337 or ask one of the student "Explainers" upon your arrival there.

News Analysis:

The Story of A Drop-out

By Tom Cleaver

Two years ago, James W. Jackson II left City College to go "into the world." It wasn't a voluntary departure; Uncle Sammy had sent him his greetings, and Jackson spent the next two years in Army Green as a medic in South Korea.

Three weeks ago, during mid-terms, Jackson's fellow students were treated to the sight of Jim walking a line in front of the classroom door, carrying a sign that said: "Renunciation of Examinations— I am against EXAMINATIONS, GRADES, COURSE CREDIT and COMPETITIVENESS — I am a foe of the TRADITIONAL CLASSROOM EXPERIENCE — I am for LEARNING, not its SHADOW." It was a surprising experience for all.

Outside Mr. Truitner's SOC-30 class, down in the bungalows, Jackson was confronted by two student cops, who told him he had to have a permit from the administration to conduct any demonstrations on campus. After an involved hassle, in which the student cops tried to understand why anyone would want to do something like that, they asked Mr. Truitner if he would sign a complaint. He would not. "The most nauseating part of the whole experience," says Truitner, "was when these two came marching into the classroom just as I had started the test, wanting to know if I wanted to complain about him exercising his rights to have an opinion."

"Every student who went in told me he thought I was right," said Jackson, "but not one of them had the guts to say so themselves to the professors."

Jackson intends to leave the Bay Area and travel around the country. "I'm going out into the little round schoolhouse called Earth." He intends to travel through the South, traveling "straight," and try to learn just what is happening there. "After that, I'm not sure, but sometime in the next decade, things are going to get to the place where people like me can have the opportunity for a truly educational experience, and then I'll be back . . . if not here, then somewhere."

The decision to drop out of school, refuse to take any examinations, and refuse any grades instructors might give him was not an easy one for Jackson to make. "I did it publicly, because I hoped my act might help someone else to crystalize their thinking about all this." Jackson is totally opposed to the educational system as it presently exists, "because it doesn't educate, it indoctrinates and channels . . ." Quoting Dr. M.W. Sullivan, the educational programmer of Hollins College in Virginia, Jackson says: "In the entire body of psychological literature, you can find no evidence that the teacher helps learning. You can find much evidence that the teacher does harm to the learning process. The average school is no fit place to learn in; it's a lockup, a jail. Its conditions build up a resistance to learning . . . can you imagine the amount of energy it takes just to sit still, waiting against every impulse, for your turn to respond?" Quoting Professor William Arrowsmith on the normal student-teacher relationship, he says: "a student wants information. He has exams on his mind, and tends to conform to his professors' expectations of him — the fate they have jointly enforced. The resentment they both frequently feel is their resentment of this fate. A student has chosen to know, rather than be. For a man with a gift of life, that loss is like castration; the best leave, rather than suffer through it. Others grit their teeth and 'will' their way through." Says Einstein, commenting on his graduation from school: "It is in fact nothing short of a miracle that the modern methods of instruction have not yet entirely strangled the holy curiosity of inquiry . . . it is a very grave mistake to think that the enjoyment of seeing and searching can be promoted by means of coercion and a sense of duty."

". . . I Renounce Examinations . . . ."
(Photo by Kovacs)

For what it's worth, James W. Jackson II received good grades for the little essay he gave his instructors at mid-terms, in an attempt to explain to them why he would commit such an act of heresy. It's not worth much to James Jackson; he has decided to march to his drum, not someone else's. "I'm going to hell in my OWN handbasket."

Open House

The Retail and Floristry students will have their annual "Open House" on Tuesday, April 14 at the Horticulture Arts Building.

This year the theme for the Open House will be on "Astrology — the Zodiac Signs." There will also be window displays and floral arrangements.

Open House starts at 1:00 p.m. and will continue until 7:00 p.m. when a dinner will be served. Prices for the tickets are — Guests $4.00, Alumni $3.00, Students $1.50. For reservations contact Mrs. Maryhope Jaeks at the OH Building.

Ecology Club Prepares For "Earth Day"

By Bill Collins

An ecology group has been formed under the umbrella of the experimental college.

The objectives of this group include planning the April 22 campus teach-in ("Earth Day"), farming an organic garden on campus, and arranging field trips.

The members of ecology also intend to secure more than one class section of Ecology and Man (Bio. 20), a campus clean-up, and develop in students an awareness of ecology and respect for our environment.

The April 22 Teach-in is sponsored by Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin. Although national in scope, the teach-in will not be the same on all campuses.

Earth Day at City College may be celebrated with films, class discussions, guest lectures and booths for at least one day. Hopefully people will ride bicycles or take public transportation to school or work, abandoning the car for that day.

Another aspect of Earth Day will be a phone-in. Students will be asked to phone a major polluting industry in this area, urging alternatives to the present pollution rate.

Ecology group meetings are held twice weekly. On Wednesday, they meet with Dave O'Keefe (824-8132) in B-204 (near Arts). On Friday, Bill Collins (566-4983) and Jane Prescott (564-9846) have the meeting from 12-1 p.m. in B-5, the Experimental College.

Needy Students May Get $345,920

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Mr. Howard Schoon, Campus Director of Special Education, has submitted a proposal for additional funds from Senate Bill 164. The proposal is for the amount of $733,949, to be divided among student grants ($345,920), student work-study programs ($184,066), additional outlays for such programs as EOP and COIL, tutoring services, counseling, and miscellaneous needs as office administration and new bungalows.

It will also cover the start of a Readiness Program for new students who wish to start school in the middle of the semester rather than waiting until the beginning of the next one. This program will begin on April 15 with Math E and English M as the courses being offered.

The target areas of the tutoring programs are Hunter's Point, the Western Addition, the Mission District, and the South of Market Area. City College works in cooperation with all Bay Area colleges and the San Francisco Consortium, who recently received a grant from the Ford Foundation to bring tutoring and training programs to students.

In another program dealing with student financial aid, an amount of $258,000 has been granted to CCSF by the Chancellor of Junior Colleges. $100,000 of this amount is to go toward student grants, with the remainder going toward such projects as EOP, COIL, and Tutorial Services.

A student who wishes to apply for a grant may see Mr. Kenneth Castelino in the Financial Aids office. Students who have submitted a confidential statement of their finances to the office need not make a second application. Those who have limited financial resources will be given first preference. The student who has already received financial assistance, either through the GI Bill, or the federally insured student-loan system, and is in need of more financial aid, may apply to Mr. Castelino at the Financial Aid office for a student grant. His application will be considered after those who are applying for their first loan have been considered.

. . . For 85 cents you can try one of the student-cook Larry Wunch's "ramburgers." They consist of a pair of meat patties french roll, potatoes, tomato and strips of lettuce. "Ramburgers" can be ordered from 2:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. and from 7 to 9 in the evening at the snack bar. . . .

On and Off Campus

Poli Sci 20

Robert Mendelsohn is a San Francisco Supervisor who teaches at City College of San Francisco.

Mendelsohn teaches Urban Government (Pol. Sci. 20). The leading conservationist on the Board of Supervisors, he heavily emphasizes regional environmental problems in his class.

Supervisor Mendelsohn's class is an informal one, but a lot of reading is assigned. The class discussions include current topics such as San Francisco's waste disposal problems, bay fill, and the Bay Area's growing smog problem.

Art Exhibit

London Grafica Arts will be presenting a collection of orginal graphics in an exhibition and sale at the College Library next Monday, April 13 from 10:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Prints on display include work by Braque, Chagall and Pablo Piccasso.

French Film

The award-winning French film, "Battle of Algiers," is this week's Spring Movie Series presentation. It, will be shown at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, April 9, in the Little Theater. All seats are free.

Music

Piano solos and duets performed by City College music students will be presented on Thursday, April 9 in the choral room, A-133, at 12 noon.

Black Films

"Black Films" can be seen every Tuesday at 11 a.m. in C-247. The movies are being presented to increase the total awareness of all students to the existence of the black experience.

Ram It Up!

Sick of censorship? Come up. Come up. Come all the way up. Come to "The Staff" with your uncensored, creative poems; plays, drawings, fables, cartoons, songs, curses, suicide notes or anything you want to get off your mind and onto paper. "The Staff," founders of the UNmag, "Ram It Up," are accepting submissions in Cloud Hall, 331F.

Abortions

There is now being circulated a petition to submit a change in the abortion laws to the voters in November. To have this initiative placed on the ballot, 350,000 signatures must be obtained by April 15. The petition reads: "A holder of the Physician's and Surgeon's certificate is authorized to perform an abortion or aid or assist or attempt an abortion whenever an abortion is requested by the Pregnant Woman. The authority contained in this section shall not be restricted by individuals or institutions."

Registered voters interested in signing the petition may do so by going to Main Lobby of the Library.

Urban League

The Bay Area Urban League will hold its 24th Annual Meeting and Special Awards Ceremony on Thursday, April 9 at 7:30 p.m.

The meeting will be held at the Benjamin Franklin Auditorium on O'Farrell Street near Scott.

Guest speakers at the Urban League's annual event will be Mrs. Ruby Martin, Director of the Washington Project and former Civil Rights Director of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Sterling Tucker, the Vice Mayor of the District of Columbia will also speak.

Drama

Two one-act plays will be presented today, Wednesday, at 1:00 p.m. in the College Theater. They will be a scene from Clifford Odett's "Waiting for Lefty" entitled "The Hack and his Wife," and an original anti-pollution play entitled "Eden Upon Eden." The last play is rated "M." Admission is free. Both productions are being sponsored by the Drama Department.

Buckley

William F. Buckley Jr., noted Conservative and editor of the magazine National Review, will engage in a televised debate with writer Paul Jacobs on April 10 at the KQED studios. Call 391-1000 for further details.

'KSAN Censors References to Sex, Drugs and Revolution'—Nisker

By Marc Kovacs

About two years ago a cat named Wes Nisker walked into the studios of radio station KSAN-FM with an idea. That idea made KSAN one of the top stations in the Bay Area. Wes, can you describe what it was that you wanted to do?

WN: A news show based upon the proposition that everybody knows the facts. What we need is a sense of urgency in our voices . . . (pause).

MK: Are you through with that question?

WN: (Laughter). That's a very hard question to answer . . . (laughter). No, what happened to me at KSAN was very evolutionary.

MK: How do you mean?

WN: I mean . . . a lot of things happened to me. It was a very deeply changing experience, dealing with the news every day.

MK: Can you tell us why you left?

WN: Well, I left essentially because the managers decided to have a cooling-off period where they decided whether to let produced newscasts go on any more. And, essentially, what I was doing there was produced news. And I'm not essentially a journalist. I don't think. I'm not, nor have I ever been.

MK: I understand that you're going to be working on channel nine. Is that correct?

WN: That's a possibility.

MK: Can you say something about FM radio?

WN: We don't have a radio. (Laughter) I never listen to it. It's true. I don't listen to FM any more.

MK: Do you listen to AM?

WN: In the car, yeah. I really see lots of possibilities for AM. Like WNEW is really the voice of the revolution, I think.

MK: Is it really? That's in New York City, right?

WN: I meant KNEW, our sister station in Oakland. Metromedia's.

MK: Now that KSAN has gone "straight," what future do you see for "radical radio?"

WN: Well, I don't think KSAN has gone straight. I don't think it's gone. Well, it's gone straight in one sense, yeah. It's only gone straight because the community has gotten more political. KSAN is essentially probably what it started out to be: a music station with personalities. That was fine and acceptable at one time. But it isn't acceptable to a large segment of the so-called community. What it means, essentially, is that more and more people are becoming politicized. There is a growing movement. Essentially, a movement that listens to rock 'n' roll music. I mean, that's why anybody would be concerned about a radio station like KSAN in the first place.

MK: The point is—" as reported in your The Dock of the Bay a while back — that your newscasts became an important part of the consciousness of many intelleetuals, students, and radicals in the Bay Area. And all of a sudden it was discontinued. People thought that that was an important development. I wonder, do you see it the same way?

WN: No; I don't attach too much importance or significance to it. I think it was significant only in the sense that it was a sign that there was a repression happening. You know, in this country it's getting less safe to say what you have to say. . . .

MK: (Pause) Right. . . .

WN: You're a suspicious character. You know that? (Laughter)

MK: I'm just trying to figure out if that was the punch line, the cue for me asking another question or whether you wanted me to say something as an afterthought. I was at a loss.

WN: Well, I don't know. Somehow I'm not able to relate to this format of questioning.

MK: Let me be a little more specific then. Has a point been reached where your treatment of the news has been banned from all airwaves?

WN: Oh, no. I don't think so. What my treatment of the news was was collages, and just dramatizing. I mean, the essential point was satirizing the news. That's essentially what I was doing.

MK: Where did you get the initial idea for your newscasts?

WN: From KRLA.

MK: Can you recall what your first newscast sounded like?

WN: Yeah. It was very much like the Smothers Brothers . . . Yeah, like the Smothers Brothers. Or not even like the Smothers Brothers, Mad Magazine. Something like that.

MK: Can you describe the last newscast you did for KSAN?

WN: It was like Mad Magazine, in color.

MK: What happened in between?

WN: I became very proficient at satirizing by using collages. It just got better, is essentially what happened.

MK: Was any one newscast particularly controversial?

WN: The only newscast I ever had censored was a newscast I did about the Berkeley Barb in which I gave a sex ad that the Berkeley Barb would give. I was doing a Berkeley Barb of the air. The Berkeley Barb was on strike at the time, and I used this sex ad about a wild classified ad.

See, what Metromedia's essentially concerned about are dirty words and references to sex and references, of course, to drugs and revolution.

MK: Will you get back on the air?

WN: You mean on the radio?

MK: Yeah.

WN: I don't know. I don't know.

MK: Do you want to get back on the air?

WN: I'm not sure I want to get back on the radio. I think that television has a lot of possibilities. I'll probably be, you know, doing something.

MK: Far out.

WN: I may be involved in movies. Whatever happens.

. . . ads like this appeared in the underground press at the height of KSAN's popularity. KSAN is now called "Metromediocrity . . .

Los Siete Trial Begins

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS)—The trial of Los Siete de la Raza (Seven of our People) began in San Francisco on March 16 — without Los Siete. The prisoners had somehow gotten "misplaced" in San Quentin; San Francisco's "maximum security" prisoners had been sent to San Quentin during a recent city-wide strike honored by the sheriff's deputies who normally guard San Francisco County Jail where Los Siete have been incarcerated.

The "People's Lawyer" Charles R. Garry proceeded to make pre-trial motions and arguments in the absence of his clients. The political defense is on behalf of all seven for the alleged murder of a Mission District cop, although only 6 are in custody — a seventh has not been caught. Garry was joined by Richard Hodge, R. Jay Engel, and Mike Kennedy, well-known movement lawyers who are also defending Los Siete.

The preliminary hearing before Superior Court Judge Joseph Karesh focused on two defense demands. The defense asked that the entire jury panel be quashed because it was not representative of the community from which the seven youths came. There are no members of the Spanish speaking community on the panel to be selected. The second demand was that the entire trial be conducted in Spanish.

The demand to quash the jury panel was first used in the case of Huey Newton, when Garry took the lead in putting movement political trials on the offensive. In defending Huey against the trumped-up charges of murdering an Oakland cop, Garry began by attacking the entire jury system under which Huey was to be tried. Pointing to the constitufional rights of every citizen to be tried by a jury of peers, Garry insisted that a jury selected from the voter registration list — heavily weighted toward white middle-class middle-aged people— could not possibly be representatives of the community from which a poor, young, non-white person came.

In the case of Los Siete, the problem is exaggerated by the language difference. If middle-class whites could not understand the language of the ghetto, they would be able to understand even less the language of the barrio.

When the Judge objected that the prosecuting attorney would not be able to carry out his work if the trial was in Spanish, Garry countered: "We could use an interpreter."

The courtroom was filled with uniformed San Francisco Tactical Squad police. "I feel uncomfortable with these officers in the court," Garry told Judge Karesh as he looked around the courtroom at the hulking bodies of the men who have so often brutalized his clients.

While the proceedings went on, a rally was held in a Mission District park, where people pledged their continuing support to Los Siete de la Raza.

Poet-Musician Jones Here

By Eugene Jones

Black poet and musician, Eugene Jones, performed at the college's Little Theater last Thursday morning.

Included in his presentation were some poems and songs that he related to the black experience. Mr. Jones, who said he is near fifty years old, also spoke on life in the United States as it affects the black person. He feels that the existing racial conditions are weighted against the young black person who has a desire to make something out of his life.

He offered as an example the experience of his eighteen year-old son who had completed a training program, and was thereupon employed at a Wells Fargo bank. Jones said that early one afternoon his son was removing some parts from a parked car, with the owner's permission, and was arrested by the Oakland police on suspicion of theft.

The police made no effort to contact either Mr. Jones or his wife so his son had to accomplish this with the one phone call he was allowed. When the case reached court, according to Mr. Jones, he was able to prove that his son was innocent of the theft charge and the result was that the case was dismissed. A second result, however, was that his son had been fired from his job at Wells Fargo due to the unjustified arrest.

Mr. Jones, who was born in New York and educated in Washington, D.C., studied music at San Francisco State College and the University of California and now makes his home in Oakland, where he is employed as a fireman. His talent has earned him appearances with such groups as the San Francisco Spring Opera, the Oakland Light Opera Company, the San Francisco Bach Society, the Carmel Bach Festival, The Oakland Symphony Orchestra and the San Francisco Municipal Chorus' Opera presentations.

Before closing, Jones recommended strongly that all students, regardless of race, who are aware of the injustices being perpetuated in the country today make every effort to complete their college education and apply it bringing about reforms that the system has failed to accomplish.

Willis Kirk: New Dean of Men

By Ron Wilkinson

A student in need has a friend indeed in the form of Mr. Willis Kirk, the new assistant to the Dean of Men.

Dean Kirk's straightforward concern for students will be beneficial for many a troubled male.

Kirk said that many students are uninformed about financial aid, grants and loans that they might qualify for.

One of his major concerns is that many students who seek to transfer or petition to graduate have no knowledge of requirements for graduation or final dates for submitting application to desired colleges.

Kirk suggested that students who have transferred or graduated could come and speak to students who are about to leave the college and give advice on what problems and technicalities they could avoid or, at least, simplify.

Dean Kirk acts as a liaison for student problems off as well as on campus. He has even been known to help some female students who were in dire need.

Dean Kirk also helps students by writing letters of recommendation and letters to the draft board, and by helping students fill out college forms and letters of character.

"Basically trying to listen and help students get a more meaningful education here at City College," is the format for Dean Kirk.

Dean Kirk holds various other positions such as sponsoring the B.S.U., and heading the Booker T. Washington Center, an off-campus tutorial program.

Dean Kirk said, "the Guardsmen can act as a viable vehicle for delivering such information as a proposal for the forgiveness of F's and final dates for taking leaves of absence."

Dean Kirk's office has students running and jumping in and out all day, so if you wish to see him, make an appointment and beat the rush.

Hillsman ...

(Continued from Page 1)

between your ribs!"

Strikers' spokesmen say they want to extend a word of thanks to everyone on campus who supported them and honored the picket lines. They wish to extend a special word of thanks to SDS for helping to man the lines throughout the strike and for the support work done with the student body, and to the members of the AFT who walked the line and tried to build support for the workers among the rest of the faculty.

"Hillsman's desires or not, we're damn glad for SDS. They were the one group of students who did anything for us in an obvious way, and they'll be welcome if we have to walk those lines again."

Councilman Dismissed

By Paul Thiele

Student Council member, Michael Booker, was dismissed on April 1 from his seat in the council.

The move came after AS President Renato Larin's statement that Booker had not been present at any of the meetings for more than a month. Councilman Roger Cassell said that he spoke with Booker who told him that "he didn't like the atmosphere at Student Council." Cassel added that Booker did not plan to attend any more council meetings. Later in the meeting, Judy Barsocchini asked to be seated on the council and gained approval.

Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels, represented the Free Critic in their plea for an additional $400 to publish the magazine this semester. Samuels told the council that the Free Critic staff plans to have four or five issues this semester. He also said the Critic will probably have a two-page article on the upcoming AS elections due to the Guardsman's "unreliable" coverage of student elections.

The council voted to sponsor a student survey similar to the one answered by faculty members several weeks ago. The survey contains questions dealing with changes in vacation times, midterm periods, and grading procedures. It will be distributed to students during all Phys. Ed. classes on a particular day which has not yet been announced. Veterans who do not take Phys. Ed. will receive a survey in the mail.

Plans for a Student Council publicity campaign were announced by Renato Larin last week. A display, scheduled to be shown on May 5 and 8 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., will consist of copies of the AS constitution, new amendments, and literature about the campus committees in which Student Council participates. It will be located at the flagpole between the Science Building and Cloud Hall.

"We want to make students aware that Student Council exists and that we have power we can use for the advantage of students," Larin said.

"We are trying this because the Guardsman isn't too much of a help in these things."

CONTACT LENS

Should Abortions Be Legalized?

Gary Saski, Pre Dent, Maj.

I think that the decision to have an abortion should be left up to the pregnant girl. Part of the decision should be left up to the doctor also; but the girl is the main factor. It should be up to her to decide whether she wants the child or if she thinks that it will be a burden on her life.

Ray Bertrand, General Ed-Maj.

Abortion is needed in the case when contraception has failed or if something is going to be wrong with the kid. I think it's allowable if the parents and doctor all approve. I don't think it would be right to get abortions freely because some people would use it to their own advantage.

Gina Fajardo, Air Trans. Maj.

I think it should be legalized, especially if the woman's future will be ruined by having a baby. In other words, women who don't want to keep the child should be allowed to have an abortion because the child may just be put up for adoption and have to stay in an adoption agency for several years.

Leonora Kittredge, Sociology Maj.

A girl who really wants an abortion is going to get it done anyway. They should really repeal the laws so that they could have legitimate abortions. Doctors would be able to perform them legally and not have to do it under cover. The way they're doing it now, the woman's life is often at risk.

—By Paul Thiele

'Look Out Kid, They Keep It All Hid'—Dylan

A Two-Piece Survey On Liberation

. . . International Women's Day celebration in Mission Dolores Park, March 1970 . . .

(Photo by Lynn Adler)

By Liz Jones (KCSF News Staff) and Jim Browning

I grew up suffering from the inferiority complex that being a woman in this society imposed upon me. I felt inferior not because I had "Penis Envy," but because everywhere that I looked I could see that more value was placed upon the life of a man, and that life for me was more challenging and varied. Every quality that was admired in a woman served to keep her in chains. The so-called "advantages" of being a woman, being able to be dependent, not having to work, etc. looked like disadvantages to me. In my mind, they spelled never being taken seriously as a human being, never having the feeling that I controlled my own destiny or could take care of myself, etc. Men got to do all the exciting, adventurous and meaningful things while women had only two big moments: Motherhood and Marriage. Mischievousness and boldness were encouraged in boys while girls were supposed to be nice and polite. People wanted sons more than daughters and I carried my father's name, not my mother's.

I no longer have that sense of inferiority, because I have learned things. I didn't learn them from the books that my teachers told me to read, like the ones written by our "objective" Mr. Freud. I learned them from talking to other women and finding that I was not alone in my feelings. And I learned from others who have suffered oppression in this society. And I learned from reading the books that those people found answers in. I'm presenting some of my findings and beliefs for those of you that still suffer. And here they are for what they're worth.

There is evidence that some early societies (and the ones that our "civilization" sprang from), were matriarchal. People in primitive societies lived a much more communal life than we do. And due to complex systems of group marriage that went along with that early communal life, people knew for certain who their mothers were but not their fathers. Therefore your relatives were those related to you through your mother. Everyone owned the land in common. Men did hunting but no greater value was put on the form of work they did for the community than the form of work the women did for the community. Everyone voted and participated in decision-making. There were no prisons. Serious crimes were rarely committed. In the unlikely event of war, captured people were adopted, and given the same rights as anyone else. No more was produced than was consumed and there was no surplus and no money.

This was all before there was any kind of private property. People just owned the tools they needed for their work. When some people began to acquire things of a different sort of value; things that provided more things for people than were necessary to take care of them (i.e. domestic animals) — everything changed.

First of all, physical strength enjoyed a new esteem. Before, when there had been nothing to steal, there was no premium placed on the ability to protect, or on the ability to rob. There was, in a way, the same division of labor between women and men, with women taking more care of domestic things and men of outside things. But the relative importance of these two divisions changed. What was the ownership of a pot in which meals were cooked in comparison with the source of milk, meat, fur, and exchangeable commodities?

Secondly, the family structure changed, since inheritance was no longer a casual matter. Men owned the herds (wealth) and wanted it passed on to their heirs. And they wanted to know who their heirs were. In the former group marriages there had been a tendency for individuals to have a favorite husband or wife. This was converted into monogamy. Strict fidelity was expected of women while men were allowed to do as they pleased.

And so women became alienated from the world. Where before they were considered valuable as human beings, taking an equal part in community affairs, their most important contribution to society now was in the ability to produce and raise strong male children. And things have been this way for centuries.

However, there are reasons to be optimistic about the position of women in the future. There is the effect of the industrial revolution. Automation has made physical strength less of an asset than before. It is no accident that the role of Western woman has gone through a new, comparatively radical transformation in the past 100 years. As far as the limitations that childbearing and rearing have imposed upon women go, we must remember two things.

First of all the pill has done a lot to make it possible for women to choose whether or not they want to be mothers. They also have more control over the amount of work they want to put into motherhood, by being able to limit family size.

—Further the family structure seems to be once again going through changes. People just aren't getting what they need from it. In America in the last five years there has been a tremendous move towards the re-establishment of communal life. Older children look after younger ones, and men and women have a more equal share in the care of children. In countries like Israel, where most people live in communes called Kibbutz, and everyone has a responsibility towards all the children of the Kibbutz, women have a higher position than in the United States. This despite the fact that the Jewish faith is extremely patriarchal. (No matter what you've heard of Jewish Mothers, don't forget that women have to sit upstairs in a synagogue, away from the men, in order to make up for their inferiority by sitting closer to JHM.)

But changes don't just happen. Society has a tendency to resist change. That is why it is necessary for people to act in order to promote change, not to just "free their minds."

Let's look at the history of Woman's struggle for freedom in the U.S. and examine her present condition to see why this is so.

The movement to change Woman's basic position in society, grew, in this country, around and out of the struggle for abolition. Women who were concerned about slavery formed Female Abolition groups. They were afraid to speak before men. However, a few men started coming to these exclusively female abolitionist meetings. The Earth did not shake. The sky did not fall. Women began to realize that they were capable of much more than they had thought previously. They soon discovered other strengths as they worked tirelessly collecting signatures for petitions or faced mob violence when they spoke. The Church, among others, attacked them as degrading their sex, this led our heroines into challenging society's premises about women. They began to see and speak out against unfair property laws and economic oppression of working women.

As women helped abolitionists, abolitionists helped women. Illustrative of the way the two movements fed each other, was effect of an impromptu speech given in 1851 by the black woman abolitionist, Sojourner Truth. The audience had previously heckled other women speakers. After a clergyman who said that women were too weak and helpless to be trusted with the vote was applauded, Sojourner angrily got up and said: "That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages and lifted over ditches, and have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages or over puddles, or gives me the best place — and ain't I a woman?

"Look at my arm! I have plowed and planted and gathered into barns, and no man could head me — and ain't I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man — when I could get it — and bear the lash as well! And ain't I a woman?

"I have borne 13 children, and seen most of 'em sold into slavery, and when I cried out with my mother's grief, none but Jesus heard me — and ain't I a woman?"

As she left the speaker's platform, the applause was thunderous. People had been moved to tears and the previous opponents of Women's Rights were silent afterwards.

Another part of the early struggle for Women's rights revolved around wages. During the civil war, many women had had to support themselves for the first time. Sometimes their men came back crippled, if they came back at all, and women had to continue to work, in some cases being the sole support of their families. Most of these women worked in factories. And most of them didn't get paid what men did for doing the same job. This was not because they didn't do the job as well. This was because the owners of the factories didn't mind if people went hungry as long as they themselves could get labor a little more cheaply. This state of affairs, of course, didn't please the working man any more than the working woman. He could easily be replaced by a woman who was forced to work for less, especially if he tried to demand better working conditions for himself. As a result, women weren't allowed into the unions until 1867, when they became too numerous to be ignored.

Towards the turn of the century women also began organizing around the temperance issue. Married women had no control over their own wages. A working woman could sweat it out in a factory all week only to have her husband blow all the bread come Saturday night. The name W.C.T.U. usually conjures up images of crazy, unreasoning, fanatics. But it was no joke. They often weren't allowed in some of the places they hatcheted to pieces anyway!

This brings us to who opposed the 19th amendment. Much money was spent on the campaign to defeat suffrage. Obviously, the breweries were afraid that if women voted they would vote for prohibition.

Suffrage organizers also complained that railroad, oil, and general manufacturing lobbyists made trouble anywhere that suffrage was up for legislative action or referendum. Although big business didn't formally organize around opposition to suffrage, there is evidence that it did a lot to try and halt the march towards the 19th amendment. Various businessmen donated huge sums of money to anti-suffrage groups.

Big businessmen feared suffrage because they were unsure as to how these new voters would vote. Things were fine for them already and they were afraid to risk change.

The achievement, of suffrage followed a long struggle, but it finally came in 1920. So we got the vote. Did that mean freedom? No. People felt that the battle had been won and they quit trying. For fifty years we have not bothered to organize around doing something for ourselves. A few individuals have made some gains while things for the rest of us have slid backwards. But now, within the last two or three years, women are once again beginning to fight for their rights on a large scale.

Rams 6th In State Tourney

Daryle Johnson leading scorer for the Rams and GGC player of the year in action

Tough 62-61 Loss To LACC Sinks Rams

The Rams came, they saw, and they were conquered. It took only one game of the three-day 1970 Junior College Basketball Tournament Championship for the CCSF balloon to burst. The dream of a state title for Sid Phelan's hustling crew ended in a frustrated frenzy when they failed on five shots in the final thirty seconds, finally dropping the heartbreaker, 62-61, to Los Angeles City College.

But the never-say-die Rams bounced back in style with a 74-69 victory the following night over Contra Costa in the semi-finals of the consolation bracket.

The third night of the action in the tourney found the Rams locking horns with San Joaquin Delta. At stake was the consolation championship or fifth place, and a mythical Northern California JC title. But San Joaquin built up a 39-30 halftime lead, and eventually won it, 88-79.

The tournament was somewhat of a disappointment to the Rams in as much as they didn't win it. However, there were a few pluses which could take some of the sorrow away.

—Daryle Johnson, GGC player of the year, tallied 69 points in the three games.

—The stubborn CCSF defense, and a machine-like operated offense controlled the game from the highscoring Los Angeles team. They had averaged over 100 points a game before the Rams slowed them down.

—And the Rams finished the year at a very respectable 24-6 record.

The results of the tournament found the tourney favorite, Compton, as the champ. It was the 32nd consecutive win for the JC champs this year.

Rams' Susko Breaks Mark, Wins Tourney

John Susko fired a record-breaking six-under par 66 to lead him to the championship in the 54 hole Western Collegiate Junior College golf tournament at Fresno, held on March 22-24.

Susko, the number one man on this year's CCSF golf team, led a field of 160 golfers, representing 25 JC's in the tournament.

The road to victory for the Ram ace was not an easy one. The first two rounds of the tourney were held at Belmont. On opening day, Susko shot a 76. But the following round, he jumped into the limelight with a sizzling 66, giving him a three stroke lead going into the final round.

The final eighteen holes were played at San Joaquin Country club. Susko was teamed with the top three contenders in the head-on battle for the elusive crown. But Susko refused to falter against the top-flight competition, and his 79 was one stroke better than his opponents, giving him the championship. The victory was the first ever by a City College golfer in the sport's long career here.

Meanwhile, when Susko has not been away reaping up the glories of his individual conquests, he has led the Ram golf team to a 5-1 league mark. Susko has averaged 73.3 strokes a round in the first six matches. His latest superround was a one under par 71 at the tricky Sharp Park layout.

John Susko

The Ram's most recent wins have come at the expense of Merritt and Foothill. Greg Corvi shot an even par 72 at Sharp in one of the Foothill victories.

Rams Lose One — But They Win One (Finally!)

Coach Lou Vasquez's thinclads lost a close one to Chabot but on the following Friday before Easter vacation, the Ram thinclads posted their first victory of the season against a stunned San Jose City College team of thinclads.

The Ram thinclads suffered their third loss in as many meets when they bowed out to the Chabot Gladiators 71-66 at Chabot on Friday, March 13th.

The Rams came on strong on the track but Chabot corraled the first places and the field events to edge the Rams for the victory.

Chabot's Gladiators took both the 440 and the mile relays.

Ram thinclad Humberto Hernandez led a Ram sweep of the two-mile event, and he was also the only Ram to place (2nd) in the mile.

In the dashes the Rams swept the 100 with Andy Watkins in first.

From then on though the Rams were unable to take first in any of the remaining running events. The Rams for the most part played second and third fiddle to the Gladiators.

In the jumping events the Rams took the high jump with Clyde Sadler's leap of 6'4". Ram long jumper Dave Robinson took his event. Ram Clyde Younger led a Ram sweep of the triple jump.

Chabot swept the shot-put and dominated the discus and the pole vault.

Scoring their first meet win of the season the Rams ran up 89 points to the San Jose's Jaguar's 47 at CCSF the Friday before Easter.

Jaguar Coach Bert Bonanno commented "we were destroyed by a team that was stinging mad after losing a close meet (Chabot) the week before."

The Rams took the 440 relay and dominated most of the other track events. Humberto Hernandez took the mile (4:27.3). John Hogue was first in the 880 run. Donnie Bruce took the 120 hihs in :15.6. Dave Power finished first in the two mile (9:46.5), and Andy Watkins took both the 100 and 220 dashes.

A Ram sweep in the high jump was led by Clyde Sadler who cleared the bar at 6'4". Leading a Ram sweep in the triple jump, Donnie Bruce went 46' to take first.

Audre Hicks took first in the discus with a 135'7" throw.

San Jose dominated the 440 dash, took the shot put, placed first in the 440 intermediate hurdles, and dominated the pole vault.

This coming Friday, April the 10th the Rams will travel out to Diablo Valley College to take on the DVC Vikings at 3 p.m.

Spediacci Paces Baseball Swimmers Lose Again

Ram hurler Ray Spediacci struck out 14, and tossed a three hitter against Merrit March 19, leading CCSF to a 12-1 victory. The win was only the second of the year for the stumping Rams, and ironically, it was Spediacci who also was the victor in that contest. The tall righthander went 3 for 5 at the plate, and went the distance for the win.

The CCSF swimmer's dropped their second league meet of the year, 90-21, to Diablo Valley. The squad was overcome by the quantity and quality of DVC, which sent 35 swimmers and 10 divers against the weak Ram core of 8 swimmers and 1 (yes, one) diver.

Baseball Forecast That Can't Miss

By Joe Konte

Another major league baseball season has arrived at the magic door of the sport's world. And it is the time of year when all the sport buffs make their predictions on the outcome of the four pennant races. But we do not involve ourselves in such chit-chat. Only wild guesses can be made at this point, and we refuse to provide the noose for our own hanging. Perhaps we may take a stab at picking the winners come September 1, when we can let you in on a few predictions which will be certain to happen in the coming season.

The Mets will become just another team, attendance will drop, and the fans will wish they were baseball's clowns again.

Richie Allen will continue his non-scheduled vacations, denounce Cardinal fans as the worst in baseball, and ask to be traded.

Ted Sizemore of the Dodgers will be selected Rookie of the Year for the second straight season.

Casey Stengel will succeed Gil Hodges as manager of the Mets, in an attempt to bring back the loser's image.

Twins manager Bill Rigney will fight pitcher Dave Boswell with Billy Martin taking on the winner.

The Giants will finally prove they're not a second place club, they'll finish third.

Nancy Seaver will succeed Stengel as manager of the Mets.

Joe Pepitone will get his hair cut.

Spiro Agnew will come to Washington D.C. stadium to throw out the first ball in the baseball opener, but won't get in because he didn't have a ticket.

Richard Nixon will come and Spiro out, and then make it perfectly clear that it was safe to let the VP in.

Tony Conigliaro of Boston will win the Comeback Player of the Year award for the second straight season.

The Guardsmon is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman

SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . Mike Chan, Joe Kante

Staff

REPORTERS
Elizabeth Driscoll, Tom Cleaver, Bruna Forner
CONTRIBUTORS:
Brenna L. Manders, Don Gardner, Dana Beemes
PHOTOGRAPHS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

EDITORIAL: Where We're "At!"

During the first half of the Spring semester a good many students expressed interest in knowing just where The Guardsman "is at."

Well, we don't think we're "at" any place. Not in the static sense of the word, anyway. We think that the paper is dynamic. That is, we're always on the move—changing, evolving.

That does not mean to say that we do not subscribe to certain positions, however. To the contrary! There are a good many policies fermenting in our minds.

So that our readers can better understand us we present herewith a few of those positions:

—U.S. out of Vietnam now!
—U.S. out of Laos now!
—U.S. out of Korea now!
—Cultural relations with mainland China!
—No more obligatory military service!
—A guaranteed minimum income!
—Pre-school education beginning at the age of two!
—Legalize marijuana now!
—Free all political prisoners!
—Lower food prices in the cafeteria now!
—A campus radio station on the FM airwaves til 9 p.m.!
—Financial assistance to all needy students!
—All police off campus now!
—All power to the people!

In short, we want many changes and we want them now. That's about where we're "at."

You might say that our stand is "revolutionary." So what! The crucial thing is to make things happen. Besides, we think that change is synonous with revolution.

To wrap it up: we want total freedom! Karl Hess has put the same thought into these words: "Extremism in the pursuit of liberty is no vice!" Perhaps you can relate to this vision of a liberated society. We say right on to those who can! —M.K.

Blood Drive Set For April 15-16

"Be My Buddy" is the theme of City College of San Francisco's 1970 Blood Drive which will take place on April 15th and 16th from 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in Statler Wing.

The event is an annual tradition at City College. Sponsored by the Greek Council, it is one of the campus major community service projects. Students as well as the general public will be urged to contribute blood which will go on reserve at the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank and later to needful recipients.

Twenty of the 655 pints of blood donated during the 1969 Blood-Drive, saved the life of CCSF student, Ken Knight, after he underwent surgery for a kidney transplant. Today, Knight operates a growing vending-machine enterprise and is the College's 1970 Blood-Drive Chairman.

Adding perspective to this year's Blood Drive and working in conjunction with Ken Knight and the Greek Council sponsors is publicity coordinator, Edmond Lew.

Lew, along with Mrs. Barbara Rosenthal's Public Relations Class (Journalism 26B), was assigned by the Greek Council to handle the major publicity aspects of the Blood Drive.

—Supporters will be donating prizes to be given away or raffled off to blood donors.

An organizational trophy will go to the on-campus club whose members contribute the most blood.

A car parade (with real Playboy bunnies) may be included in the itinerary for the first-day public information procedures. Final arrangements concerning this, however, have not yet been made.

The 1969 total of 655 pints of blood has not yet been surpassed by any San Francisco area college, yet the pints contributed were from donors who compiled only five per cent of the 16,000-member CCSF student body. "As long as apathy exists," asserted publicity co-ordinator Sid Hymes, "nothing stands to be gained."

If anyone has questions concerning this year's Blood Drive, phone 587-7272 Ext. 106 (this is the CCSF Associated Students Office); ask for Ed Lew.

. . . This photo was taken in Northeast Laos. It shows an American and a Laotian leaving a U.S. Army helicopter. The American, who is camera shy is carrying a M-16 . . . (Photo By L.N.S.)

The Press Comes to Laos

A Liberations News Service Report

VIETIANE, Laos (LNS) — With the recent escalation of fighting in Laos, the establishment press has found a new story to replace the repetitious drama of Vietnam. Just one month ago, the Vientiane press corps consisted of half a dozen stringers and freelancers. There are now more than fifty reporters here, representing all the major capitalist propaganda organs.

An ABC television team flew in from Tokyo, hoping for some combat footage from the Plain of Jars. The New York Times sent Henry Kamm up from Bangkok. The wire services' top guns in Saigon came panting after "informed sources" in Vientiane.

After they arrive in Vientiane, the thousands of Americans (press and diplomatic corps plus some industrial representatives) are kept carefully separated from the "natives." Most of the "Official community" lives at Km-6 — an American suburb transplanted whole to an isolated chunk of land six kilometers from Vientiane. And, in Vientiane, even the American Embassy is a humble one-story structure on a side street. While the pervasive, second-rate atmosphere in Km-6 may be good for a laugh, the press people know that it won't arouse the same interest at home as exploding napalm, and televised interviews with dying soldiers.

But, the press won't get to talk to any battlefield casualties or to observe any "search and destroy" missions led by the Green Berets. The Royal Laotian government is not eager to publicize the extent of U.S. activities here, so they prohibit reporters from going into combat zones. And, since there is virtually no transportation in Laos, other than the CIA's Air America, a reporter can only go where the Royal Laotian government wants him to go — and therefore can see only what the government wants him to see. Furthermore, the U.S. Embassy, also not anxious to have another of its Asian wars televised at home, supports and aids the Vientiane government in its efforts to confine the press to sleepy Vientiane.

It doesn't really bother most of the newspapermen. They can crank their copy out of the briefings provided by the U.S. military attaches — how many thousand Russian tanks destroyed in northern Laos, etc. — but meanwhile, the TV men are left idly guzzling Scotch in the Lane Xang bar. They would like to film the American "presence" here, but in Vientiane that presence is kept as inconspicuous as possible.

Air America will not carry the TV men to see villages being bombed or to interview Green Beret officers in their secret camps, so there's not much left to film.

The only catch in this arrangement is that it's getting the press — especially the TV men — angry and that's something the Royal Laotian government can't afford to do.

So the Royal Laotian government has a problem — how can they please the press without letting the "cat out of the bag."

And, they've solved it by giving the reporters a quick, carefully "guided" tour of the country.

This program of "tours" is the result of real teamwork between the U.S. and the Royal Laotian government. The press corps is flown around Laos and gets official briefings in each of the five military regions. And, the TV men get some special treats — a flight over the "Ho Chi Minh trail," joy rides in T-28 bombers and "Spooky" gunships, and visits to a few remote military outposts.

The Newspapermen revel in the exotic datelines, while the TV cameras zoom in on barefoot Laotian soldiers weighted down with M-16's.

What the press will not see is the Green Berets leading Mao mercenaries on patrol, B-52's devastating peasant villages, and American fighter-bombers spewing napalm and fragmentation bombs over the Laotian countryside.

And lest there be any doubt, Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma emphasized the point when he gave the assembled press corps instructions for the guided tour: "Please don't write about anything you don't see."

REFERENCE DESK

International Student Strike--
'Stop War! Stop Work Today!'

By Tom Cleaver

The antiwar movement, which has been relatively quiet in recent months, plans a public resurgence today, April 15, International Student Strike Day. Activities are scheduled throughout the city in various areas.

City College's Student Mobilization Committee has scheduled a teach-in at Statler Wing at 1 p.m. Robert Johnson from the Political Science Department, Dudley Yasuda of Psychological and Experimental College fame, and Merritt Beckerman of Humanities will be the featured speakers.

The San Francisco High School Student Mobilization Committee is holding a rally and teach-in at the Presidio, near the main gate, at 11:30 a.m. The featured speaker at this rally is Tom Hayden, of the Chicago Conspiracy Seven.

The West Coast New Mobilization Committee will hold a rally in the Civic Center plaza at about noon. Speakers at the rally include the French writer, Jean Genet; Father Groppi, leader of the Milwaukee civil rights movement; Tom Hayden, of the Chicago Conspiracy Seven; Bill Cosby; Rev. Cecil Williams, from Glide Memorial Church; and Ron Dellums, Berkeley city councilman and candidate for congress.

Entertainment will be provided at the rally by Jefferson Airplane; Cosby, Stills, Nash and Young; John Sebastian; The Cleveland Wrecking Company; Brotherly Love; and the Thompson Brothers.

The Bay Area Peace Action Council (BAYPAC) has also scheduled a march and rally on Saturday, April 18th. The mareh will begin at the Panhandle at 11 a.m., and the rally will be held at the conclusion of the march in the Civic Center plaza.

Among the speakers at the rally will be: Robert Scheer, who has recently returned from North Vietnam; Orville Schell, of the Committee of Concerned Asian Scholars; Laura Dertz, San Francisco High School SMC; Carol Lipman, national chairman of SMC; William Bennett, former PUC commissioner fired for taking on the utilities companies; and Mark Lapee, an ecologist.

There will also be an active-duty GI speaking, plus speakers from the Black movement, the labor movement, and the Chicano moratorium.

BAYPAC has also asked that any people interested in working on last-minute preparations for the march, working as march monitors, etc., come to the BAYPAC office at 992 Valencia, in the city. The office is open daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

C.C.S.F. War Vet: 'GI's Ridicule Vietnamese'

By David Hugunin

One of the bald realities that is facing our generation is that of being coerced into perpetuating the Vietnam war. For those of us who have already been through it however, the experience, for all it has told us about the immorality of our government, should have revealed some unpleasant realities about ourselves.

I'm speaking about us white veterans and, on the basis of a year spent in the coastal city of Nha Trang as an Air Force medic, I feel that our generation of Vietnam returnees has proven itself to be nearly as xenophobic as the establishment that sent us there.

A response to my charge might be that my non-combatant status at Vietnam's "resort city" has given me a shallow insight on which to base that accusation. I would like to emphasize that the majority of Americans in Vietnam are actually in a non-combatant status. And since I had the opportunity to observe Americans who were well exposed to the Vietnamese people, I feel justified in claiming that we've exhibited the same American chauvinism that I find so abhorrent in our government.

The idea became quite clear to me when I was parting with a friend who was a pilot in the Vietnamese Air Force. He was particularly concerned about how I would represent Vietnam when I returned to the states. Because he spoke English quite well he was aware that many G.I.'s referred to Vietnam as "the armpit of Southeast Asia," and Vietnamese people as "gooks, slopes, zips, etc."

There's little doubt in my mind as to why he mentioned that, rather than the war or politics, in his parting words. The social and cultural differences between Americans and Vietnamese affected our people at Nha Trang more than did the war itself. Let me give an example.

The Vietnamese language is difficult to learn, but nearly all G.I.'s make no attempt to become familiar with it. Sometime, when talking to a Vietnam veteran, ask him the word for hello and goodby. It's simply "Chao," but most vets won't know it. The typical "Vietnamese" vocabulary will consist of mamasan, papasan, number one, number ten, and two or three French words that have found a place in American-Vietnamese communication. But don't press the point because most veterans aren't aware that "fini" and "beaucoup" belong to the French, rather than the Vietnamese, language.

The consequences of the language barrier aren't hard to imagine. Supervisors, and many are young, yell at and browbeat their Asian subordinates in order to make them "understand." G.I.'s, partieularly young G.I.'s, unwittingly riducule the Vietnamese language to the faces of the people. In that country, few things could be more offensive.

I don't wish to be hypercritical of our generation, but I think self-criticism is necessary from one standpoint. For those of us who would like to build a revolutionary society in the United States I feel our greatest obstacle won't be fools like Mendel Rivers who want to destroy a city of North Vietnamese "savages." The obstacle is ourselves; our xenophobia and our racism. For example, who, among you white military veterans of Asia, can say you never used the word "gook?" I certainly can't.

And if you haven't been there, try to discover the faults of those of us who have in order to learn what your own biases may be. You might demonstrate against the war, but in the final analysis we're all pretty much alike. And I'm speaking to the white audience because we, after all, are where the complacency exists.

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 6 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., APRIL 15, 1970

GI's of the Second Battalion, 18th Infantry, shoveled dirt into a tunnel entrance where North Vietnamese were believed to be hiding. The International Anti-War Strike will protest this kind of atrocity until the war stops.

Student Busted

Richard Montemayor, Latino student and a member of the steering committee of La Raza Unida, last week charged the campus police with harassment following his third arrest in less than two months by the same patrolman — one George M. Garanno.

Montemayor was first arrested last February and again before the Easter recess on "suspicion of possession of marijuana."

His latest arrest came March 31, when he and a friend were arrested for "obstructing traffic" and "resisting arrest."

According to Montemayor "the last time we were just sitting near the Horticulture building playing our drums when this cop came up and told us we were under arrest.

"This is a simple case of harassment on me and other people," Montemayor said. "We've got to get together and stop this harassment by the cops."

Campus police were unavailable for comment.

—J.B.

Marxist and Muslim Visit City

Angela Davis, the Marxist scholar from U.C.L.A. and Muhammad Ali, former world heavy-weight boxing champion, visited the University of San Francisco last week.

Dr. Davis spoke on "Black Pride" and about "unjust acts perpetrated by white people against black people."

Ali rapped about "Black Athletes and the Draft." He also reminded listeners that "schooling is necessary for the advancement of black people."

Eugene Brown, Guardsman photographer, captured the controversial duo as they were being introduced by a spokesman for the U.S.F. Black Students Union.

H&R Survey:
'Cafeteria Makes A Huge Profit'

By Jim Browning

With the recent heated debates over the Hotel and restaurant department and the entire cafeteria operation, how do H&R students view the department and its program?

According to a survey taken several weeks ago and recently released, most of the 75 H&R students surveyed expressed "deep concern" over the numerous problems that affect the department.

Among some of survey's results were:

• Sixty per cent of the students surveyed thought that Lawrence Wong, department chairman, was "totally uninterested" in the operation of the department and in the needs of the students.

• While 44 per cent said that the textbook used in the program was outdated, 53 per cent indicated that the overall program would help them gain future employment.

• The only faculty member to receive a favorable response from the students was Mr. Dunn, to whom 65 per cent of those answering said that he was "informed and up to date in his accounting practices."

• A majority (60 per cent) thought that the classes themselves were overcrowded and understaffed by trained personnel.

• And 48 per cent (nearly half) questioned the process by which the students have to donate 20 hours of on-the-job training to the cafeteria.

Several students also questioned the "business like" operation of the department.

Stated one student: "(Mr.) Wong and his faculty seem intent to run the department like a large extremely private business rather than a fully academic department like the various other departments here at City College. All Wong is interested in is to make sure that the cafeteria makes a huge profit for the administration and not if the students actually learn anything. In fact Mr. Wong shows very little concern for the students — if any at all."

"The entire department is set up to make profits," added another student, "and to use the students as slave labor without teaching them very much about actual Hotel and Restaurant management."

The students' main criticism of Mr. Wong centered around his "business like attitude," his "lack of actual concern over students" and his "unwillingness to repair broken kitchen machines and tools."

Among some of the students comments concerning Mr. Wong were: "He is only worried about his own skin and doesn't care about the department —

"He does not care about the welfare of the students" . . . "Wong is too concerned with employer standards — profits" . . .

"He gives the impression of not being too interested in the department . . . "All of Wong's emphasis is on profit and loss ,and not enough of useful training for jobs" . . . "When asked to have kitchen equipment repaired he became very angry over the request. He seems only interested in his own job and not in the students — he has done nothing for the department in the 2 years I've been here" . . .

. . . "He is okay but could do more for the department, he has a lot of influence but doesn't use it" . . .

"Wong seems to lack interest in new ideas plus he is interested in himself only."

Among the 40 per cent who thought that Mr. Wong is indeed interested in the H&R department were these comments: "Satisfactory business operation analyzing" . . . "He can't do much more without money for equipment" . . .

When contacted by the Guardsman, Mr. Wong refused to comment on the survey adding that "if there are any comments about the survey and the students' opinions they should come from the administration or Dean White's office and not from me."

"Viewed from the inside it appears as if the Hotel and Restaurant department," a leaflet issued by H & R students said, "is faced with the increasingly familiar conflict of interest between those whose business is business and those whose business is education. If that is the case, it may point to continuing antagonism between students and administrators in the semesters to come unless workable alternatives are discovered.

"It cannot," the circular cautioned, "be overlooked that the H & R department, although still basically insensitive to the problems now being faced by their own industry, stands out as the only department on campus foresighted enough to have formed a grievance committee in an effort to establish the presently existing atmosphere for democratic self-criticism."

1. Does Mr. Wong, as chairman of the department, seem interested in improving the quality of the curriculum of the H & R program?

YES	NO
40%	60%

3. Does Mr. Cistaro have enough time to help you?

Always	Usually	Sometimes	Seldom	Never
4%	12%	48%	26%	10%

4. How organized is Mr. Borrelli as an instructor?

Highly	Moderately	Loosely	Unorganized
0%	34%	40%	26%

5. Do you feel that the textbooks for the H & R program are:

Useful	Adequate	Outdated
34%	22%	44%

7. Is Mr. Dunn well informed and up to date about the things you need to know in accounting?

Yes	No
65%	35%

8. Do you think that what you are learning this semester will be useful to you at your future employment?

Yes	No
53%	47%

Announce Summer School Courses

By Shirley Fogarino

The summer school session for City College is now being planned. Currently, 195 courses are scheduled to be offered. A schedule of summer school courses will go on sale in the college bookstore on April 27.

FOUR PRIORITIES

Priorities for students registering for the summer session will be as follows: • First priority will be given to currently enrolled CCSF students. They will be allowed to enroll on June 2, 3, 4, and 5 in Smith Hall. Currently enrolled students who wish to attend summer school must pick up a program sheet from their counselor or advisor. Hours for registration will range from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.;

• Returning students will be given a second priority rating. They will be allowed to register in Smith Hall on June 5 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Applications for readmission must be in the Registrar's Office by no later than April 27;

• Third priority will be given to February or June, 1970 graduates from public or private San Francisco high schools. These students will be allowed to register on Saturday, June 13. Students whose sur-names begin with the letters A through L will register from 9 a.m. to 12 noon in Smith Hall; those whose surnames begin with M through Z will register from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.;

• Fourth priority ratings will include those of the general public who would like to attend summer session. These persons will be allowed to register from 9 a.m. to 12 noon on June 15 in Smith Hall. Applications of fourth priority students must be on file in the Registrar's Office by no later than April 27.

Non-residents of San Francisco will have to obtain an out-of-district clearance in order to attend the City College summer session.

UNITS LIMITED

Enrolling students will be limited to seven units on their initial registration. However, they will be able to petition for additional units and register for them on June 15 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. in Smith Hall. Classes will not be added after this date.

FOUR SESSIONS

Four sessions will be included in this summer's program. Session A, which will take place from June 29 through August 7, will include special advanced placement courses for high school students. It will be identified by section numbers 1 to 9 and for high school students, by section numbers 50 and 51.

Session B will take place from June 22 through August 7. The courses included in this session will be identified by section numbers 70 to 75. They will be limited to Chemistry, Physics, and Radiology courses.

Session C will take place from June 22 through July 25. It is the first of two three-and-a-half-week sessions identified by section numbers 30, 31, and 32. Three unit classes will meet three hours daily in session C.

Session D will be the second of two three-and-a-half-week sessions which will be identified by section numbers 40, 41, and 43. Three unit courses will also meet three hours daily in session D.

In addition to the sessions listed above, whose courses will be taught on campus, four Overseas Study courses, bearing course numbers in the 500 series/ will be offered. Two of these are being offered by the Art Department; one by H&R, and one by Photography. For more information on these, see the course instructors.

COURSES CLOSED

Courses will be closed as class limits are reached. Because of the rapid nature of the session, no standby list will be maintained and no adds may be made after registration closes.

Courses are subject to cancellation if there is insufficient registration or if an appropriate instructor is not available.

Students For Change

A group of City College students have come together around a program for change — "to bring a renaissance to campus — and have decided to take part in electoral activities on campus for student council elections this spring.

The planks of the Student Renaissance Coalition platform include pledges —

I. To work on development of an on-campus day-care nursery and clinic for students and campus employees.

II. To give active support to the development of a co-op bookstore.

III. To continue support for a student-run faculty and course evaluation program.

IV. To explore the possibility of developing a faculty-student union to improve the student-teacher relationship.

V. To explore the possibility of developing a teaching assistant's program.

VI. To give support to further expansion and development of the Experimental College.

The students, who plan to run for student council positions on the above planks, are: Charlie Smith, Jane Killibrew, Sanford Goldeen, Joe Kearns, Sylvia Strauss, Sandra Herron, Lynn Monti, Dave Miller, Chuck Borden, Ed Pembridge, Bonnie Solomon, Pat Horan, Tom Cleaver, Don Rich, Sally Moore, John Goebel, Gary Mialocq, and Harvey Rappaport. All have been active in on-campus activities since their arrival at City College, and several have been active in helping to develop some of the programs the Student Renaissance Coalition has pledged to support.

The individuals, who have come together around this specific program, will campaign for council positions beginning later this month.

'The Arab Governments Will Never Fight A Conventional War Against Israel'

By Tom Cleaver

"The Arab people of Palestine have suffered the same fate as the Jews at the time of the Diaspora," claimed Dr. Sabri Kawash, speaking at a meeting of the City College Arab Students Organization last Thursday.

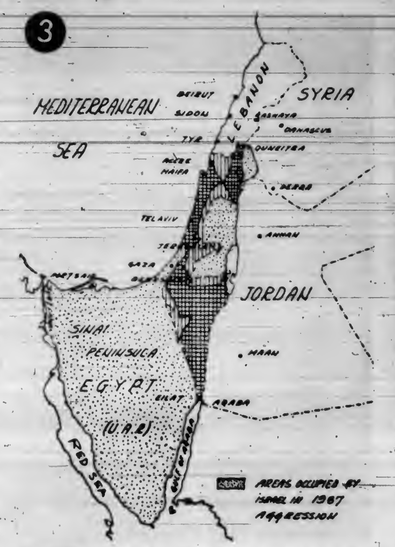
Dr. Kawash further stated that the Arab governments will never be ready to fight a conventional war against Israel.

Speaking as a Palestinian, Dr. Kawash said that the Palestinians have come to the conclusion that the only war the Israelis will lose in the long run is a people's war of national liberation, and that such a war must be a revolutionary war.

"The only people who can struggle against imperialism and colonialism are the oppressed people themselves. We cannot depend on anyone else to help us."

Dr. Kawash gave a brief history of what has happened to the Palestinian Arabs since the foundation of Israel in 1948, adding, "It is appropiate that I speak on this day, as it is the 22nd anniversary of the attack on Masaka, a small village outside of Jerusalem, by Israeli terrorists of the Stern Gang."

He went on to say that this was only one incident in a program planned to force the Palestinians to flee before the advancing Israeli armies to "clear the land" for an all-Jewish state. According to Dr. Kawash, 354 people — mostly women, older men and children — were killed in the attack on Masaka, and many thousands of others were killed in the program that led to the fact that more than one million Palestinian Arabs were forced to flee their homes and become refugees in the neighboring Arab countries.



Speaking of the development of the struggle for national liberation, Dr. Kawash said that originally, the Palestinians had placed their faith in the United Nations, which had passed a resolution calling on Israel to help in relocating and reimbursing the refugees. By the time of the war in 1956, the Palestinians had come to the conclusion that they could not put their faith either in the UN or in the promises of the new Arab governments that had come about as a result of the Arab defeats in the war of 1948.

In 1958, El Fatah, the leading organization of the revolutionary struggle, was formed with $1,000 to buy equipment.

By 1965, the organization was ready to begin commando raids into Israel; these began in January 1965. The reaction in the Arab states was that Fatah was a bunch of provocateurs, even "agents of a foreign power," who were trying to push the Arab governments into a war with Israel that they were not ready for. Since then, Fatah has actively carried out operations against the Israelis in both Israel and the occupied territories, and has also carried out political education among the refugees in the camps, to bring them to support the struggle.

When asked where Fatah received its money, Dr. Kawash said, "not from the Arab governments, especially not since the summit conference at Rabat!" He went on to say that King Feisal of Saudi Arabia had offered to support the revolution financially, but that Fatah had turned him down because they did not want others to control the struggle because they had the money.

Kawash said further that Fatah receives all its money from the Arab people, who have organized themselves to support the struggle by collecting money among the people. "In Saudi Arabia and in Libya before the recent change in government, the government collects this money and gives it to the organization, because they are deathly afraid of the people joining with Fatah and perhaps overthrowing the feudal regimes," he said.

Dr. Kawash (above right) spoke about the Mid-East situation

The question came up about how to solve the crisis, and Dr. Kawash gave the program of Fatah for political solution. This is that Fatah favors the establishment of a democratic, socialist state in Palestine, composed of both Arabs and Jews, with the people in control of the government. What the name of the country will be is irrelevant to the organization. They only want to restore the rights of all the people who live in Palestine.

Council Supports Today's Anti-War Activities

The Student Council voted unanimously last week to support today's Moratorium.

Referring to the coincidental dates of the Moratorium and the blood drive, Councilman Harvey Rappaport said, "Since the Moratorium and the blood drive fall on the same day, people should support the goals of the Moratorium and, if they happen to be on campus, give blood."

The council also asks that all instructors excuse absent students without penalty today.

Rappaport, noting that the flags were flying at half mast due to the death of four highway patrolmen, proposed that City College flags be flown at half mast as long as Americans are dying in a war anywhere. Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels, said that the people of the college do not have the right to determine how the flag is to be flown, but he added that he would look into the matter to see how Student Council can get permission to fly the flag at half mast.

The Bookstore Committee, made up of council members Charles Smith, Jane Killebrew, and Steve Mendelsohn, is considering the formation of a totally student-operated, non-profit bookstore. Mendelsohn said that he would like to see the store run without a hired manager such as the A.S. Store's Richard Main in charge. Most books and items would be sold at cost instead of jacked-up prices for the sake of profit.

Mendelsohn would like to see the Business Department count bookstore administration and accounting as a lab period for interested students with the possibility of offering extra units for regular participation.

Renato Larin, Student Council president, said that he is thinking of having a concert as part of the council's publicity campaign on May 5 and 8.

"I would like to have Richie Havens play here — someone interesting," Larin said.

The council unanimously approved of the red and white Student Council identification button design submitted by Charles Smith. The buttons will be worn by all council members while on campus.

. . . Lecture Scene (Photo by Kovacs)

Trans-Meditation:
'It's All Within Yourself'

Peter Ports gave the first lecture on Transcendental Meditation at the College last Thursday.

Ports, who was trained by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in India, explained that there is a reservoir of energy, intelligence and creativity inside each individual.

He claimed that the technique of Transcendental Meditation is a simple, natural, and easy process whereby anyone can draw upon this inexhaustible source and improve his outer life. He discussed the art of action, and explained that contact with this inner being produces strong thought, which produces correspondingly strong and productive actions.

In Mr. Ports' second lecture, which will be held on Thursday, April 16 in room 100 of the Science Building at 11 a.m., he will describe further the actual meditation technique, and will discuss how it requires no concentration, contemplation, or will power, but rather just that natural tendency of the mind to go to an area of greater enjoyment.

Draft Help

A number of young men regard military service as inevitable, and enlist. Such important decisions are all too often made in ignorance of the many alternatives available.

On this campus, draft counseling is available to anyone wishing to avail themselves of this free service. Draft Counseling was originated by Dennis McAuliffe as a part of the Experimental College. It is affiliated with the Central Committee of Conscientious Objectors.

The draft lottery (bingo game) of December 1969 left many people confused as to their new draft status. The confusion resulting from the lottery has not died down, although students with numbers in the two or three hundreds are considered less likely to be drafted than those with lower numbers.

Some potential draftees are ignorant regarding their rights and possible deferments. Students who now worry about the Selective Service may actually be unacceptable because of physical, mental, financial, or other problems.

McAuliffe also trains people who wish to become draft counselors in other areas.

Draft counseling is available in the Experimental College, (B-5) on Thurs. 12-1, or phone Dennis McAuliffe between 6-9 p.m. 861-3792. Mike Mitroff also offers information on Saturdays (668-9036).

The Freedam Troupe put on a series of skits and poetry readings April 17 called "Electronic Nigger." Amang the skits was one portraying white racism in the South and a classroom scene in which a black man turned "Uncle Tam" tried to take aver the class. Between skits, entertainment was pravided by individual poetry readings backed up by music fram a small combo. Photo by Brown

On and Off Campus

Dance Explosion

The dance department at City College is planning a program "to show the techniques of many styles of dancing," to be called "Dance Explosion '70." The show will be given on campus on May 25 and 26 at 8 p.m. in the Little Theatre, and at 11 a.m. during College Hour on May 28.

The group is scheduling tryouts for all interested students on Friday, April 24th, from 8-10 a.m. in the Activities Room in the Women's Gym. Those who are unable to come down at this time can call Mr. Bob Kuykendall in the Women's Gym to set up an appointment for a tryout.

Concert

The San Francisco Conservatory of Music will present a concert of works by composer Robert Morán in Grace Cathedral at 9 p.m. April 24. Mr. Moran will be remembered for the Twin Peaks composition "39 Minutes for 39 Autos" staged last year.

Blood Drive

The annual City College Blood Drive will be held Wednesday and Thursday, April 15th-16th in Statler Wing from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Contributions will go on reserve at the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank and later to "needful recipients," according to Ed Lew, Publicity Coordinator.

'On the Waterfront'

"On the Waterfront," the classic film about alienation, will be shown tomorrow, Thursday, in the Little Theater. Starting time is 8 p.m. and admission is free.

Rafer Johnson

Rafer Johnson, famed track star, will be giving a lecture in the Little Theatre on April 16. Associated Students, which is sponsoring the lecture, has yet to set the topic. Admission is free.

Duke Ellington

Jazz great Duke Ellington will perform in concert at Grace Cathedral at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, April 15 and 16.

Ellington, 71, will be joined by singer Tony Watkins, Joe Benjamin on bass and Rufus Jones on drums.

Admission is free.

Hell Week

The Greek Council, which consists of all on-campus fraternities and sororities, has designated April 13-17 as "Hell Week." Essentially, "Hell Week" is designed to recruit new people into the fraternity scene.

Dance

The International Relations Club will sponsor a dance this Saturday evening from 8-12 p.m. at the YMCA, 360 18th Ave. at Geary. Admission is $1.00. Door prizes include tickets to "Hair."

Campus Radio Station Plans Poll

The KCSF Broadcasters will conduct a survey during the week of April 13 asking KCSF listeners what kind of music they want.

The station, which must convert to a specified musical format, is offering choices of music which include Classical, Jazz, Free Form, Top 40, Soul, and the various classifications of Rock.

The petition also asks if the length of newscasts on KCSF should remain at five minutes, be shortened to two minutes, or be completely eliminated.

The broadcasters poll will check the popularity of "The Kathy Nather show," which is aired on KALW-FM at 11:30 a.m. (Photo by Kovocs)

The Moody Blues— 'Phenomenal, Unbelievable!'

By Erik Heldfond

Darkness is the most prominent figure within the theatre. The audience stirs with desirous anticipation as the clock continues to travel toward its eventual destination. Then, much as the hypothetical genie from the lamp, the stage is taken by a sudden avalance of applause as five figures make their entrance drenched in crimson beams of light. For ninety minutes, music with the beautiful intensity of one million soaring white butterflies hovers above the ears of the unbelieving spectators. As the figures retreat from the rhythmic battlefield, a wall shattering thunder of appreciation assure the departing minstrels of complete and total victory.

Such is a brief account of the recent concert held by the Moody Blues last week in Berkeley. It would be an impossible task to inform the readers of this article, the total portrait of beauty and musical mystification that this dynamic group painted for its audience, it was one of those rare occasions which must be experienced personally. Although much of their performance material was taken from past albums, a good part was derived from their newest release on London records entitled, "To Our Children's Children's Children." Once listened to, this album should demonstrate, as did their others, that the Moody Blues is one of the finest groups of musicians this era has given birth to. The Moody Blues are a five man team which has its roots in Birmingham, England.

In 1964, the group became an overnight success when their first single "Go Now" rose to the top of the British charts, but fell back into obscurity until 1967. During that year, two songs echoed from the top of every international chart. "Tuesday Afternoon" and "Nights In White Satin" led critics to the discovery of what is now regarded as a classic of the recording industry, an album titled "The Days Of Futures Passed." It was in this album that their unique and emotional style evolved. By use of the Mellatron, an organ-like instrument which is capable of reproducing any orchestral sound, and their vast musical reservoir of talent, the disc took the listener through a fantastic, symphonic day, with songs used to represent the various times of day. Hence, Tuesday Afternoon and Nights In White Satin. Following in the mould of the first album, two more exceptional LP's (In Search of The Lost Chord, and On The Threshold of A Dream) have kept the group high on the worldwide charts.

Their most recent recording, the aforementioned "To Our Children's Children's Children," is truly a masterpiece. It presents to the listener a synthesized epitaph to the generations which will inhabit our Earth of the Future. With songs such as "Candle of Life," "Eternity Road" and "Beyond," a feeling of skeptical hope seems to rise from within. Included in this album are also the fine verse and melodies created from the genius of the group's guitarist, Justine Hayward. Through his unbelievable compositions he definitely proves himself to be an exceptional composer, second only in fact to the mythical talents of Lennon and McCartney. These facts, once bound together, lead to one universal theme of the record, which has been depicted on the album's cover. This being that despite the vast amount of technological advancement and sociological growth throughout the ages, man exists, in his purest form, just as primitive — as he was at the dawn of creation.

I consider myself lucky in the fact that I have listened to and enjoyed this Phenomenal group for many years. I believe that all those who wish to sample a unique and extraordinary experience, should acquire any of the albums created by the Moody Blues. As with all things of excellence, the value far outweighs the cost.

Plan Film-making Class and Book Exchange

By Elizabet Driscoll

The Experimental College is now offering courses on film-making, tarot reading and "arboretum walking."

A student wishing to enroll in these courses can do so by speaking with the instructor in charge of that particular class. Names of teachers are listed in Bungalow 5.

Two members of the City College faculty maintain offices at the Experimental College. They are Dudley Yasuda, psychology department, and Don Peterson, English department. Any student who wants to rap about problems or otherwise, may do so.

Says Sherm Levine, a regular habitue at the EC: "The atmosphere here is informal. The individual can drink a bottle of soda pop here. He can relax. Or, he can just have a good rap session with anyone and everyone."

At the same time, Levine revealed that "in about 10 days the EC Book Exchange is to save the student money on textbooks." He went on to invite "all interested students to the Experimental College to talk about the school's book needs."

The Experimental College is open daily from 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Evening activities happen from time to time, also.

On Friday, April 10, a Forum on Women's Liberation was held in A-314. The featured speaker was Evelyn Reed, author of "Problems of Women's Liberation." Two representatives of San Francisco Women's Liberation, Anne Farrar and Brenda Brush, also delivered speeches. Susan Green acted as Master of Ceremonies. About 50 students attended.

Shown in the photograph, from left to right, are: Brenda Brush, Anne Farrar, Evelyn Reed and Susan Green.

(Photo by Kovacs)

Liberation Continues to Attract

Book Review

Anti-Communism in America

By Jim Browning
News Editor

Anti-communism has been at the core of American ruling class ideology. It still is. It is the main-spring of American foreign policy. It has been used as an excuse by the ruling class to spread U.S. imperialism into almost every country in the world.

This is the thesis of Michael Parenti, Political Science professor at the University of Illinois, who has summed up the central fact of American imperialism since 1917 — and its historic roots — in 333 fact-filled pages.

Parenti comes to the point swiftly in his introduction: "If America's ruling class has an ideology, it is anti-communism. Hundreds of thousands of lives have been sacrificed on its behalf. It is time we gave closer scrutiny to the anti-communist impulse, its mainstays and effects, its polemics and policies."

Why does a young professor critically examine the current political reality and underlying theory of what he calls the "American orthodoxy?" Because of the Vietnam war, explains Parenti.

'TROUBLESOME QUESTIONS'

"Until a few years ago I was an anti-communist liberal who believed in the necessity of 'maintaining our commitments against the forces of communism,'" Parenti writes. "Troublesome questions arose in my mind but these were usually vanquished by my deeply conditioned reactions to fearful images of 'the cold war struggle,' and 'communist aggression.' Vietnam was for me, as for many other Americans, a crucible for my anti-communist beliefs.

"The more I studied the problem, the more I found myself questioning not only our involvement in the conflict but also the whole train of attitudes and events that brought us to it. Eventually I found I could no longer consider myself an adherent of the anti-communism preached and practiced by the ruling class and its puppet politicians . . ."

Parenti makes no bones about the central thesis of the book: anti-communism is "counter-revolutionary interventionism" and long pre-dates the post 1945 cold war.

'MILITARY EXPANSION'

"The history of the United States has been one of territorial, commercial and military expansion," writes Parenti. From the very beginnings, he argues, the U.S. suffered from "expansionist pangs."

Parenti cites the acquisition of Florida from Spain, "our crimes against the Indian nations," the "shameless aggression" against Mexico by which Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California were stolen, and the Spanish-American war with the occupation of Cuba and the bloody repression against the Filipinos. All this, he points out in an aside, was woven into one oratorical tapestry by the ruling class "with the predominant themes of God, Gold and Glory."

But Parenti is interested in more than a short course in American imperialism, although he must be clearly conscious of its value to students. His essential point is that inherent in what he describes as expansionist American capitalism has been the policy on interventionism against deep-going social change in foreign countries.

WOODROW WILSON

It was in 1917 and immediately thereafter that this policy assumed its clearest focus, he says, when President Woodrow Wilson lent his support to the policy of intervention against the Russian Revolution led by V. I. Lenin. "Thus Wilson initiated the strategy of permanent counter-revolution and helped lay the ideological and policy foundation for the cold war to come.

"In 1919 the emerging spectre of Bolshevism sent a shudder through the capitalist world. Having few investments in Russia, American capitalists suffered no noticeable deprivation at the hands of the Bolsheviks, but they saw the Soviet revolution as a socio-political order which fundamentally challenged their own system. For this reason the business community could support American participation in armed intervention against the Bolshevik revolutionaries while later displaying a benign indifference to the insanity of Nazi Germany. Unlike the Soviets, Hitler did not appear to be attacking the institutions of profits and property.

CAPITALISM AND FASCISM

"All suggest," Parenti concludes, "that the Western capitalists were more concerned with the Bolshevik spectre than with the fascist threat."

The cold war liberals, Parenti adds, did not reserve their anti-communism for foreign affairs. Home front anti-communism was also part of the ruling class' pattern to discredit communism and allow for the expansion of American capitalism into foreign countries. He points out that several "liberals" defended academic freedom "for non-communist only."

"Either out of conviction or fear, the liberal adopted the basic rhetoric of anti-communism," he goes on. "The McCarthy inquisition and his victim had one thing in common (to the lasting disadvantage of the latter): both built their argument on anti-communist orthodoxy."

ANTI-COMMUNIST TACTICS

"Even today," warns Parenti, "many liberals do not raise any questions about anti-communism's presumptions and goals but concentrate their criticism on anti-communist tactics."

Briefly recounting vast U.S. military expenditures, far-flung bases, genocide in Southeast Asia, Africa and South America and CIA-financed subversion, he sums up:

"To support military dictatorships in the name of democracy — Greece and South Vietnam are prime examples — to create satellites under the banner of self-determination — Puerto Rico, Guam, Israel — to violate treaties while championing world law, to propagandize lies in the name of truth — such is the mold of modern American imperialism."

SOCIAL REVOLUTION

Parenti calls for a drastic break with anti-communist orthodoxy and argues — perhaps with an eye on some members of the New Left — that the only way to stem the flow of anti-communism propaganda from the ruling class and end U.S. agression in foreign countries is "through a complete social revolution here at home." He affirms that the growing anti-imperialism movement, the political struggles by students and workers against "the bosses" and a whole variety of dissenting activities are laying the basis for great transformations. And, addressing himself to people who might be hesitant about supporting a social revolution, he suggests: "Within limits, the unthinkable becomes thinkable by uttering it and acting upon it."

One may be disappointed that Parenti uses the "we" in discussing American imperialism, when he so obviously is talking not about the American people but of a tiny ruling class — the Rockefellers, Hunts and DuPonts who acutally control this country — who are the essential creators and beneficiaries of anti-communism. One could have hoped that the good professor had grounded his analysis directly and not obliquely on an exposition of the fundamental laws of imperialism — from which "anti-communist impulses" develop.

Tour

A foreign study course in Europe is being planned for the months of June 22-July 31, 1970. The course is D AC 366, Painting and Drawing, and is open to any student attending college in California. The pre-requisites are submission of art work and the recommendation of a college art instructor or professor.

The principal cities that will be toured include Paris, France; St. Cerque and Geneva, Switzerland; Milan, Siena, San Gimignano, Florence, and Rome, Italy. (For the complete itinerary, see page 42 of the World Academy Catalog, Summer 1970.) Cost of the tour is $935 from San Francisco, and the balance of payments are due April 31. Student loans are available (see pg. 24 of Catalog) or contact Financial Aids officer or Mr. W. Davis of CCSF. To register for the course, obtain an application from a faculty member or use the application in the back of the World Academy Catalog. Return the application and check to a Faculty member.

Some of the highlights of the course will be visiting art museums such as the Louvre, Musee National D'Arts Moderne, and the Uffizi; meeting famed sculptor Beniamano Bufano at his summer studio outside Florence; and seeing such masterworks as Leonardo DaVinci's "Mona Lisa" and Michelangelo's "David" and sculpture for the Medici Chapel.

AFT Threatens Strike

The American Federation of Teachers threatened last week to take strike action unless the San Francisco Board of Education responded immediately to a list of 124 demands for educational reforms.

"We must consider a strike, if necessary, to break the bottleneck that exists at 135 Van Ness (the district's administrative headquarters)," said James Ballard, president of the AFT local 61.

"The AFT educational reform proposals have been before the superintendent and the school board since January," Ballard added.

The union members, in a meeting April 6, voted overwhelmingly to give the district until May 11 to answer their demands. If no satisfactory response is received by then, Ballard said, a strike vote will be taken.

The AFT's demands range from a call for better teaching facilities to substantial pay increases.

"It is understandable that teachers are thinking of salaries," Ballard said. "We have been slipping backwards in the past several years. The actual take home pay of a beginning teacher is slightly above $100 a week."

The union, which represents approximately half the district's 5000 public school teachers and about 40 per cent of the teachers here at City College, is asking $8500 a year for a starting teacher with a bachelor's degree, ranging up to $17,000 in eight years.

The strike strategy was adopted, according to the resolution, "to assure positive response from the school board to legitimatize long standing and vital reforms developed by the people in daily professional contact with all students." — J.B.

CONTACT LENS: Did You Support Judge Carswell

Cathy Hannon, Nursing Major
I'd say that I'm against all this overplay of his prejudice. As far as my viewpoint of the South . . . The South seems to be against everybody and everything. If this guy was so superior as to get into an all-white club, and to condemn a person for the color of his skin, then I feel that he'd be totally biased.

William Chan, General Ed. Major
I think that there are better Conservative judges than Carswell. Nixon should make much better choices. He should interview the prospective judges personally. Any judge with a racist background shouldn't even be allowed to be considered by Senate. They should make a thorough investigation of each appointee.

Jeffrey Hill, Poli. Sci. Major
No, I did not. I did not support him because he was a mediocre choice for such a prestigious position in the Supreme Court and I didn't go along with his basic philosophies and with his past philosophies which reflect on his character.

Russell Button, Astr. Eng. Major
No. Whether or not Carswell was a racist is immaterial. The deciding factor should be whether or not he had the support of public opinion. Our government cannot operate effectively without the support of the people and Judge Carswell would not have the support of the people.

Compiled By Bruno Forher

Film Review

MASH IS A SMASH!

—"And then there was Korea . . ." is the mild-mannered introduction to M*A*S*H, a talling-out-of-your-seat funny film comedy about — if you can believe — a war-zone surgery during the third year of America's lightning campaign in Korea.

M*A*S*H stands for Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, but it might as well mean "More Absurd and Sexy (even than) 'Hair.'" for the film is strangely reminiscent of the rock musical in its attenuated plot, freshness, spontaneity, and what for want of a better word one simply calls chutzpah. Besides all of which it is twice as unblushingly bawdy.

Scenes from the 20th Century production of MASH, now playing at the Regency I Theater in San Francisco.

The story-line is slender: Several Ur-hippie surgeons — drafted, of course — serve in a Korean front-line field hospital, and drink, carouse, and womanize their way to glory. That's all there is to it, except that in the interim they spill a lot of good lines. One surgeon, directing a nurse to suture a wound, suddenly asks, "Is this an officer or an enlisted man?" "Enlisted." "OK, make the stitches big." Of an orthodontic surgeon's alleged homosexuality, the mild-mannered chaplain mutters lamely, "There are some things that absolution just won't solve." A third doctor says in prologue to a make-out, "God meant us to find each other" and his lady shrills back with moist-lipped alacrity, "Oh, His Will be done!" So much for the dialogue; M*A*S*H's pace is unlagging mainly because of its delicious sequence of sight gags.

For instance, two of the doctors steal a jeep to get out to their MASH unit. The theft is devil-may-care enough; and at the hospital, their senior doctor smilingly concludes the niceties of greetings and introductions by equanimously ordering an aide sotto voce to "change the numbers on that jeep." Later, the hospital staff — in the midst of a holiday debauch — leaves off long enough to sneak a surreptitious microphone under the tent wall of the prissy, purse-mouthed Head Nurse's boudoir. She, as it happens, is in flagranti delicto with the camp's leading Bible-belter, and the proceedings thereof are at first privately relished by the eavesdroppers . . . then they hook up the microphone to the P.A. system. There is even a nutty football game between MASH staff and an infantry corps, in which the nurses are cheerleaders, the waterboy makes his rounds with a milkman's lug of canteens, the opposition smokes pot on the bench, and the game is finally won by the old Shoot-the-Other-Side's-chief - Player - Full - of - Dope ploy, which happens exactly the way it sounds.

The madcap peak of the film, however, is the mock passion and death of the dental surgeon, who decides to kill himself to solve his alleged "social problem." His fellow physicians all gather to render a final toast, and dressed in doctor's whites, with bread and wine on the table, they form a marvelous spoof-tableau of the Last Supper. A violin mews Taps in the background (a violin playing Taps, for Chris-sakes!) The dentist is going to "do a little recon in the unknown," for which "the reward is death" — and he is handed a black "poison capsule. Then he climbs in his coffin, and his friends file by for a last handshake and to drop in his three girlfriends' pictures, a black ace of spades, a bottle of gin, a dental speculum, a smutty magazine, etc. Later, doped into deep sleep by the black capsule, he is moved by his friends into bed with a fetching nurse. It is "Physician, heal thyself" with a vengeance!

MASH is nothing less than balanced frenzy. Its pace is pell-mell, but never helter-skelter. Only once does a gag gag: (during an unpleasantly graphic amputation, the doctor tersely calls for forceps — then has the nurse scratch his nose with them — all this to the terrible background blues of saw grating on bone. And this, in fact, is typical of the one disquieting feature of the film. Reel after reel expends itself protraying the doctors' sensuality, earnality, intemperanee, and what have you . . . and then each of these is tempered with uniform and ultra-real operation-scenes wherein the doctors suddenly become what one wants to believe of them: all dedication, perseverance, and humanitarianism. The film pleads too hard that they are, after all, NICE sybarites.

Again, the MASH surgery is run like no other: people walk in and out during operations, casually and with no antiseptic procedures. At one point, the head doctor leads the new Head Nurse, fresh from her helicopter, into a triple surgery, introduces her all around, and almost makes the mistake of having her shake hands with a gloved and working surgeon. The chaplain meanders about too, never quite getting the hang of kissing his stoll through his mask, and having to interrupt Extreme Unction at one point to hold a retractor in another patient's operation. As a war film, MASH is definitely unreal. There are no sounds of battle, no POW's, no devastation or smoke in the air, although the hospital is only three miles from the battle-line. And some of the pranks played by the doctors would seem darned mean, if they weren't mitigated by 17 years' distance in time and their frankly fantastic nature. Still, it one doesn't look for morals — there are none — MASH adds up to pretty fine and funny entertainment . . . and maybe establishes, as did the novel Catch 22, that for the right people, war is not hell, but a hell of a good time.

B. L. M.

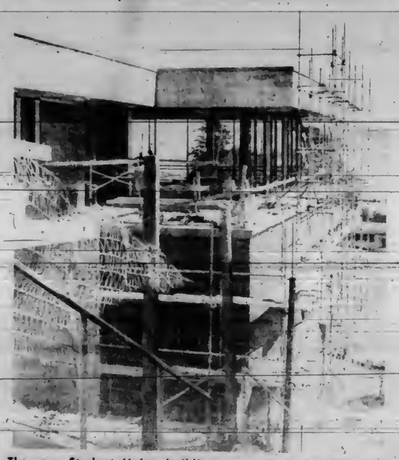
Health Service Gets $31,000 Grant

. . . Miss Judith Carey, Student Health Adviser.
(Photo by Eugene Brown)

City College's health service last week received priority from the State Council for Higher Education to get $31,000.00 from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for planning of a comprehensive, multi-service health center on campus.

The health center will include all health services and social services, such as welfare, vocational rehabilitation, etc. It will be an innovative plan for health care delivery for students and all the problems they run into in filling those needs. It will serve as a model for the rest of the community colleges in the state in designing their health care programs.

The one-year planning grant, to begin in July of this year, is for planning facilities and services according to student needs and the needs of the surrounding community.



School nurse Judith Carey stated that "we want to have student and community participation in planning this center."

The planning grant runs out in July 1971. By that time it is hoped to have a complete plan for design of facilities and what services will be offered, so that the program can begin to be implemented in the following school year.

Festival

The Lenin Festival, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the great Russian revolutionary's birth, will be held Sunday, May 3 in the Padre Area of Tilden Park, Oakland, from 12 to 5 p.m.

Bettina Aptheker, former student activist, is scheduled to speak. To round out the celebration, there will be a puppet show, a display of Lenin posters and a sing-out with Jon Fromer. Music and dancing are invited. Call EX 2-1602 for more details.

The new Student Union building, opposite Statler Wing, is nearing completion. It is supposed to be ready for student use in the Fall but finishing touches are expected to be made in the next few weeks.

(Photograph by Eugene H. Brown)

Ex-Ram Stars Return

Standing from left to right: Al Cowlings, first-round draft choice of the Buffalo Bills; Sid Phelan, Ram basketball coach; Alec Schwartz, offensive line coach for the Rams; Mike Taylor, veteran offensive lineman for the Philadelphia Eagles.

Merritt Beats Rams 74 to 62 as T-Birds Run Record 100 and 220

By Mike Chan

The Ram track department expected a real close thriller of a dual meet against speedy Meritt. On paper, the field and distance events belonged to the Rams and the sprints were all locked up by the T-Birds. What did happen on the day of the meet last Friday, April 4th at City was that Merritt flew by City, 74 to 62.

On the strength of her trackmen, Merritt decided the meet as the Thunderbirds swept the 100, the 220, the Intermediate Hills, and the 440.

The Rams clearly dominated the distance events by sweeping the mile and the 2 mile. The Rams snatched up a first when Humberto Hernandez took the 880 by inches.

Ram Dave Power led the Rams in both the mile and the 2 mile. Power's mile timing was 4:24.2 and his 2 mile time was 9:52.7.

Other Ram highlights were in the discus, the pole vault, and the jumping events. Audre Hicks led a Ram sweep of the discus with his 137' 7½" throw. In the pole vault, Paul Conroy led another Ram sweep with his 13'3" jump.

High jumper Clyde Sadler seems to perennially come in first for the Rams. This time he did it with a 6'4" jump over the bar.

In the triple jump Donnie Bruce took first with a 46'8½" performance.

Knocking away those few highlights, the day truly belonged to Merritt. Thunderbird Warren Edmondson ran a 9.5 100 yard dash against a cold wind. His fantastic performance wiped off O. J. Simpson's name from the meet record book.

Again Edmondson's name was recorded into the meet record book when he was clocked in 21.2 seconds for the 220. Edmondson's record wiped out former Olympic try-out Ernie Provost's 220 mark.

The T-Birds clearly would've swept the track clean if Donnie Bruce hadn't taken second in the 120 HIIs and if Humberto Hernandez hadn't given out a super effort in the 880.

The next dual meet at City will be against the CSM Bulldogs here on April 17 at 2:30.

Corvi 76, Susko 77 But Ram Golfers Fall

CCSF found a new medalist in Greg Corvi, but the results weren't the same as Chabot defeated the Rams golfers, 37-17, April 6, at Castlewood.

Corvi fired a 76, the best score among the meet's twelve participants. Western Collegiate Golf Champion John Susko settled for a 77, and a tie for runnerup honors behind his teammate.

Chabot's Doug Pepoon and Chris Williams shot 77's and Dan Ross had a 78. The Rams lost the match when their four other members ran into difficulty. Rich Nablefield finished with an 83, and the Doyle brothers, Jerry and Joe, had 85 and 86 respectively. The big disapointment was Bob Simpson's ghastly 95, as the usual 70's shooter blew sky high.

Late Ram Rally Sinks Foothill

The red-hot Rams overcame a five run deficit, and rallied to beat Foothill, 10-7, April 7, at Balboa Park. The win was the fourth in the last five games for the improving Rams, boosting their league record to 5-6.

Foothill led, 7-2, after 5½ innings, but were suddenly caught up in a CCSF flurry of basehits. Singles by Ray Spediacci, Jim Schach, Charlie Lewis, and Bob Crosat keyed a five run uprising in the sixth to tie the score 7-7.

The Rams broke the deadlock in the 8th with a three run rally, ignited by singles off the bats of Lewis and Vince Anderson, and finished with a Crosat double.

Righthander Jim Daly blanked Foothill for two innings to pick up the win. However, it took some excellent relief pitching from John Lawhorn to bail Daly out of a tough ninth inning jam, and preserve the victory.

The eleven hit attack was led by Crosat, who drove in three runs, along with Lewis, Schach, and Larry Haren, each with two R.B.I.'s.

City College's recent streak of four out of five started back on March 19, with a 12-1 rout over Merritt. That was followed by a 9-3 romp against Chabot. Pitcher Rick Escalambre went the distance for the Rams to gain his first victory of the season. He also added a single and triple in support of his own cause. Catcher Bob Crosat was the offensive gun, banging out three hits in four trips, two of which were doubles, and knocked in two runs.

San Mateo interrupted the win skein with a 15-3 slaughter, amidst ten CCSF errors. The horrendous number of miscues was the most committed by the Rams this season. The usual reliable Ray Spediacci was clobbered by the CSM club, which mounted a seventeen-hit spree.

But the Rams bounced back with a 9-6 triumph over Diablo Valley. The most pleasing part of the win resulted in the errorless ball played by CCSF, the first time the defense has proved flawless all year. Rich Dumont worked six and one-third innings to gain the win. Firstbaseman Larry Haren belted out three hits, and drove in two, while Anderson, Schach, and Escalambre collaborated for two hits apiece.

The surging Rams next meet Merritt Thursday at Balboa Park at 3 p.m. in their bid to reach the .500 mark.

Faculty Beats Varsity In Tennis; In League Play Rams Record Is 2-1

The Ram varsity tennis squad not only has to contend with their tough GGC opponents, but also with a tough Ram faculty squad of tennis bums.

With an overall record of 2 wins and 1 loss in Golden Gate Conference competition, the Ram racketeers were dusted off by some real swinging members of the faculty.

The faculty took on the varsity last Wednesday at Golden Gate Park. Winners for the faculty were Marv Schenner who defeated Stewart Lai. Herb Davis knocked off Henry Lew, and Oleg Reott was tied with Jeff Cornell at one set apiece.

However, the varsity polished off faculty members: Bill Pruitt, Dick Bloomer, and tennis coach Roy Diederichsen, who happened to sponsor the event.

The varsity tennis corps should be commended though on their fine early season record of 2 and 1. Their only loss came at the hands of Chabot a week and a half ago.

The two Ram wins came at the expense of DVC and San Jose. The Rams easily trounced DVC 6 to 3 and just walked away against San Jose 6 to 2.

On the caliber of his players, tennis coach Roy Diederichsen noted that Stewart Lai needs only to be aggressive in order to become a fine player. The coach also commented that Dennis Ja has improved 100 per cent, and that the most hustling player on the squad is Aarron Sinelinkoff. His number one player, Jim Turner, Diederichsen reports, shows a good solid game.

Time For Black Baseball Managers

By Joe Konte

Jackie Robinson broke the color line of baseball in 1946, but in the black man's 24 year span in the sport, not one player has "qualified" to manage in the majors.

"A pure case of prejudice," one observer cries. "The whites run the show," another bellows. But I fail to detect the signs of prejudice as the answer to the absence of blacks as leaders on the baseball front. And so, the question remains: Why isn't there a Negro manager?

The real reason is tradition. Baseball has been well-known as the traditional sport of the U.S. In 100 years of existence, the changes have been minimal. However, a quick glance at the football and basketball circuit shows a progressive history of change. The players are bigger and faster, the equipment is better, and the play is more wide open. Basketball has speeded up their game with taller, more mobile players, and a fast break-high scoring type of play.

And then comes baseball, dragging its traditional banner behind. The players are the same size, the scores are equivalent, and the uniforms are similar. It is not our intention to slight baseball, because the sport has given us many thrills. But the point is, the "national pastime" is a tradition-based game.

If you haven't guessed what we're leading to, it's that the reason baseball has been slow in producing a black manager is because there has never been one. This statement may seem strange, but it is the truth.

Remember that it took seventy-two years for baseball to sign a black player. Prejudice was the cause for some of that long wait, but tradition is what actually kept the game segregated. The argument against prejudice today can be answered easily with a look at the salaries of many of the Negro athletes. Willie Mays, Frank Robinson, and Bob Gibson are black and rich, compliments of a $100,000 a year contract.

The qualified men are available for managerial jobs. We see Frank Robinson, Elston Howard, Bill White, Jim Gilliam, and Ernie Banks as black men whose knowledge and leadership on the playing field should extend them a chance as manager. The men are there, and now it is baseball's turn to open up their traditional path to those who deserve to travel on it.

SPRING!

Leafs are flowing
Like a leaf
I am Light.

—M.J.B.

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 204, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

SPRING 1970
Head Coordinator . . Marc Kovacs
News Editor . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . Mike Chan, Joe Konte

Staff

Feature Editor — Tom Cleaver
REPORTERS:
Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruno Forner, Shirley Fogarino, David Hugunin, Ran Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Manners, Erik Haldfond.
PHOTOGRAPHERS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

'Black Panthers Are Powerful and Intelligent' — Genet

Jean Genet has spent half his life in prison. A decade ago he was sentenced to life imprisonment as an incorrigible criminal. He is also a writer, a poet, a playwright, perhaps the greatest French literary figure of the 20th century. It took a long campaign by French intellectuals, among them Simone de Beauvoir and Jean Paul Sartre, to convince the French government to grant him a pardon. Genet recently visited the Bay Area — illegally, because convicts are barred from these shores — on behalf of the Black Panther Party.

Q: What is the purpose of your being in this country at this time?

GENET: To make people understand. To make them understand that black people, and particularly the men and women of the Black Panthey Party, are highly, highly evolved politically. The Panthers are not some fucked up, incomprehensible movement, but they're something very, very coherent.

And I want people to understand this, that when I see America I see an extremely solid America, with its big buildings and all that with its presidents, its vice-presidents, its Banks of America. Bon! But I also know that the British Empire in 1940, even in 1945 considered itself pretty hot stuff; the Queen was called the Empress of India and owned Canada, Egypt, India, Australia. But today England has been reduced to a tiny island. And it's more than likely, after all, that this huge American fortress, seemingly so strong, will crumble too. America is tentacular, it is everywhere; myself, a Frenchman, I am colonized by America, too. France has been bought by America, Europe has been bought; Europe is an American colony. But I can't help thinking that this great extravagant power is on the very point of coming apart.

Q: You entered the U.S. illegally, without a visa, in danger of being arrested at any moment. Do you see something symbolic in your situation, since it sort of corresponds with the situation of the Panthers, of 'hunted revolutionaries' in this country?

GENET: This isn't a situation I wanted myself, that's sure. It was imposed on me by the American consul in Paris who refused my visa. So now I found myself in the situation of a "criminal." Which is interesting because America considers the Panthers criminal too; now the Panthers are being defended by a criminal. In fact in this society here, it's clear that anyone who sides with the Black Panther Party is going to be considered a criminal no matter what he does.

Q: Would you give us your personal impressions of the Panthers?

GENET: Yeah. Well, there's a myth, a mythology about the Panthers; it's being spread in Europe, in France, and probably here in America too. And this myth just doesn't correspond to reality.

You can describe it in a few words. It's the kind of terror that white people feel when they talk about the Black Panthers. But when you live with them day and night as I have recently, you realize that they are above all revolutionaries. Militants who are perfectly organized and particularly intelligent, whose politics are coherent. They are simply not what their mythical image pictures them to be. You know, gangsters. I have nothing against gangsters myself, but the Panthers are not gangsters in the sense that the middle class understands it. They are really political militants, in a particularly dangerous and particularly original situation.

They are a colony inside their mother country. They're a people spread out inside that mother country, and so they have a completely new kind of revolutionary problem to solve. That's to say the problem of people who are obliged to struggle against their adversaries without having recourse to a territory where they could find refuge. So, they've been obliged to invent a form of struggle which is totally new.

Q: Can you give us an example of the originality of the Panthers' politics?

GENET: I was with them in New Haven, where they are trying to electrocute Bobby Seale. There were beds for four or five people in a room I saw, and next to the window there were rifles. You understand? They're obliged to live under the protection of arms; not against the people; of course, against the police. On a wall in a house they live in someone had scrawled "Fuck you!" in chalk; the walls were painted black. You see, they have a kind of disdain for something like a house, something so transitory. But at the same time they are wary of men, of the police. So they're forced to defend themselves with rifles. That's something new for black people. I saw them, these rifles, you know? And the doors and windows are barricaded, really barred, with fancy locks and iron bars. And then, in the same room, there were women and little kids. That's the reality of the situation they're living in. That's what everyone has to know about.

Q: You've spent a good part of your life in prison; that's been the case for a lot of Panthers, too, who have lived as criminals outside the system because they've forced out. Do you think that experience has given you a special understanding of what freedom means?

GENET: There is that, probably, but there is something else I'd like to underscore. It's an observation I've made, maybe it's wrong but I'll say it anyway. I knew the Panthers for the first time in Chicago in 1968 at the Democratic convention, and my first experiences with them really struck me. They are a poetic people. Black people in America seem to have a natural poetic sense, and the discoveries they've made about how to struggle politically lean curiously on a poetic sentiment about the world. Maybe I'm wrong, but I think those things are linked, politics and poetry. I think political reflection is integral to poetic comprehension and vice versa.

It's something about the world black people live in; their political perspicacity comes out of looking at their world politically. That doesn't surprise me too much. I wonder if President Mao Tse-Tung would successfully have completed his Long March, the revolution and then the cultural revolution if he hadn't been a great poet. I wonder if it isn't because black people are a Poet that they have been able to work so well toward finding a road to liberation in the same way that President Mao found that road. As much in politics as in poetic reflection.

Q: Perhaps you can give us a little history. The last time you were in America was the time of the Democratic convention in Chicago. Since then, the Conspiracy trial has happened, and a wave of important, militant violent demonstrations exploded all across the country . . .

GENET: Just a minute, I want to say a thing or two here, about the trial, the Chicago 7, the demonstrations. It's true that a lot of people, white people, demonstrated against the trial. But it's also true that they did not demonstrate for Bobby Seale when he was treated so outrageously; I know just about exactly what was going on in people's heads you know . . . they would demonstrate for other white people but not for Bobby Seale.

Q: Well, Chicago was a kind of turning point. Black people have been subjected to massive violence against their communities for centuries now, so their political responses are of course very different. But starting with Chicago, do you see the beginnings of massive, brutal violence directed against not only blacks but whites too . . .? (Genet waves his arms in protest).

GENET: No! No! No! When I was in Chicago I crossed the border clandestinely, and then I found myself confronted by whole armies, cops, enormous numbers of cops; at the time people said there were thirty-five or forty-thousand cops. But I was very sure of myself, very much at ease, because I knew that the cops would never, never shoot. Because this was one of those white, young, hippy, student protests; in sum, white. And I knew that in such a situation they would never open fire. I was protected by the color of my skin, by my white hair. I could do whatever I liked and be sure that the cops would never fire. If it had been thousands of black people there, as big a mass as we were, and if a similar situation had happened, I'm sure that the cops would have fired.

Q: Since then, however, they have shot at white people. Scores of people were wounded at People's Park, James Rector was killed. Just a few weeks ago, the cops opened fire on a car during a demonstration at San Francisco State College. Would you agree that Chicago was the start of a new level of intensity, of violence by the state against white dissidents?

GENET: But it simply is not the intensity of violence that there was in Watts, in Detroit.

Q: Well, sure, the level of intensity is different.

GENET: Different! The difference is enormous. It's dizzying!

Q: Given the difference, though, between the black movement and the white movement in the U.S., what road do you see for white people in America?

GENET: Recently, I was in Boston speaking at MIT. In the hall there were a thousand, maybe fifteen hundred people, students, black and white, and teachers. All the time we were speaking, Doug Miranda of the Boston Panthers and I, I had the impression that everyone understood everything we were saying, even all the whites who were there. But once they had all left the hall, what was going on in their minds? I haven't the vaguest idea.

I don't know what they were going to do. It's not simply enough to ask "What should we do?" The thing to do is to do something. Maybe the first thing is to understand this: it is an idea that white people find very, very difficult to accept . . . that black people are more highly developed politically than they are. I'm not speaking about all black people, naturally. Some black people are in the police. I'm talking about the realization that it is black people, especially the Panthers, who are leading the fight against that president of yours called Nixon, that vice-president called Agnew. The Black Panthers are ranged together against those powerful men, but the Panthers are infinitely more powerful, infinitely more politically intelligent. And it's very difficult for white people to begin to accept this idea.

Edited By M.K.

Letter to the Editor

From Jon Lovett

The role of police in society is to serve as guardians of the economic interest, both real and properties, of the small segment of American society knows as Capitalists. And too, the police must enforce the laws, set down by the capitalists, that determine when the noncapitalists, the majority of Americans who are propertiless, are infringing on the sacred grounds of the capitalists class.

In recent years, with the nations college students taking the lead in the struggle to oust the vulturistic capitalists and make America a true democracy, armies of cops have been employed by the capitalists against the revolutionary college students. Ironically, many of the cops who callously brutalize dissenting college students learn how to oppress students by taking a two year Police Science course on the same college campuses where they, at the command of their capitalist masters, suppress those students who are making revolutionary waves.

San Francisco City College is one of the many colleges that have a cop training curriculum program. One might well ask why the students at City College have not lodged a demonstrative protest against the training of cops on the same campus where they are already faced with the monumental task of ridding City College of a curriculum that is geared to indoctrinate rather than educate.

Surely the City College students can see the relationship between the cops who menacingly stalk the San Francisco streets, vis-a-vis the nations-worlds streets, ever on the alert for those persons who would, for the good of mankind, bring down the capitalist class, and the student cops who lurk the pathways of City College safeguarding that indoctrination factory for the capitalists.

Upon completion of the two year Police Science course at City College, the student cops will become full pledged authoritarians, adding their weight, in terms of suppressive force, to the already ponderous police force in maintaining law and order for their masters and your enemy, the capitalist class.

Guardsman

PAMPHLET

City College of San Francisco Library
320823

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 7 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., APRIL 22, 1970

New Busses Sought By Council — Pat Cuts G-Man

By Paul Thiele

Mike Devine, chairman of the Student Council Finance Committee, announced plans for the purchase of two buses at the council's April 13 meeting.

The twelve-passenger buses are expected to transport City College athletic teams to road games. The buses will be accompanied by a station wagon which the school already owns.

An advantage of the small buses over large coaches is that anyone with a regular driver's license is allowed to operate them, thereby elimination the need for a bus driver.

It is not definite, however, whether the buses will be bought outright or leased. The rationable for leasing the buses is that the college will not have to pay for repairs. Devine said he will look into the situation and make a report shortly.

AS President Renato Larin again expressed his desire for a top name musical group to play at the Ram statue across from Smith Hall on the afternoon of May 5. He added that the group would have to be appearing in town on the same day.

'SLANDEROUS ATTACK'

The finale of the meeting came when Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels, read an explosive letter from KALW-FM Program Director, Patrick Crippen, which lambasted the Guardsman for totally irresponsible journalism.

"This is a slanderous, vitriolic attack," said councilman Harvey Rappaport. "We should send this letter back and refuse to accept it."

The April 15 council meeting was called off in observance of the Moratorium.

Ecology And Man

There is only one day-class section of a popular and relevant course, Ecology and Man (Biology 20).

Few students can enroll in this important class, because it is taught in a small room, S-303. Also, the class reached its enrollment capacity during pre-registration!

The instructor is Edmund Bedecarax. Students find his lectures interesting, reading assignments and grading fair.

Ecology and Man deals with environmental matters often in the news — water and air pollution, The California Water Project, and pesticide problems.

Students are circulating petitions to show support for more class sections.

Tom Hayden, left, told some 7,500 anti-war demonstrators gathered in the Civic Center that "the only response to Nixon's total war is total revolution." (Photos by Marc Kovacs)

'The Only Answer Is Total Revolution'—Hayden

By Tom Cleaver

Tom Hayden summed up the feelings of the people at Civic Center plaza when he made his one-sentence speech: "The only response to Nixon's total war is total revolution." This mobilization — The Spring Offensive — was far more radical than that of last November; anyone who booed David Hilliard would have had problems.

Dan Siegal, former-liberal and ex-president of the UC Berkeley student body, said: ". . . we sit here listening to folk music, and Bobby Seale goes up on murder charges next week, and David Hilliard was just sent to jail for six months yesterday for reading a note in the trial."

Siegal went on to say, "The fact that we're experiencing repression is because we're becoming effective. We have moved beyond thinking of the war in Vietnam as a tragic mistake." Siegal also said that it has been shown that public opinion doesn't count for much, because the leaders are committed to proving that any revolution will be put down, no matter what the cost.

"This must be the last peaceful rally until the war is over . . . I'm not speaking of rock-throwing or bomb-throwing, but moving the people to a position of resistance."

The crowd was mostly young, white, and hip-looking. It seemed to be about as large a crowd as the April 1968 march, which was about 30,000; at least, it covered the same amount of area, with about the same density of people. Many high school students were in evidence, and most of the non-white kids were from the high schools. A few Panthers were in the area, and a contingent from the United Farm Workers was there.

It seemed a different demonstration from those of years gone by . . . a whole lot different from 150 people on the statehouse steps in Denver four years ago. Different from the spring mobilizations of 1967 and 1968. Even different from the November march. People didn't show much enthusiasm for the political sentiments, save to yell "right on!" and wave their fists at appropriate moments. A friend said, "people have heard too much about the war, it's unreal anymore . . . it's gone on too long."

It seemed for many people there that the biggest bummer of the day was the failure of Jefferson Airplane and Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young to appear as advertised. Jean Genet, who had been with David Hilliard in the courtroom in New Haven when he was jailed, wired that he would be unable to attend because of that fact. At that point, the 4 p.m. deadline for parking in a towaway zone was announced, and the crowd began to drift away, slowly.

The attitude of the people there could be summed up in the statement on a handbill-poster, showing Ronald Reagan as a cowboy . . . splattered with blood: "If it takes a blood bath — Let's get it over with."

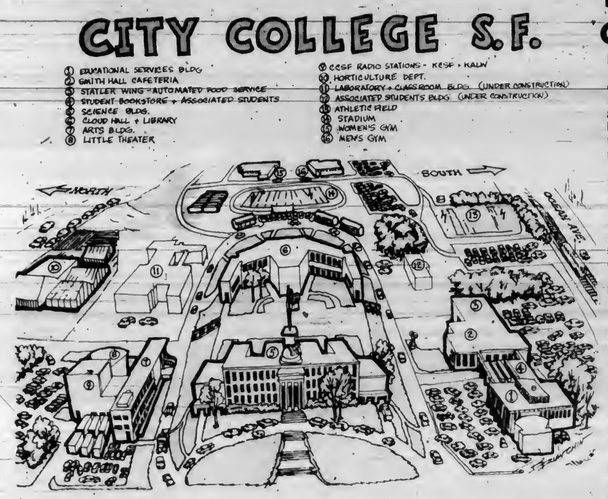
As I walked through the crowd, I was reminded of a quote from Phil Ochs at a recent concert: "The only hope for America is a revolution. And the only hope for a revolution is to have Elvis Presley become Che Guevara. Until we understand and respect that sensibility behind Elvis Presley and his audience, we can't begin to win over and mobilize the mass support they represent." I also couldn't help thinking that not too many of the people there would have dug being told that. Not too many of Elvis Presley's fans were in evidence.

The flag of the National Liberation Front was held high while Father Groppi, right, from Milwaukee, talked about fascism in America.

Experimental College Book Exchange To Save Cash

Just as taxes plague most adults, bookstore prices haunt students.

To save students money in getting text books, a new book exchange program has been formed. Instead of buying new books, students will be able to trade books of similar value through the book exchange.



Sherm Levine will co-ordinate this Experimental College program.

To gain the benefits of this free service, students should simply fill out the book forms (obtainable in B-5, the Experimental College). The completed forms include the book title, author, cost, class used for, and, of course, the owner's name and phone number. Levine will then contact the students, and the rest is up to them.

The students involved might wish to trade books permanently, or temporarily. Cash may be used to make up the difference in book values.

"Under the present system," says Levine, "students receive back only 40 per cent of the book's cost when they resell to the bookstores." The book exchange system are obvious. Instead of selling a book back to the bookstore, the trade system will avoid the middleman - bookstore mark-up.

The success of the Book Exchange depends on the number of participants and books available. Hopefully, it will supplement the bookstores, saving student's money each semester.

Cartoonist Brian Chin produced this map of the campus after hearing that a good many students were having trouble locating the College buildings. The Guardsman reproduces Chin's illustration without comment.

Experimental Course

Plastic Rooms

By David Huginin

An experimental course, combining English G5A (formerly Communication G5A) and Political Science 56, will be taught by three "teaching teams" beginning next semester.

Under this new plan students will be enrolled in both courses simultaneously for a total of six units. The teachers of the course include English instructors Steve Levinson, Don Cunningham and Sue Brennan. The corresponding political science instructors are Marge Quackenbush, Dick Bloomer and Pat Butler.

According to Levinson, the purpose of this combination is to "break down the barriers between the two courses."

One method would be to study language as it's used in war and politics. Another would be to study how contemporary problems are reflected in the arts.

Mr. Levinson, whose "team member" will be Mrs. Quackenbush, said that the course would include three 2 hour sessions each week.

Mrs. Quackenbush mentioned that, because of the course's experimental nature, students will be assigned to it rather than having the option of electing it.

On Tuesday, April 14, the San Francisco Board of Education approved a measure to buy or rent sixty-four portable classrooms, seventeen of which are to go to City College.

The classrooms are to be of a portable type. A prefabricated version, originally wanted by the Board, was turned down by the Art Commission.

Vic Vaio, campus construction official, said that at the present time the price of the classrooms could not be determined because the order has to go out for bid through the City Purchasing Office.

Vaio did say, however, that 15 of the classrooms will be placed on the corner of Phelan and Judson (across from Riordan). The other two will be in back of the Educational Services Building.

Vaio also said that it will be some time before the College can expect delivery of the classrooms, as the manufacturer is still not yet known.

The rest of the classrooms authorized by the Board will be placed in use at lower schools where lack of space is a major problem. At City College, they will be used to supplement the bungalows.

The Board of Education has yet to determine whether they will lease or purchase the buildings.

CONTACT LENS

Should Astronauts Be Trained Scientists?

Bob Gibbons, Crim. Major

I feel that astronauts should be qualified scientists because of their desire to conquer outer space. Whereas the professional military man does not have a sincere desire to conquer. But the scientist usually does not have any concern for public worship as the military man does.

John Parsons, Business Major

I think that they should be scientists because they have better qualified minds and would look for new discoveries to help mankind. A military man may not be able to deal with the materials as well as a scientist would. A scientist doesn't have to go through any military training.

Fay Woo, Foreign Affairs Major

I think that they should be trained in both things. To be trained only in one field and neglect the other would be a disadvantage to the full extent of the success of the mission. Military training is important in just the fact to protect us against other nations.

By Bruno Forner

Hillsman Deals With Card Players

By Bruno Forner

Last Wednesday, Dean Hillsman used the power of suggestion to "throw out" card players from Smith Hall to make room for students eating lunch.

The problem began on Wednesday morning when Statler Wing was used for the Blood Drive. The card players that frequent the place began playing in Smith Hall — in full view of a sign saying: "No Cards or Chess In This Area" (the central dining area). No action was taken until noon. As one member of the group said, "We knew about the regulation, but what could we do? We couldn't play cards in Statler."

So it was until noon, when Hillsman went around asking students to leave. As one student said: "He threw us out!" The dean said that he did it to make room for students who had to eat lunch.

Hillsman cleared about three or four tables of students. He said that they were very cooperative about it when told they were doing it "worthy cause."

Another reason given for the action was that the cafeteria was pressed for space due to the situation in Statler. The space problem became so bad that one group began playing pedro on the lawn next to Smith Hall (the one in front of Statler Wing).

One student commented that Hillsman wasn't nasty about it. Still another student, in a moment of the humoresque, laughingly said "We'll picket!"

It can be also noted that no one playing chess was asked to leave — but then, neither was there anyone seen playing cards in Smith Hall.

Music: Praise for the Latest 'Chicago' Album

By Eric Hellum

There is no person living in the civilized world today who would fail to admit that rock music is the driving force of the "revolting" generation.

In the back of a cluttered music shop, during 1957, a group of part-time musicians were busy recording a conglomeration of odd rhythms and even more confusing lyrics. Soon, much to the dismay of angry parents, this song became the key which released the restless youth from their parental wardens, and threw them into a massive whirlpool now known as the "swing era."

The tune was of course "Rock Around the Clock" so uniquely performed by Bill Haley and the Comets.

At the time, critics believed Rock to be merely a passing tide of insanity, much as goldfish swallowing to the sound of the Jitterbug was in their era. But this belief has become the epitaph of now bygone reviewers, for today, the rock music business has grown into the world's fourth largest industry.

Last year in the United States alone, Americans purchased over $90 million worth of records. The amount of currency transacted in concert negotiations, interviews and advertising is phenomenal.

Today, when the Rock music industry is at its zenith, it is quite easy to recognize the various styles and sounds which are constantly being renovated. It is now quite apparent that music has taken a great step backwards; even past the Comets' era.

At the root of rock music is the fantastic rhythm of jazz.

One need only glance across the entertainment pages of any newspaper to see such various performers as Duke Ellington, Miles Davis and Buddy Rich being offered to the public in concert. These old masters have kept the spirit of jazz continually pumping through the world's musical veins.

For eleven months, eight young men toiled in a Los Angeles residence for eight hours a day attempting desperately to create a modern adaptation of Jazz. Obviously their efforts paid off for today Chicago is one of America's most progressive bands. During their worldwide tours they were acclaimed as the revivers of a dying art. I stoop to admit that upon seeing them at the Fillmore West over a year ago I was less than entertained, but after listening to their latest album, "Chicago," my scorn has turned to praise.

The record is a two-album set which unleashes almost ninety minutes of pulsating music. Especially noteworthy are the unbelievable arrangements and movements the discs contain. Their concept of a song, broken up into several segments — what they classify as movements — are unique and highly complex. One example of this is a song entitled "Make Me Smile" which can be heard quite frequently on AM stations. Unfortunately, the song which runs twenty minutes on the album, has been butchered by the radio in order to make it fit in between the commercials.

The album not only affords the listener with an unaccountable insight into the complexities of music, but it also possesses an excellent technical sound. I am convinced that Chicago has ignited the torch which will guide Rock music down new and exciting paths.

Apollo 13:
Space Opera With A Bang!

By Tom Cleaver

Every kid's science fiction space operas we all went to see on Saturday afternoons came to life with a bang on Monday evening.

The first announcement came during "It Takes a Thief;" Walter Cronkite and Company were at a total loss. Complacency had struck at the heart of the media, and no one was ready to report a story like this. From being another mechanical up-they-go—there-they-are — here-they-come mission, Apollo 13 had jolted the world, and everyone's worst dreams came true.

A meteor, an explosion, faulty construction, perhaps faulty forming of the original metal when it was cast, no one can be sure what happened in Bay Four of the Service Module. Suddenly, three men were dependent on a life-support system designed for two. One hundred thousand miles from home, and there was no way that anyone on Earth could reach them to give aid. At that moment, they were more alone than any three men in trouble have ever been, anywhere.

There had been other emergencies in space, but none so complete, none so dangerous. Gemini 6 had ran round the Earth like a bucking bronco four years ago, when the attitude control system went haywire. Neil Armstrong — who later became the first man on the moon — and James Cernan brought things under control long enough to stabilize and get down. They weren't concerned where, and the ship landed 50 miles off of Okinawa, to be picked up by a passing destroyer.

Vladimir Komarov, in Soyuz 1, fouled his parachute lines coming back from another emergency, and augured in fifty feet deep when he landed. There wasn't enough left to identify afterwards.

Both these, plus the emergency in 1961 when John Glenn's heat shield wasn't on tight, happened only 100 miles up. Coming home was easy; all they had to do was get into re-entry position and come down. Apollo 13 had passed the point of no return. They were committed to going around the moon, no matter what; it was The Only Way. Mission Control could tell them what was happening, and give advice, but if they were coming home, it was up to them to get there.

The wonder of the Apollo 13 accident is not that it happened, but that it hasn't happened sooner, or more often. Spaceflight is at the technologies' stage of its development that air travel was at when Bleriot crossed the English Channel in 1909. Compared to what will be in a mere ten years, Apollo is as primitive as a caveman's reed raft. There will be other emergencies, perhaps not so successful as this one. There will be martyred heroes, endlessly orbiting the sun in never-decaying coffins. Apollo may have been set back awhile until they find out if it was human error at some point of construction or flight, or whether it was a fated meeting of a spaceship and a piece of stellar garbage, but the thing, whatever it is, that has driven Man out of the trees, out of the caves, and up the mountainside to see what's there will continue.

UPI Telephoto

Sketch of how damage may have looked in space

Athlete Addresses City Fans

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Rafer Johnson spoke Thursday, April 16, on how the life of the athlete affects this everyday life. Mr. Johnson was the first black athlete to make the 1960 Decathlon, and he was also made Outstanding Athlete and Man of the Year in 1960. He has devoted quite a number of years to helping people and working in such organizations as the Kennedy Foundation. Currently, Mr. Johnson is making a film at Fort Davis on an all-black regiment.

"The basis of my talk today is really athletic," said Mr. Johnson. "I think that some of the things learned in athletic training are both important on the field and off the field of competition." He felt that the athlete, as a result of his training and contribution to a team, still wants to make a contribution, if not to a team, to something worthwhile.

"Most individuals would like to make a complete contribution to his or her school, community, and nation. It seems to me that we worry too much about everybody and the world and don't think what contribution we can make as individuals. What we need to do is start as individuals to try to make a difference with one person and if they could be multiplied many of our greivances and afflictions that exist in society would disappear." Mr. Johnson also said that preparation for any situation is the way that problems can be alleviated. A team member, for instance, trains for hours before going on the field, and thus is prepared for any obstacle that may arise. If there is any plan made for change in society, it should be well planned so that if any obstructions arise, they can be gotten around without much trouble.

. . . Rafer Johnson, noted gamesman . . .

In reference to the boycotting of the Olympic games by black athletes, Mr. Johnson said, "The reasons for boycotting weren't very clear in the beginning. I think that once the situation was made clear more people fell in line with what they were actually trying to do in that boycott. I think, personally, I wouldn't have boycotted the games completely. I think it would have been best if they had tried to win a medal and then brought the issue up to light."

In a further comparison between athletes and their everyday lives, Johnson said, "The discipline of athletes helps prepare them for the outside world and gives them a sense of wanting to contribute something to society. I believe that working with an individual can bridge the gap between black and white, rich and poor. Medals are important, but the things that are more important, more lasting, are the individuals, the people I have met about the world."

In conclusion, Mr. Johnson said, "It is important that I, as an individual, make my contribution; but it is also important that I, as an individual, be allowed to make my contribution."

Film

The movie series will continue this Thursday evening, April 23. "Lavender Hill Mob" is this week's offering. It will be shown in the College Theater at eight o'clock.

Panel

"Is San Francisco Providing a Quality Education for Black Students?" will be the topic of the evening at an open meeting Monday, April 27 of the NAACP, 625 Holloway, S.F., at 8 p.m.

Bookstore Committee: A Probe of Its Functions

By Shirley Fogarino

College students tend to question the sometimes high-cost of textbooks. They often wonder whether or not they are getting a "fair deal" when buying or selling books to their dealers.

The City College Bookstore Committee was formed during the spring of 1969 to work in conjuntion with the campus' bookstore to see to it that students get the fairest possible deal when buying or selling their books.

The committee, headed by Dr. Harry R. Buttimer, consists of three college administrators, three faculty members and three students, each having an equal say in committee decisions. Their main purpose is to make recommendations to City College President Louis Conlan regarding possible changes in bookstore policy. The recommended changes may deal with the cost of texts, employment of bookstore workers and the general running of the bookstore.

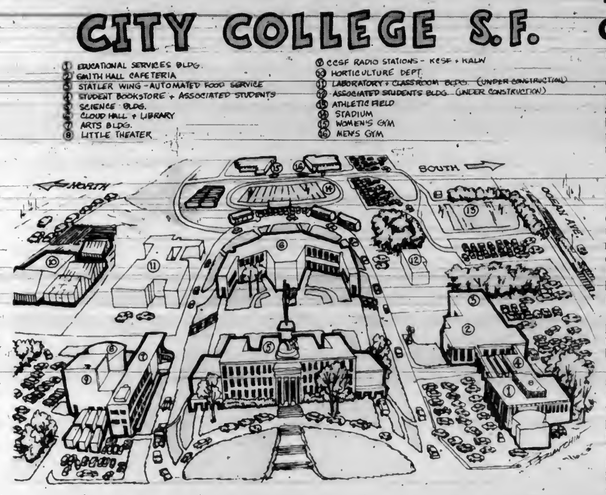
Working with the college bookstore and its manager, Mr. Richard Main, the committee so far has been able to affect policies concerning employment of workers and the sale of textbooks.

In 1968, for example, the bookstore had 36 employees. Of these, only 11 were City College students who were hired on a part-time basis. Today, of the store's 40 employees, 22 are City College students. Salaries of the employees have also been raised from $1.65 to $2.25 per hour.

As far as textbooks are concerned, committee member and Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels stated, "The biggest single item of complaint (regarding the bookstore) are the textbooks. When the price of a textbook is high, the blame goes to the bookstore, when truly the blame should be put on inflation. All new textbooks are sold at a fair price."

When a student buys a book for ten dollars, he is buying it at the price the publisher charges the school for it. If the student sells the book back to the store at the end of the semester, it's bought for half of its original price, and is resold for three-fourths of the original price. Therefore, a $10 book may be bought back by the store for $5 and resold as "used" for $7.50.

Sometimes, however, a new book may be scheduled to be dropped or renewed. It is sold to the student for its set price, but when the student goes to resell the book, it is bought for only one-fourth of its original value (25 cents on the dollar) and is sold to a book warehouse who buys it for exactly the above price.



For example, the Bookstore Managers Association of Northern California has a system of notifying its members if certain colleges will buy books that have been dropped from one college but may be of value to them. If Richard Main, City College's bookstore manager knows of such situations, the store is notified and the book is bought back for half instead of a fourth of its original value. Also, if a book that was dropped at City College is being bought by the California bookstore for half of its original value, college employees will send the student to the Cal bookstore to sell that book.

"We want to be as fair as possible with the student," said Art Samuels, "books are expensive!"

Presently, the Bookstore Committee is attempting to change the resale policy of books that have been severely damaged as opposed to books that are in good condition. Committee members feel that students should not have to pay the same price for damaged books as they do for books that are not damaged.

All profits of the City College bookstore go to the Associated Students and they constitute much of the AS budget. The new Student Union currently under construction, was partially financed out of this budget.

CITY COLLEGE S.F.

Cartoonist Brian Chin produced this map of the campus after hearing that a good many students were having trouble locating the College buildings. The Guardsman reproduces Chin's illustration without comment.

CONTACT LENS

Should Astronauts Be Trained Scientists?

Bob Gibbons, Crim. Major

I feel that astronauts should be qualified scientists because of their desire to conquer outer space. Whereas the professional military man does not have a sincere desire to conquer. But the scientist usually does not have any concern for public worship as the military man does.

John Parsons, Business Major

I think that they should be scientists because they have better qualified minds and would look for new discoveries to help mankind. A military man may not be able to deal with the materials as well as a scientist would. A scientist doesn't have to go through any military training.

Fay Woo, Foreign Affairs Major

I think that they should be trained in both things. To be trained only in one field and neglect the other would be a disadvantage to the full extent of the success of the mission. Military training is important in just the fact to protect us against other nations.

By Bruno Forner

Hillsman Deals With Card Players

By Bruno Forner

Last Wednesday, Dean Hillsman used the power of suggestion to "throw out" card players from Smith Hall to make room for students eating lunch.

The problem began on Wednesday morning when Statler Wing was used for the Blood Drive. The card players that frequent the place began playing in Smith Hall — in full view of a sign saying: "No Cards or Chess In This Area" (the central dining area). No action was taken until noon. As one member of the group said, "We knew about the regulation, but what could we do? We couldn't play cards in Statler."

So it was until noon, when Hillsman went around asking students to leave. As one student said: "He threw us out!" The dean said that he did it to make room for students who had to eat lunch.

Hillsman cleared about three or four tables of students. He said that they were very cooperative about it when told they were doing it for a worthy cause.

Another reason given for the action was that the cafeteria was pressed for space due to the situation in Statler. The space problem became so bad that one group began playing pedro on the lawn next to Smith Hall (the one in front of Statler Wing).

One student commented that Hillsman wasn't nasty about it. Still another student, in a moment of the humoresque, laughingly said "We'll picket!"

It can be also noted that no one playing chess was asked to leave — but then, neither was there anyone seen playing cards in South Hall.

Experimental Course

By David Huginin

An experimental course, combining English G5A (formerly Communication G5A) and Political Science 56, will be taught by three "teaching teams" beginning next semester.

Under this new plan students will be enrolled in both courses simultaneously for a total of six units. The teachers of the course include English instructors Steve Levinson, Don Cunningham and Sue Brennan. The corresponding political science instructors are Marge Quackenbush, Dick Bloomer and Pat Butler.

According to Levinson, the purpose of this combination is to "break down the barriers between the two courses."

One method would be to study language as it's used in war and politics. Another would be to study how contemporary problems are reflected in the arts.

Mr. Levinson, whose "team member" will be Mrs. Quackenbush, said that the course would include three 2 hour sessions each week.

Mrs. Quackenbush mentioned that, because of the course's experimental nature, students will be assigned to it rather than having the option of electing it.

Plastic Rooms

On Tuesday, April 14, the San Francisco Board of Education approved a measure to buy or rent sixty-four portable classrooms, seventeen of which are to go to City College.

The classrooms are to be of a portable type. A prefabricated version, originally wanted by the Board, was turned down by the Art Commission.

Vic Vaio, campus construction official, said that at the present time the price of the classrooms could not be determined because the order has to go out for bid through the City Purchasing Office.

Vaio did say, however, that 15 of the classrooms will be placed on the corner of Phelan and Judson (across from Riordan). The other two will be in back of the Educational Services Building.

Vaio also said that it will be some time before the College can expect delivery of the classrooms, as the manufacturer is still not yet known.

The rest of the classrooms authorized by the Board will be placed in use at lower schools where lack of space is a major problem. At City College, they will be used to supplement the bungalows.

The Board of Education has yet to determine whether they will lease or purchase the buildings.

Music: Praise for the Latest 'Chicago' Album

By Eric Brenda

There is no person living in the civilized world today who would fail to admit that rock music is the driving force of the "revolting" generation.

In the back of a cluttered music shop, during 1957, a group of part-time musicians were busy recording a conglomeration of odd rhythms and even more confusing lyrics. Soon, much to the dismay of angry parents, this song became the key which released the restless youth from their parental wardens, and threw them into a massive whirlpool now known as the "swing era."

The tune was of course "Rock Around the Clock" so uniquely performed by Bill Haley and the Comets.

At the time, critics believed Rock to be merely a passing tide of insanity, much as goldfish swallowing to the sound of the Jitterbug was in their era. But this belief has become the epitaph of now bygone reviewers, for today, the rock music business has grown into the world's fourth largest industry.

Last year in the United States alone, Americans purchased over $90 million worth of records. The amount of currency transacted in concert negotiations, interviews and advertising is phenomenal.

Today, when the Rock music industry is at its zenith, it is quite easy to recognize the various styles and sounds which are constantly being renovated. It is now quite apparent that music has taken a great step backwards; even past the Comets' era.

At the root of rock music is the fantastic rhythm of jazz.

One need only glance across the entertainment pages of any newspaper to see such various performers as Duke Ellington, Miles Davis and Buddy Rich being offered to the public in concert. These old masters have kept the spirit of jazz continually pumping through the world's musical veins.

For eleven months, eight young men toiled in a Los Angeles residence for eight hours a day attempting desperately to create a modern adaptation of Jazz. Obviously their efforts paid off for today Chicago is one of America's most progressive bands. During their worldwide tours they were acclaimed as the revivers of a dying art. I stoop to admit that upon seeing them at the Fillmore West over a year ago I was less than entertained, but after listening to their latest album, "Chicago," my scorn has turned to praise.

The record is a two-album set which unleashes almost ninety minutes of pulsating music. Especially noteworthy are the unbelievable arrangements and movements the discs contain. Their concept of a song, broken up into several segments — what they classify as movements — are unique and highly complex. One example of this is a song entitled "Make Me Smile" which can be heard quite frequently on AM stations. Unfortunately, the song which runs twenty minutes on the album, has been butchered by the radio in order to make it fit in between the commercials.

The album not only affords the listener with an unaccountable insight into the complexities of music, but it also possesses an excellent technical sound. I am convinced that Chicago has ignited the torch which will guide Rock music down new and exciting paths.

DAMAGED DOCUMENT

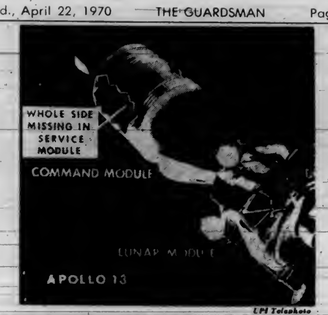
Apollo 13:

Space Opera With A Bang!

By Tom Cleaver

Every kid's science fiction space operas we all went to see on Saturday afternoons came to life with a bang on Monday evening.

The first announcement came during "It Takes a Thief," Walter Cronkite and Company were at a total loss. Complacency had struck at the heart of the media, and no one was ready to report a story like this. From being another mechanical up-they-go—there-they-are — here-they-come mission, Apollo 13 had jolted the world, and everyone's worst dreams came true.



A meteor, an explosion, faulty construction, perhaps faulty forming of the original metal when it was cast, no one can be sure what happened in Bay Four of the Service Module. Suddenly, three men were dependent on a life-support system designed for two. One hundred thousand miles from home, and there was no way that anyone on Earth could reach them to give aid. At that moment, they were more alone than any three men in trouble have ever been, anywhere.

There had been other emergencies in space, but none so complete, none so dangerous. Gemini 6 had ran round the Earth like a bucking bronco four years ago, when the attitude control system went haywire. Neil Armstrong — who later became the first man on the moon — and James Cernan brought things under control long enough to stabilize and get down. They weren't concerned where, and the ship landed 50 miles off of Okinawa, to be picked up by a passing destroyer.

Vladimir Komarov, in Soyuz 1, fouled his parachute lines coming back from another emergency, and augured in fifty feet deep when he landed. There wasn't enough left to identify afterwards.

Both these, plus the emergency in 1961 when John Glenn's heat shield wasn't on tight, happened only 100 miles up. Coming home was easy; all they had to do was get into re-entry position and come down. Apollo 13 had passed the point of no return. They were committed to going around the moon, no matter what; it was The Only Way. Mission Control could tell them what was happening, and give advice, but if they were coming home, it was up to them to get there.

The wonder of the Apollo 13 accident is not that it happened, but that it hasn't happened sooner, or more often. Spaceflight is at the technology stage of its development that air travel was at when Blériot crossed the English Channel in 1909. Compared to what will be in a mere ten years, Apollo is as primitive as a caveman's reed raft. There will be other emergencies, perhaps not so successful as this one. There will be martyred heroes, endlessly orbiting the sun in never-decaying coffins. Apollo may have been set back awhile until they find out if it was human error at some point of construction or flight, or whether it was a fated meeting of a spaceship and a piece of stellar garbage, but the thing, whatever it is, that has driven Man out of the trees, out of the caves, and up the mountainside to see what's there will continue.

UPI Telephoto

Sketch of how damage may have looked in space

Athlete Addresses City Fans

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Rafer Johnson spoke Thursday, April 16, on how the life of the athlete affects his everyday life. Mr. Johnson was the first black athlete to make the 1960 Decathlon, and he was also made Outstanding Athlete and Man of the Year in 1960. He has devoted quite a number of years to helping people and working in such organizations as the Kennedy Foundation. Currently, Mr. Johnson is making a film at Fort Davis on an all-black regiment.

... Rafer Johnson, noted gamesman ...

"The basis of my talk today is really athletic," said Mr. Johnson. "I think that some of the things learned in athletic training are both important on the field and off the field of competition." He felt that the athlete, as a result of his training and contribution to a team, still wants to make a contribution, if not to a team, to something worthwhile.

"Most individuals would like to make a complete contribution to his or her school, community, and nation. It seems to me that we worry too much about everybody and the world and don't think what contribution we can make as individuals. What we need to do is start as individuals to try to make a difference with one person and if they could be multiplied many of our greivances and afflictions that exist in society would disappear." Mr. Johnson also said that preparation for any situation is the way that problems can be alleviated. A team member, for instance, trains for hours before going on the field, and thus is prepared for any obstacle that may arise. If there is any plan made for change in society, it should be well planned so that if any obstructions arise, they can be gotten around without much trouble.

In reference to the boycotting of the Olympic games by black athletes, Mr. Johnson said, "The reasons for boycotting weren't very clear in the beginning. I think that once the situation was made clear more people fell in line with what they were actually trying to do in that boycott. I think, personally, I wouldn't have boycotted the games completely. I think it would have been best if they had tried to win a medal and then brought the issue up to light."

In a further comparison between athletes and their everyday lives, Johnson said, "The discipline of athletes helps prepare them for the outside world and gives them a sense of wanting to contribute something to society. I believe that working with an individual can bridge the gap between black and white, rich and poor. Medals are important, but the things that are more important, more lasting, are the individuals, the people I have met about the world."

In conclusion, Mr. Johnson said, "It is important that I, as an individual, make my contribution; but it is also important that I, as an individual, be allowed to make my contribution."

Film

The movie series will continue this Thursday evening, April 23. "Lavender Hill Mob" is this week's offering. It will be shown in the College Theater at eight o'clock.

Panel

"Is San Francisco Providing a Quality Education for Black Students?" will be the topic of the evening at an open meeting Monday, April 27 of the NAACP, 625 Holloway, S.F., at 8 p.m.

Bookstore Committee: A Probe of Its Functions

By Shirley Fogarino

College students tend to question the sometimes high-cost of textbooks. They often wonder whether or not they are getting a "fair deal" when buying or selling books to their dealers.

The City College Bookstore Committee was formed during the spring of 1969 to work in conjuntion with the campus' bookstore to see to it that students get the fairest possible deal when buying or selling their books.

The committee, headed by Dr. Harry R. Buttimer, consists of three college administrators, three faculty members and three students, each having an equal say in committee decisions. Their main purpose is to make recommendations to City College President Louis Conlan regarding possible changes in bookstore policy. The recommended changes may deal with the cost of texts, employment of bookstore workers and the general running of the bookstore.

Working with the college bookstore and its manager, Mr. Richard Main, the committee so far has been able to affect policies concerning employment of workers and the sale of textbooks.

In 1968, for example, the bookstore had 36 employees. Of these, only 11 were City College students who were hired on a part-time basis. Today, of the store's 40 employees, 22 are City College students. Salaries of the employees have also been raised from $1.65 to $2.25 per hour.

As far as textbooks are concerned, committee member and Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels stated, "The biggest single item of complaint (regarding the bookstore) are the textbooks. When the price of a textbook is high, the blame goes to the bookstore, when truly the blame should be put on inflation. All new textbooks are sold at a fair price."

When a student buys a book for ten dollars, he is buying it at the price the publisher charges the school for it. If the student sells the book back to the store at the end of the semester, it's bought for half of its original price, and is resold for three-fourths of the original price. Therefore, a $10 book may be bought back by the store for $5 and resold as "used" for $7.50.

Sometimes, however, a new book may be scheduled to be dropped or renewed. It is sold to the student for its set price, but when the student goes to resell the book, it is bought for only one-fourth of its original value (25 cents on the dollar) and is sold to a book warehouse who buys it for exactly the above price.

For example, the Bookstore Managers Association of Northern California has a system of notifying its members if certain colleges will buy books that have been dropped from one college but may be of value to them. If Richard Main, City College's bookstore manager knows of such situations, the store is notified and the book is bought back for half instead of a fourth of its original value. Also, if a book that was dropped at City College is being bought by the California bookstore for half of its original value, college employees will send the student to the Cal bookstore to sell that book.

"We want to be as fair as possible with the student," said Art Samuels, "books are expensive!"

Presently, the Bookstore Committee is attempting to change the resale policy of books that have been severely damaged as opposed to books that are in good condition. Committee members feel that students should not have to pay the same price for damaged books as they do for books that are not damaged.

All profits of the City College bookstore go to the Associated Students and they constitute much of the AS budget. The new Student Union currently under construction, was partially financed out of this budget.

Women's Liberation: Part II

Above, a speaker at the International Women's Day celebration last month.
Below, an artist's conception of "the liberated female." (Illustration courtesy of the North Beach Gallery-Cafe)

By Liz Jones (KCSF News)

People are puzzled about the new feminists. We have the vote, it seems that the position of women is improving, what more do we want?

Betty Friedman has said that the fight for equality of the sexes cuts across all racial, economic, and class lines. Here I must say that I disagree somewhat with that; but in general, the aims that I am listing for you are shared by most of the other people involved in the various women's liberation groups.

But I would like to mention first of all that something was edited out of the last Guardsman article that I thought was important; namely, that there were women who spoke at anti-suffragette meetings before the 19th amendment was passed. These women said that they didn't want or need the vote. And they were all from rich families.

Anyway, now here are some of our present objectives.

(1) Control of Our Bodies

(a.) Birth Control for anyone who needs it.

Birth control affects so many people that there should be massive research done, on willing, fully informed people. How safe is the pill, inter-uterine objects, and other devices? What about birth control for men? In Russia, where most of the doctors are women, abortion is legal and the pill is not used, because of the uncertainty of its long range effects. Maternal care is much better there too, with many women undergoing painless childbirth. Here, most male doctors just don't give a damn; this is not a field where a doctor can earn the prestige he needs in order to rake it in. Very little progress has been made in this branch of medicine in comparison to other countries whose standard of living is near ours.

I must give our masterminds some credit though. We have been doing large scale testing of pills in Puerto Rico and India. Non-white people who are up against the wall and who have no other recourse make excellent, cheap guinea pigs. They don't have to be warned and coaxed and recompensed for error; who cares what happens to them anyway? Obviously, a rich American woman who can get an abortion regardless of the law, will be happy to reap the rewards of this research carried out on the wretched of the earth. This is one reason that the battle for equality doesn't cut across all class lines.

(b.) Abortions for any and all who need them.

(c.) The right of poor women to have as many children as anyone else. This issue certainly doesn't cut across class or racial lines. Ecologists are saying "Women should not have more children than they can afford. Overpopulation is dirtying the water and the air." A judge in Alameda sterilized a woman on welfare against her will. Maybe we need clean air and water, but why hasn't Ethel Kennedy been sterilized? What has she done for the world that makes her right to have children any more valid than the poor woman's in Alameda?

But when the over-population issue really starts affecting laws, who do you think will be first to be denied the right to have children?

(2) Re-Evaluation of Sexual Roles for the Benefit of Both Sexes and for Society in General.

A person is an individual human being before he or she is a member of a sex. The characteristics attributed to each of the sexes in this society are not universal. Anyone who differs from the expected norm is made to suffer.

A psychology teacher at this college said that in our psychological tests masculinity-femininity is judged by the way a person relates to other people. If you are concerned about your fellow human beings you will get a high feminine rating on a standard personality test; but if you don't give a damn about stomping on others you will be considered masculine.

A sociology teacher at this college said: "In societies where there is little sexual differentiation there is also little war. Woman's self-image in this society is degrading to her. But man's self-image in this society is dangerous to the world."

"Everyone would be less uptight if women were freer to show anger when they felt it and if men weren't afraid to show any emotion except anger. How sad that a man can't cry when he is really miserable or frustrated, or that he has to be reserved in his demonstrations of love (For both women and other men.)

Also, women should not be held back from taking a more active position in the shaping of society. In revolutionary activities around the world women are dying and going to jail for their principles. It would be shameful to them if they were given special treatment behind enemy lines simply because they are women.

(3.) Relative Freedom From the Drudgery of Housework

Housework is necessary, but boring. Some men don't participate in it, even if their wives work. This is a very unsympathetic attitude. If a man has high self-esteem his ego will not be crushed because he mops the floor when his wife happens to be too tired to do it herself.

(4.) Free 24-Hour Child Care Centers

In the Kibbutzes of Israel, the children leave the mother for part of the day when they are only ten weeks old. They are sent to communal nurseries where they are put under the loving care of people whose Thing is really grooving on kids. According to a sociology teacher here at City, such children are extraordinarily healthy mentally.

Men should help staff these child-care centers that we want to set up in our new society. Small children don't get enough contact with men. And it's good for children to be around other children. They grow up learning how to deal with their peers. Just because a person doesn't want to spend five years with a small child nearly 24 hours a day doesn't mean that they shouldn't be allowed to have children, or that they don't love them. Fathers don't spend much time with small children. This doesn't mean that they don't love them. Why can't it be the same for mothers? Parents and children would enjoy each other more if they just spent a few hours a day together doing what they liked. Centers should be open for 24 hours because some people do their living on the night shift.

The ideal child-care center would not be like the relatively impersonal nursery school that we have now. It can't happen until society solves some of its other problems and becomes more centralized and less inhuman.

(5.) Equal Pay for Equal Work and Better Job Opportunities

The earnings gap is increasing between men and women on ALL levels. According to the 1969 handbook on women workers put out by the U. S. Dept of Labor, what women earned as compared to men dropped 5 per cent between 1955 and 1956. Often times a woman will work side by side with a man doing exactly the same job, but she will be paid less. The people that pay the wages have many excuses to justify this, but the actual truth is that the myth of female inferiority is profitable to the greedy. And what of the professions? Well, there are proportionately fewer women doing things like sitting on college faculties than there were 40 years ago. This is not because they don't want to be, it's because the hiring methods at colleges and universities are discriminatory towards women.

Here I'd like to bring your attention to the fact that most of us who go to City College, no matter what our ambitions, will probably end up dropping out and working. Only 36 per cent of the people who go here "make it." Seventy per cent drop out or are kicked out. Testing and counselling are geared to weeding out those who have always eaten the crumbs from America's table. For instance, take the Strong Vocational Interest test. If you're at City College because you don't want to be a janitor or work at the post office for the rest of your life, but you're still not certain what you DO want to do, your counselor will probably suggest that you take this test. Once you have the test before you, you will be asked to make choices about the kind of things that you like to do. Would you rather watch a football game or sail a yacht? Would you rather explore the ocean bottom or go to the moon? Questions like that. Then your responses will be sent to Stanford, put in a computer, and compared with the answers of people that have already made it in various fields. You are sent back a list of professions with a score and a grade next to each one, showing how your interests compare with the successful in America.

Now people whose fathers have worked at

(Continued on Page 5)

Above, a liberated woman with yellow skin.

Below, a liberated woman with brown skin.
(Photos by Lynn Adler, S.F. Good Times)

DAMAGED DOCUMENT

Special Report: The Lenin Centennial

By Jim Browning

Vladimir Ilich Ulyanov (Lenin's true name) was born April 22, 1870, at Simbirsk (later renamed Ulyanovsk), on the Volga river. His father Ilya Nikolaevich Ulianov, was a schoolmaster who rose to the position of director of schools for the whole Simbirsk area; his mother was the daughter of a prominent doctor.

Lenin's older brother Alexsander was executed in 1887 for taking part in a plot to assassinate Czar Alexander III.

In 1887, Lenin entered Kazan university as a law student, but in December of the same year was expelled from the university for taking part in a student gathering.

EUROPEAN SOCIALISM

In 1895 Lenin went abroad to establish contacts with the Swedish Liberation of Labor movement and to learn something at first hand about European socialism. On returning to Russia he took part in organizing, in St. Petersburg, the Union for the Struggle for the Liberation of the Working Class (similar organizations had appeared or were appearing in various industrial centers in Russia); but on the night of December 20-21 he was arrested. After about 14 months in prison, he was in 1897 exiled to the village of Shushenskow in the Yenisei region of Siberia for three years. There he was joined by Nadezhda Krupskaya whom he had first met on revolutionary work in St. Petersburg at the beginning of 1894; and on July 22, 1898 they were married.

During this period of exile Lenin wrote "The Development of Capitalism in Russia," published in 1899.

R.S.D.W.P.

In March 1898, while Lenin was in Siberia, members of various Russian Marxist organizations, meeting in Minsk, proclaimed the formation of the Russian Social-Democratic Workers' Party (R.S.D.W.P.) and elected a central committee which soon issued a manifesto substantially in the spirit of the teaching of the Liberation of Labor group. Lenin approved of this, but other developments in Russia were disquieting. There was a tendency growing up among the Social-Democrats to concentrate on helping the working class to fight for immediate improvements in its conditions of life. Because of this emphasis on economics rather than seeking an emphasis on politics, as Lenin suggested, it was nicknamed "Economists" by their opponents.

PEOPLE'S ONSLAUGHT

They favored turning their backs, at least for the time being, on the aim which Lenin wished to impose at once—namely, that of organizing themselves as a political party with the object of putting the working class at the head of the people's onslaught on the autocracy, at the same time training and equipping it for the future onslaught on the very foundations of bourgeois society.

Soon, however, Lenin began to claim that his party should not merely join the revolutionary government but rather guide and control it. For the combination of the proletariat (workers) with the peasantry, to the complete exclusion of the bourgeoisie proper, under a government controlled by the proletariat, Lenin coined the term "the revolutionary-democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and the peasantry." (a government controlled by and solely responsible to the working class—i.e. the workers who having no means of production for themselves, are forced to sell their labor in order to live—of the country).

The adjective "democratic" was to characterize not the "dictatorship" while it remained in being, but as a final objective; namely, that of leading Russia to a constituent assembly and to bourgeois democracy (not yet the "dictatorship of the proletariat" and socialism). In that way Lenin avoided the reproach of departing from Marxism in the matter of the sequence of social formations.

But the immediate aim was stated by Lenin with complete clearness: seizure of power by a government controlled by the workers, as can be seen in his Social-Democracy and the Provisional Revolutionary Government (March 1905) and "Two Tactics for Social-Democracy in a Democratic Revolution" (June 1905).

1905 REVOLUTION

The Russian revolution of 1905 fell short of Lenin's expectations and failed to offer him the opportunity for giving effect to his scheme for a revolution in Russia. He arrived in St. Petersburg about November 1905 and spent some time there, but lived in Finland for the next two years, journeying to Stockholm in spring 1906 and to London in the summer of 1907.

"Events of the greatest historical importance are developing in Russia," Lenin wrote in "The Beginning of the Revolution in Russia," published in 1906.

"The proletariat has risen against tsarism. The proletariat was driven to revolt by the government. There can hardly by any doubt now that the government deliberately allowed the strike movement to develop and a wide demonstration to be started more or less without hindrance in order to bring matters to a point where military force could be used.

"The working class has received a momentous lesson in civil war; the revolutionary education of the proletariat made more progress in one day than it could have made in months and years of drab, hum-drum, wretched existence.

POPULAR LIBERTY

"Only an armed people can be the real bulwark of popular liberty. The sooner the proletariat succeeds in arming, and the longer it holds its fighting positions as striker and revolutionary, the sooner will the army begin to waver; more and more soldiers will at last begin to realize what they are doing and they will join sides with the people against the fiends against the tyrant, against the murderers of defenseless workers and of their wives and children."

WORLD WAR I

When World War I started in 1914, the readiness of the various socialist parties, members of the Second International, to make a pact with their own bourgeoisie in the interest of national defense, was treated by Lenin as a betrayal of international socialism. Accordingly he supported the left-wing socialist conference at Hammerwald (September 1915) and at Kienthal (April 1916) insofar as they opposed such a truce.

For Russia he continued to preach immediate revolution, even at the risk of defeat by Germany and America. His "Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism," written as a continuation of Marx' "Das Kapital," was published in Petrograd in mid-1917.

CAPITALISM AND IMPERIALISM

"We have seen that in its economic essence imperialism is monopoly capitalism." Lenin wrote in "Imperialism, The Highest Stage of Capitalism." "This in itself determines its place in history, for monopoly that grows out of the soil of free competition, and precisely out of free competition, is the transition from the capitalist system to a higher socio-economic order.

"We must take special note of the four principal types of monopoly, or principal of the epoch we are examining.

"Firstly, monopoly arose out of the concentration of production at a very high stage. At the beginning of the twentieth century, monopolies had acquired the first steps towards the formation of the cartels were taken by countries enjoying the protection of high tariffs (Germany, Britain and America).

CAPITALIST MONOPOLIES

"Secondly, monopolies have stimulated the seizure of the most important sources of raw materials, especially for the basic and most highly cartelized industries in capitalist society: the coal and iron industries. The monopoly of the most important sources of raw materials has enormously increased the power of big capital, and has sharpened the antagonism between cartelised and non-cartelised industry.

"Thirdly, monopoly has sprung from the banks. The banks have developed from modest middle enterprises into the monopolists of finance capital."

A financial oligarch, which throws a close network of institutions of present-day bourgeois society without exception—such is the most striking manifestation of this monopoly.

COLONIAL POLICY

"Fourthly, monopoly has grown out of colonial policy. To the numerous 'old' motives of colonial policy, finance capital has added the struggle for the sources of raw materials, for the export of capital, for spheres of influence, i.e., for spheres for profitable deals, concessions, monopoly profits and so on, economic territory in general.

When the revolution of February 1917 broke out in Russia, Lenin was in Switzerland. Unable to return to Russia without crossing enemy territory, he availed himself of the facilities provided by the Germans to travel across Germany in a sealed train to the border. Then, having passed through Sweden and Finland, he arrived in Petrograd on April 16, 1917. This time he found in Russia the conditions for which he had been looking since 1905.

1917 REVOLUTION

After the disturbances at the beginning of July 1917, the provisional Russian government, headed by Lenin's arch rivals the Mensheviks who had joined in a coalition with the Social-Democratics and seized state power in February 1917 from the czar—ordered Lenin's arrest and he went into hiding. From his hiding place he continued to write, to guide his party and, from the middle of October, to goad it into an immediate armed uprising. Finally, not without difficulties, he won it to his side and the government headed by Alchsandr Kerenski was overthrown.

Lenin emerged from hiding November 1 to become the chairman of the new Soviet party.

Lenin firmly believed on the one hand that only force could produce serious social change ("the statement "Not a single problem of the class struggle has ever been solved in history except by violence," which occurs in his "Report to the Third All-Russian Congress of Soviets," January 24, 1918, is echoed many times throughout his writings); and on the other hand that by force almost any desired change could be effected.

Dictatorship he defined in the sense of power based neither on law nor on elections but on violence directly applied (this theory is outlined in "An Epidemic of Confidence," June 1917 and "For the History of the Questions of Dictatorship," October 1920).

The very word "dictatorship" appears to have attracted him; no regime, one might say, no aspect of social life seemed to Lenin worthy of his attention unless he could discern dictatorship in it.

Symptoms of a serious illness, not to mention the effects of the wounds sustained when he was shot in 1918, began to appear in Lenin's life near the end of 1922. On May 26, 1922, he had his first stroke which left him practically paralyzed in his right side. In December 1923 he had another stroke and died January 21, 1924.

Women's Lib. . . .

(Continued From Page 4)

the post office or as janitors all their lives have never had the money to sail yachts or cultivate interests similar to those people whose parents do have a lot of money. The test is therefore discriminatory to poor people. The head of the testing department admits that is the most culturally biased test given. It says that only the types of people who have already made it are capable or happy doing that kind of work. The test is given to your counselor, not you, and it is put in your permanent records, to be used against you at a later date. Not only that, there is a separate test for women and men. Thanks to the sympathy of the head of the testing department, I took both tests, and I can tell you, the men's test is a much better test. In the first place, there are 55 occupations listed on the men's test while there are only 34 on the women's, including housewife. And as the test stands now, men have a whole additional section which measures such things as their interest in politics, art, adventure, etc.

Anyway, all you women who belong to the 70 per cent that doesn't finish school, what will happen to you? First of all, when you go to get a job you can't expect much pay or many opportunities for advancement. You will probably work, even if you get married. And when you are married and have children you will be economically dependent on your husband. I'm not knocking people being emotionally interdependent. I'm saying that people who stay together should do so of their own free will. You can't do that if you have children to support and no skills to get a decent paying job.

And if you are one of the 30 per cent who makes it, remember that the average yearly earnings of a woman with four years of college is equal only to the average yearly earnings of a man with only two years of high school.

Good luck.

Puerto Rico's Fight for Independence Continues

By Liberation News Service

A new war of national liberation is taking shape in Puerto Rico, the small U. S. colony that has been exploited by white men for the last five centuries. These recent events in the struggle have been conveniently ignored or played down by the establishment press:

Two ROTC buildings were burnt to the ground by demonstrators recently in San Juan — during the confrontation Antonio Martinez, a black Puerto Rican woman, was shot down by police. A white GI was killed by guerrillas to avenge her death.

When the Puerto Rican government tried recently to increase the price of water to a level where the poor could not afford it, one of the guerrilla bands advised the government of its serious mistake. The warning was ignored. When dams began to blow up, however, the government was forced to provide the water free to all projects where poor people live.

Theft of the Puerto Ricans' lands and heritage began when someone first claimed a White Man had discovered a New World. Christopher Columbus was an audacious navigator who made this possible for the whites.

He was a brown Phonecian, and his crews were mostly black Spanish Moors and Muslims, oppressed by race and religion in Spain and considered expendable in the dangerous voyage into the unknown.

During the 16th century, the white Spanish developed a sophisticated technique: sending a non-white people into a land already inhabited by a non-white people, to prepare the people and land for later more direct white exploitation. The Puerto Rican natives were Tainos Indians, a black people who migrated from the west coast of Africa before the birth of Christ.

The black but white-minded Moorish soldier-administrators of Spain at first acted as friends to the Tainos, avoiding violent coercion. Their cheap gifts and technological superiority allowed them to become like gods in the ancient society. The native religion was remade into Catholicism, with God being named "Yuki Yu" and St. Paul becoming "Saint Cemi" (formerly a secondary animist god). Simultaneously, the black Spaniards assumed control of the Tainos' lands.

The loss of their lands and of their traditions led the Tainos to wage the first Puerto Rican War of Defense in 1505. Most of the Tainos warriors were killed or driven to remote areas of the islands. At the same time, the plantation trade was growing, and African slaves were imported in increasing numbers to work in the fields. From these racial groups — black-African Indians, black-African slaves, and black-African Spanish — the present-day Puerto Rican people have evolved. Because of indoctrination, however, this lineage still is unknown to many Puerto Ricans.

White Spanish families appointed by the king of Spain and supported by Spanish troops established virtual dynasties in Puerto Rico by the 1700's. Spanish culture was integrated into Indian and African traditions. Puerto Ricans continually struggled and rebelled against white Spanish rule, but only in 1866 did full-scale revolution with a national consciousness occur: the First Revolution.

The Revolution was defeated militarily in 1868, but continued struggle and negotiations forced Spain in 1894 to recognize an autonomous Puerto Rican government with its own institutions, veto power over Spanish initiatives, freedom of trade, and no obligatory military service. The Revolution had won an important step towards total independence.

But on July 25, 1895, U.S. troops invaded Puerto Rico, and the U.S. government decreed a military regime. The official excuse was the Spanish-American war, which began with the sinking of a U.S. ship off the coast of Cuba (sound like Tonkin?) All the rights won by the Puerto Ricans in their First Revolution were eliminated.

The Jones law of 1917 imposed U.S. citizenship on all Puerto Ricans, so, just in time for World War I, men again faced obligatory service in a foreign army. The U.S. changed the national coin and devalued the peso 60 percent, with a financial profit to the U.S. of $200 million. The English school system was introduced, and Spanish-Puerto Rican culture was subordinated, forming an educated, American-oriented elite divided from the rest of the people.

On October 30, 1950, a poorly armed revolt for national liberation was put down. The struggle did achieve one of its aims: it created world and nation-wide awareness that Puerto Ricans were struggling for liberation.

By 1952, resistance forced the U.S. to change Puerto Rico's neo-colonial status to a system called EAS, the Free Associated State. This system increased the autonomy of Puerto Rico's minor bureaucracy, allowing a somewhat more democratic appearance; but all important decisions (such as trade, defense, the draft, communications, transportation) still require the approval of the U.S. Congress.

The creation in 1959 of MPI, the Pro-Independence Movement, represented a broadening base of support for independence. MPI took their case to the UN under its resolution on "Independence of Colonial Peoples and Countries." After 7 years, the UN agreed to study the case. Shortly thereafter the U.S. ran a plebiscite to ratify FAS in which only 48 percent of the eligible Puerto Ricans voted. But the State Department claimed a "victory."

The 1968 election of Governor Luis Ferre, multi-millionaire right-wing statehood advocate, marked the dissolution of the moderate parties and the polarization of politics in Puerto Rico. Ferre, an MIT trustee and former Republican National Committeeman, appealed to people to seek "equality" with white U.S. states in exchange for renunciation of their unique and independent heritage. Cuban emigres flooding the country since 1962 under the U.S. program "Operation Bootstrap" have further destabilized the political situation and have given violent support to Ferre. Ferre obviously also has deep interests in current U.S. exploitation.

U.S. capital dominates 85 percent of the Puerto Rican industrial sector, 40 percent of the agricultural sector. 97 percent of Puerto Rican production is absorbed by the U.S., leaving three-fourths of all families earning less than $3000 yearly ($3800 is the official poverty level in Puerto Rico). The economy is dependent on U.S. imports and quotas, and Puerto Rico is now in the middle of a depression. The official unemployment rate is 12.8 percent.

Puerto Rico has 13 U.S. military bases with U.S. missiles, troops, and atomic weaponry. Reinforcements were on alert there for the Panama crisis of 1964, the Cuban blockade of 1962, and when Nixon was spat on in Venezuela in 1959.

Two guerrilla organizations were formed in the 60's to intensify the struggle for Puerto Rican liberation. The Independent Armed Revolutionary Movement (MIRA) is an underground group supporting the demands of both peasants and workers. They have bombed GE and Woolworth facilities in Puerto Rico and New York City. The Armed Commandos of Liberation (CAL) is an urban based group which uses sabotage and bombing to destroy U.S.-owned industries and increase insurance rates to make exploitation of Puerto Rico less profitable.

CAL has also acted to defend draft resisters. Previously, the penalty given for draft refusal was a standard 5 to 10 years and $10,000. CAL issued a communique: for each Puerto Rican draft resister in jail, there would be a dead white GI on the streets of Puerto Rico. Recent convictions have carried sentences of one hour.

CAL has expanded the meaning of this communique to include the defense of all Puerto Rican freedom fighters. CAL claimed responsibility for the death of Ruben Humphrey, a white sailor from the USS Tidewater, in revenge for the death of Antonia Martinez.

En La Brecha, a Boston-based group which encourages Puerto Ricans to return to Puerto Rico to fight for independence, has hailed CAL's militancy as necessary to assure that liberation struggles will not be in vain: every attack on a freedom fighter will cost the imperialists.

White GI's may not wish to be the Puerto Ricans' enemy — but on the 13 bases they assist U.S. imperialism that is the enemy.

Break the tool, end the work. The final target is U.S. imperialist, racist control of Puerto Rico; the goal is national liberation and independence.

On and Off Campus

Art Exhibit

A one-man media-free art exhibit by Rolondo Furioso, is taking place at the Arts Six Gallery at 3692 - 18th St. (At Dolores). The exhibit features collages, sculptures, oils, pastels, ceramics, block prints, airbrush and charcoal drawings, together with pen-and-ink drawings. The Gallery is open from 3-6 p.m.

Orchestra

Saint Ignatius Church, at Fulton and Parker Sts., will be the scene of a concert by the City College Orchestra at 8 p.m. on April 26. The orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Hearne, will be performing works by Bach, Handel, Britten, and other noted composers.

Genesis '70

Two new ballets by Carlos Carvajal will be introduced by the San Francisco Ballet as the second offering of the Spring Season at the Opera House on April 25th at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, April 26th at 2:30 p.m.

"Genesis '70," one of the works, will express a "celebration of life." The other work, "Fantasma," is a sinister gothic tale. Tickets are available at the Opera Symphony Ticket Office, or telephone (415) 397-0717.

Auction

The San Francisco Art Institute will hold an auction from 7 to 9 p.m. on Friday, April 24, at the institute, 800 Chestnut St. The auction will be held to benefit the institute's photography department.

Marie Leone

Soprano Marie Leone will perform in concert at the Little Theatre on Thursday, April 23 during College Hour (11-12). The event is being sponsored by the CCSF Music Department.

Assignment in Vietnam

A multiple-image look at South Vietnam through the eyes of three Western news correspondents is the Group W special to be telecast Saturday, May 2, 10-11 p.m. on KPIX, Channel 5.

WWI Widows

The widows of World War I, Chapter 13, will hold a monthly meeting on Friday, April 24, at 2 p.m. The meeting will be held at the Veterans' Memorial Building. For further information, call 861-2837 or 681-6447.

Whole Earth Fair

A five-day ecology-oriented happening is scheduled to take place at the Oakland Coliseum from April 22 through May 3. The fair will begin at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, April 22. It will concern itself with man's delicately balanced future on his planet and will demonstrate, through ecology and conservation organizations, the need for man's awareness of the problems plaguing his environment.

Concert at Grace

The San Francisco Conservatory of Music's new Ensemble will present a concert of works by composer Robert Moran in Grace Cathedral at 9 p.m. on April 24, 1970.

Lacrosse Is Coming

Exciting action of Lacrosse is coming to City College.

Ram Lacrosse Expands for Spring '71

The San Francisco Junior Lacrosse Club presently residing here at City is planning to go big time next term. The Club is planning to field a full field lacrosse team next spring.

The primary reason for the coming expansion of lacrosse here is the fact that there are enough people at City to field a sizeable team.

The Junior Club presently has 12 members, and when expansion arrives the club will have 25 or more members. Besides the increase in membership the club will receive Senior status. Once a team reaches this level, the junior version team of 6 men on the field will be dropped and the club will field a full field lacrosse team. A field lacrosse team's size is ten men and the dimensions of the playing field are increased from 60 yards to 110 yards.

With Senior status the competition will somewhat be better, instead of playing community lacrosse clubs the team will play other teams from Stanford, Denver University, UC at Berkeley, the parent San Francisco Lacrosse Club, and other teams from around and out of the state.

Furthermore, by the time the team begins its first season in the Spring of 1971, the NCAA will have sanctioned lacrosse as a college varsity sport. The NCAA plans to hold at the end of the '71 season the first national championships in lacrosse. Participants in the championships will be decided through regional playoffs. Those teams which were considered lacrosse champions in previous seasons won their titles playing teams only in their respective regions. With the playoffs last year's lacrosse champion, Army, will have to defend its title from teams ontside of the Eastern Seaboard.

The lacrosse coach of the present team at City, Mike Hyer, suggested that anyone who is presently interested in coming out for next Spring's team to come out to practice and pick up a feel of the game. The team practices daily out on the second football field. The practices start approximately at 3 every day exceptng Fridays when the team practices at the Polo Fields.

The team played its first game last Sunday, and they beat San Rafael 8-5 in double overtime.

Farrell Keys Rams Fourth Straight Win

Ram pitcher John Farrell came on to stop a first inning San Jose rally, and then went on to hurl 8 1/3 innings of five-hit ball as CCSF won 6-5, for their fourth straight victory.

The win pushed the surging Rams over the .500 mark at 7-6 for the first time this season. But it took two comebacks by CCSF to preserve the win.

San Jose led 2-1 after that opening frame, but the Rams rebounded with a pair of tallies in the second to jump back on top, 3-2. Farrell ran into trouble in the third, as SJ scored three times to build up a 5-3 advantage.

After the Rams cut the lead to 5-4 in the fourth, Farrell settled down, hurling shutout ball for the remaining six innings. CCSF delivered the tying and winning runs in the fifth. Larry Haren reached base on an error, and third baseman Vince Anderson followed with a triple to right, sending Haren home with the equalizer. Shortstop Jim Schaeh then knocked in the winning run, scoring Anderson with a sacrifice fly.

CCSF barely got by Laney on April 9, finally winning the ten-inning affair, 4-3.

Rick Escalambre went the distance, allowing six hits and fanning eleven, while the Rams pounded out eleven hits in his support. Hitting stars for the victors were Ray Spediacci, who collected two singles and a double, and Vince Anderson, who had two hits including a two-run base hit in the first frame.

Red Ramos drove in catcher Bob Crosat with the winning run in the tenth with a single.

Golden Gate Conference standings now find CCSF in fourth place, only two games off the heels of second place Foothill and Chabot with eight games left.

Recent statistics released by the league show the following Rams among the top 20 in batting: Vince Anderson, .355; Rick Escalambre, .318; and Ray Spediacci, .304. Escalambre is also ranked second in stolen bases with seven.

—J.K.

Corvi's 74 Paces CCSF To 50-4 Golf Victory Over Laney

Greg Corvi fired a two over par 74, including his second eagle in two matches, to pace the Ram golfers to a 50-4 conquest of Laney, in an April 13 contest at Sharp Park.

Corvi eagled the long, 531 yard-par five 13th hole. He had eagled that same hole only three days before in the Chabot match. Greg also continued his assault on the par fives with a birdie at the 473-yard 4th hole.

John Susko settled for a 79, tying him with Laney's Ted Chandler. Other Ram scores included an 81 by Joe Doyle and 85's by Bob Simpson, Jerry Doyle, and Rich Nablefield.

CCSF dropped their April 10th match at Sharp Park to undefeated Chabot, 38-16. Susko tied for medalist honors with Chabot's Tim Williamson with a 78. Corvi, on the strength of his eagle, fired an 80, while Simpson finished with 81.

The record for the golfers is now 6-3, placing them three games behind Chabot.

Ram Trackmen Knock Off DVC Rams Take Field and Relays to Win

By Mike Chan

Ram dominance in the field and relays paved the way for an easy Ram thinclad victory over Diablo Valley College last April 10 at City College. The Rams ran up 79 points to DVC's 57.

On the track, the Rams were about even with the Vikings.

Ram highlights in track were Andy Watkins' firsts in the 100 (9.7) and the 220 (23.4) yard dashes.

In the distance events, Humberto Hernandez took firsts in both the mile (4:30.4) and the 2 mile (9:47.3).

DVC swept the 120hhs, and took firsts in the Intermediate hhs, the 440 yard dash, and the 880 yard dash.

DVC dominated the shot-put and the discus, but that was about it as the Rams outscored the Vikes 31 to 23 in the field events. Clearing the bar at 6'4" thinclad Bill Metcalf took a first for the Rams. Ram Dave Robinson chalked up a firstplace, by leaping 21-1" in the long jump.

The Rams easily took the pole vault with Paul Conroy's 12' 6" jump. In the triple jump Ram Donnie Bruce continued the Ram dominance of the field with his first place earning jump of 45'7½".

To add frosting on the cake the Rams swept both the 440 and the mile relays in 43.6 and 3.32 minutes, respectively.

The next track meet at City will be on April 21 against Laney at 2 p.m.

Ram shot putter Audre Hicks

Real Competition In Broadcast Booth

By Joe Konte

The rivalry between the San Francisco Giants and the Oakland Athletics has brought about many conflicts. The question over which is the better team is a widely argued topic. Some arguments rage over which club is more exciting. These are obvious controversies, and a discussion of them will only lead to a pile of facts and statistic sheets.

It is not our intent to bore you with batting and pitching records, but instead, to give you a look at some of the more pressing problems in comparing the organizations. For instance, which club sells better hot dogs or who dilutes their soft drinks the least with ice? But an even greater conflict is not in the quality of hot dogs, but in the battle of the radio broadcasters (that's right, Lon).

The matchup could not be any closer: The Giants' Russ Hodges and Lon Simmons versus the A's Harry Caray and Monte Moore.

Hodges has probably been with the Giants longer than there have been Giants. He boasts of being the only one to see every homerun that Willie Mays has ever hit. Of course, even Russ admits that Willie saw most of them too. Anyone who listens to Giants games is sure to be jolted from his seat with the familiar cry of "bye-bye baby," a Hodges trademark around the league. Another phrase which Hodges lives by is the greeting, "How you doin' everybody?" He uses it to open a broadcast, and repeats it after the game in the wrap-up show. We can remember the Giants having lost a crucial double-header last September, and Russ bouncing his jolly voice into our homes with his warm greeting. Needless to say, the somber fans weren't doin' very well.

Simmons has been Hodges' right hand man since the New York Giants invaded San Francisco's playgrounds in 1958. His style is dry and his quips make for a laugh, depending if you can stay awake during his broadcast to hear them.

Caray has two strikes against him already for a name like "Harry Caray." Many feel that he picks up his third strike while trying to describe a game. However, Caray's colleagues consider him as one of the best in the business. His pet expression, "holy cow," is overrated, and it becomes cliche at every utterance of the phrase.

Moore is the youngest of the four, but he seems to carry an a livelier broadcast than his counterparts. Moore acts as the A's unofficial cheerleader. His constant use of the word "we" would give the impression that Monte sits perched upon the announcers' booth wearing a kelly green A's cap and waving an Oakland pennant.

But when you get over Russ' ill-timed greetings, Lon's dry jokes, Harry's cliches, and Monte's cheerleading, one can find some knowledgeable men behind the mikes. Imagine listening to a Giant or Oakland game if they weren't there to talk. Holy cow!

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447.

Spring 1970 Editorial Board: Marc Kovacs, Head Coordinator; Jim Browning, News Editor; Paul Thiele, Managing Editor; Tom Cleaver, Feature Editor.

the Guardsman
Official publication of the journalism students of City College of San Francisco

Sports . Mike Char, Joe Konte

REPORTERS:
Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruno forner, Shirley Fegorino, David Hugunin Ron Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Monders, Erik Heldfond.

PHOTOGRAPHERS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

Guest Editorial: What Do Lenin's Ideas Mean Today?

Marx and Lenin put forward the need for a revolution by the masses of peasants and workers in the world against the bosses (capitalists of all countries) based on the objective conditions of oppression. The objective conditions were poor housing, lousy working conditions, wages next to nothing (or nothing at all for many peasants), and whenever these people tried to change the conditions, they were severely repressed.

Today, the bosses of the world love to say that the conditions of people are getting better, this is especially true for the U.S. which boasts that the conditions of people of all races and nationalities here at home are changing. If this is true, then why have there been over 300 black rebellions in the past 6 years, and over 300 strikes by workers in the past 2 years? This is not to mention the parent-student-teacher alliances for better schools, the fight by welfare people for more money, and countless other grievances by people for more money to meet the higher cost of living, and an end to the lousy living and working conditions.

Although on the whole — people in the U.S. live better than people abroad, the fact remains that the higher wages workers get are not keeping up with the higher costs of food and housing. According to Government statistics, the comfortable wage for a family of 4 should be $10,000 a year, yet 80 per cent of the families receive much less than that, in fact, many are trying to live on starvation wages, $2,000 - $5,000 a year. Things are hardly as good as Ford or G.E. would like us to believe.

V. I. Lenin

A Ruling Class and a Working Class

Marx and Lenin pointed out that conflicts between the working class (factory workers, typists, store clerks, cafeteria workers; anyone who is forced to sell his labor for barely enough money to live on) and the ruling class (Rockefeller, Hunt, the Government; those who make their money off the labor of the workers) will always exist until there are no more classes. But the bosses class perpetuates the existence of a class society and lives off the working class by robbing the workers of a value they produce. That is, the workers produce a certain amount of value but only receive a small wage for their production — the bosses gets the difference (i.e. profit). Thus the bosses have to keep stealing the wealth from the workers to maintain themselves as bosses. They will not meet any demands of the workers unless forced to because it would take away from their profits.

Revolution Not Reforms

The bosses will only give concessions when masses of people rise up against them and take what is rightfully theirs. But the gains that workers force the bosses to give them are often turned into their opposite through rising taxes, cost of living, etc., so that the bosses can regain what they have lost. The only way to secure the gains that workers can make is to develop a system specifically designed to serve working people's needs and interests, a system that is ru[n] by the working people themselves. This system is Communism.

The bosses will never give up their system w[ith]out a fight from the ma[ss] people. The bosses ma[in]tain themselves by expanding their markets at home and throughout the world (U.S. imperialism in Vietnam), and constantly increasing their profits. Anything less (giving some of their profits back to the workers) would result in the destruction of those bosses because of the competitive nature of free enterprise. The bosses will use all of their tools (i.e., cops, national guard) to fight for change. If communists and non-communists are working together around a specific goal, then they should not allow themselves and their aims be defeated by the devisive nature of anti-communism.

What Does This Mean At City College?

Here at City College we must look objectively at the role students are forced to play and the role the administration plays. As students we are trained into submissiveness, taught racism and male supremacy and anti-communism. We will go to work with these ideas, and although we may want social change, we will not know who to ally with and who to fight against. We should begin now to fight those bad ideas and practices at City College. We must not sit back and allow a fellow student in La Raza to be harassed and arrested by the student police. White students must ally with black and third world students who come under racist attacks.

We should also fight the other racist aspects of police science, i.e., one third of police science students at City College become grown-up pigs in the black and third world communities.

We should also support the workers here on campus who have begun to fight back against the boss-administration (i.e., the City Wide strike).

Unity between black and white, men and women, and students and workers, will help us fight for the reforms we desperately need now. And this unity is the first step in engaging in a long term battle with the ruling class (whether it be administration, corporation boss, or U.S. Government).

In the final analysis this unity and fight for reforms will have to lead us to overthrowing all the bosses, or we will never be free from the cut-throat bosses' oppression.

-Toni Haram and James Boyd
(Friends of Progressive Labor Party)

The Escalation of Contradictions

By Tom Cleaver

Fourteen months of the Nixon Administration have amply proved that whether a Democrat or a Republican is in office, the problems are still there, widening, with no solution.

Richard Nixon went to the White House, pledged to the people that he could find a way out of the Vietnam "quagmire," since he had not been responsible for the original policy decisions that got the country involved there in the first place (quietly neglecting all that history of involvement of the Eisenhower years). Today, the Paris peace talks are stalemated because of Administration refusal to send a top-level delegate to head the American delegation; the North Vietnamese and the Provisional Revolutionary Government quite rightly refuse to negotiate with stand-ins, especially former CIA agents such as the present head of the U.S. delegation.

Last November 3, in the face of nation-wide anti-war sentiment expressed in the October Moratorium and the even larger demonstrations planned the following week, Nixon promised to de-escalate, Vietnamize and withdraw, all at once. Something for everyone, except the dinosaurs who put in their appearance earlier this month at a "win the war" rally in the capitol.

The chickens are coming home to roost . . . everywhere. Despite the wishes of Lester Maddox and the "winners," the United States has lost the war in Vietnam, though they refuse to admit it. Thieu and Ky and their sycophants couldn't last a week with an American withdrawal before they would be torn to pieces (literally!) on the streets of Saigon. For the last two years, one has been able to stand on the roof of the Saigon Hilton and see NLF flags flying over buildings in Saigon, in broad daylight. There have been no offensive actions on any large scale by U.S. troops since the Tet Offensive of 1968.

While the government refuses to publicly admit defeat, all their actions in Southeast Asia in recent months point to a private recognition of this fact. In order to "contain" the victory to Vietnam, the war has been escalated in Laos, and a right-wing coup that was undoubtedly achieved with the support of the CIA has been engineered in Cambodia to pave the way for an American counterinsurgency presence in that country to protect our investments in Thailand and to provide a buffer between that state and Vietnam; the same reason is in operation in Laos. Any pretense that Richard Nixon wants peace in Southeast Asia on any realistic terms has been thrown to the winds.

The contradictions are not just in the field of foreign affairs. The Nixon Administration's domestic "policies" have shown themselves bankrupt. Nixon's economic advisors are at a total loss. All their efforts in the classical way of doing things have been ineffective in curbing inflation; there is now the possibility of serious economic recession, with increased inflation. People are not going to stand for this.

Since 1967 (by government statistics!) corporate profits have grown by $3.5 billion; Wall Street dividends have increased $3.1 billion in the same period, while Congress approved a 40 per cent pay raise for itself, and a 100 per cent pay raise for the President.

In the same period, real wages after taxes for the average industrial worker with three dependents have dropped from $88.06 per week in 1967 to $82.27 in 1969. And this in a period of "economic boom."

Nixon asks the people to quietly go along with his welfare-for-the-rich program, but there are bound to be few takers. Organized labor has already made its position very clear, and the contracts for over 5 million workers come up for negotiation between now and October. With inflation rising at 6 per cent per month, working people are not going to quietly accept the 3 per cent crumbs Nixon's corporate friends are offering them.

Race relations are at a new low, and all Nixon can do is speak out of both sides of his mouth, for fear of alienating Strom Thurmond and the other Bourbon dinosaurs.

The ghettos and barrios of the major cities are increasingly coming together to oppose the "benign neglect" proposed by Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Nixon's tame liberal. Throughout the southwest, Chicano people are organizing; in every city, blacks are getting it on; even the traditionally ever - so - patient Chinese are showing that the Koumintang-dominated "Six Companies do not speak for the people of Chinatown. No one seems to know how to take the lid off the pressure cooker.

What is the response to these domestic problems?

A mealy-mouthed so-called "welfare reform" program that will actually exclude nearly half the people who need this aid, on the one hand.

On the other hand: there is a policy of blind reaction: Hear No Evil, Speak No Evil, See No Evil, and turn the police loose on those who do.

The Chicago 7 are indicted for having the temerity to believe that there are such things as the Bill of Rights and the First Amendment; William O. Douglas is threatened with impeachment by the mini-minds (led by Gerald Ford and Spiro Agnew) for saying that revolution is the ultimate weapon of the people for redress of grievances (considering that it's so stated in our founding documents, a very American thing) and that such an act might be in the offing; white police are given carte blanche to wipe out any non-white they so please, knowing that no middle-age white middle-class "jury" will indict them or find them guilty if a show is put on.

The answer to the Chicago 7 was the Isla Vista branch of the Bank of America; no answer has yet been given for Fred Hampton, Mark Clark, Bobby Seale, or Los Siete, but one can be expected at some point soon.

DAMAGED DOCUMENT

All Activities May Be Suspended

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 8 | SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA | MON., MAY 4, 1970

A.S. Bookstore's Prices Spur Extreme Action

By Tom Cleaver and Paul Thiele

A proposal by Charles Smith to temporarily suspend student activities brought the largest participation by the student body at any Student Council meeting this semester. More than fifty people were in attendance.

The proposal was brought to force a confrontation with the Associated Students Bookstore dealing with pricing.

"We have no control over prices at the bookstore," said Councilman Smith, "but we do have control of the use of its profits. The bookstore management consistently uses the excuse of their support of student activities as justification for the prices they charge."

The proposal to temporarily suspend student activities was brought so that the council could reorganize priorities on funding. Council members who have been working on the bookstore committee felt that the only way to force prices down at the bookstore was to cut off their justification for prices.

Reaction from the audience, composed primarily of athletes, was sharp. A football team member shouted, "When you suspend student activities, you're suspending us!" Despite explanations from council members that they were not out to "get" the Athletic Department, the athletes took the proposal as a threat. Council member Harvey Rappaport said, "Instead of going after us, come with us to the bookstore people and tell them how you feel. We're all upset about that bookstore."

Several Student Council members from left to right: Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, President Renato Larin, Judy Kay, Vicky Reiter, John Goebel, Judy Barsocchini, and Roger Cassell.

BOYCOTT

A member of the audience suggested that students boycott the A.S. Bookstore and only do business with Cal Books in order to lower A.S. prices.

"We can't run the A.S. Bookstore completely out of business," Councilman John Goebel said, "because then Cal Books would have a monopoly and they could skyrocket their prices." Rappaport added, "It's important to remember that both bookstores work together. If the A.S. Bookstore lowered its prices, Cal Books would probably lower theirs, too."

Other council members voiced the feeling that many students are paying for activity cards who do not benefit from the activities, because they have to work to stay in school. Rappaport, when questioned about the priorities council wants to set, spoke of a day-care center for the children of the people who would be students except that they have no way of caring for their children.

MOTION TABLED

After a long, emotionally charged discussion, it was decided to table the motion to suspend activities until after an emergency meeting with the Bookstore Committee this week. The question will come up for discussion at the meeting of Monday, May 4.

"We hope other people besides athletes will come, because they are not the whole student body, and we need to hear from the rest of the students," said Smith. He went on to say, "Sports are an institution here, the administration is not going to let them be cut off completely, anyway. They'll override our vote or something."

"We want other people who are concerned about things on the campus other than just athletics to come and speak. We can't set new priorities without support and ideas," said Jane Killibrew.

The council will meet Monday, May 4 at 12 noon in the AS bungalow behind Smith Hall.

Hugh Brady Stresses Overpopulation

By Bill Collins

Hugh Brady of Ecology Action was an Earth-Week speaker at City College. In two lectures, he spoke on many different but related aspects of ecology.

"Ecology," Brady explained, "is not an issue, but a way of looking at things."

In his lectures he was quick to point out the significance of our over-population problem, emphasizing that it's not separate from environmental pollution, as many people believe. Brady claimed that this problem leads to 1) consumption; 2) waste; 3) pollution, and 4) numbers.

A major criticism in his talks was the advertising-consumption-waste cycle. "Advertising creates despair," the eco-activist claimed.

Brady also questioned which was more destructive — 1) the dynamiting of beautiful Glen Canyon, or 2) the ecologically disatrous California Water Project?

He also accounted for the apparently dissimilar, competing black movement and environmental groups.

"Blacks are now forced to live ecologically," Brady pointed out. Deprived of the white, middle-class affluence, "they can't afford two-car garages, or summer homes at Lake Tahoe." He claimed that the whites, who are responsible for most of the pollution due to their high consumption rate, are bound to clean up their own mess.

"In terms of resource distribution, blacks in the United States represent the poor of the world, outside America."

Another target for Brady is what he called the oil "hot cycle." For every gallon of gasoline bought in California, eleven cents is used (by law) for highway construction. This in turn encourages the use of cars, which consume gas, the tax on which goes to freeway building.

Brady calls this a "hot cycle," because it perpetuates itself, increasing rather than cooling down.

A "cool cycle" might be one in which the eleven-cent gasoline tax (or a portion of it) is diverted for rapid, mass transit, which would compete, against, rather than encourage cars. As a result, less gas would be consumed, and there would be less of its tax to perpetuate the cycle.

Hugh Brady explains Ecology

Very much a part of this hot cycle is the Southern Crossing Bridge, which Brady denounced for its numerous adverse environmental effects. Its construction, he warned, will bring new cars into the streets of San Francisco, and many tons of carbon monoxide into our air (and lungs), as well as concrete in our bay.

Brady took advantage of his discussion with Joan Allen's Zoology 10 class to explain and encourage recycling, a favorite project of Ecology Action. By this process, newsprint is boiled, the ink is drained off, and the product perfected for re-use. Recycling paper prevents forest depletion and air pollution from burning paper.

Aluminum is especially valuable, and is being re-cycled by major manufacturers.

An initial community recycling project is being planned for San Francisco. Five large bins — one each for paper, cardboard, tin, aluminum, and glass — will be waiting to be filled on the first Saturday of each month, as well as April 30. Bring these re-cyclable elements to the Kezar parking lot.

Brady offered to return any profits collected, or use the funds to furnish other Ecology Action projects.

He is anticipating an ecology center, perhaps at Tenth and Market Streets, where environmental activists and their groups can co-ordinate community activities and exchange information.

Despite his awareness of the state of our environment, Hugh Brady did express some optimism for our future.

Questions? Talk to Brady at 1370 Masonic St., 861-5533.

Greek Photo Exhibit

A one-man show by photographer Charles Burger is currently on exhibit at the College Library. Titled, "Greek Women and Other Passions," it will be on display until May 5th.

Burger, a young cameraman who graduated from college in 1966 (he holds a Master's Degree in Sociology) has travelled extensively in Greece — the birthplace of "democracy" which is now the home of a fascist dictatorship.

His photographs, however, do not reflect the urgency of the times. Rather, they have a quiet quality — like Bresson's "Decisive Moment" — plenty of space surrounding the subjects, direct contact between photographer and the Greek women, and hence, intimacy with the eventual onlooker. That is his style. Burger calls it his "signature."

His blacks are what photographers call "punchy" and there is more concern with overall design than a preoccupation with middletones. He doesn't hesitate to break the so-called photographic rules (one portrait has the subject's head smack in the geometric center of the format, an etched peasant head against an inked black).

"The Greek women series was an exercise in discipline and style. I wanted to narrow my subject matter down so that my perspective would become precise, controlled. That point of control is important; it's the difference between the amateur and the professional. Of course, 'quality' is the distinction between professional and artist."

Like most of the visually oriented younger artists he has not become a photographer overnight. "In fact, "explains Burger, "I started out at thirteen with my brother's camera. My parents built me a darkroom for my fifteenth birthday. I sold my equipment when I went to college but after some underwater photography in the Virgin Islands I started acquiring Nikon bodies and lenses."

He explains how he started using the 35mm almost exclusively: "I was in India and needed money so I tried selling that lens on the open market. No takers — and since then it's become my favorite lens." (Many of his most direct studies are with the 35mm lens. The all-inclusive quality is startling.)

"My techniques are simple," he says. "Moving around as I do I have had to handle film under all sorts of adverse conditions. I use only Pan-X or Tri-X (rated 200 A.S.A. and 2400 A.S.A. respectively) and develop in Diafine. I print full frame on Brovira No. 6. More and more my exposures are 'by eye' rather than meter."

Burger believes a photographer shouldn't limit himself to "straight camera-work." So, he has been experimenting with silk screen techniques, transcribing his photographic images to litho film and then to mesh screen for multiple color printing. About this process he said, "things are in a state of movement and reaction continuously and my camera records and becomes that flux.

The exhibit is open from 7:30 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the Library area.

Music:

The New McCartney

By Erik Heldtond

On the ninth of last month, a small story appeared in the London Daily Telegraph Morning Edition. Although minimal in word content, the insinuations which lurked between the printed lines caused such a widespread effect that soon the story appeared in every newspaper produced in the world. Despite the journalistic pattern of exaggeration, mis-quotation, and unsupported "reliable sources," the article still echoed its mournful news across seven continents—the Beatles are no longer.

The first statement to be issued followed three days of confused conjecture on behalf of their devoted disciples. This appeared in the Sunday London Times. Hunter Davies, famed Beatle biographer and close compatriot to all four of the musicians, interviewed Paul McCartney, much to the appreciation of a dismayed world.

McCartney inferred that he was quite upset with the great amount of non-activity the Beatles have been producing for the past year. His song writing partner, John Lennon had not been in touch with McCartney for all of eight months, since the recording of their soon to be released album "Let It Be." During the production of that disc, McCartney found that working with Lennon became quite strained on account of the presence of his wife, Yoko Ono.

"I found it extremely difficult to write with John when Yoko was present. I felt as though I must pass on an air of showmanship and dignity." Perhaps this crude form of jealosy on the part of McCartney was simply a matter of temporary spite, but Davies flatly states that the Beatle break-up could be traced directly to Yoko:

"Because of her great influence with her husband, she presented Lennon with projects which unfortunately, aroused the same intense importance which was usually reserved for the upkeep of the world's most popular entertainers.

While I wholeheartedly agree that the Ono-Lennon contract was a decisive factor which aided in toppling the Apple empire, there was also an equally important factor which promoted the split-up. As with most discontinued associations, the primary [illegible] money.

For years, the Beatles' domain has been directed quite successfully by businessman Allen Klien; but following his marriage, McCartney suggested that all Beatle business interests be transferred to a New York firm, owned by his father-in-law, Lee Eastman.

The reason for this was simple. Throughout their long association, Klien and McCartney never got along. Their faltering communication frequently errupted into open verbal confrontation, which more often than none, ended with McCartney leaving in a furor. When the other threebeetles scoffed at Paul's suggestion for a new management, an obvious gap occurred.

These seem to be the two major causes for the Beatles' destruction. However, we the public will not be denied the privilege of experiencing the Beatles' talent, only on an individual basis.

John is currently enjoying a great success with his Plastic Ono Band. George has produced an original score for a to-be-announced movie and is also recording a third LP following the mould of his hit Wonderwall. Ringo may be seen on the silver screen these days as he desperately attempts to fulfill a childhood dream of his — to become an actor of prominence. He certainly is very prominent as anybody will admit, but an actor? "McCartney," a new album produced, written and played solely by Paul promises him a long and successful run as a solo act. It is truly a remarkable record.

Throughout they reign as patriarchs of the rock world, the Beatles have set forth a pattern and a greatness that no word in the English language may suffice to describe. They have spawned an age and a sound that will echo down the halls of time never to be forsaken or forgotten. There is no epitaph that I may set forth that would reflect the glory that was theirs.

So I turn to the words of Henry David Thoreau that [illegible] exceptional tribute to these [illegible] who have created an indelible [illegible] our era.

"After the first artist [illegible] the second [illegible]

Whole Earth Fair

Wonder Fair was the "whole earth" in a festival. Concentrating on the rebirth of the craftsman, the Whole Earth Festival presented the first distinctive show of the seventies. Wonder Fair ran five days from Wednesday, April 29 through Sunday, May 3, at the Oakland Arena, Oakland. The show included entertainment — a chance to experience the new acoustic sounds from San Francisco — seven groups under the name of Equinox performing in a central stage area. "It's in the Air," an ecological light show produced for Wonder Fair by Missionary Light was featured in the movie room. Twenty-five per cent of the show space was offered to environmental groups.

Well known participants included Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth, Zero Population Growth, Marin Ecology Center, California Man in Nature, and National Organization For Women. Ten per cent of the show profits were earmarked for Bay Area ecology and conservation activities.

Hand-styled products of the earth can be purchased from local and national craftsmen including leather-workers, candlemakers, weavers, jewelers, and potters. Artists presented such media as metal sculpture, oil and acrylic paintings, wood carvings, and crystal graphics. The diversity ranged from insectivorous plant terrariums, to John Lennon's "Bag One" lithographs, to the Dead Cow featuring Co-Op leather garments. There was something for every age group including fine clothing and indestructible toys for children. Outdoorsmen enjoyed seeing displays by Sierra Designs and the Ski Hut of Berkeley.

No Classes at 11

Faculty Meets

Due to a plenary session of the Academic Senate, all classes from 11 to 12 will be cancelled tomorrow Tuesday, May 5.

Student Council Blasts Bookstore

By Paul Thiele

Councilman Steve Mendelsohn's campaign to start a non-profit, student operated bookstore met obstacles at the April 22 meeting of Student Council.

Mendelsohn announced that he asked the Zellerbach Company for a contribution to a new store but was turned down.

"Zellerbach makes paper!" Councilman Roger Cassell cried. "Do you actually think that they'd support a move to drive down the price of books?

Samuels Boils

As Mendelsohn continued expressing his ideas of how to reconstruct the management of the AS Bookstore, Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, lashed out at Mendelsohn in rebuttal.

"You can't talk off the top of your head about a $600,000 business, especially when you don't have anything constructive to put in its place!"

Councilman Charles Smith then proposed that all student activities be cancelled in order to control the profit margin of the bookstore. The measure may be voted upon at one of this week's council meetings.

Rehabilitation

Kenneth Knight appeared at the same meeting of Student Council to suggest that the AS Bookstore drop its 10 per cent blanket charge on sales made to disabled customers.

"As it stands now," Knight said, "the Rehabilitation Department sends people to colleges in order to teach them a vocation. These people are granted money to pay for their books and when they present their I.D.'s to the bookstore cashiers, an extra 10 per cent charge is made."

"Instead of this 10 per cent charge coming from Sacramento, it comes out of the client's grant," Knight said. "If it continues, it will cut the grant to the point where the student can only afford books for three rather than four "semesters." He added that City College and the College of Marin bookstores are the only ones in the state that charge this 10 per cent.

The Guardsman contacted Mr. Main of the bookstore who said that the 10 per cent charge was to compensate for billing, bookkeeping and itemizing details that are required for rehabilitation students. The local office of the Division of Rehabilitation was contacted and they said that the 10 per cent charge was paid for by the state and does not reduce students' grants.

Other Business

The Chinese Cultural Club was made an official campus organization at the April 20 meeting of the council.

"Protection against discrimination and violence" was one of the policies set forth by the club's constitution. Chinese Cultural Club meetings are open to all interested City College students. Dr. Alfred Lee, chemistry instructor, is the sponsor.

Loading Zone

AS President, Renato Larin, assured the council that there will be a free concert on May 5 from 11:00-12:30 at the Ram statue featuring "The Loading Zone." Students will be excused from classes at that time due to a scheduled Academic Senate meeting.

Student government petitions will be available in the Student Activities office, Bungalow 401 (behind Smith Hall) beginning May 4. There will be 15 positions up for grabs in the council this semester.

'Student Movement Recognizes Deceit'

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Joe Johnson, Deputy Assistant of Youth Affairs in San Francisco, spoke on the role of the black student in America Tuesday, April 21.

Johnson said, "It is important that the black people know of those black men who provided such inventions as the electric light filament, the electric light signal, the first man who did open-heart surgery, Nathan Hale Williams, and the man who invented blood plasma and died in the streets because a white hospital wouldn't let him in.

"While we learn about some of the famous people of history we should learn about Robert Small, a slave in the South. He wanted to buy his family out of slavery, so he hi-jacked a freighter and went into blockading. After finishing one blockade run, Small was told to turn over his boat. He didn't turn it over and ran the blockade again. Soon after, he became captain and was able to buy his family out of slavery. He then hired two teachers who taught him to read and write and then he became a congressman for his state. He wouldn't give up the fight.

"We must follow his example and fight for the right to walk the land as citizens. We the people have a great opportunity to make America the land of the free and the home of the brave. We have come a long way; but we have only scratched the surface, friends. We still have a long way to go. Unity is important if you have potential and we do have potential."

In reference to freedom, Johnson said, "It is important that you learn these things: Democracy is a good thing if we can get it. It is an objective we are reaching for. Man's aims must always exceed his grasp. It is hard work. You have to be in shape. Man should live so that in dying he can say, 'I gave my life for the betterment of my fellow man'."

Joe Johnson talks about youth

When asked what the function of the Youth Affairs program was Johnson said, "The Youth Affairs Department plans summer youth programs and handles youth-aid programs that already exist, such as those in the Haight-Ashbury and the Western Addition."

"It is sad that only the bad things get reported about the black people because there are many black people doing fine things. If one black person throws a rock, that gets banner headlines. The students must overcome these obstacles. We have 1673 summer jobs for this year. We must have more if we are to help the student overcome the obstacles. The jobs we do have will be divided among the students, and we also have a technical resources committee made up of businessmen and other organizations as the Trade Union Movement, who are trying to raise more jobs for the youth of San Francisco."

In conclusion, Johnson said this about student movements: "The thing I most admire about them is that they recognize the deceit, hypocrisy, deception and fraud that exists in our world."

Police Work Is People-Oriented

City College's police force has been operating since the mid 1940s. All instructors of criminology have been involved at some time or other in some aspect of law enforcement. The head of the department is Tim Foley.

"We stress that police work is a people-oriented service," said Foley, and the more they (the students) know about people, the more successful they are going to be. We recommend that they take sociology and psychology classes. Political science courses having to do with Afro-American, Latino, and urban problems are equally important in understanding the community the policeman works in. We recommend to our students that when they go on to a four-year college they major in sociology, psychology, or business administration. The courses offered here are primarily concerned with the development of an attitude that is compatible with assisting the community. Among the Criminology courses offered are those dealing with juvenile and parole work, criminal identification, and traffic control."

When some of the police officers were questioned about the recent article in the Guardsman that charged the police with harassing Richard Montemayor, they said it was completely untrue. Mr. Montemayor had been arrested once for refusing to identify himself, and he was picked up twice for routine field interrogation. They added that there is no officer on the force named George M. Garrano.

Around Campus:

The Farthest-Out Job of the Year

By Tom Cleaver

Students traditionally take odd jobs to make the money they need: Dishwasher, coffeehouse bouncer, oilfield worker during vacations, shipping clerk, part-time secretary, delivery boy, hospital worker—all are in the tradition of student money-making.

Today's student is hardly traditional, and student jobs are becoming less so every day. At City College, the award for Farthest-Out Job of the Year undoubtedly belongs to Joni (not her real name), who makes "dirty movies."

"I used to be an artist's model for the campus art department at the school where I lived before coming to San Francisco," says Joni, "but when I got here and saw how the Models' Guild controls things, I had to find an alternative." Joni has been making "dirty movies" for three years. She works for various theatre owners in the city, and her activities have titilated thousands at $4.00 per person.

"It's not a full-time thing. I don't need a lot of money to live, so I only do it a couple times a month," she says. "There are lesbian flicks you can do that involve about three hours' filming at the most and pay $50, and then there are others." "Others" include pictures that simulate intercourse, and some that detail the actual act—the good old "stag film." "Most of the films that show people really doing it are done by couples," according to Joni. "It's pretty difficult to turn on to someone you don't know in front of other people and maintain it under those hot lights."

What kind of people do this? "You'd be amazed at the number of hippies and heads that do it," says Joni. "There's some other City College students who do it too; where else can someone make enough to live on for 10 or 15 hours' work a month?"

How do people get into this work? "I first heard about it back in 1967, when a guy phoned the Hip Job Co-op with a job opening for two chicks to make movies. There's all kinds of ads for this work in the old Barb and the Tribe," she says.

A typical filming session is preceded by Joni's calling around to the various theatres to find out when they're filming, what is being filmed, and where. Usually, the movies are made in someone's house who is connected with the theatre, "but we also do orgies and things like that on secluded beaches, at someone's Playboy pad, places like that."

The film-makers themselves are usually working part-time, doing films for theatres as the need arises, and as the photographer's money needs increase. "I only work a couple afternoons a week," says one. "For twelve or fifteen hours work a week, I can make a couple hundred dollars."

Many of the film-makers are students in film-making who use the job as an opportunity to experiment with various techniques in shooting, editing, etc. It is also an avenue to get the money necessary for the expense of making the films they do at school.

"Film school is expensive, man. You buy all your own equipment — film, camera, etc., and then you have to have equipment for developing, editing, and all that."

Many people might wonder how someone who can be considered hip, radical, and liberated, can do this kind of work.

Joni replies: "I think I'm doing a social good. The people who watch these movies are people who can't get their satisfaction elsewhere. If it weren't for these movies, they might go somewhere else for it and some other chick might get really hurt."

When asked to what she ascribes the popularity of these movies, Joni says: "Because of the sex hang-ups of this society. A guy comes in to watch a beaver movie because his wife never lets him see it; all she does is wear a housecoat or lingerie then ask him to turn out the lights in the room when she gets into bed.

"Also, wives won't engage in 'fetishes' that a man might fantasize about. Lots of guys fantasize about making it with their secretaries, so girls dress as such for films; some men think of the uninhibitedness of an out-and-out streetwalker—sleazy and tawdry—and we dress that way. There's some sadists, and we do a film with red grease-paint welts on our backs.

"Many men wish that sex would occur as easily for them as in pornographic novels . . . not much coming on. So, it's from curiousity . . . and because it's daring and quasi-illegal. But this way, no one gets hurt from those things."

What of the future of these movies? According to one filmmaker, "If they keep on as they are, showing everything, it'll all be over inside of two years. How many times can you watch people make it before it becomes boring? After this, we can get on with important things."

Student Union Building To Be Complete By Fall

By David Ilugunin

Students returning to City College next fall can look forward to having the Student Union Building as an additional place to spend those long hours between classes.

According to Victor Vaio, assistant coordinator of construction on campus, construction of the building has progressed as planned and will be ready by next semester.

The Student Union Building is presently under construction adjacent to the cafeteria. When completed, the building will consist of four main areas: a recreation area, lounge and auditorium area, offices, and an outside terrace.

The recreation area will possibly relieve some of the congestion that the cafeteria is now faced with. This area will be situated on the first floor and will include food facilities, a library, and a game room.

The lounge and auditorium will be located on the second floor. These facilities will be primarily for special events such as dances, conventions, exhibits, and affairs of that nature. Also located on the second floor will be a number of offices, including the Student Council Chambers.

The Student Union Building, now under construction near Statler Wing.

The outside terrace will be a large lounge area.

To finance this project it has been necessary to borrow $550,000 from the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. The loan is to be paid off with Associated Students Bookstore profits over a period of 50 years at a three per cent interest rate.

Anti-War March Dies

By Tom Cleaver

Perhaps a total of 800 people participated in Saturday's annual Anti-Vietnam War March. Police estimated the crowd at the rally in Civic Center Plaza at 2,500; march organizers put it at 3,000. It was the smallest gathering of its kind ever in the Bay Area, less than 10 per cent of what had been predicted.

Several factors contributed to this lack of support of an activity that had previously drawn as many as half a million supporters, and never less than 25,000 in the last four years. Many people had been turned off by the rally held the previous Wednesday. As several long-time peace marchers said then, "It's going to be a long time before I come to one of these things again." Many serious people were offended by the festival air, and the feeling that the movement had become a social affair, like a High School Hop.

People felt that the organizers from the New Mobilization Committee had been dishonest in their methods of bringing people to the rally. One friend said: "They're a bunch of body counters, just like Westmoreland and Abrams; all they want is your presence, and to hell with your reasons." The feeling against the New Mobe carried over to the more political Bay Area Peace Action Council, who organized Saturday's march.

Schisms within the movement itself contributed to the fiasco. The Anti-Imperialist Coalition, composed of Progressive Labor, SDS, the Iranian Students Association, and others that could be termed the "left wing" of the movement organized a counter-march. Claiming that BAYPAC wasn't "radical enough" in its criticism of the war, the Anti-Imperialist Coalition called a march, to begin from the same point as BAYPAC's, with a rally at the Federal Building. It was unclear as to whether there was a rally permit for this, and many people were disinclined to fight the cops there in order to hold a rally. Many people expressed a fear prior to the march that the Coalition—if frustrated in recruiting marchers from BAYPAC—might attack the march itself. "These people are among the most frustrated ones in the movement, and I don't dig them taking their frustrations out on me," said one.

The movement is becoming increasingly split into tiny factions, each one viewing the others as the primary enemy. In part, this comes from frustrations growing out of a sense of powerlessness to stop the war and to reach out to new groups in society for support. As this feeling develops, more fights such as the one in Dolores Park on International Women's Day—when women from the YSA were attacked by women from SWP—will happen. The more this happens, the smaller will be the crowds of supporters for large actions, and the greater will be the frustrations.

April 18th signified the death of a large mass movement against the war, the one issue over which the left has been able to build a large base of support. It was more a suicide than a murder, with the "revolutionaries" cutting their own throats in the process. The failure of the activists to understand the people they are trying to reach, to understand how to relate to those people in a positive way, has resulted in a large number of favorably-disposed people becoming unwilling to participate. Such a failure by the so-called "revolutionaries" can only be welcomed by Nixon, Agnew, Mitchell & Co.

CONTACT LENS

Is Astroturf Necessary?

Alex Bessabava, Electrical Eng. Major

I'm against Astroturf because it's phony. It's not part of nature as it really is. Man has been abusing nature ever since he's been on earth and Astroturf is just like pollution—you can't let it start or it's going to get worse.

Tom Meixner, Gen. Ed. Maj.

I think it will help athletes because it won't give them as many knee injuries. There's a lot of upkeep with grass. You have to mow it and roll the ground so it doesn't get lumpy. When Astroturf gets dirty, you can just vacuum it like a regular rug.

John Erwin, Gen. Ed. Maj.

I think that Astroturf is all right for athletes because it's not being used for anything except to be torn up and misused anyway. It wouldn't be good for parks. It's not meant for natural beauty, but for playing on, so for athletes it should be fine.—By Paul Thiele

Recruitment Day To Take Place On May 13

Fifty employer recruitment teams representing a wide variety of occupational career opportunities for City College graduates will assembly on the campus on Wednesday, May 13 at 8:00 a.m. when 300 graduates from twenty-five training programs will be interviewed for entry positions in business, industry, and government.

The occasion marks the fifteenth Annual Engineering-Business Recruitment Day and will bring together the two-year college graduate and the prospective employer in a mutual-benefit relationship.

Graduates are Trained And Ready

The three hundred graduates, the products of intensive counseling, instruction, and on-the-job training over a two-year period, are ready to meet with their employer recruitment teams. Fortified with resumes, job inventory analysis, and recommendations, the graduates have made their employer personal interview selections and are eagerly awaiting the recruiters.

"This batch of graduates" commented Joseph A. Amori, Recruitment Day Coordinator, "compares favorably with any previous grouping of graduates and it is somewhat superior in some aspects."

Engineering Technicians Superior

Approximately 100 Engineering Technology graduates will be available for interviews, many of whom are rated "outstanding" by their respective instructors. Electronic, electrical and civil engineering technicians are a stand-out. In spite of layoffs in the industry, the demand for technicians remains strong and entry salaries are up about five percent over 1969. Competition will be extremely keen among employers for the available graduates. In addition to space age employers firms searching for engineering technicians include Standard Oil of California, Pacific Telephone, Bechtel Corporation, Pacific Gas & Electric Company, and Southern Pacific Railroad.

Entry salaries will range from $550-$750 depending upon age, military training, previous experience in major field of concentration, and scholarship.

Secretaries in Great Demand

The secretary is still in great demand in all facets of business, industry and government, and far surpasses any other single occupational job classification. In spite of transcribing machines, the college woman who has mastered the English language, the electric typewriter, and takes verbal dictation at a reasonable rate, can literally write her own ticket. The demand far exceeds the supply in the San Francisco Bay Area.

A two-year college Secretarial Science graduate with typing and shorthand rates of 60 and 100 respectively with some employment experience in her major field can expect to draw as much as $600 per month. The average entry salary ranges from $500-$600 depending upon the usual qualifications.

Accountants in Short Supply

One of the most lucrative fields for business graduates is the general job classification, Accounting, and its many ramifications. The demand here is for males, but too few men are attracted to the field. There are many more jobs than there are candidates, consequently entry salaries are pushed to higher and higher ceilings. Entry salaries for men graduates range from $550-$750. Women graduates can expect a range from $400-$500. Government agencies are also participating in the competition for the most able of the crop.

Sales and Merchandising Trainees Wanted

With the expansion of department store chains into the suburbs, the demand for sales, merchandising, retailing and management trainees has skyrocketed. These large chain operations, including—Sears Roebuck, J. C. Penney, Woolworth, Emporium-Capwell, Montgomery Ward, Roos-Atkins, and many others, conduct year round recruitment on college campuses in all job categories. The opportunities for ambitious, dynamic, and enthusiastic trainees are limitless.

Airlines on the March For Trainees

Airlines are very much on the march for trainees, especially for flight personnel, including qualified trainees for stewardess training for the current 747 aircraft. While the demand is great, the requirements are rigid, even though some lines have cancelled all paper and pencil tests as a screening technique upon entry. Age, height and weight requirements and overall appearance remain firm. Minority graduates who meet the requirements and who have mastery of a second language, are very much in demand. Salaries are competitive and there are many fringe benefits.

Liberal Arts Majors Struggle for Jobs

The two-year college graduate with major emphasis in the so-called "Liberal Arts" will experience great difficulty in finding suitable employment in the current job market. The cry on all fronts is for "SKILLS." Employers make way for the graduate who has them in sufficient quantity and quality to be able to perform the assigned duties in a competent manner. The two-year college graduate with sociology, political science and history as his chief claim to a full-time career position will experience some real negative responses this year. The four-year college graduate is finding a similar response on the national level, too. Fortunately, the current crop of City College graduates desiring to enter the current labor market consists of very few who do not possess a productive skill.

How to Obtain Financial Assistance

By Shirley Fogarino

Rising costs of educational services are making it increasingly difficult for many college students to stay in school. There are, however, means by which a student may obtain financial aid through scholarships, grants and other forms of loans.

City College provides information and applications for financial aid through its financial aids office located in E107B. Mr. Kenneth Castellino is the administrator in charge of student loans.

Tuition-Free Education

California residents pay no tuition at City College. Students attending the college need only worry about the cost of books. For those who cannot afford to buy all of their books at once, book-loan forms are available in E107B during the first week of the semester. The loans must be repaid during the course of the semester, however students in extreme financial need may apply for a long-term loan or grant. Detailed information and instructions are printed on the cover of the Book Loan Application.

Federally Insured Loans

Federally insured loans are available through the Financial Aid Office and the bank with which the student or his family has an account. The loans may be given out to the student at the rate of up to $1,500 per year and are interest-free for as long as the student remains in college. After he leaves, he must pay an interest charge of 7 per cent per year from the begining of the repayment period until the loan is entirely repaid. Policies concerning the making of loans differ among the banks which participate in the program. Most of them require that applicants have an account that has been in existence for at least six months. Application processes for Federally Insured Loans begin at the Financial Aids Office.

National Defense Student Loans (NDSL)

The National Defense Loans are somewhat similar to Federally Insured Loans. These loans are not, however, made by a bank but by the college itself from a fund established and supervised by the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare. These are interest-free and the student makes no payments until after he leaves college. The interest-rate on these loans is 3 per cent rather than 7 per cent and there are special reductions in the repayment schedule for students who become teachers after graduating from college. Funds are limited for these loans and they are difficult to obtain. The student must prove that he is from a very low-income family. He must do this by filing a Parents' Confidential Statement with the College Scholarship Service in Berkeley.

Parents' Confidential Statement

The Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) is the basic form that City College requires of applicants for financial aid. A major exception for not filing the PCS would be a student who would wish to be considered for the Federally Insured Student Loan only. Students who apply for book loans alone also need not file the PCS.

Dorothy Brannigan, one of the secretaries in Financial Aids Office (E107B), is always willing to help the student gain further knowledge of the financial aid offered to him.
Photo by S. Fogarino

PCS forms may be obtained by visiting or writing the Financial Aids Office at City College. The PCS should be mailed with a check or money order for $3.00 to the College Scholarship Service, Box 1501, Berkeley, California 94701, and not to City College.

Work-Study Program

Jobs are available on campus for students who wish to earn part of the cost of college attendance. Funds for this program are provided by the United States Government and are intended for students of low or low-middle income families. The hourly rate for the jobs is $2.31 and the student is allowed a maximum of 15 hours per week working time. Assignments to jobs are administered by the College Placement Office, Room 132, Science Building, but a student must first establish his eligibility with the Financial Aids Office. Again, the student must fill out a PCS in order to do this.

Equal Opportunity Grants

Grants, which need not be repaid, are available to students from very low-income families. The U.S. Government provides the funds for this program and the funds are limited. To prove that he is from a low-income family by filing a PCS. A grant is not larger than one-half the total financial aid that a student receives. All grants are therefore matched with an equal amount of some other form of financial aid, not including the federally insured loan (FISL).

State Opportunity Grants

State grants are available to low-income students. These grants are intended to cover the cost of books, supplies, public transportation to and from college and membership in the Associated Students together with incidental expenses. The total grant does not exceed $200.

Scholarships

Scholarships that very in size from $25 to $200 are described in detail in the City College Catalogue. Application forms for these scholarships may be obtained from the Financial Aids Office.

Scholarships are rarely awarded to students who have a grade-point average below 3.0. Many included in the catalogue are limited to students in particular majors. In the case where majors are significant for application, the student should apply to the Chairman of the particular department in addition to applying to the Financial Aids Office.

Other Financial Aid

The Student's Confidential Statement (SCS) is similar to the PCS, but it is intended for students who are over the age of 21 and who have been totally independent, financially, from their parents for over one year. To be considered financially independent, a student must have maintained a separate residence for, at least one year, must not have been claimed as a dependent by his parents or by either parent of the federal and state income tax returns, and must have received no financial support from either parent for at least one year. Furthermore, it is possible that a student who is financially independent of his parents, and who has current financial need, may not be eligible for the Educational Opportunity Grant if he has grown up in a family of relative affluence. The EOG is intended for those students who have current financial need and who have had a history of financial need.

The SCS may be obtained from the Financial Aids Office. A brief interview is usually necessary before this form is issued. The method of application is the same used in the PCS. The filing fee is $2.50.

Readiness Program Provides Opportunity

By Monte Glover

The City College "Readiness Program" which began last month is designed to provide high school drop-outs and underprivileged persons with an immediate opportunity to attain higher education.

"As it presently exists," said Howard Schoon, principal coordinator of the program, "the Readiness Program consists of three phases: the Access, the Readiness, and the Retention."

"The Access is the toughest part of the program and most vital," Schoon said. "There are two men involved in this area, counselors George Hall, working primarily in Hunters Point, and Frank Maestra, working chiefly in the Mission District. Both men go out to the communities and let people know that this program exists. They see and talk with those who are interested and determine if that person should enroll.

"The Readiness" is the program itself. Once men or women enroll here at City College, they are placed in module classes (classes made up of not more than 20 students) in which students will take math and English as study prerequisites. One teacher is assigned to each module. At present there are only 12 students and one teacher, Miss Margaret Kramer. Individual tutoring is offered to students who want or need it.

"Retention comes under Readiness," Schoon said, "but unlike Readiness, its objective is to supply the students with financial assistance. Depending on their need, they may even obtain employment."

Dean of Instruction, James Billwiller, is one of the men responsible for the enactment of the Readiness Program. He said he believes that "The Readiness Program is primarily for high school drop-outs and high school graduates who have not had the opportunity to attend college. Also, it is for people considered underprivileged. However, anyone may apply."

"It is too soon," explained Counselor Hall, "to say the program is successful. Although the program has great potential, it is too soon to boast of accomplishment."

Among those expressing optimism in the program are Willis Kirk, dean of men; George Crippen, chairman of the black studies department, and Maritza Eslorzano, one of the students working "to help the unaware become aware of the program."

Horticulture Students Landscape Campus

By Bruno Forner

Larry Franchescina, chairman of the Campus Planning Committee, says that not enough credit has been given to the Ornamental Horticulture Department's role in the planting of trees around City College.

The man responsible for the project was Harry Nelson of the Horticulture Department, who mobilized his students into doing the project. The students are still working on it and he says, "If you come back in the year 2000, they'll still be doin' it!"

Some of the projects under way are: the herb garden in the rear of Smith Hall (for use by H & R students), planting of trees along Phelan Avenue and on both sides (north and south) of the Science Building, planting near the Educational Services Building (almost completed), and the landscaping of two square blocks between the Arts Building and the Laboratory Building, that is currently under construction.

All of the plants are grown in the aboretum in back of the Ornamental Horticulture Building, so that they'll get used to local climate.

"The students involved in the project are still working at it, although the area in front of the Science Building isn't being worked on. Nelson attributes this to bad planning on the part of Milton Pfleuger, the architect of the campus.

City College horticulture students dig their work.

LAST DAY DROP INDIVIDUAL COURSES May 13

Head Coordinator Quits

Marc Kovacs, Head Coordinator of the Guardsman for the Spring 1970 semester, quit on Tuesday, April 28.

Kovacs' main reason for quitting was his annoyance with Guardsman adviser, Mary Blair, and Dean of Instruction, Warren White, both of whom he accused of "censoring" the paper.

Big Brother Is Really Watching

By Tom Cleaver,
Feature Editor

The government maintains files on over two-and-a-half million Americans as potential "subversives," according to Kimball Johnson, director of the Civil Service Commission's Bureau of Personnel Investigations. Additionally, the Army keeps files on more than a million people they consider to be possible trouble-makers. The FBI has files on everyone almost, and the federal government, the governors of the various states, and the military have access to 264 million police records, 323 million medical histories, and 279 million psychiatric dossiers.

The Administration has recently announced an expansion of surveillance of radicals, avowedly because of the recent spate of bombing incidents across the country that have been laid to various radical groups such as Weatherman, the New York Crazies, and the Panthers. According to one federal spokesman, "... if we had had a phone tap on Diana Oughton's home, we could have prevented that bomb factory explosion."

The government goes to impressive lengths to gather information. During the investigation of Navy Seaman Roger Lee Priest in Washington, D.C. for possible subversive activities, ONI operatives disguised as janitors methodically went through the trash and garbage of the entire apartment building where Priest lived to gather possible evidence.

The Civil Service Commission operates out of room 2439 of the Civil Service building; clerks there take the names of everyone mentioned in radical publications or in stories appearing in "straight" publications about radical activities, to be added to the files. All the governmental agencies involved in this activity make their files available to each other. While the proposed National Data Bank — which would have centrally stored every piece of information the government had on every citizen in the country — is dead, the cross-referencing of all files the government has access to information which produces the same effect.

When the Army was discovered to be in the domestic spying — business, Congress raised a hue and cry about the situation, and the Army quickly agreed to get rid of its computerized files at Fort Holabird, headquarters of Military Intelligence. It was recently disclosed that — while the Army had done this — the original files around the country that had been used to build up the Holabird computer files had not been destoryed, and that the Army in fact was still engaged in domestic spying, in violation of orders.

For years, various groups have warned that the Government has over one million "John Doe" warrants ready for use in a mass roundup of political foes of whoever is in office at the time.

The Internal Security Act of 1950, written by Hubert H. Humphrey, provides for all persons "who may engage in subversive acts or who might become involved in acts of sabotage", to be placed in detention camps. Recently, there has been a great deal of action to try and get this law repealed.

At present, the camps are still in existence, though it would take awhile to get them fit for occupancy.

Almost any piece of confidential information on a person is available to the government. Confidential reports made by your doctor or psychiatrist can be obtained by the government and used against you, in violation of the laws covering the professional - client relationship. Your lawyer's files can be looked into. The notes of newspaper reporters — even those not used in a story — are fair game for the hunters.

Many people have recently warned about the possibility of a police state. William L. Shirer, chronicler of the history of Nazi Germany, sees parallels between America today and Germany just prior to the rise of Hitler. Congressman Tunney, running for U.S. Senator, has raised the fear that Nixon, Agnew and Mitchell are developing "new McCarthyism" in the country with their attacks on the news media, Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, and dissenters in general.

A recent CBS poll shows that 75 per cent of the people would do away with or seriously infringe upon the rights guaranteed under the First, Third, Fifth, Sixth and Eighth Amendments, and that the public is evenly divided on whether to do away with the Second and Fourth Amendments.

These amendments constitute the heart of the Bill of Rights, and are the only legal defense the individual has against the power of the State.

On and Off Campus

"Vote At 18"

The Youth Franchise Coalition is sponsoring a campaign to drum up support for the Vote At 18 Bill. The bill, if passed, will go into effect on January 1, 1971. It has already passed the Senate and will be facing the House of Representatives in about two weeks.

The Coalition urges all students at City College, and everywhere else in the City, to send letters to their congressmen. Congressman Philip Burton said he will favor the bill, while William Maillard is undecided. Supporters of the campaign may write to Congressman Maillard at: House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Free Recital

Sunday, May 3, at 3:00 p.m. Ina Chalis will sing arias and songs of Puccini, Ravel, Lopez Buchardo, Robert Fields, Rachmaninoff, Cherepnin, Richard Boede, Ginastera, Granados, and Obradors in the Auditorium of the Community Music Center, 544 Capp St., S.F., with the assistance of the Neighborhood Arts Program of the San Francisco Art Commission.

The competent and talented Ina Chalis is a member of the faculty of the Community Music Center. Mrs. Chalis is an active and known performer in the Bay Area. The pianist Joyce Bates will be an accompanist and soloist in works by Rachmaninoff and her own compositions. Another part will be accompanied by Richard Boede.

This concert has "special interest" because it will feature three Bay Area composers: Joyce Bates, Robert Fields, and Richard Boede.

Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Cuban Show

Cuban slides and movies were presented on May 1 at the Glide Church, Taylor at Ellis. The showings were sponsored by the Venceremos Brigadein honor of the sugar cane cutters, who have designated 1970 as "The Year of the Ten Million Tons." Two of the films shown were "Isle of Youth" and "May Day."

'The Transport'

City College's film series continued on Thursday night at 8:00 with "The Transport," made in Germany. It was screened in the Little Theater.

Music Program

On May 4, Monday, at 8:00 p.m., a concert of contemporary music and words entitled "Western Animal" will be presented at Intersection, 756 Union St., San Francisco.

The music will be performed by Eddie Sears and Friends and words by Max Crosley, who will read from his novel, Florescent Road. Original music composition by Edward Sears, including the title piece, "Western Animal," will be featured.

Part of the program will be a tribute to John Coltrane. The Friends include David Kelley, vibes and reeds; Jan Davis, tenor and baritone; Chuck Sher, bass; and Todd Capp, drums. Visuals are by Ruth Crosley.

Admission is a food-donation. For further information call Intersection at 397-6061.

This program is assisted by the Neighborhood Arts Program of the San Francisco Art Commission.

"Fast Chops"

Herman "East Chops" gave a College Hour concert in the Little Theatre last Thursday. "Fast Chops" lived up to his promotions as being a good old-fashioned blues, ragtime and boogie pianist. During the concert, he exhibited his skill on such old favorites as "My Pillow Is Full of Bricks and Now I Can't Rest My Head," "Pie in the Sky" and a jazz-boogie rendition of "Yesterday."

The concert was done on a note of levity. Absurd humor was utilized between songs. Lines such as "Did you hear the one about the rope? Skip it." were tossed off at amazing speed.

Transfer Students

A survey was recently made at the request of the Chancellor of Community Colleges in Sacramento to determine the transfer preferences of City College students. The results, as reported by Dean Brady, showed that out of 930 potential transferees, 435 students (47 percent) chose San Francisco State. Second highest was U. C. (mostly Berkeley) with 234 students (25 percent). San Jose State was elected by 74 students (8 percent), and the same number of students chose one of the other state colleges. Cal Poly was the choice of 51 students (5 percent), while 62 students (7 percent) chose other colleges or universities.

Lectures

The following are Scheduled College Hour speakers:

May 7 — Dr. Manuel Servin (USC) — The Historical Contributions of the Mexican-American.

May 14 — Dr. Frederick Goerner (KCBS & TV producer) The Search for Amelia Earhart.

May 21 — Dr. Donald Campbell (USF) — The Brundage Collection: Uses for Students of History.

The lectures will be held in the Little Theatre.

"Conference"

A. P. Giannini Junior High School was the scene of a one-day conference for teachers on MMay 2. Benjamin Henley (Acting Superintendent of Schools, Washington, D. C.) was the keynote speaker. The conference, going from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., was sponsored by the San Francisco Education Auxiliary.

"Ink on Newspaper" is the title of this creation by Gary Lynn Davis. It is one of many illustrations currently on display in the Architecture Exhibit Room on the second floor of Cloud Hall. The show is billed, "Explorations in Media," and is all done by City College students.

New Poli-Sci Course Coming in Fall

An experimental course, combining Communication 65A and Political Science 56, will be taught by three "teaching teams" beginning next semester.

Under this plan students will be enrolled in both courses simultaneously for a total of six units. The teachers of the course include English instructors Steve Levinson, Don Cunningham and Sue Brennan. The corresponding political science instructors are Marge Quackenbush, Dick Bloomer and Pat Butler.

According to Levinson, a purpose of this combination is to "break down the barriers between the two courses." One method would be to study language as it is used in war and patriotism. Another would be to study how contemporary problems are reflected in the arts.

Mr. Levinson, whose "team member" will be Miss Quackenbush, said that the course would include three 2 hours sessions each week.

Miss Quackenbush mentioned that, because of the course's experimental nature, students will be assigned to it rather than having the option of electing it.

She said that the course outline would be closely related to that information which students could gather from the media. Some general topics that will be studied next fall are ecology as a political issue, poverty, minorities, and the California elections.

Trackmen 5th in GGC

Merritt's Warren Edmonson sets a meet record, 9.5 sec. in the 100 at City College.

Tough Loss to CSM, But Rams Wipe Out Laney

The Ram track team lost a close one to the College of San Mateo Bulldogs last April 17th, but the Rams came back on the following Tuesday to take their frustrations out on the Laney Eagles.

The Rams were beaten 76 to 60 by the Bulldogs. Against the Eagles the traekmen ran up 84 points to Laney's 52 for the win. Both track meets were held at City.

In the Ram loss, Bulldog dominance on the track and a splitting of the field events were key faetors in the visitor's win.

Ram track highlights included Andy Watkins' first in the 100 (10.6), and Paul Brickley's first in the 2 mile (9:54.4).

On the field the Rams took their usual first in the triple jump as Donny Bruce grabbed it with a 45'4¼" jump. Ram long jumper Dave Robinson snatched a first with his 22'3¾" leap. Billy Metcalf gave the Rams 5 points with his first in the high jump (6'4").

The tables were turned somewhat when the Rams tore up visiting Laney 84 to 52. The Eagles were overwhelmed in the distance, hurdles, and the field events.

Laney took the dashes but from there on was neatly sewed up by the superior Ram performances. Donny Bruce snatched a first from Laney in the 120 hhs with his 15.4 clocking. The Rams swept the Intermediate hhs, with John Brooker leading his teammates with a 58.6 time.

Ram distance man Humberto Hernandez took a first in the 880 (2:01) as he led the Rams to a sweep in that event. Hernandez also made off with a first in the mile (4:38.6). In the 2 mile, Rudolfo Navacz ran up a first with a 9:56.9 timing as the Rams again swept an event.

On the field the Rams squashed Laney, as the Eagles were only able to take the pole-vault. High-jumper Billy Metcalf cleared the bar at 6'4" to take first. Ram trackman Dave Robinson earned a first place in the long jump with his 22' jump. Thinclad Frank Oross took firsts in both the shot put and the discus as he threw respectively 43'2½" and 130'-10". Derrick Williams made off with the triple jump as he went 44'2" for a first.

Improved Ram Racketeers On The Upswing

Completely reversing last year's dismal tennis record, Coach Diederichsen's team is practically a solid shoo-in for a third place finish in the GGC.

Presently the Ram tennis team holds a record of 5 wins and 2 losses. Both losses came at the hands of GGC tennis powers: Chabot and Foothill.

Next season the Rams will be greeting back 7 out of 8 varsity players. Coach Diederichsen says that all of his players have continually shown improvement. For instance, Paul Staffatos is the team's most consistent winner against the tough schools.

Adding strength to the double is Jeff Cornell, and a good nugget for next season is Frank Udovich, a very consistent player.

The tennis team from April 30 to May 2 will participate in the GGC Conference Championships at Chabot, Foothill won the dual match title in the league. City expects to finish second at Chabot behind powerful Foothill.

Baseball Skein Ends; Rams Bombed Twice

By Joe Konte

The Ram baseballers stretched their winning skein to five with a 12-3 trouncing of Merritt, but fell prey to the slugging Chabot and San Mateo clubs.

CCSF's streak came to a sudden halt on April 18 when Chabot banged out fourteen hits, good for two five run innings, to clobber the Rams 12-5. The assault began off Ram pitcher Rick Esealambre. The hard-hitting Chabot club sent ten men to bat in a five run second inning. The battered Escalambre was bailed out by John Farrell in the fourth, but not until five more Chabot runners had crossed the plate. John Farrell, hero of the San Jose win only four days before, came on to blank the enemy batsmen, allowing only four hits and no runs for the last four innings.

Ray Spediacci was the victim of a torrid, one-sided slugfest held by San Mateo on April 21, as the CSM team bombed the Rams 12-0.

Spediacci was pounded for ten runs and twelve hits in the first four innings before he left the game. The Rams banged out eleven hits, but were careful not to put too many together for fear they may score a run. Red Ramos had three hits, and Vince Anderson had two for CCSF.

The Rams walked all over Merritt in their April 16 contest. CCSF seored eight runs in the first Inning on only one hit, a double by pitcher Spediacci. The rally included eight walks, an error, and the double, as the Rams sent thirteen men to the plate. Spediacci galned the win as he struck out nine while going the distance. His bid for a shntout was ruined in the ninth when a Merritt slugger cracked a three run homer.

Joe Doyle Leads Rams Past Laney; San Jose Whips CCSF Twice

The Ram golfers came alive to crush Laney for the second consecutive time, but then went down to defeat twice against powerful San Jose.

Joe Doyle stepped into the spotlight with a round of 75, his best of the year, to lead CCSF to a 51-3 romp over Laney. The win came only two days after the Rams had walloped that same Laney squad 50-4. John Susko settled for a 76, and Greg Corvi a 77. Jerry Doyle fired an 81 and the consistent Rich Nablefield carved out an 83.

But it was feast to famine for the floundering Rams, as they dropped a pair of matches to San Jose. In the first meet at Almaden, Susko had a 79 and Corvi an 80. San Jose's Roger Maltbie was on top of the heap with a one-under par 71, while teammate Ron Carciere shot a 77.

Joe Doyle again starred for the Rams, but even his 77 was far short of competing with the tough core of San Jose hackers, SJCC had four men scoring in the 70's, led by Don Leonard's 74.

The losses set the CCSF record at 7-5 for the year. The Rams need to win at least one of their remaining two matches with San Mateo in order to at least tie last year's 8-6 mark.

Three Rams Place In GGC Swim Meet

CCSF's limited crew of swimmers splashed their way through the Golden Gate Conference Championships, held April 17-18, at the newly constructed Diablo Valley College pool. The Diablo swimmers proved to be rude hosts, as they upset favored Foothill to capture the meet.

Three of the nine Ram athletes who participated in the two day event came through with respectable performances. The team's lone diver, George Smith, placed eighth in the one-meter diving event. Smith would have had a chance to place high in the three-meter competition, but had to leave the meet early to fulfill his army reserve duties. Tom Keck placed tenth in the 100-butterfly with his best mark of the year, a 59.7 clocking. Bill Clark also placed with a 246.6 time in the 200-breast, the first time he has participated in that event.

Next stop for the lowly Rams was in last weekend's engagement at the Northern California Championships at College of Marin. Approximately twenty junior colleges will be represented in the meet. CCSF will send only four swimmers, and diver Smith to the contest. The goal of the individuals will be for a berth in the April 30 State Finals at Costa Mesa.

After last year's 0-5 season, the Ram philosophy was that "It can't get any worse this year." Well, they were right, but it didn't get any better either. Coach Curt Deeker commented on his feelings after another winless season:

"I was dissapointed at the amount of turnouts we had this year. There are some good swimmers that we could have used. But I'm proud of the effort of the swimmers. They did the best as could be expected. And they all swam their best times at some time of the year."

The outlook for next year's squad is not very bright. Only four of the nine swimmers will be back for '71. One of the key losses will be Smith, who is heading for greener pastures in the form of SF State. Len Lynch, a fine distance swimmer, may rejoin the Rams after missing this season due to military obligations.

Decker has pointed to some senior high school swimmers around San Francisco that he hopes to sway to CCSF. Help is needed immediately before the swimming team sinks out of existen...

Candlestick: An Antique Park In '70

Remember when Candlestick Park was baseball's most modern stadium? We can recall opening day on a Tuesday afternoon in 1960, when Candlestick rolled out its welcome mat to the San Francisco Giants.

Giants President Horace Stoneham acclaimed the new stadium as being the most modern in baseball. Those fans in attendance could only stare at the massive, double-decked structure. They peered upward at the gigantic scoreboard looming auspiciously among the clouds out in right field. Then their eyes swayed downard to the freshly planted green grass on the playing surface. We overheard a remark on the beauty and splendor of the arena. "A work of art," said one fellow, as he surveyed the park. "The stadium of the future," muttered another fan, struck with great emotions one feels when confronted by a spectacular sight.

. . . But that was opening day on a Tuesday afternoon in 1960.

Today, the city is attempting to modernize "quaint" Candlestick Park. At this point of the 1970 season, eight of the eleven National League clubs romp around in new, modern stadiums, while two other teams await completion of their new homes. New York, St. Louis, San Diego, Montreal, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, and Houston are the cities with the most recently completed parks. Of these, only LA's and Montreal's stadiums are non-football complexes, and the Canadian club doesn't have a grid team anyway. Cincinnati and Philadelphia are the clubs who will soon pack suitcases for their new roost. That leaves Chicago, which still even refuses to equip their stadium with lights, apparently content not to let night baseball replace sex.

However, Candlestick Park's problems are not simply in it being out-modernized, but in the windstorms and hurricanes, which announcer Russ Hodges persists in calling a "gentle breeze."

The fans are beset with an icy wind that would make an eskimo run for shelter, and the players are forced to venture from their igloos to take their turn at bat. And who will forget the Giants' little relief ace, Stu Miller, being blown off the mound during the 1961 All Star Game.

San Francisco has lately made a bid to put new life into the aging park. Plans for revision of the stadium to include the football men are being made. But as of now, no one is giving the park much praise. Just a few weeks ago, we heard some Giant fan, wrapped in blankets on another windy day, mutter, "I'm surprised a city like San Francisco never built a modern stadium." Did you hear that Horace? Horace?

Book Review:

'Empire And Revolution'

By Jim Browning

It is becoming increasingly clear that American history has never been history at all, but rather a largely untold series of conflicts and often times bloody struggles between competing racial, religious and class interest groups.

This view of America has simply not come forth from America's "leading" historians and scholars. What instead has been presented to countless generations of students is a contrived myth of an America that is "honorable," "noble" and genuinely concerned with safeguarding "freedom" and "dignity" in the world. This, in short, is an America that has never really existed.

However, the rise of a new radical Left movement in America has served to better focus attention on America's true past. A good share of the research that is presently being conducted points to American complicity and involvement in numerous power plays, imperialistic adventures, monopolistic exploitation, and political manipulation at home as well as abroad.

David Horowitz' latest work, "Empire and Revolution" is appropriately subtitled "A Radical Interpretation of Contemporary History."

Horowitz, from 1963 to 1965, served as director of research for the Bertrand Russell Peace Foundation. From this position, he was instrumental in much of the planning for the International War Crimes Tribunal.

The Tribunal, composed of intellectuals, activists and political figures from throughout the world, met as an independent body in Sweden. After sifting through a mass of evidence, the Tribunal found the United States guillty of aggression against the Vietnamese people and 53 other acts of aggression since 1918.

Horowitz, in "Empire and Revolution," meticulously demonstrates that this aggression is not, as many people think, an isolated incident or "aberration."

On the contrary, it is part of a carefully constructed pattern with roots extending deep into the nineteenth century. America's relations with other nations has always been based on its own narrow economic designs. This is especially true today with the "emerging nations of the Third World."

Likewise, American foreign policy has been bent around the notion of world economic control. Such things as "manifest destiny," the Spanish-American war, the two World wars, the Cold war, the Korean war and now Southeast Asia must be seen from this perspective.

At this point in American history, corporate enterprise holds the pivotal power in world affairs. Since World War II, the top American corporations have grown and expanded at a fantastic rate. As an example, the largest American bank, the Bank of America, in 1945 had only one foreign branch; today it has over one hundred foreign offices in Europe, Canada, Latin America and Southeast Asia.

Horowitz notes: "U.S. direct foreign investments alone increased more than sevenfold between 1946 and 1966—from $7.2 billion to $54.6 billion . . . Indeed U.S. firms abroad constitute the third largest economic unit after the U.S. and Soviet domestic economies."

Horowitz directly attributes the increasingly reactionary and counter-revolutionary role that America is adapting in world politics to "the post-war expansion of the U.S. corporate stake in the global economy."

From this view, Horowitz shows how America uses foreign "aid" to secure greater control over the internal political institutions of various countries. For example, the U.S. is presently one of the major supporters of the ruling military junta in Greece. Horowitz further points out that "the plan for the military takeover had been drawn up with the help of the Greek army's American NATO advisors as a precaution against a liberal success in the forthcoming elections."

Also cited is the continued aid which the U.S. gives to support the numberous oligarchical dictatorships in Latin America. In Paraguay, for instance, according to Horowitz, less than one-tenth of the population owns 95 per cent of the land; there is a 90 per cent illiteracy rate; 50 per cent of the state budget is military; and the dictatorship that runs the country is so ruthless that upwards of one-third of the population is in exile.

Despite this, in the first year of the Kennedy-sponsored Alliance of Progress, Paraguay received $23.9 million in American aid.

Horowitz devotes several chapters to an analysis of the Soviet Union's development. It is his main contention that the Bolshevik revolution of 1917 was betrayed by Stalin.

He also feels that many of the revolutionary principles and ideals of Lenin, and other leading Marxist figures were drowned by Stalin's bloody purges, mismanagement, corruption and efforts to promote "peaceful coexistence" with the world's capitalist powers.

"The vulgarization of Marxist concepts in the Soviet Union led not to world revolution and socialism but to bureaucracy and reaction. As Horowitz sums it up:

"Stalin's revolution was a revolution from above, however, based not on a class but-on-a-bureaucracy, not on a popular upsurge but on the suppression of the popular will; it inevitably remained restricted and contradictory in its progress, and ultimately incomplete."

Stalin's revisionism which laid the foundation for a revival of great Russian chauvinism (instead of Marxist internationalism), Horowitz contends, contributed greatly to capitalism's advance in Europe, Latin America and other key areas of the world. One example Horowitz uses is Indonesia. Here it is known that the Kremlin furnished aid to the Indonesian government both during and after the rightist military coup in 1965 that resulted in the ouster of Indonesian president Sukarno and the wholesale massacre of thousands of Communists and their sympathizers.

Perhaps the best feature of "Empire and Revolution" is the emphasis placed on the growing potential of the Third World and national liberation. Horowitz stresses the Cuban revolution as a model of the waging of a successful national liberation struggle: ". . . revolutionary Cuba, which, partly because of its pre-revolutionary development, partly the material support it received from Russia (relative to its small size) and partly the exceptional quality of its leadership, was ideologically and in many other crucial respects the most advanced revolution to date."

Horowitz envisions the Third World as an independent world center of revolutionary activity. Asia, Africa and Latin America (not to mention the Black colony in America), are the future staging rounds for liberation struggles against neo-colonialism and U.S. imperialism.

The major flaws that I find are that Horowitz somewhat shortsightedly dismisses the impact of the Chinese revolution on Third World thinking and doesn't realize that to have a true liberation struggle against U.S. imperialism, all people—including white, brown, red and yellow workers—will have to unite.

Just as the Russian revolution gave new hope to the working classes in Europe and America, the Chinese revolution has had a tremendous positive effect, in some ways more than the Cuban revolution, on the consciousness of many struggling non-whites. Although there are certain serious criticisms that can be leveled against the Chinese, some of which Horowitz points out, it does not alter the fact that the Chinese liberation struggle greatly influenced the course of world history.

Even more, the Chinese have, in many instances, been able to provide technical and material assistance to Third World countries, particularly in Africa, on a non-reciprocal, no-deal basis. Also it should be remembered that the Chinese Communists, despite what one thinks of their politics, have forced the well-developed U.S. military machine into a political stalemate (thereby curbing aggression) in certain areas of the Third World — Korea and Formosa being immediate examples.

Overall, "Empire and Revolution" is a very ambitious work. Horowitz applies sound Marxist theory to the critical study of his typical as well as contemporary trends and developments in order to grasp the substance and meaning of world events.

"Empire and Revolution" is a valuable book to have

The Guardsmon is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsmon, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447. Mail address: 50 Phelan Ave., San Francisco, 94112.

the Guardsman

SPRING 1970

News Editor . . . . . Jim Browning
Managing Editor . . . . . Paul Thiele
Sports . . . . . Mike Chan, Joe Konte

Staff

Feature Editor — Tom Cleaver

REPORTERS:
Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruno Forner, Shirley Fogorino, David Hugunin, Ron Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Manders, Erik Holdfond, Monte Glover.

PHOTOGRAPHERS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

Advisor . . . . . Mary Blair

Editorial:

The Role Of A Radical

By Tom Cleaver

A recent Tuesday, April 15th, the streetcar I was riding home on was stopped at West Portal because of a telephoned "bomb threat." We were stuck there for 25 minutes while the police bomb squad went through the tunnel, checking for a possible bomb.

My first reaction was one of personal anger. I felt I have better things to do with 25 minutes of my time than sit on a streetcar because some petty-bourgeois teenybopper-scum-"revolutionary" has decided to strike a "body blow" at "the system."

After fuming in such fashion for several minutes, I calmed down and looked around at my fellow would-be victims. I saw: me, a 26-year-old married student; a dozen little old ladies going shopping; several suburban housewives; a number of City College students (mostly hip-looking); a number of Chicanos; about one-third of the people on the streetcar were Blacks.

There wasn't one "capitalist" in the lot. Not even a baby "piglet" in the bunch. No generals, admirals, or assorted "militarists" (perhaps a draftee, on leave?). Not a single "bureaucrat" in sight. No "enemy," just people. Not only people, but Wow!—The People . . . The Great Toiling Proletariat. The very ones who have to be reached if any movement for change is to be successful. The People, the wonderful people, whom "radicals" speak of so lovingly. There The People sat, possible victims of a "revolutionary act" against the capitalist imperialist state. BULL!

A Radical SERVES The People, working in their interests, to demonstrate concretely to them just who is really on their side. You do not reach people and convince them that they should give up what is and work to change it to something better by threatening them with the possibility of maiming or a horrible death in a bomb blast.

A paid police agent couldn't do a better job of solidifying support for Nixon, Agnew, Mitchell, & Co. than these pseudo-revolutionary Teenybopper LIBERALS did. A liberal worries about everyone's liberation and oppression except his own. This can lead the liberal to take pseudo-revolutionary actions against the people he thinks he is serving, because they are not "intelligent enough" to heed his call to The New World at first shout. You petty-bourgeois teenybopper liberals sure as hell aren't part of ANY revolution that I'm part of!

KCSF Survey Results

Radio station KCSF's music-news survey which ended April 17 drew a total of 534 replies.

The results indicated that the three most popular music formats were Top 40 (107 votes, 20.3 per cent), Hard Rock (80, 14.9), and Soul (73, 13.6 per cent). FM radio station K-101 was the most listened-to station of all, drawing a tally of 78. KSFO (AM) and KSAN (FM Stereo) were neck-and-neck for second place with 61 and 60 votes, respectively.

At the April 21 KCSF meeting, the broadcasters voted between a format mixing Top 40, Hard Rock, and Soul, and a Free-Form format in which the DJ plays and does whatever he wants on his show. Although Free Form only received a 10.8 per cent vote on the survey, it was favored by the club, 11-6.

Five-minute news broadcasts each hour were favored by 53.3 per cent of the voters who also indicated that they want international news coverage.

At the same time the KCSF Broadcast Club discussed converting to a daily, 15-minute newscast that would cover the day's events comprehensively, rather than having capsule reports every hour.—P.T.

President Conlan Announces Retirement

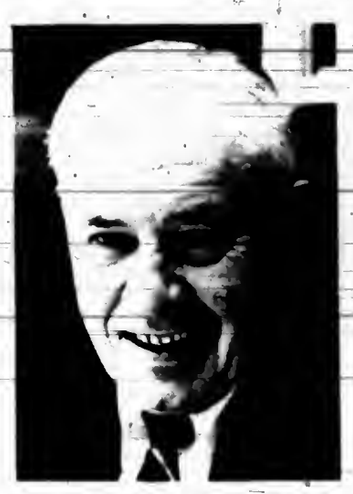
By Bruno R. Forner

Dr. Louis Conlan, President of City College, has made it official: he will retire from his post effective August 31.

Conlan made the announcement in a letter he submitted to Superintendent of Schools, Robert E. Jenkins, and Board of Education President, Alan B. Nichols.

Retires — Not Quits

During the course of an interview, Conlan said "I didn't resign. I just notified the Board of Education that I will retire from my duties effective August 31." The announcement verifies earlier rumors that he would retire this year.



"Mrs. Conlan and I decided that when I became 65, I better get out," he said.

Successor

The Board of Education is now faced with the task of choosing Dr. Conlan's successor. The Board also is looking for a new Superintendent (Conlan was prominently mentioned for that post).

When questioned on who his successor will be, Conlan answered, "There are a number of people who are particularly well qualified for the position of President. I do not think it ethical to comment on it."

Columnist Jack Rosenbaum of the Examiner has on three different occasions stated that Vice President Louis Batmale would be Dr. Conlan's probable successor.

Dr. Louis G. Conlan, President of City College.

Dr. Conlan's plans after retirement include continuing his interest in education and spending some time on the golf course.

Sees Growth

The new junior college district was one of many ideas that was fostered during Conlan's administration.

Dr. Conlan became President of the College in 1949.

During his 21 years he has seen the campus grow from only the Science Building to its present five-building setup — which includes Smith Hall, the Educational Services Building, Cloud Hall, the Arts Building. The soon to be occupied Visual Arts Building, and the Student Union Building, now under construction, have also come about during his term as head of the college.

Dr. Conlan has also seen student enrollment grow from a measly 5,000 students to the current bustling 15,000 plus.

The faculty has just about doubled — to almost 500 — during that time.

An interesting sidelight is that the Board of Education will announce Superintendent Jenkin's successor on May 15, their self-imposed deadline. When they're through with that, they will be faced with the selection of the new City College President.

In addition, Conlan (contrary to what had been printed earlier by Rosenbaum) did not have to retire this year. He had the option of staying as President one more year.

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 9 | SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA | WED., MAY 6, 1970

320820 PAMPHLET

City College of San Francisco Library

One of the many signs at the Greek Rally in Civic Center.

Greek Americans Protest U.S. Involvement in Greece

Beginning April 21, a small group of Greek-Americans embarked on a five-day round-the-clock vigil at the local Greek consulate to protest the military dictatorship of Greece and the American support of it.

Observance of "Greek Passion Week" began with the lighting of a freedom torch at the consular office at Gough and Vallejo streets. The week was culminated with a rally at the Civic Center on April 25, followed by a march to the consulate to extinguish the freedom torch.

The principal speaker at the Civic Center rally, Judge Robert Bostick of the Superior Court of Alameda County, claimed that, "one of the reasons the junta survives is because of the support given by the United States." He said that $56 million in military aid, twice that authorized by Congress, was given by the Pentagon to the junta last year. He also said that these arms were being used to suppress the people of Greece rather than protect Greece from foreign powers.

The five-day demonstration, because of its small and peaceful nature, may possibly have been ineffective in bringing to the attention of San Franciscans the plight of the Greek people which began with a military coup d'etat on April 21, 1967.

It was on that day that a small group of Greek colonels, dedicated to saving Greece from Communism, overthrew the government of Premier Panayotis Kanellopoulous. That they have succeeded in obliterating the "Communist threat" is, indeed, an understatement.

The new military government has abolished trial by jury, banned freedom of the press, outlawed every political party, made political prisoners of thousands of Greeks suspected of opposing the regime and have even made it a criminal offense for one to entertain five or more people in his home at one time. That offense is punishable with a minimum of five years in prison.

The junta has made use of additional methods, although none of them have sparked as much international concern as their alleged methodical torturing of political prisoners. Of the very few accounts available is a book by

(Continued on Page 3)

Student Activities to Continue As Usual

By Paul Thiele

All student activities at City College will continue as usual this semester.

The decision that many concerned students, particularly athletes, were waiting to hear for the past week was made by Student Council at their Monday, May 4 meeting. Eight council members voted against suspension of all student activities while four voted in favor of the measure.

Before the vote was taken, Renato Larin, Associated Students president, ended discussion of the measure and gave his opinion on the situation in general.

"Nobody has presented me a written statement on how to really change the prices in the bookstore. All we've done is talk and talk," Larin said.

After the vote, Charles Smith, originator of the proposal, said that even though the motion was not passed, it gave the audience an idea of what the council has to do to make its presence known on campus.

Reflecting on bookstore prices in general, councilman Roger Cassell said, "It's not only the bookstore, but department heads and faculty members who change the books before the semester is completed." He added that the bookstore does not pay the regular percentage on discontinued books because they have no use for them.

Charles Smith said, "We have to talk to the instructors and department heads about this. It screws those students who have to sell their used books, and creates unnecessary expense for students."

The Bookstore Committee will hold a meeting today at 3:00 in President Conlan's office, E-200, in which all interested students are invited to attend.

Crusade Started To 'Save The Gophers'

The "Save the Gophers" crusade has gained momentum!

It started when concerned students inquired about the need and methods used to remove the rodents on the campus grounds. The landscapers now set traps, which either maim or kill the gophers.

"The issues are gophers, grass, and trees," explained Dr. Harry Buttimer, the coordinator of Educational Management. The gophers dig holes in the grass, and eat the tree roots, presenting a landscaping problem.

When the construction of buildings takes place, the natural order of life in the underground world is disrupted, and all life, be it rats, mice, or gophers, must move to other

(Continued on Page 2)

Nicky Cruz, Former Punk Turned Minister, To Speak Tomorrow

The Reverend Nicky Cruz, author of the book "Run Baby Run" will speak in the football stadium tomorrow at 11 a.m. The meeting is being sponsored by the City College chapter of Campus Ambassadors for Christ.

Cruz was born in Puerto Rico and came to the United States at the age of 15. Soon, he became a leader of "the fiercest and most feared gang in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of New York City." At the age of 16 he became leader of the "blood-thirsty" Mau-Maus.

It wasn't until Cruz was 18 that he met the Rev. David Wilkerson (author of the book "The Cross and the Switchblade"), who helped Cruz change his life through religion. He is now a graduate of the Bible Institute of La Puenta, California, and also founder and director of "Outreach for Youth," a center devoted to rehabilitation of ex-dope addicts.

Nicky Cruz

In Cruz's book, which was passed around free Tuesday, he describes the way he felt about his surroundings thusly: "A life motivated by hate and fear has no room for everyone but self. I hated everyone . . ."

Now, Cruz will appear to extend his word tomorrow. In addition to the appearance on the football field, Cruz will also speak at The Glad Tidings Temple at 7:30 that evening. The Temple is located at 1475 Ellis Street. Contact the Chinese Community Center or call 776-5770 for further information.

'Save The Gophers!'

(Continued From Page 1)

locales.

The students concerned about the welfare of gophers asked if the gophers need to be eliminated from this campus at all. They discussed alternative methods of gopher disposal, such as poisoning and trapping. Other animals, however, might eat the poison, and the furry rodents aren't easy to catch.

The influence of the ecology movement was revealed when the possibility of introducing predators, such as barn owls and snakes, was considered. Advice on such methods is forthcoming from the UC Davis campus.

Because of the problems associated with the gopher removal, the future of the City College gophers is very much in doubt.

Find the gopher trap? Look carefully.

(Photo by Forner)

S.F. State Folk Fest Opens This Friday

The 8th annual San Francisco State Folk Festival is scheduled for this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 8, 9 and 10.

Among the artists to appear are Mike Bloomfield, A. B. Skhy, Willie Nelson, Gene Vincent and the Bluecaps, Vern and Ray, Merle Travis, Sandy Bull, Styx River Ferry and Steve Young.

EVENTS

Friday, May 8

11 a.m.—Sandy Bull Workshop, Gallery Lounge

12 noon—Concert, Merle Travis, Sandy Bull, Styx River, and Terry Tracy, Speakers Platform.

2 p.m.—Guitar Workshop, Mike Bloomfield and Merle Travis, Gallery Lounge.

Saturday, May 9

11 a.m.—Song Writing Workshop, Curley Cook, Steve Young, and others, Gallery Lounge

12 noon—Concert, Gene Vincent, A. B. Skhy, Steve Young, and Vern and Ray, Speakers Platform

4 p.m.—Band Workshop, Members of Mike Bloomfield and Friends and A. B. Skhy, Gallery Lounge

4 p.m.—Bluegrass & Country Workshop, Vern and Ray and Styx River Ferry, Ed. 117

5:00 p.m. on—Open Hoot, Gallery Lounge

Sunday, May 10

11 a.m.—Sacred Song Concert, Vern & Ray, Speakers Platform

12:00 p.m.—Concert, Mike Bloomfield, Merle Travis, Willie Nelson, Sandy Bull & Styx River, Speakers Platform

For information call 469-2171

The Experimental College sponsored the "Cleveland Wrecking Company," a rock quartet, last Friday.

The concert took place on a stretch of road located due east of the new Visual Arts building. The group played to about 500 students who sat on a hillside where the powerful amplifiers were aimed.

Hot Astronomy: Far-Out Subject

By Elizabeth Driscoll

David Cudaback, a radio astronomer, spoke last week on "Hot Astronomy."

"Hot astronomy deals with the nature of cosmic violence in our universe," said Mr. Cudaback in a College Hour lecture. "Cosmic rays are nuclear particles which come down through the earth's atmosphere. They can be measured by the techniques used for nuclear physics experiments. It has become more and more apparent that the energies of some of these cosmic ray particles is very high."

In reference to the evolution of the earth, Mr. Cudaback said, "Explosive processes are certainly involved in how we came to be here but the connection is much more removed. One way we can view things in the universe is that some things explode and that after some time these new explosions coalesce and form new stars and planets. This is certainly the most dramatic part of the formation of the universe. There are an uncountable number of galaxies in our universe. Galaxies come in a variety of types, and in a galaxy like ours it is possible to exist because ours is non-violent.

"If you want to look for life on other planets, don't look in violent galaxies. Some galaxies are highly explosive, and some give off radio waves. These are known as pulsars. The radio waves are uniform in time but of different intensities each time. Because of this uniformity in radio waves, at one time it was thought that there might be life up there trying to say 'hello.' However, the pulsars are natural phenomena."

Also included in the slides were pictures of super-novas (super-stars) and the ordinary nova (ordinary star). A super-nova is a star that explodes with a bright light. In 1054, on July 4, the Crab Nebula exploded. It was brighter than Venus and was visible during the day. Oriental history reports the nebula but it was never reported in European history.

Mr. Cudaback said of nebula, "In the 18th Century nebulous objects were recorded by an astronomer named Messier. In 1935 it was realized that these nebulous objects might be the remains of an exploding star. In 1938, J. Robert Oppenheimer developed some new ideas about exploding stars. He pointed out that when a star explodes and pushes material out it has to be a supposed reaction. Oppenheimer worked out what the pressure and center of the star would be. Under the conditions of equal force of gravity and equal force of pressure a star would be formed."

Mr. Cudaback's final point in his lecture was, "The most remarkable concept is that things like the Crab Nebula can suddenly have something happen to them to make them really fall together and pop out of existence to a point where we can't see them or record their radio waves."

Student Survey! Students Agree With Faculty

City College students indicated their opinions on midterm grade reports, the length of finals week, and creation of the office of Ombudsman in a recent survey sponsored by Student Council.

Approximately 600 students replied to a survey similar to one which was issued to 300 faculty members by the Academic Senate. The student survey was distributed to two classes at the Men's and Women's gym. The survey was mailed to veterans and other students who do not take physical education classes.

Midterm Reports

A question dealing with the possible consolidation of two midterm reports into one report showed a divergence of views between faculty who voted 183 to 108 in favor of the change, and students who voted 336 to 217 against the change of report periods.

Ombudsman

A question dealing with the installation of an Ombudsman (a person who acts as a liaison between students and faculty) which the faculty voted solidly against, 190 to 78, was mildly approved by the students, 275 to 256, with 24 without opinions.

Elimination of finals week was strongly opposed in both the faculty survey and the student survey. Proposed changes in grading practices such as repeating D, F, or I grades without penalty, repeating B and C grades, and exclusion of D, F, or I grades were all favored very strongly by both faculty and students, who were also in agreement with retaining the present semester calendar instead of one which would have the Fall semester start in August.

Fashion Show

The Associated Women Students put on a fashion show last Thursday for 150 graduating students from private and public high schools all over the city. The purpose of the program was to show the students the various activities on campus.

Booth displays were put on ranging from Afro-American scenes to Medical Assisting. Entertainment was provided by Great Rhythm and Blues Band, The Soulful Sounds, the Jerry Southern Group, and the Soulettes.

The fashion featured such styles as the "wet" look, the maxi-look, flare pants, Edwardian style coats, knits, the mini-look, summer outfits, and leather and suede outfits. The fashions were provided courtesy of Farrah's clothing store at 4460 Mission St. Commentating on the fashions was done by Mr. Farrah, Jr.

Greek Protest . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

James Becket entitled, Barbarism in Greece.

One chapter, which was reproduced in the April, 1970, issue of Ramparts, is the story of a young woman who was arrested only two days after the coup and thrown in jail. While imprisoned she was often kept in isolation, once for four days without food or water. She was interrogated for hours at a time; often her interrogaters had to be relieved due to their own fatigue. And she was beaten and tortured for the purpose of obtaining information.

Unable to obtain a "confession" from her, the regime gave her a suspended sentence, enabling her to later flee the country. Once in exile, she made the charge that "tortures take place officially sanctioned and scientifically organized for the purposes of extracting information and . . . to destroy individual personality."

The charges of torture that have been made to date have been given enough creditability that the Council of Europe recently voted to condemn the Greek junta on ten specific counts of torturing political prisoners.

It should be noted, however, that the local critics of the colonels were not without opposition. On April 24, a group of 37 prominent "civic leaders" issued a statement that condemned the protestors and voiced support for the Greek regime.

Among them was Peter Bourdoures of the Board of Permit Appeals who claimed that most of the torture charges were unfounded. He also said that many of those in Greek jails belong there, as do many of the local demonstrators.

Municipal Judge S. Lee Vavuris and former Mayor George Christopher are two of the 37 prominent civic leaders, as is Peter Tamaras of the Board of Supervisors. All have given their support to the fascist Greek dictatorship.

Greek Protest at Civic Center Rally

On and Off Campus

Day Care

The Watoto Weusi School, a nursery-childcare center for children 2½ to 5 years of age, is having an open house Sunday, May 10, 1970, from Noon until 5:00 p.m. The event will take place at 2400 Post Street in San Francisco. There will be refreshments and entertainment and at that time the school will begin its first annual fund raising drive.

The Watoto Weusi Nursery School is an innovative educational experience and can succeed only with community support. All interested persons are invited to attend the open house.

For further information, contact Mrs. Kathryn Witcher. Telephone: 563-8577.

"Cecil Brown"

The San Francisco Black Arts and Writer's Workshop will present Cecil Brown, author of "The Life and Love of Mr. Jiveass Nigger," Monday, May 11, at 8 p.m. at 394 Hayes street.

Mr. Brown holds two degrees in literature, an A.B. from Columbia University and an M.A. from the University of Chicago. He has been on the faculty of the University of Illinois, Merritt College in Oakland, and is presently teaching at the University of California at Berkeley.

He is a playwright and an author of essays published in the Kenyon Review, Evergreen and Negro Digest.

The event is sponsored by the Neighborhood Arts Program of the San Francisco Art Commission. For further information, call 922-0104.

Plays Today

Three one-act plays will be presented by Ceily College's advanced acting staff today in the Little Theater. The plays are: "Passion, Poison, and Petrefaction or the Fatal Gazogene" by George Bernard Shaw; "Superman" by Jules Feiffer; and "The Unexpurgated Memoirs of Bernard Mergendeiler," also by Feiffer.

The plays will begin at 1:10 sharp and conclude by 2 p.m. The admission is free and everyone is invited.

Europe Tour

For $935, a student can take a course in Painting and Drawing. Included with the course is a 40-day tour of Europe at no additional cost.

The tour will include visits to such places as: Paris, St. Cerque and Geneva, Switzerland; Milan, Siena, San Gimignano, Florence, and Rome, Italy. There will also be special painting locations, visits to art museums and the studios of some of the old masters, and visits to some famous structures.

The course is open to any college student in California who has submitted samples of art work and a letter of recommendation from his art instructor.

If a student cannot afford the $935, student loans are available. To do so, contact the student loan office or see Mr. Davis in room S343. You can also see Mr. Davis regarding further details on the tour and course.

"Concert"

A standard program of piano solos and duets will be offered on Thursday May 7 at 12 noon in room 133 (chorale room) of the Arts Building. The concert will feature eight student performers and is being sponsored by the CCSF Music Department.

Speaker

Dr. Roger Herst, an instructor at San Francisco State College, will speak on Israel and the Middle East on May 14 at 11 o'clock in room E-101. He is sponsored by Hillel, the Jewish organization here.

Movie

The Spring 1970 movie series continues with "Gate of Hell" at 8:00 on Thursday night, May 7. It will be shown in the Little Theater and admission will be free, as usual.

"Give Earth a Chance"

"Give Earth a Chance, Part II: And On the Eighth Day" is title of a KPIX-Group W documentary which will be aired on May 12 from 8:30-9:30. The program will feature viewpoints from some very noted scientists.

One of those featured will be noted radiation physicist Dr. Ernest Sternglass, who says that almost half the children in America and England died in their first year of life, probably due to nuclear testing. He also holds the theory that radioactivity can slow down growth of the human foetus.

The program will also feature geologist David Evans; ecologists Barry Commoner and Dr. Kenneth Mellanby; L. J. Fuller of the Los Angeles Air Pollution Control; W. Frank Blair, a zoologist; Dr. G. T. Goodman, a botanist; radiologist Robert Pendleton; and Dr. Peter Metzger, a biochemist.

The documentary was produced by Thames, Inc. and is the second of a four-part series.

CONTACT LENS

Are You Satisfied With Both Bookstores' Prices?

Nestor Yallico, Social Science Major

I think that the prices in both bookstores are too expensive. My suggestion is that teachers do not change their book orders so often unless it's really necessary. Also, the Associated Students Bookstore should give a discount of 10 per cent to A.S. cardholders because the only benefit A.S. members really get is parking.

Irma Morawietz, Psychology Major

Not really. I know that the campus bookstore's prices are higher than Cal's because I've compared them. I've had to buy books at the campus bookstore because Cal didn't have them and the prices were really different. The campus bookstore should at least try to match Cal's price to get more business.

Rita Yee, Psychology Major

I get very upset at the end of the term when I have to return my books. One time I returned a five dollar book at Cal and only got a dollar for it. I'm not aware that they are robbing me until the end of the term. I hope that we can establish a student co-op bookstore as proposed by the Experimental College.

Dinell Cross, General Education Major

The prices are too high. I think that the person who buys a book from the bookstore and keeps it in really good shape should be given back the price he paid for it. I think it's disgusting that you can find a book off campus which sells for less than in one of our bookstores, whereas it should be the opposite. —P.T.

the Guardsman

Staff

SPRING 1970

Managing Editor Paul Theile

News Editor Jim Browning

Feature Editor — Tom Cleaver

Sports Mike Chan, Joe Kant

REPORTERS

Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruna Forner, Shirley Fogarino, David Hugunin, Ron Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Manders, Erik Heldfond, Monte Glover.

PHOTOGRAPHERS

Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

Advisor Mary Blair

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447. Mail address: 50 Phelan Ave., San Francisco, 94112.

Give

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

Ram Thincladders Qualify For Finals

Second to Merritt T-Birds' 32 Finalists

Blowing practically everyone else off the field, Merritt easily placed the highest number of qualifiers, 32, for the finals at last Wednesday's GGC Championship trials at Chabot. However the Rams weren't exactly standing around while Merritt was cleaning up, for they cleaned up enough heats to qualify 20 of them in the finals. This gave the Rams the second highest total of qualifiers behind the rampaging T-Birds.

Unlike the T-Birds who blaze the track with speed, Ram power lies with its corps of distance aces. Ram trackster Dave Power, who leads the GGC seasonal 2-mile track record of 9:22.7, won the first heat of the mile event in a 4:31.5 clocking.

Power's fellow distance teammate, Humberto Hernandez, a distance ace all by himself, took the second heat of the mile with a 4:28.6 time.

Continuing the Ram string of victories in the distance events were Rams John Hogue and Jim Tracy. Ram thinclad Hogue in the 880 event took the first heat with a 1:55.3 time. In the 2-mile the Rams were represented by Jim Tracy, who in the first heat took the event with a 9:43 clocking.

The top GGC high jumper, Ram thinclad Clyde Sadler, qualified for the finals by clearing just 6' (his top and record-holding jump is 6'8").

Eight-Run Rally Keys Ram Win

CCSF pounded Foothill pitching for eight runs in the third inning, but it took a two-run rally in the seventh to give the Rams a wild 10-8 victory at Los Altos on April 28.

The Rams pushed across the winning tally in the seventh inning on Dan Taylor's third double of the day, scoring Ray Spediacci who had walked. John Lawhorn, who came on to relieve starting pitcher Rick Escalambre, supported his own cause by singling home Taylor with the insurance run.

Eleven men batted in the CCSF uprising in the third. After Bob Crosat opened the inning with a base on balls, eight Rams came up and eight Rams hit safely. Red Ramos, Escalambre, Vince Anderson, Larry Haren, Jim Scach, Spediacci, Taylor, and Crosat delivered the string of hits, and before the dust cleared, CCSF led 8-2.

But Foothill bounced back for three run innings in the fourth and sixth to tie the score, setting up the Ram heroics in the seventh.

The Ram explosion against Foothill came just five days after being three-hit in a 6-1 loss to Diablo Valley.

Taylor, Spediacci, and Ramos collected the lone hits as CCSF struck out fourteen times. Johnny Farrell was the losing pitcher as he was tagged for all six runs while allowing nine hits. Jim Daly came on to blank DVC on two hits for the final two innings.

Lacrosse Has New Gear, New Faces, New Schedule

By Mike Chau

Here's great news for all Lacrosse buffs, sixteen completely brand new Lacrosse sets of equipment are now available to the Lacrosse team. The sets include red helmets, arm pads, and gloves; the team already has an ample supply of Lacrosse sticks.

The availability of this new equipment just signifies the rapid expansion this sport has received at City College. It not only has the solid backing of the P.E. department, but also of the student body.

In the beginning the team grew from a lowly six members to its present membership of 18 players. Further expansion is planned for the summer season, the team expects to increase its membership to an all-time high of 30 to 40 players. The team's expansion in the summer is due to the adoption of the "field" brand of Lacrosse.

In the game of field Lacrosse the opposing teams field seven men each on the field. The City College team expects in the coming summer season to play the East Bay Lacrosse Club, the Palo Alto Lacrosse Club, Stanford's team, U.C. Berkeley's team, and an assorted number of other inter and outer state teams and clubs.

During the remainder of this term and going through the fall semester, the team will be conducting an extensive recruiting drive for more on-campus players. At the moment the team is composed mainly of City College players. The team's rapid expansion this summer will be augmented by defections from the San Francisco Lacrosse team and the Coast Guard. The S.F. Lacrosse Club has more than 60 members and is more than glad to send a few of its members to its sister club. But since this team will be a City College team and of course its colors will be red and white, the organizers of the team would like to take in a lot more City College members. Any and all that wish to participate can drop by any team practice. The practices are daily and begin at 3 in the afternoon (on Fridays the team practices at the Polo Fields). No experience is needed for this game which can be picked up in a relatively short time.

The Northern California Lacross Association which coordinates all Lacrosse activities in this region is presently holding its 1970 Benefit. Members are conducting this raffle and they would like the support of the student body. The drawing will be conducted on May 30 at the half-time of the North-South All-Star game. The presence of the donor is not needed.

$1.00 DONATION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA LACROSSE ASSOCIATION 1970 BENEFIT

№ 1695

PRIZES	DONOR
1. 8" Portable Panasonic T.V. Set
2. Embassy Health Club 6 mos. Membership	Embassy Health Club
3. Down Sleeping Bag	Sports-Land, Inc.
4. Nordica Ski Boots	Streeter & Quarles West
5. $50 Merchandise Order	Kenneally's Sport Shop
6. Strung Aluminum Tennis Racket	Viking Sports Specialists
Tennis Shoes	Marina Tennis Shop
Tennis Shirt	Texdahl & Johnson
7. $25 Merchandise Order	Amelio of Cal., Inc.
8. Dinner for 2 (excluding Al. Bev. & Steak)	Piero's
$10 Merchandising Order	Russ Bldg. Cigar & Gift Shop

DRAWING: SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1970
AT NORTH SOUTH ALL-STAR GAME

Hackers Lose Again

The slumping Ram hackers dropped their third match in a row, 29-25, to San Mateo on April 28. The closely contested battle was held at the long and difficult Peninsula Country Club, with the golfers using the back tees.

Greg Corvi, who has been playing steady golf lately, led the Rams again with an 81. Consistent John Susko fired an 82 to support Corvi. Other scores included Rich Nable-field (85), Joe Doyle (86), Bob Simpson (86), and Jerry Doyle (87).

Next stop for the Rams is their May 4th date in the Golden Gate Conference championships at Castlewood. In this tourney, teams and individuals vie for recognition and a shot at the State tourney. The golfers shoot for the medalist honors, while the top team advances to the meet with round-robin winner, Chabot.

The Greatest Dynastics In Sports

By Joe Konte

While flipping through the many glorious chapters in the history of sports, one is overcome by the emotional drama of the team which came from the dark shadows into the spotlight of champions. Baseball's amazin' Mets were one of these cinderella teams, rebounding from the shackles of a patented loser to reach the pinnacle of success as world champs. The Philadelphia Eagles of football fame are another case in the world of upsets when they captured the title in 1960. And basketball has shared in the dramatic suspense of a club rising from the slums of the NBA into national prominence with the '68 surge of the Baltimore Bullets.

But great as these organizations were in providing fans with such thrills in their bid for acclaim, they are only a morsel in the vast land of the real backbone of professional athletes: the dynasty.

The Boston Celtics were one of these dynasties, constructed by Coach and General Manager Red Auerbach, and made possible by a man called Bill Russell. Nowhere in the annals of sports is there a club so dominating as the Celts were from 1958 to 1968, when they stepped into the victory circle ten consecutive times. During this period, the Boston roster resembled a "Who's Who" of the NBA. Besides the giant pivotman, there was Sam Jones, K. C. Jones, Bob Cousy, Tom Heinshon, John Havlicek, and Frank Ramsey.

Vince Lombardi, a magic name among even football novices, invented a machine called the Green Bay Packers. The dynamic coach, possibly the greatest field general in all of sports, took over the floundering Pack after a dreadful year which saw them win only one game. But the methodical, compassionate, hard-driving mentor drafted, traded and bid until he had finally assembled one of the most fluid mechanisms ever known to sports. Lombardi was the main switch that activated the gears called Starr, Taylor, Hornung, Kramer, Davis, Nitshke, and Jordan. These were the instruments of Green Bay's domination that saw them gain three consecutive world championships from 1966-68.

Baseball has its own version of a club which enjoyed a lengthy stay at the top of the sports globe, the New York Yankees. The bombers from the Bronx participated in the World Series in 14 of 16 years. Casey Stengel, the ol' master with the gift of gab, led the Yanks to 10 championships, before being replaced by Ralph Houk in 1961. A few of the stars responsible for the Yankees' success were Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris, Joe Dimaggio, Yogi Berra, Billy Martin, Phil Rizzuto, and Whitey Ford.

Yes, these three awesome teams were not one-year candidates, and they didn't surprise anyone. The Celts, Packers, and Yankees didn't need the publicity of a dream team. In their case, their records did the talking.

CCSF Holds Anti-War Rally

By JOE KONTE

City College of San Francisco turned from its sagging reputation of "Apathy U" to a united campus that really cares with an impressive anti-war rally, held Monday, May 11 near Smith Hall.

After the estimated crowd of 2000 had left the scene of the two-and-a-half hour assembly, a strike was planned for the remainder of the school year.

Probably the largest crowd of City College students ever to assemble together.

The students who gathered were of different races, nationalities, and backgrounds, but their purpose was one of unification in their efforts to stop the war in Indochina. The crowd listened intently to the twelve speakers who voiced their views from Cambodia to campus police cadets.

Guitar playing Moses Thrasher, a CCSF student, opened the rally with a song whose lyrics concerned the power structure and leaders of the country.

The CCSF Student Steering Committee announced their plans for the student strike by reading their list of demands: 1) Immediate and total withdrawal of all American forces from Southeast Asia; 2) An end to all war-related activities on campus; 3) Release of all political prisoners in the United States; 4) Redirection of priorities to meet the urgent social and economic needs of the City College community, on and off campus.

Of the dozen people who spoke, three drew the most applause from the audience. One was Harold E. McDermott, attorney at law, who defended two City College students, and is currently involved in a plan to keep San Francisco young men from going to Vietnam. He represented Rich Montemayor and Dan Martinez, both who were busted for suspicion of marijuana. Charges were later dropped on the pair, and the candid McDermott reassured the crowd that "we won't sue the city of San Francisco, because that's not where the action is."

Harold E. McDermott

The clean-shaven, conservatively dressed lawyer pointed out that the action is the students knowing their rights when questioned by campus police. He referred to the harassment as being "part of that old fashioned document, the constitution, that the other side is always waving around."

McDermott also commented on dissent and suppression. "What the BSU or anyone else says here today, it's all related whether we're talking about Nixon, Agnew, and suppression of dissent either by closing down the schools so you don't get it together, whether they're suppressing dissent by shooting or helicopters, or whatever the big thing is, it all goes to one big thing. We must see that we're in a social and economic system where the big corporations are dictating to Hayakawa, Agnew, Nixon, and the other puppets and this is the way it is."

Berkeley SDS member Anita Rogers won favor with the onlookers with her remarks on the national striking of campuses. She said that the strike must go beyond the campus if it is to be effective.

Dr. Alfred Tapson
(Photos by Collins

"The students have a different kind of problem, and that is how to keep the government down. But could you imagine if all the longshoremen, all the teamsters, all the postal workers and telephone workers said no to this war, that would really stop every-

(Continued on Page 8)

the Guardsman

Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 70, NUMBER 10 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., MAY 13, 1970

320821

Friday Rally Shows Student Awareness

By JIM BROWNING

A rally to "show the students concern" over the recent invasion of Cambodia by U.S. troops and the subsequent killing of four Kent State University students was held last Friday in S100.

Several speakers spoke about the grave crisis in Southeast Asia and how that relates to the students and workers of this country.

Charlie Moore from the Movement for a Democratic Military explained that MDM is an organization of G.I.'s "who are opposed to fighting wars and are fighting back

(Continued on Page 5)

How It Began

Students Spur Shutdown

By Paul Thiele

City College was closed on Thursday and Friday, May 7th and 8th after Dr. Louis F. Batmale, vice-president of the college, announced his decision to close the campus on the preceding Wednesday.

"I will follow the Governor's recommendation and close City College on Thursday and Friday," Batmale said. Governor Reagan had previously suggested that California state colleges and universities be closed.

The stimulus for Batmale's action was the Wednesday meeting of Student Council in which Guardsman Feature Editor, Tom Cleaver, submitted a proposal asking for a convocation day on Wednesday, May 12 and a strike on the following Friday in observance of the four students killed at Kent University and in condemnation of U.S. involvement in Asia.

Sally Moore, a chief proponent of the resolution, elaborated on its intent at the council meeting.

"We've got to condemn the sort of activity that happened at Kent. I think the most effective way to protest is by calling for a suspension of classes," Sally added that a report from the Student Mobilization Committee counted over 170 college campuses that had already suspended classes.

The audience at the meeting, about 50 people, exchanged views about how the observance should be conducted, where, and when. One emotional student shouted that a convocation and peaceful rally would do no good, and that the only way to get anything done would be by shutting down all college campuses in the country and using guns against the police and National Guard.

Councilman Charles Smith said that he understood the man's claim but did not approve of the violence he suggested.

Cleaver's resolution was amended so that the convocation day would take place on Friday, May 8, featuring speakers in the men's gym followed by a mass meeting on campus with a suspension of classes on the same day. The council favored the motion with nine yes votes and two abstentions.

Associated Students President, Renato Larin, then suggested that a group consisting of the Student Council and five members of the audience to be chosen by Cleaver, go immediately to President Louis G. Conlan's office in E-200 for recognition of the decision.

At 12:37 p.m., the council meeting was adjourned ahead of time and most of the audience followed the committee to President Conlan's office. Most of the followers waited in the lobby of the Educational Services building and the number of student onlookers grew steadily. Some sat in front of the office door while others waited along the stairway for progress reports from the people inside.

Conlan was not in his office at the time so Dr. Batmale talked with the committee. Dean Ralph Hillsman and Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, also discussed the purpose of the resolution with the students.

Councilman Roger Cassell suggested that the President take "dynamic action" and close the campus regardless of what the Board of Education or Superintendent of Schools might say. Councilman John Goebel said, "If you don't close the campus, there are going to be a lot of people with frustrations who will throw them at a window."

"Who will take responsibility to insure non-violence at the convocation?" Samuels asked. Victor Graff of the Aca-

(Continued on Page 8)

Editorial:

A Time To Act

EDITOR'S NOTE: This editorial is being run in student newspapers across the country. At press time the papers at the following schools had agreed to run the editorial: University of Texas, Boston College, Colgate, Northeastern, Amherst, George Washington, Stanford, UCLA, Purdue, Indiana, College of Wooster, North Carolina, Maryland, Rugers, Trinity, Wesleyan, Haverford, Harvard, Columbia, Princeton, University of Pennsylvania, University of Oregon, U.C. Berkeley, Duke, Boston University, Cincinnati, Cornell, Dartmouth, Brown, Illinois, Ohio State, Kansas, USC, Michigan State, University of Washington, University of Minnesota, Rhode Island, Syracuse and Vanderbilt.

President Nixon's unwarranted and illegal decision to send American combat forces into Cambodia, and to resume the bombing of North Vietnam, demands militant, immediate and continued opposition from all Americans. Through his unilateral executive move, the President has placed our country into a state of Emergency. He has ignored the constitutional prerogative of Congress and has revealed the sham of his policy of Vietnamization, a policy which, through a torturous process of logic demands that we escalate the war in order to enable American troops to withdraw.

He has demonstrated that American foreign policy still dictates the necessity to sacrifice American lives to ravish independent countries and to squander our resources and energy.

The President has tragically misgauged the mood of the

Continued on Page 4)

Ecology Debate On Pesticides, Over Population

Should DDT be banned? Jerry George and David Sutton are population ecologists and zoology instructors at SF State College. They will debate the future of the ecology movement, as well as the pros and cons of insecticides on Thursday, May 14, at 11 a.m. in room 100 of the Science building.

Sutton and George, members of the Zero Population Growth (ZPG) speaker's bureau, have lectured on various issues, such as pesticides and the over-population problems.

Insecticides such as DDT have been criticized because they are poisonous to people and are causing the extermination of birds such as the bald eagle.

They have also been defended, because pesticides kill disease-carrying insects, saving lives and food crops.

George and Sutton will also discuss the future of the ecology movement.

This eco-debate is one in a series of ecology lectures sponsored by the experimental-college ecology group.

Second semester Retail Floristry students Adrianne Chin and Carol Knaus (l and r above) were among those Retail Floristry students who received awards for their window displays created for the 12th Annual Open House held by the department on April 14.

The day-long open house was capped by a dinner at which awards were presented. First place for window displays was won by Mrs. Kathleen Frances Knope and Mrs. Dorothy Maxine Collins. Miss Eiko Yonemochi won the second prize. The third place winner was Talbot E. Anderson.

Five students also received scholarships during the ceremonies. They were: Miss Maria Scandova, High School Grant; Michael Scroggins, Victor Stein Memorial Grant; Miss Meiko Takahashi, Felix LaSalle Grant; Miss Kathryn Williams, Meale Brother Grant, and Miss Myrna Rich, Robert Kalman Memorial Grant.

This year the student award went to Miss Laura Olocco who was also the originator of the window display theme—"Astrology—The Zodiac Signs."

Loading Zone Rocks Gym

By Bruno Forner

Approximately 750 students showed up to see and hear the Associated Students present Linda Tillery. Of course, you have to include the quintet that backed her, because together they form the Loading Zone. In case you missed it from 11:30 to 1 on May 5 in the men's gym, here is what took place.

For one thing, Linda Tillery was the principal mover of the group. She was so fantastic in belting out the blues (along with some jazz-rock) that she got a little out of hand.

I was sitting in direct line with the vocal amplifier. Several times I was jerked forward due to the tremendous power.

Miss Tillery, who is rather plump, remarked at one point, "I know all you people who left, went out into the parking lot and had a doobee." (For those of you who consider "The Rites of Spring" exotic, a "doobee" is a slang term for dope.)

The organist was remarkable as he pushed through the keyboards. The drummer earned a round of applause after a long solo during a very long number. The bassist was so loud that he could be heard downstairs in the weight room (not noted for being directly underneath the gym either). The tenor trombone and alto saxophone provided good sounds as they replaced the electric guitar, so regarded as traditional by a number of rock fans.

The Loading Zone proved to be a pretty good dance group, as evidenced by the number of people who partook.

The concert was originally scheduled for the Ram statue but Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels said that he moved it to the Men's Gym because of inclement weather.

Campus Library Offers New Audio-Visual Services

"Many students do not know about the 'extra' facilities and services we now offer," said Mrs. Ethel Crockett, director of CCSF library services, in a recent interview.

Cassettes Available

With the help of the NDEA, a grant in 1968 enabled the library to buy equipment which is available for use by individual students. The grant also provided funds to buy recordings of music, dramatics, etc. which are available on cassette tapes in the library. In addition to assigned listening, the library has popular music which a student may listen to while studying. The cassettes are at the circulation desk.

On April 8, 1970, the library received an additional five cassette recorders for individual use.

Film Loops

Also available for student use are film loops, which are single-concept silent films running four to five minutes. One loop deals with the uses of the slide rule. Others explain theatrical make-up, architecture, life sciences, etc.

Micro-Film

In addition, there is a micro-film cabinet containing films of all issues of The New York Times since 1930. This collection is composed of 1,200 reels of micro-film with 10 issues per reel. Indexes to the reels are located in the Reference Department.

The library also has a special reader-printer which, for a dime, will copy any article from the micro film for personal reference.

the Guardsman

Staff

SPRING 1970

Managing Editor Paul Thiele
News Editor Jim Browning
Feature Editor — Tom Cleaver
Sports Mike Chan, Joe Konte

REPORTERS:
Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruno Forner, Shirley Fagarino, David Hugunin, Ron Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Manders, Erik Heldfond, Monte Glover.

PHOTOGRAPHERS:
Eugene H. Brown; Mike U.

Advisor . . . . . Mary Blair

The Guardsmon is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall, telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447. Mail address: 50 Phelan Ave., San Francisco, 94112

Academic Senate Nixes Nixon's War

In their second meeting in as many weeks, the Academic Senate on Monday, May 11, convened in special plenary session —this time to hear a plea for support from the Student Steering Committee and those students who have been working since last Thursday seeking to formulate a workable plan whereby those members of the college community who wished to do so might work for peace for the rest of the semester.

Following is the text of the resolution proposed by Don Peterson and passed by the Senate by a vote of 168 to 58:

The Academic Senate of City College of San Francisco accept the students' request for an end to business as usual, and that those instructors who do not wish to turn their classes over to the problems cited by the students, give their students the perogative of devoting the rest of the semester to work toward satisfactory solution of these same problems without penalty.

The Academic Senate, in their plenary session Tuesday, May 5, voted to send a resolution to President Nixon concerning U.S. involvement in the war in Southeast Asia.

The resolution was a special order of business introduced by Dr. Alfred Tapson, history and political science, and 12 other faculty members who had petitioned to have it added to the agenda of the meeting. The Senate passed the resolution by a vote of 103 to 54.

The resolution read as follows:

WHEREAS, we believe the President of the United States has further escalated the war in Southeast Asia by sending American troops into Cambodia, and

WHEREAS, we believe this action will tend to lengthen the war and bring upon the United States the condemnation of all the world, and

WHEREAS, we believe the faculty of C.C.S.F. must add its voice to the growing sense of domestic frustration and impotence in the face of increasing brutalization of our society, and the increasingly oppressive reaction by government agencies to public protest,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the Faculty of C.C.S.F. condemn the unconstitutional action of the President in sending troops into Cambodia without the prior knowledge and consent of the Congress, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, the chairman of the Academic Senate be instructed to forward a copy of the resolution to the President and the two United States Senators from California.

The majority of the faculty present were supportive of student feelings about the situation in Cambodia.

Dr. Tapson said, "We should support the students against this immoral act. I urge you, I ask you, to pass this very gentle resolution."

One speaker felt that the faculty should not be divided over the resolution because it contained statements of opinion and not all the faculty members were of those opinions. Another speaker suggested that faculty members also write to or wire their Congressmen because such action would be much more effective than the resolution.

Tuesday Counter-Rally Supports Continuation of Classes

On May 12, the Ram was again the scene of a rally — a conservative kind. A group of students, with support of the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF), staged the rally "to show the public that there are students here who wish that City College remain open," according to Dennis Bogano.

The first speaker was Daryle Johnson (the chief organizer of the rally) who, before the rally began, said, "we have the right to go to school." During the mainstream of his speech he said: "The Students have the right to attend classes! It is the administration's duty to protect the right of students to go to college. Each of us has a right to attend classes and for no reason should this campus be closed!" After he finished, Johnson urged the crowd of several hundred students to chant "Keep it Open!" loudly, so that the administration can hear it."

The next speaker was Carlos Melendez, chief organizer of the May 11 rally. Melendez explained the notice sent out by the 12-member steering committee concerning class situations ("Academic Amnesty") earlier that day.

Referring to Johnson's speech, he said "We've been trying to keep it open. All we're saying is that once the school is open, people — the students, the faculty — will either conduct their classes or work in anti-war activities."

The third speaker was Dan Allen of the English Department. His speech was devoted to explaining the Academic Amnesty resolution.

The last speaker was Gerald Jahodi of BSU who made a short announcement.

Johnson took the platform once again to summarize the purpose of the affair and to thank everyone with the words "Go In Peace" (which should be the slogan of the anti-war movement).

The rally was punctuated by sparse heckling from assorted people, especially the type that was prominent in the preceding day's rally. A KGO unit filmed the rally for TV.

A Recapitulation

CAMBODIA -- Then and Now

By Tom Cleaver

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, neutralist Prime Minister of Cambodia since the 1940s, was overthrown in a rightist military coup on March 18th while on a state visit to France, the Soviet Union, and China.

American military leaders have long hoped to get the chance to go into Cambodia and "clean out" areas used by the National Liberation Front and the People's Army of Vietnam. Sihanouk's absence, and the willingness of certain Cambodian military men to attempt a coup, provided them with this chance. While it cannot be proven that the CIA had anything to do specifically with the coup, the CIA is heavily involved in covert operations in Southeast Asia, and coups to install rightist military-dominated governments have long been a hallmark of CIA operations. Since the U.S. government was the only party who would stand to gain anything out of a coup such as this one, CIA involvement is a distinct possibility.

Shortly after the coup, the new government began working against the National Liberation Front and the North Vietnamese. The embassies of both partics in Phnom Penh, the capital, were sacked by mobs while government troops stood idly by, watching without making any moves to stop it. Massacres of Vietnamese civilians—many of whom were born in Cambodia and have never lived in Vietnam—began early in March. In part, this has as much to do with traditional Vietnamese-Cambodian hostility—a struggle reaching back nearly a thousand years—as it does with any current political disagreement.

Whatever the reasons, thousands of Vietnamese have been rounded up, placed in concentration camps, and killed by Cambodian soldiers. Reports of these massacres appeared almost daily in the major news media throughout April. Vietnamese civilians have also been used as shields by Cambodian troops when going into villages thought to be held by troops of the NLF and the North Vietnamese.

Official American involvement in the struggle in Cambodia did not begin until late in April, when it was reported that American Army advisors would accompany the Vietnamese Army units they were attached to during raids into Cambodia—officially "in hot pursuit" of fleeing NLF and North Vietnamese troops.

The reaction of many members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Washington to this news was one of distress. When it had become clear that the possibility of U.S. involvement was a distinct one, many senators and representatives had made it clear to the Nixon Administration that they would not support this move. Many of the critics came from the President's own party on Capitol Hill.

On April 30th, President Nixon addressed the nation, and disclosed that American Army units would invade Cambodia, in order to seek out and destroy enemy base camps there. President Nixon stated that this was not an invasion, that U.S. and South Vietnamese forces did not seek territorial gains in Cambodia, and that they would leave as soon as they had chased out "the enemy." Declaring that he was not worried about being a one-term president—an allusion to the fate of Lyndon Johnson—he asked not that the country support him, but rather "our brave men in Vietnam, fighting for freedom."

The administration's rationale for this action was that by cutting off the enemy from his base camps, it would shorten the war and allow him to quickly resume the withdrawal of 150,000 troops that he had announced on April 20th. Many members of Congress, primarily the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, expressed their disbelief that widening the war would somehow shorten it. Senator Fulbright, chairman of the committee, went over the events of the previous five years, showing that every escalation, every widening of the war, had resulted in increasing the casualties and prolonging the war, despite official statements that such actions would bring the war to a quick and honorable end.

Senator Mike Mansfield of Montana, Senate Majority Leader, stated that because of this action he would refuse to vote for any more foreign aid bills. The Foreign Relations Committee refused to support a Cambodian request for millions of dollars in military aid. Senator Ted Kennedy called the invasion a "terrible tragedy"; Senator George Aiken of Vermont—dean of Senate Republicans—said it was possibly the worst mistake of the war. Predictably, Governor Reagan, Senator George Murphy, and House Republican Leader Gerald Ford all enthusiastically supported the President's actions.

Many congressmen and senators are upset about the constitutionality of President Nixon's actions. Traditionally, the President is supposed to seek the approval of Congress before committing American troops to action. It is so stated directly in the Constitution. Several congressmen, notably California Representative George Brown, have called publicly for the President's impeachment on the ground that his actions are unconstitutional.

In Cambodia itself, American forces have been seeking to capture COSVN—Central Office for South Vietnam—the enemy's mobile headquarters, thought to be in "the Fishook" area of Cambodia. To do this, absolute secrecy was required. The operation was not officially planned until three days in advance of the jump-off date, and the troops were not informed of their objective until they were boarding the helicopters to be carried into Cambodia. Even with all these precautions, COSVN was not to be found, and enemy soldiers who were captured in the area have stated that, while COSVN was operating in the area, the headquarters had moved out three days previously on warnings that the invasion was coming. If this is so, the enemy knew of these supposedly top-secret plans the day they were first announced in the U.S. High Command in Saigon! So far, troops in the Fishook have met little resistance from the enemy, though they claim to have found large stores of rice and other supplies in deep bunkers throughout the area.

In the meantime, the U.S. Air Force began to bomb targets in North Vietnam again, after a bombing halt lasting eighteen months. News of the attacks came even before Secretary of Defense Laird had announced in Washington that the government was considering recommencing the attacks. Ostensibly, the attacks were against anti-aircraft positions that had been firing on unarmed reconnaissance planes, though more than 150 aircraft were involved in the raids on May 1st. The cities hit in these raids were the same four that had been the original targets of the limited airstrikes made following the "Maddox Incident" in August 1964. At present, the government has announced that the raids have been called off again, and no new raids have been reported in the press.

The history of U.S. involvement in Indochina extends over twenty years, since the late 1940s, when the government first began giving supplies to the French who were then fighting to maintain colonial control over the Indochinese peninsula. The entire history of our involvement has been one of escalation after escalation, each one designed to bring about a quick settlement and an "honorable peace."

In 1955, President Eisenhower authorized the dispatching of 500 American military advisors to South Vietnam, to help the Vietnamese government of Ngo Dinh Diem establish an army. In the latter part of the Eisenhower administration, the number of advisors was increased to about one thousand.

In 1961, President Kennedy authorized an increase to about 1,500 advisors, and authorized U.S. troops there to shoot "in self-defense." In 1963, President Diem was assassinated in a coup planned—it now turns out—by John Kennedy, who had come to the conclusion that Diem was a liability. For the next 20 months, military government after military government was overthrown in coups. In September 1964, four different coups occurred in the space of three-and-a-half weeks!

In August 1964, President Johnson brought American combat units directly into the conflict when he ordered airstrikes against four North Vietnamese port cities in retaliation for an attack on an American destroyer. The Maddox, recently, facts have come to light that cast doubt as to whether this North Vietnamese attack ever did happen. President Johnson also used the occasion to send Air Force fighter squadrons directly into South Vietnam, where they were employed in a limited manner to provide air support for South Vietnamese army operations in the country. In June, 1964, the President had authorized American naval aircraft flying from carriers in the Tonkin Gulf to bomb supply routes in Laos used by the North Vietnamese

In February 1965, President Johnson made the momentous decision to begin the sustained bombing of North Vietnam, in the nearly four years that this effort was sustained, more bombs were dropped on North Vietnam than had been dropped by all the allied air forces on both Germany and Japan combined in World War II. The bombing was meant to force the North Vietnamese to the conference table and to desist in their "invasion" of South Vietnam; the only noticeable effect of all this was a stiffening of the North Vietnamese will to resist and keep on fighting.

In March 1965, the Third Marine Division was sent into Danang, the first American ground combat units sent to Vietnam. By the summer, the Marines were engaged in direct combat throughout the I Corps area. By November 1965, the first Army divisions had been sent in, and heavy fighting had occurred in the Ia Drang Valley. By 1968, more than half a million American ground troops had been sent to Vietnam, and were engaged in heavy fighting. Despite all this, there was no noticeable reduction in the enemy's will to fight. In fact, in the Tet Offensive of February 1968, the entire American and South Vietnamese pacification program in the villages was destroyed, every American base in the country was attacked, including the American Embassy in Saigon, and offensive actions by American ground forces came to a complete halt.

Richard Nixon was elected in 1968 because he said he had a plan to end the war. It was not until July 1969 that he told the nation what his plan was: "Vietnamization"; the strengthening of Vietnamese armed forces and the withdrawal—in small increments —of American forces, as these Vietnamese forces finally became capable of carrying on the war themselves. This has come down to an average monthly withdrawal — according to the Pentagon—of 12,000 men per month. Other sources, most notably I. F. Stone, in his bi-weekly journal, have exposed the fact that this withdrawal has been far smaller than official sources indicate, averaging around 2,000 men per month.

President Nixon may say that the invasion of Cambodia is not an expansion of the war, but merely a short operation to bring the war to an end quickly. However, history shows that each of these "quick operations" has led to an expanded war. In the words of Congressman Tunney, "The United States has involved itself in an open-ended commitment to a general land war throughout Southeast Asia."

New Visual Arts Building Complete—Under Inspection

. . . The Visual Arts Building—now complete.

(Photo by Forner)

The Visual Arts Laboratory Building located near the Creative Arts Building is complete and in the process of its final inspections.

Vic Vaio, assistant co-ordinator of educational management, said that the building will house a Photography Laboratory and Studio, Advertising Art and Design Studios, a Reading Laboratory, and space for the Printing Technology Department. It will also have regular classrooms.

Technical data on the new building, as given by Harry Buttimer, co-ordinator of educational management, shows that the new building is being built for $1.4 million with an extra $200,000 in equipment.

The building covers about 34,500 square feet.

Editorial:

The Time To Act Is Now

(Continued from Page 1)

country. The anti-war movement, which has marched and protested for years in a vain effort to reverse the United States' role in South East Asia has finally resurfaced in new and larger numbers.

With Nixon's lies now finally exposed, the immorality and hypocrisy of our government has been revealed for all to see.

The need for immediate action has never been so great and so urgent.

We therefore, call on the entire academic community of this country to engage in a nationwide College strike.

We must cease business as usual in order to allow the universities and colleges to lead and join in a collective strike to protest American escalation of the war. We do not call for a strike of students against the college, but a strike by the entire college—faculty, students, workers and administrators alike.

The reasons for such a strike are manifest. First, it is a dramatic symbol of our opposition to a corrupt and imperialistic war. It demonstrates clearly our priorities for the significance of classes and examinations pales before the greater problems outside the classroom.

Moreover, it recognizes the fact that within a system so permeated with inequality, immorality and destruction a classroom education becomes a hollow, meaningless exercise.

But the necessity of a strike extends even far beyond these reasons. The strike is necessary to free the academic community from activities of secondary importance and to open it up to the primary task of building renewed opposition to the war. It is necessary to permit the academic community to first solidify its own opposition and then to ask immediately to extend this opposition beyond these campuses.

We ask the entire academic community to use this opportunity to go to the people and bring home to the entire nation the meaning of the President's actions.

We urge that this strike be directed towards bringing out the following changes:

- An immediate withdrawal of all American forces and business from South East Asia.
- Passage of the Senate amendment to The Military Appropiations Act to deny all aid from military and political adventure in South East Asia.
- The end of political repression at home, in particular, the government's systematic attempts to eliminate the Black Panther Party and other political dissidents.
- A reversal of American priorities, from military involvements abroad to domestic problems, in particular, the problems of our beleaguered cities.

The stage has been set, the issues clearly drawn, the need apparent. It is time now to act.

The Nation's Colleges Erupt

By Jim Browning

Campus reaction to President Nixon's announcement that U.S. troops were intervening in Cambodia and the subsequent murder of four Kent State students by Ohio National Guardsmen, was swift and violent last week.

By Wednesday of last week 800 colleges and universities—with a total enrollment of more than 9 million students—from all sections of the country, reported that armed confrontations or student strikes were under way on their campuses.

Protesting students, angered by President Nixon's decision to expand the war in Indo-China and the Kent State murders destroyed numerous ROTC buildings, damaged countless others, and sparked numerous violent demonstrations.

By far the most tragic event happened at Kent State, where Ohio National Guardsmen opened fire on a group of students protesting the war and the presence of ROTC on campus, killing four and wounding hordes of others. The Guardsmen had been called to the campus to "maintain order" after a group of 400 students set fire to the ROTC building on campus, completely destroying the structure.

At the University of Maryland at Campus Park 700 students battled state police and National Guardsmen and cut off a major highway after ransacking ROTC offices. Maryland Governor Marvin Mandel ordered 500 Guardsmen into the campus of 30,000 students.

In Seattle, 1000 anti-war demonstrators marched through rush-hour traffic and pushed their way into the employment center of Boeing Aircraft, protesting that company's involvement in the war.

At Bloomington, Indiana about 3500 of Indiana University's 30,000 students approved a demand that the university repudiate Mr. Nixon's Asian policies.

Indiana students later held a rally in front of the ROTC offices and scuffled with police. One hundred fifty students were arrested and 50 other students were treated for injuries at the campus hospital.

In New Haven, Connecticut, 20,000 assembled in front of Yale University to protest the trial of nine Black Panthers, charged in connection with the alleged murder-kidnapping of Alex Rackley, a suspected police informer found dead in a swamp last year.

There was little violence and the rallies officially ended with a call for a nationwide student strike, starting last week, to demand U.S. withdrawal from Southeast Asia, an end to repression of the Black Panther Party and other political prisoners and cessation of university ties to the military-industrial complex.

Campus police cleared the floor of about 500 sit-in demonstrators at an ROTC awards ceremony at Purdue University. Thirteen students were injured and 25 were arrested.

An ROTC awards ceremony at the University of Iowa was cancelled when about 1300 demonstrators marched on the university recreation center where the event was scheduled. Mud and eggs were tossed in a scuffle between the marchers and security officers and one policeman received minor injuries.

About 1500 persons, mostly University of Cincinnati students, marched from the campus to a downtown Cincinnati intersection, where they staged a 90-minute sit-in until the police arrested 150 of the demonstrators and dispersed the crowd.

Fire bombs were thrown at ROTC buildings at Hobart College in New York; the University of Miami in Florida; the University of Texas; the University of Nevada at Reno; UC Davis; UC San Diego; the University of Michigan; Rutgers; Ohio State; Michigan State; Oregon State; MIT; the University of Texas; the University of Colorado; the University of Kansas; and the University of Idaho.

ROTC buildings were completely destroyed at Kent State; George Washington University in St. Louis; UCLA; the University of Minnesota; and the University of Wisconsin.

National Guardsmen confronted University of Wisconsin students as most of the Nation's colleges and universities protested U.S. intervention into Cambodia.

More than 1000 of the University of Pennsylvania's 15,000 students, joined by a group from Drexel University, marched in front of Independence Hall in Philadelphia shouting protests against "Nixon's move to a third world war."

At UCLA 90 students were arrested and hundreds of others injured when 5000 students on campus clashed with police. Several fire bombs were thrown into the ROTC building, completely destroying it.

Police used tear gas to disperse several hundred young people on the University of Wisconsin campus.

The ROTC building was completely gutted by firebombs thrown by a crowd of 4000 students protesting the war.

In Cleveland, about 500 students occupied ROTC offices on the Case Reserve University campus.

Students from at least 13 colleges—many where violence occurred following President Nixon's announcement—called for a week-long strike. Students who signed the four-point resolution calling for the strike were from the University of Pennsylvania, Princeton, Penn State, Temple, Bryn Mawr, Villanova, Lycoming, Bucknell, Rutgers, Goucher, Drexel, West Chester State and the Philadelphia College of Art.

The national strike information center at Brandeis University in Waltham, Massachusetts said that by the week's end 140 colleges were on strike, many of them "completely shut down."

Among the many colleges on strike were Harvard, Holy Cross, Tufts, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, Brown, Penn State, the Universities of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Boston, Norte Dame, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Texas, Nebraska, Iowa, Kentucky, Virgina, Oregon, Colorado, Florida, Stanford, Wisconsin, Kansas, New Mexico, Penn State, Rhode Island, Northwestern, Houston, Syracuse, Tennessee and UCLA and UC Berkeley.

Bay Area Colleges React To Nixon's Announcement

Bay Area college campuses bristled last week with outrage over the slaying of the four Kent State University students and with unabated protest against the American invasion of Cambodia.

More students boycotted classes in a spreading nationwide wave of campus strikes. There were scattered disturbances, some classes were cancelled and the American flag flew at half-staff in several colleges.

At the University of California at Berkeley 500 police used tear gas to disperse a chanting crowd of 1500 students who threatened to burn down Callaghan Hall which houses Navy ROTC offices in protest over the invasion of Cambodia and the presence of ROTC on the campus.

U.C. President Charles Hitch suspended all classes and said that the college was in an "extreme state of emergency."

There were at least 60 arrests, and reportedly two officers were injured when they tried to extinguish a small fire at the ROTC offices.

About 1500 demonstrators marched to the two-day building after a noon rally attended by some 10,000 students.

At Stanford, a strike by students, faculty members, and campus workers virtually closed down that entire University.

There was no violence, unlike past demonstrations between students and administration officials over the ROTC on campus.

Stanford President Kenneth Pitzer announced that all ROTC courses would be eased off the Stanford campus by July, 1971.

At San Francisco State a group of 3000 demonstrators promised to hold a student strike and throw off ROTC offices.

The demonstrators had earlier in the week disrupted ROTC classes by hurling rocks and bottles at police and windows of several campus buildings.

A few windows were broken and some classrooms disrupted at Hayward State College as some 500 anti-war students marched to the Administration-Fine Arts building to sit-in, many of them vowing to stay "until the war in Southeast Asia is over."

An American flag was also burned.

At Sonoma State College demonstrators disrupted fall registration activities, overturning furniture and scattering papers. A small group of pickets blocked the entrance to the campus for a time with four cars as part of an organized class boycott. Two students suffered minor injuries in the disturbances and 20 were arrested.

Some 500 students paraded around the San Jose State College campus protesting U.S. involvement in Cambodia. The march ended when college president Hobert Burns complied with student demands to lower the campus flag to half-staff in memory of the four Kent students.

Student leaders also called for a general campus strike to protest ROTC.

Disturbances were also reported at several other Bay Area colleges—USF, College of Marin, Chabot College, St. Mary's, Laney College, Foothill College, College of San Mateo, Canada College, Skyline College, Merritt College and San Jose City College.

Wednesday, May 6, at CCSF, student representative Tom Cleaver (above) makes a progress report on a meeting to a crowd of students in the lobby of the Educational Services Building. The meeting concerned closing the college.

Variety of Opinions at Friday Rally

(Continued from Page 1)

against the system that perpetuates them."

"One of the ways in which we as concerned people can stop imperialistic wars is by getting out and talking to the G.I.'s about the need to put down their arms.

"If 25 per cent or even 10 per cent of the G.I.'s refused to fight in Southeast Asia it would serve as a warning to the ruling class that the people were unwilling to fight in any imperialistic and racist war."

James Boyd, of the Progressive Labor Party, said that "racism and imperialism are responsible" for the expansion of the war in Southeast Asia and the oppression of Third World students and workers in this country.

"We should not attack the war on the purely moralistic grounds that killing is morally bad, but should attack the system — the Rockefellers and Morgans — who are using this war as a cover for their imperialistic adventure into Southeast Asia and who are suppressing the people — especially Third World people — in order that they achieve this superficial goal of theirs," warned Boyd.

"We should especially direct ourselves to the immediate ending of racism and suppression, which has been directly aimed at Third World students and workers in this country and throughout the world by the U.S. ruling class."

George Camacho, of the Concerned Students Committee explained that "I haven't heard anything that I, or any other Third World student, could relate to in the present anti-war movement.

"The Moratoriums and liberals say that the war is morally bad, but what about the genocide being committed against the people of Asia? What about the suppression of Third World people in this country and other countries of the world?

"We should get together and demand an immediate end to this racist war in Southeast Asia and an end to the genocide of Third World people."

Rich Brongel, of SDS, said that "our priorities should be directed toward ending racism and the suppression of Third World students and workers in this country and in the world.

"So far," said Brongel, "the anti-war movement has not directed itself towards ending racism in this country.

"Millions of Third World people are being savagely oppressed throughout the world and all the liberal moratoriums talk about is that the war is morally wrong."

Moice Palladino talked briefly about Welfare Rights.

"The leaders of this country have money to continue wars like Vietnam, or send men to the moon while the poor of this country go hungry because they don't have enough money to buy food."

"For centuries men have ignored or laughed at women's demands for peace," said Sue Green of the San Francisco Women's Liberation. Driven by insatiable greed and lust for power, they have raped the land and women, exploited other men, and created a dangerous world of nuclear weapons, death-trap highways, inhuman prisons, endless wars, and poisonous air, land and water.

"Our efforts to join together have been slandered," continued Miss Green. "When we talk, they tell us we're gossips. When we move against the outrageous conditions of our lives, they say we are castrating, unfeminine, lazy, stupid, and emotionally sick. And we have only begun to fight our oppression as women."

Ben Johnson of the BSU said that "most Black and Third World people are turned off to the anti-war movement.

"Black and Third World people, who are in a constant struggle just trying to make ends meet, can't take time out to attend an anti-war rally that only says that wars are morally wrong. Black and Third World people are more concerned with ending the racist attacks on them, to which the anti-war movement has not directed itself to solving, let alone hope for Third World participation."

Johnson also attacked some people as being "Sunday radicals" because "they have failed to direct themselves to the question of racist attacks on Third World people."

Four Killed at Kent State; ROTC Building Destroyed

Kent State University was reported to be "quiet and deserted" last week after three days of confrontations that saw a ROTC building burned to the ground and four students killed and countless others wounded when Ohio National Guardsmen fired into a non-violent demonstration protesting U.S. involvement in Cambodia.

Classes at Kent State, which has a student enrollment of 20,000, were suspended indefinitly by University President, Robert I. White who termed the murders as "a deep tragedy."

The dead students were identified as Jeffrey Miller, 20, Plainview, N.Y.; Allison Krause, 19, Pittsburg, Pa.; Sandy Lee Scheuer, 20, Youngstown, Ohio, and William Schroeder, 19, of Lorain, Ohio.

ROTC BUILDING BURNED

The shootings came after three straight nights of violence on the campus, where militant students protesting the use of American troops in Cambodia burned down the school's ROTC building May 2.

The troops were called in by Ohio Governor James Rhodes, after a group of 5000 students rampaged through the campus, throwing rocks and bricks and threatened to burn down another ROTC building.

The students then marched to the administration building to protest the use of armed troops on campus, the presence of ROTC offices and the arrest and beating of other Kent students.

STUDENTS FIRED ON

Guardsmen, declaring the rally an illegal assembly, proceeded to fire tear gas grenades into the crowd in an attempt to disperse the angry students.

The Guardsmen managed to push the students away from the Administration building. They soon ran out of tear gas and proceeded to shoot at the students.

In Columbus, S. T. DelCorso, the state adjutant general, said that "a sniper opened fire against the guardsmen from a nearby rooftop."

Brigadier General Robert Canterbury, the commander of Guard troops on the campus said at a news conference that the firing at students was needed to "protect the Guard."

EMOTIONAL ATMOSPHERE

"The emotional atmosphere was such that anything could have happened. It was over in two to three seconds." He said a guardsman "always has the option to fire if his life is in danger."

But students, faculty members and administrators on the scene of the shootings disputed DelCorso's claim that there was "a sniper on a nearby rooftop."

A blonde coed, who said she had a clear view of the shooting, said "at least half of the soldiers fired into the air or into the ground, but some of them simply aimed right at the students."

She also denied that there was any sniper or that students had provoked the shootings.

'NO SNIPER'

The Chief of Police for the Kent city police department also denied that there was any rooftop sniper, adding that had there been a sniper a police helicopter circling over the campus would have reported it immediately.

And by Wednesday of last week, the Adjutant General admitted that "he had no evidence to support his statement there was a sniper who had fired on the guardsmen."

On and Off Campus

Ban the Span

A petition aimed at halting construction of the proposed southern crossing can be signed on the wall outside S-304. In the hopes of banning the possibility of a new bridge connecting Alameda with Hunters Point, the petition will be sent to Governor Ronald Reagan and the members of the California Legislature. Any resident of California may sign the document.

Ballet Premiere

The world premiere of "Schubertiade" by Michael Smuin; "Danses Concertantes," a Lew Christensen reprise; and a repeat of "Symphony in D" will be presented on Saturday, May 16 and Sunday afternoon, May 17, by the San Francisco Ballet as the final performance of their Spring Series. A repeat of "Symphony in D" by Lew Christensen from Luigi Cherubini's music of the same name, with Gerhard Samuel conducting, will round out the program. Tickets are available from the Opera Symphony box office, 141 Kearny St., or phone 397-0717. Groups may phone Timothy Duncan at 751-2141 for special rates.

Art Lectures

During the month of May, Mrs. Jane Kastner, Curator of Education, will give a gallery lecture in connection with the exhibition of drawings by Claude Lorrainn at the California Palace of the Legion of Honor on Saturdays and Sundays at 2:00 p.m.

Mrs. Kastner can give lectures on Wednesdays through Sundays to groups numbering not less than fifteeen. To schedule a tour, phone Mrs. Kastner at 221-5610. All lectures and tours are free of charge.

"Ram It Up"

"RAM IT UP" is a new magazine at City College which will replace "The Forum." The "Ram It Up" staff invites all students with creative works such as drawings, poems, short stories, and articles to submit them to Brown Miller in Room C-333-A.

"The Staff" of the Ram It Up from left to right: Bottom; Brown Miller, Gloria Keeley, Charlie Dee, and Chris Farrell. Top; Frank Jones, Marianella Macchiarini, George Racko, Linn Fremer, and Errol Mullins.

Chinese Drama Troupe Presents A Cowboy Play

From "The Wicked Inn Keeper"

(Photo by Lester Wong)

The Associated Students presented the internationally known Foo-Hsing Opera Company at the Men's Gymnasium on Tuesday, May 5. The troupe presented two performances (one at 9 a.m. and the other at 10 a.m.), the last performed by the company before leaving the United States on their current tour.

The troupe presented two acts: "The Cowboy and The Country Girl" and "The Wicked Innkeeper." The first was concerned with the tale of a weary cowboy who asks a country girl to come riding with him, eventually joining in song and dance together. The second show was an acrobatic foray, taking place in an imaginary night-time setting. The story was about two travelers who murder a wicked innkeeper and his wife.

Although the dialogue was entirely in a Chinese dialect, most of the actions needed no explanation. The costuming was tremendous, rivaling some of the best Western costuming. The six actors were also supplemented by a small corps of musicians playing seemingly exotic instruments.

The concert was primarily focused upon using the imagination to simulate the settings. Most Chinese opera uses little or no setting.

Letters to the Editor

H & R Inspection

I have made an impartial inspection of the cafeteria at City College of San Francisco. The overall picture looks good, but I feel some improvements are necessary for a more balanced operation.

I have made a list of the most important aspects of the college cafeteria, and I have added comments and some recommendations on each phase of its operation.

QUALITY OF FOOD

The quality of the food is very good. No recommendations.

VARIETY OF FOOD

I feel the college cafeteria has an adequate variety of food for diners who use the cafeteria facilities primarily for secondary meals.

Recommendations: There are many different ethnic groups attending City College and I feel the cafeteria should put a special dish on sale each day to feature the food of an individual country.

PRICES

I find the prices to be reasonable and fair to both patrons and management. No recommendations.

CLEANLINESS

The kitchen area is clean and orderly with modern equipment that is easy to maintain. An excellent dishwashing machine promotes clean and sterilized eating and drinking utensils. There are three dining halls for patrons to dine in, and all are in need of better maintenance.

Recommendations: Three capable bus boys should be added to the cafeteria staff, one for each dining hall. The bus boys would be in charge of keeping the tables clean and in mopping the floors, which should be mopped twice daily. The floors need attention.

SERVICE

The service is good.

Recommendation: The main dining hall needs better supervision for the line waiting to receive food at the dish-up counter. Some students and/or others crowd into this line. This should be eliminated so everyone can have their fair turn in the line.

SPACE

The kitchen has ample space for its needs. Space in the dining halls become overcrowded during peak hours between 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Recommendations: There is a definite need for an additional dining hall. This I feel is necessary because many would-be patrons are unable to find seating room during these busy hours. I feel the management should try to better utilize the dining room space it now has. This can be done by rearranging the tables to make room for more tables and chairs.

NOISE

The majority of the patrons of the college cafeteria are young men and women who are inclined in their youth to be quite noisy. All three dining halls are noisy, but I have heard no objections from anyone concerning the noise.

—Ray Chambers

The Guardsman welcomes letters and comments. Address all responses to room 304 of Science Hall.

More Ecology

It is unfortunate that the Biology department is offering students only one class of Ecology. This is an important, relevant course, and one which I hope to take next semester. If, however, only one section is offered, the class will again probably close during pre-registration due to its popularity.

It should be clear to the biology department chairmen, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Carpenter, that Bio 20 is popular enough to merit another class section.

—Dianne Ames

Villain

During the 8:30 p.m. break during night class on Wednesday, April 29th, someone yanked a poster off the glass door at the back of Smith Hall.

The poster was announcing an upcoming rock music performance.

The middle-age villain, I believe, is a night janitor at the campus. He is white, has his graying hair cut short, and he wears blue-and-white striped overalls.

I feel that only censors should be censured.

—A Student for Peace and Unruh

Poem:

Eye to Eye

Sword in sheathing for insane hunger sated
Watch the steepled hill caress rainfall's wash
Of exploded veins and complexion pocked
With dots of dead men ruptured from
The Noble cause, true and lost
To seed a cemetery of widowed lives
Hosting the toppled steeple loser
Only of a bottom burned.

Mark Antony Jordan

The Time of Your Life

William Saroyan's pre-World War II classic, The Time of Your Life, is being presented this week by the City College Drama Department.

The performance schedule will run from Wednesday through Saturday, May 13 through 16, with each presentation beginning promptly at 8:00 p.m.

The performances will be given in the City College Theater, located on Phelan and Judson Avenues, directly behind the Arts building.

Directed by City College Drama instructor, James Haran, The Time of Your Life is a play which takes a good look at American people and the various segments of society from which they come. Its pre-World War II setting, Nick's Pacific Street Saloon on San Francisco's lower Pacific Street, proves to be a gathering place for those from all walks of the American scene, from the affluents and the intellectuals to the common man-on-the street.

Main characters will include Dan Scopazzi as Nick, the saloonkeeper, who believes that people should be left alone to follow their own way of life, no matter where they come from or what their beliefs are. Barry Ybarra plays Joe, the observant philosopher of Nick's saloon, and Leola Adams is cast as Kitty Devine, who, in her role as a streetwalker, manages to epitomize a portrait of child-like innocence.

Joe (Barry Ybarra) explains the beneficial functions of a toy to Nick (Dan Scopazzi) as onlookers contemplate. Standing L-R: Dudley (Douglas Harley), Mary L. (Judy Helm), Wesley (Bobby Mognion), Harry (Harry Giocneo) and the Arab (Simon Levy).

Photo by S. Fogarino

Paul Crowley, the play's set designer, together with his theatrical production crew, has managed to exemplify the setting of Nick's Pacific Street Saloon on a stage designed to resemble a pinball machine.

The amazing feature about Saroyan's 1939 production is that it is somewhat prophetic of today's trends. Much that Saroyan was attempting to say about the American scene and its characters, is actually happening today.

Complimentary tickets are available to all City College students. They may be obtained by request through the instructors of English and the Humanities or through the City College Drama department itself. Admission to the general public will be $1.00.

Black Student Defends Campus Militancy

EDITOR'S NOTE: In the following article Eugene Houston, a black student at City College, defends third-world militancy on campuses.

Black Courage

Dr. Hayakawa, in his Saturday, May 2 article in the San Francisco Examiner, called for black students to have the courage to be "lonely firsts" by taking over the challenges of increased opportunity in the American economic scene. He asserted that black students have it better now than ever before, that now they need only to take advantage of these new opportunities by seeking to be "first Negroes" in business, science, etc.

The main blast in the article was against black militant students. Hayakawa said militants are both afraid and unprepared to accept the challenge of becoming the first lone black in exclusively white fields. The militants, said he, realize their fears and inadequacy and avoid the issue by hiding behind militant demands for black studies for blacks only and by resorting for separatism that resembles rather than counters the very racism that they pretend to fight. Let him dare tell Nathan Hare that.

I interpret him as saying that militants use this "reverse racism" so that no all knowing whites will be present in classes to remind militants by their awesome presence of what they as militants might have been had they aspired to whiteness. I suppose the militants then don't want whites around to observe their fear and see their inadequateness. How racist can one get?

To keep, however, from sounding racist himself, Hayakawa attempts to divide black students into militant and non-militants. His intent is to say all is not so gloomy for all blacks for all blacks for there are a few good blacks. The good blacks are non-militant and they can find freedom and security in the system if they can qualify by the system's rules of success. The militants on the other hand are the terrible and more typical blacks who refuse to follow the system's rules because they are mentally incapable and lack the courage to cope within the system anyway—nonetheless to cope in the system is, as Hayakawa sees it, a desirable end for all black students.

Hayakawa's statement about black studies reflects his own racism. The provocative implication is that black students will use the black studies classroom to pursue their own programs. Why not? Are we not intelligent enough to carry on intelligent discussion, to define ourselves, and to act according to what we find? That exactly is his fear of the militants, and he knows that they too are regarded first as niggers than as lawyers and doctors.

The logic of their rhetoric has also opened the eyes of many white youths to the fact that they are looked upon by the Reagans and Nixons first as expendable soldiers in oppressive armies then as white supporters (not participants) of an educational and economical system telling them that because they are white they are not oppressed.

I, a black student, see no difference between Hayakawa and the Berkeley professor, Authur Jensen, who by manipulating irrevelant research claims that blacks in particular and non-white people in general are genetically lacking in intellect as compared to whites. However, Jensen goes further than Hayakawa dares, for Jensen adds that certain lower class whites are found lacking as well but never as much as blacks and other non-whites. Both Hayakawa and Jensen reach the same conclusion: that blacks can find an acceptable place in America only through white-directed training. They both expound the same 19th century racism of the Booker Washington era. I personally respect Hayakawa less because he has no stake in his sermons, whereas Jensen wishes to justify placing us all into a modern version of the plantation. In effect both are racist but Hayakawa's racism is at his own expense as well as mine.

That Hayakawa is both a simple-minded racist anachronism and a wishful thinking opportunist is obvious enough, and one need not be black to sense this with clarity. His ideas on education affect all working class students as his support for state college tuition raises and his conduct at State College. But that he, as Jensen, attempts to speak simultaneously as a self-appointed analyst and advisor on black conditions that he is not immune to is the mark of a presumptuous fool as well.

It is ironic that he sees fit to ally himself with and be used by the Jensens in advising and criticizing militant blacks about their proper course when not a word is heard from him on the fight that these same militants are waging now to repeat the very law that sent thousands of his fellow Japanese-Americans to squalid detention camps for the sole reason of hating Japanese blood at the wrong time. They were working loyally and diligently within the American system while many untouched German-Americans were actively supporting Hitler whom Jensen resurrects. I would expect Hayakawa to know most intimately as black militants and non-militants know that loyalty and diligence in the United States are no guarantees for non-white freedom and security from racism and its shamelessness.

Hayakawa has an odd sense of courage, but he might profit from the black example if he ever manages to stop being grateful for the position that black militants fights made possible, for non-whites as himself to hold. Yes, I can understand his loneliness; how many Japanese-Americans have been handed the lackey role that he holds.

The American system, especially the educational system, is not geared to educate and accept black, red, brown, and yellow men and many whites are finding too that to reject racism is to find that they too comprise the ranks of those oppressed. It takes more courage to be oppressed and give up token comfort to fight oppression than it does to be oppressed, ignore oppression, and join your oppressors to secure token comfort as Hayakawa urges.

It is my hope that the militants will remain militant and pursue the kind of education that constantly reminds them that they cannot afford not to be militant. Given the Hayakawas, Reagans, Rafferty's, Wallaces and Nixons that seek to defeat education that provokes thought, question and action, I am assured that blacks in particular and people in general will fight all the harder to make black studies and militancy a desirable alternative to the kind of edueaton that makes men silently seek comfort while others are bombed, shot and put into detention camps.

G-MAN SPORTS

Ram Golfers Fourth In GGC

Undefeated Chabot took advantage of their home course, and went on to win the 1970 Golden Gate Conference Golf Tournament at Castlewood Country Club on May 4. Chabot placed three of its four golfers in the state tourney while handily clubbing their opposition.

The team results of the eight schools and their total strokes are as follows: Chabot (915), Diablo Valley (951), San Jose (953), CCSF (968), Foothill (968), San Mateo (976), Merritt (982), and Laney (987).

The top six individuals of the tournament also advanced to the finals in the State championships. The select group included: Williams (Chabot) 145, Boes (San Jose) 147, Ross (Chabot) 150, Williamson (Chabot) 151, Carcero (San Jose) 151.

Meanwhile, Ram golfers John Susko and Bob Simpson suffered similar disappointments when both fell one shot in back of the sixth man who will go the State.

Susko fired a 78-74—152 and Simpson shot a 77-75—152 for the two-day event.

Other CCSF scores were a 79-76—155 by Greg Corvi, an 83-91—174 by Rich Nablefield, and an 88-87—175 by Jerry Doyle.

The Rams finished conference play with an 8-6 record. The final victory of the year came at the Ocean course at the Olympic Club with a 39-15 decision over San Mateo.

With CCSF enjoying the home-course advantage in this match, the result was no contest. Greg Corvi, who shot a 73, and Joe and Jerry Doyle were playing in their own backyard as they fired 77 and 80, respectively. Susko settled for a 77, while Simpson finished with a 79.

Susko, who captured the Western Collegiate JC tournament this year, finished with the best average among the Ram golfers.

A breakdown on the average of each is as follows: Susko 76.3, Corvi 78.2, Joe Doyle 82.1, Simpson 82.5, Jerry Doyle 84.6, and Nablefield 87.0.

Rams Win Final

The Rams finished league play in the Golden Gate Baseball Conference with a record of eleven wins and ten losses. The final win of the year came on a 3-2 win over Merritt behind the six-hit pitching of Rick Escalambre.

Line scores:

May 2 at Balboa

San Jose	0	2	0	1	2	0	0	6	10	3
CCSF	0	2	0	1	1	0	2	7	13	5

WP—Lawhorn; LP—Salazar.

May 5 at Oakland

CCSF	0	3	0	0	0	0	0	3	6	0
Merritt	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	2	6	2

WP—Escalambre; LP — Aldridge.

Merritt Breaks Records; Wins GGC Track Title

Explosive Merritt College set four league records as they roared to the Golden Gate Conference Meet Championship last Friday at San Jose State's lightning fast track by rolling up a near record 129 points.

Following the T-Birds were Chabot at 85, Diablo 56, San Mateo 48, CCSF 48, Laney 42, Foothill 42, and San Jose 40.

Harry Stuckey was double winner for Merritt and scored points in four events on his busy day. He won both the long jump and 440 with a career best, placed fourth in the 220 with a lifetime mark, and ran a leg on the winning 440 relay team.

Stuckey's long jump of 24-8½ inches was a new GGC record. Royce Ford of the Thunderbirds ran the fastest JC 220 in the nation this season when he set a new conference mark of 20.9.

Other record breaking marks for Merritt were a 53.5 in the 440 hurdles, and a relay time of 41.0 in the 440.

Joe Konte:

Fanatics In The Stands

The fan is the backbone of professional sports. Without him, a huge complex with a capacity of 50,000 can look quite morbid.

The sports fan comes in all shapes and sizes. He is a lawyer, a doctor, or a businessman. He is a street sweeper, truck driver, or a construction worker. The fan is an old, tough-skinned man of seventy, complete with cane and a hatful of memories. Or the fan is a wide-eyed, freckle-faced boy with shaggy hair, curious as to the actions of the adults that he observes.

But the fan is not always a welcome sight, because he can be the most irritable, stubborn, malicious person this side of civilization.

—Item . . . (Madison Square Garden, N.Y.) Spectators shower court with missiles during Bucks-Knicks game, and threaten some players with bodily harm.

—Item . . . (Wrigley Field, Chicago) So-called "Bleacher Bums" hurl soft drinks and beer cans at players, run onto field and along dugout roofs, and stampede like wild beasts through the grandstands.

—Item . . . (Chicago Stadium, Chicago) Sick fans pelt skaters and ice with fish, eggs, and other debris during Bruin-Blackhawk playoff game.

Sports needs this type of behavior like the NBA needs the ABA. This type of fan is bordering on insanity. His acts become criminal when he tosses lethal weapons from the balcony.

This type of behavior is not only limited to the three stadiums mentioned, but it is a spreading disease among the sports world.

We have our own nest for the lunaties at Kezar Stadium. Barbaric actions of irresponsible fans forced officials to construct a fence around the field, in an effort to stop the throwing of wine bottles at the athletes.

These crazed people have gone too far when they force us to install monitors to scan the stands in George Orwell fashion; build cages to separate the fan from the playing field, and hire more police for protection.

There is a story of one man who got his kicks in a strange sort of way. He would bring a bagful of a dozen white plastic baseballs to a game. When a foul popup carried into the seats, this lunatic tossed up his phony baseballs, and then settled back to enjoy the frenzy as fans tried to find the real ball before it hit someone.

Unwarranted exhibitions such as these can only downgrade the sport. It's time to wake up so that the small, freckled-faced boy can learn what sportsmanship and fair play is all about.

Book Review: "Fidel Castro Speaks!"

FIDEL CASTRO SPEAKS by Martin Kenner and James Petras, Grove Press, $8.50.

Reviewed by Jim Browning

The guiding principle in selecting particular speeches from the innumerable ones Castro has delivered, has been to choose those which are most relevant to an American audience. Two themes, therefore, seemed most appropriate, and both in fact, have dominated Fidel's speeches since 1966.

These two themes are:

- The necessity for revolutionaries to create the conditions for struggle themselves and not to wait for the material conditions to sweep them into power.
- A vision of communist society and the new "socialist man."

CONSTANT STRUGGLE

Those particular aspects of the Cuban struggle, and Fidel's articulation of them, are of the most interest to the students and workers of this country — who are themselves in constant struggle against the American ruling class.

The theme of struggle, of determination in the seemingly insurmountable odds, runs all through Fidel's works. In his trial for the abortive attack on the Moncada barracks, he turned his own defense into an attack on the legitimacy of the Batista regime and those who supported it. It ends by Fidel saying, "History will absolve me."

NO RETREAT

The armed struggle against Batista after the "Granma" landing began with twelve men and far fewer weapons. Despite this, Cuba went on to defeat mercenaries armed by the United States and then in October, 1962, confronted the United States itself. Never did Fidel sound a note of retreat.

When the Organization for American States (OAS) expelled Cuba from that organization and sought to blockade and isolate Cuba, Castro said in the Second Declaration of Havana: "The duty of every revolutionary is to make the revolution. It is known that the revolution will triumph in America and throughout the world, but it is not for revolutionaries to sit in the doorways of their houses and wait for the corpse of U.S. imperialism to pass by. The role of JOB doesn't wait a revolutionary."

ATTACK DEFEATISTS

Increasingly after 1966 Castro has attacked "pseudo-revolutionaries;" those who know all the dogma, call themselves revolutionaries and communists and yet do little to further the struggle. He attacks the defeatists who believe a direct confrontation with imperialism is not yet "ripe," their countries are not "ready," the masses are not "prepared." Dogma defeatism, and seetarianism must be thrown out; action provides the only test for the revolutionary.

In an attaek on the Venezuelan Communist Party he said: "Anyone can give himself the name of 'eagle' without having a single feather on his back. In the same way, there are people who call themselves revolutionaries without having a revolutionary hair on their head.

NO CHURCH

"The international communist movement, to our way of thinking, is not a church; it is not a religious sect or a masonic lodge that obliges us to follow any weakness, any deviation, that obliges us to follow the policy of mutual admiration with all kinds of reformists and pseudo-revolutionaries. Whoever stops to wait for ideas to triumph among the majority of the masses before initiating revolutionary action will never be a revolutionary."

A second theme that dominates Castro's speeches and also has immediate significanee for the New Left of the advanced industrial countries, is a vision of communist society and the new "socialist man." In practice most "communist" countries go through a stage of socialism—i.e. industrialization—and then proceed to the stage of communism where scarcity no longer exists. The social laws regulating each stage are, in the socialist society, "from each according to his ability, to each according to his work."

ACCORDING TO HIS NEED

In the true communist society it is "from each according to his ability, to each according to his need."

By these categories, the only country in the world that has reached the ultimate goal of true communism is Red China. Nevertheless, in the years after 1966, Castro has increasingly turned his attention to the problems of how to build socialism and communsim parallel to each other. In September, 1966, he said: "We will never create socialist consciousness with a shopkeeper mentality. We will never create socialist consciousness, communist consciousness with a 'dollar sign' in the minds and hearts of our men and women."

In the same speech he announeed that after 1970, rents in Cuba would be nonexistent. The idea is that country should produce more and more for distribution according to need. At the same time, the Cuban people must strive to build a society in which one sees one's obligation to his brothers as the primary obligation; but this can never be done in a society whieh isn't struggling at the same time to eradieate "dollar signs" from the hearts and mind of men and women.

Anti-War Rally CCSF's Largest

(Continued from Page 1)

thing. The student strike should continue and shut down the campuses all over the country, so that the campuses don't become service stations to imperialism."

But Brown H. Miller and Barbara Bell, both instructors from the English department, won most approval with their announcement of a five-day fast for peaee. They will remain at the flagpole during these five days, sleeping there in sleeping bags. The reason given by the two were: 1) That hunger is a way of remembering that suffering is for real, and that people are suffering and dying daily in Indochina; and 2) that they are disgusted with the "disembodied intellects in the classroom, and want to be real."

The statement, read by Miller, included thoughts of what edueation really is:

"Education is a game where the winner drops out after he has won. But now, at last, colleges all over the country are becoming centers for action and commitment, and I hope we continue to evolve in this direction. Real education must begin with action and commitment. Involvement and actual experienee are the only truly valuable learning situations. And we are beginning with a most important and moral cause: to end the war and to change the attitudes and institutions that breed such wars."

Other speakers during the rally included CCSF history teacher, Dr. Tapson. He termed the rally "rewarding", and was loudly applauded when he said that the goal to end the war in Southeast Asia is more important than the food prices in the cafeteria.

Other speakers were the Black Students Union President James Bilbury, who named City College as "Agnew's silent majority;" Paul Hewitt of the Department of Physics who urged the students to stay together "like Woodstock"; and the Third World member, Gene Houston, who referred to the uniting of a few to form a mass as a "reciprocal thing."

The assembly was carefully observed for a time by the watchful eye of a police helicopter. But soon, evidence of the aireraft diminished, finally convinced that the students were here for constructive, instead of destructive measures. It was a tribute to an institution of real education that no longer can be called "Apathy U."

Dr. Louis F. Batmale discusses strike issues with student representatives as instructor Thomas Gaffney and Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels (at left) look on.

Give
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

Chinese Students Problems Discussed at Tuesday Meetings

Problems faced by Chinese students at City College and in the American society are discussed at Chinese Cultural Club meetings at 11 a.m. every Tuesday in S-258.

Dr. Alfred T. Lee, chemistry instructor and adviser of the organization, said that many Chinese students here are recent immigrants who need time before being able to adjust to this society.

"Living in an isolated community or speaking only in Chinese certainly does not make the adjustment easier," he added.

"At the meantime, the counselling service is being overloaded by the sudden increase in enrollment in the entire college. "I believe that each counselor has to take care of around five hundred students. The manifestation of this situation can be seen best in some of our students, who are thoroughly confused as to which major they should be pursuing that will fit them the best."

"One student repeated a certain chemistry course several times just beeause his father thought that he should be a pharmacist, though he definitely lacks the ability to go into a scientific field, according to our opinion," Dr. Lee said.

In order to deal with some of these problems, several motivated students, including Kwok Pui Lui, the president of the club; Henry Lau, viee president; and Robin Pon, treasurer, formed the Chinese Cultural Club to supply mutual-aid in ideas to get adjusted in studies, to expose the better side of the American society to the Chinese students, to help the flow of communication between East and West cultures, and to help the students fit into the American culture better.

Students Push For Shutdown

(Continued from Page 1)

demic Senate added, "How do you know that some idiots won't start trouble? Can you insure non-violence?"

"Will you insure that idiots in blue uniforms will preserve non-violence?" Cassell replied.

The committee agreed that the mood of the assembly would definitely be peaceful.

Smith asked Batmale what he thought of the events that caused the students' actions.

"I think that what happened at Kent is disgraceful and I think the war is tragic," Batmale answered.

Batmale told the students that if he did not get word from the Board of Education by 2 p.m., he would make his own decision. At 1:58, he announced that the campus would be closed Thursday and Friday.

After deciding to shut down the school, Batmale reminded the students in the lobby that a convocation could not take place in the gym because the school would be officially closed. This caused slight disenchantment, but the spectators in the lobby continued making plans for an assembly somewhere else on the campus, possibly at the Ram's head near Smith Hall. It was agreed that a mass meeting be held at Statler Wing at 2:30 on the same day in order to get a definite plan for Friday's activities.

Students left the lobby at 2:10 p.m. and announced to individual classes that the school was officially closed and that a meeting was scheduled in Statler Wing.

The "Campus Carrier" transmitted the same information into each classroom equipped with a loudspeaker.

A.S. ELECTIONS TODAY

PAMPHLET
320807
City College of San Francisco Library

the Guardsman
Official publication of the Journalism Students of City College of San Francisco
VOLUME 70, NUMBER 11 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA WED., MAY 27, 1970

ROGER CASSELL
AS Presidential Candidate

No conventional campaign statement seems appropriate in view of our current campus activities and those activities are uppermost in my mind right now. These are, however, very pertinent to many of the campus problems we've been dealing with; instruction, cost of living as a student, and campus unity.

The events we've seen taking place in the past two weeks mean a lot in the realization of student POWER. That may sound like hyper-activist political dogma, but power is the most realistic word to use since that's what it takes these days; power and unity. We can thank Nixon for his help in bringing students together this year. Although it has taken a hell of a lot of deaths to awaken us, the awakening has begun; and I hope to see it grow here at City College.

I have been on Student Council for two semesters now, and I have seen a lot of apathy and frustration among students here. Then, to make it short, Nixon sent the Army into Cambodia and suddenly students at City asked US, the Student Council, to act with them in a legal and constructional move to make our institution an instrument of change. It became apparent that student initiations could be meaningful, and this has been an encouragement to me.

It follows that if a unified student body can do what it has done in regard to anti-war activities, a student union can also demand and receive improvements in financial aids, campus costs, and many other problems.

I am really optimistic about the coming semester when we will have our own college district and a new interest in student government on this campus. We have twelve seven people running for office this term. I think that is a record. Next semester should be interesting, and I hope I will be able to put my experience and energy to work as President of the new Student Union.

JUDY KAY
AS Presidential Candidate

I have been a member of Student Counell this semester and served on the Finance Committee. I worked as a secretary in the Tutorial Program for one year and as director for one semester.

I feel that the Student Council should have an effective voice in things which concern all City College students. I would like to see any student with a complaint or suggestion feel free to come into the council and air his ideas. The door to the council is always open to all students, and I hope to see more students use this means of expression.

I am running for this office as a concerned student, not as a politician or representative of any particular group. I don't want to run the council, but to listen to the desires of the students and try to implement programs that will benefit the most students on this campus. The student government must be flexible and change as priorities on campus change.

VICTORIA REITER
Vice-Pres. Candidate

One of my plans to alleviate the present funds burden at Student Council is to initiate the sale of two separate Student Body cards, one unrestricted card at $7.50 which includes parking privileges, and another restricted card which entitles the bearer to all privileges with the exception of parking (suggested price to be $4.50). By increasing subscriptions by 50 per cent we may be able to afford a small reduction in the price of used books, which is the only price which is subject to change.

I hope that you will allow me the opportunity to put this and many other suggestions to work for you.

MIKE DEVINE
Vice-Pres. Candidate

Next semester, the Student Council moves into the new Student Union Building. I would like to see a Council dedicated to action move into that building. A few things I would like to see happen are, better parking for the students, the possibility of placing a student on the Board of Education, more concerts and lectures, and the re-evaluation of the role of the campus police.

Encouraging Turnout Is Expected

Roger Cassell and Judy Kay are the two Presidential candidates in the Associated Students Election which will take place today and tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Balloting desks are located in Smith Hall, Statler Wing, the Science Building, the flagpole, Cloud Hall, the Arts Wing (near the Cable Car) and the men's and women's gym.

Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, said he is encouraged by the number of people running for council this semester and is hoping for a large turnout at the polls.

Voting machines are unavailable for this election because they have already been taken to the polling places for the upcoming California state primaries. Instead, paper ballots will be used, making it more difficult to count for the Election Committee, headed by the current A.S. President Renato Larin. The results of the election will probably be announced on Monday, June 2.

For the list of Student Council candidates, see Page 9.

800 Hear Hayden

By Jim Browning

An anti-war rally to protest the Indo-China war and the invasion of Cambodia by U.S. troops was held May 13.

Featured speaker at the rally that drew some 800 to the football stadium was Tom Hayden.

Hayden, one of the defendants in the Chicago Eight 'conspiraey' trial and a founder of the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) spoke on U.S. imperialism in Southeast Asia and the state of the country here at home.

"U.S. imperialism has been in Southeast Asia for 21 years," Hayden said, "and it has been defeated at every stage of escalation.

U.S. DEFEATED

"In 1945, the U.S. was helping the French with arms and money and the French were finally defeated in 1954. Then they sent in advisors and found that they were not effective in turning back the Vietnamese people's struggle for independence.

"Then the U.S. sent in more advisors and some well equipped troops. They too were defeated.

"Next came more troops — 500,000 in three years. They too were defeated.

"And now comes the invasion of Cambodia and Laos. Judging from past experience they too will be defeated."

According to Hayden, the main reason for the continual defeat of the United States in Southeast Asia lies in the determined struggle launched by the Vietnamese people for total liberation.

TRUE INDEPENDENCE

"The people of Southeast Asia are determined to totally liberate themselves and achieve true independence. They successfully fought off the French, and now they're successfully fighting off U.S. imperialism.

"Unless the other side gives up, which I doubt," continued Hayden, "the U.S. will be

(Continued on Page 8

Tom Hayden speaking at the rally
(Photo by Ron Frank)

Exclusive Interview—

Goerner on CIA

Following Frederick Goerner's address to the College Hour audience at the Little Theater, this reporter had the opportunity to talk to the author and broadcaster.

Mr. Goerner's research for his book, "The Search for Amerlia Earhart," involved a considerable hassle with the Central Intelligence Agency and naval intellegence units in an attempt to uncover the story of Earhart's dissappearance. His deteetive work has taken him to the Pacific Island of Saipan four different times in his quest for the truth of the affair. It was on Saipan that Goerner was shown an ultra-modern CIA "town," which was isolated from the island population and unknown to the American public at that time.

Because Mr. Goerner probably has more knowledge of the CIA than any of us will ever have, the reporter brought up the recent comment by British historian Arnold Toynbee: "Wherever there is trouble, violence, suffering, tragedy, (in the world) the rest of us are now quick to suspect the CIA has a hand in it."

The following is Goerner's opinion. "It's become that. Whether the CIA is involved or not it gets credit for a hell of a lot more things that it's really involved in.

"The CIA was never created to be what it is today. The CIA came out of Pearl Harbor and the fact that there were a dozen different intelligence agencies that didn't know what the other was doing, and that the information wasn't all brought to the president so that he could digest it. It came piecemeal or didn't come at all. So Roosevelt decided that we were going to create a joint intelligence organization in which there would be an input so that intelligence could be digested and disseminated for the president. There was sort of a national security council to begin with, and then the CIA came into being. It was intended to do those things and it was stipulated as such when it was funded by Congress; that it would be an intelligence gathering, digesting and disseminating organization for the edification of the president.

"It was never meant to be a militant arm of this government and it was never meant to meddle in foreign policy or subvert foreign governments. The CIA went out into areas that it was never intended to become invovcd in and, because of the secret nature of this work, it became hard for even Congress to find out what was going on or what was being spent."

(Continued on Page 9)

Bomb Plot Aims At Police Science

The Guardsman has learned of a plot involving "student officials" to blow up the offices of the campus police department.

In an anonymous telephone call to Guardsman News Editor Jim Browning, a woman who said she was "in on the plot at one time" spoke of the impending bomb plot.

BLAME

According to the mysterious caller, the bomb plot was made by "two or three high ranking student officials who intended to blame the bombing on the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS).

SDS has, for the last two semesters, demanded that police science courses and police cadet patrols be either stopped or thrown off campus altogether.

DROPPED

"The plot was later dropped," the speaker said, "because one person thought that it would tend to polarize the students of this college into pro - SDS and pro- police science camps."

The speaker did not reveal the names of the people involved or elaborate any further on the subject.

"The people in SDS do not believe in using terror tactics such as bombing buildings to accomplish political objectives," said Rich Brongel, SDS spokesman.

"The only way meaningful reforms can be accomplished at this college is by large numbers of students taking action to demand them. Bombing the police science offices would only isolate progressive students, like the Concerned Students for Action who are demanding an end to cadet patrols on campus, and would do nothing toward pointing out the racist practices of the campus police," Brongel added.

LOOKED INTO

A spokesman for the campus police said that they "had not heard of any plot" to blow up their offices but added "if there is a plot it certainly should be looked into."

The Scam On Recordland

Two famous faces have been seen scuttling about Los Angeles' infamous Sunset Boulevard these days: John Lennon and George Harrison.

After two years of battle with the U.S. immigration department, the idolic pair have at last obtained visas which permits them to visit our country for two months. Their purpose is to discuss Apple affairs with their Capitol companions concerning their latest venture, "Let It Be."

THE "WHO"

The outspoken leader of the "Who," Peter Townshend, has turned his creative genius toward a massive anti-drug campaign which is flowing over the island of Great Britain. Although the campaign itself is not doing an adequate job, (English drug abuse is up 65 per cent since 1965) Townshend is receiving "a great deal of acclaim from the legal officials. Incidentally, the new "Who" LP entitled "Seeker" will be released this week in most city record stores. The album will include new renditions of old "Who" hits, "My Generation" and "Magic Bus." The strange thing about this is that both songs are seventeen minutes long.

FAIRPORT CONVENTION

U.S. critics have, for weeks now, praised an English band which is currently on tour throughout America. The Fairport Convention is quite a unique group considering that their musical materials are re-arranged, re-composed, old English folk songs. Their new album is a delight to listen to for it is a pleasant change from the pounding rhythms being violently born by so many of today's bands. The only problem is that most of the large stores in San Francisco are continually running out of this highly acclaimed record.

GINGER BAKER

Despite his rather shoddy appearance on stage, Ginger Baker has proven himself a young aristocrat with the purchase of a new car, specifically an Italian-made Lamborghini runabout; the cost: 13,500 dollars.

NEW RECORDS

New records that will be appearing soon have the critics anxiously pointing their pens. Some of these LP's are: A new album by Traffic, "Question;" a new disc created by the Moody Blues; and a new live record by the Butterfield Blues Band. Other new recordings include Savoy Brown, the Stones, Chicago, and, unexpectedly, Bob Dylan.

Fred Goerner, Earhart Historian, Speaks Here

By Jim Tutt

Fred Goerner, author of The Search For Amelia Earhart, spoke during college hour at the Little Theater on May 14th, concerning the expedition of Miss Amelia Earhart and the power of the press.

There were approximately 26 people present, including both faculty, and students.

A lengthy history was presented about the many Earhart accomplishments, and the final unseen disaster Amelia faced when she and her plane became lost somewhere at sea.

Goernor had devoted much time to the Earhart mishap, but there are a great many aspects still yet unknown by the public. Goerner plans to take another trip to the Pacific to the reef near Howland Island, where he believes Earhart was forced to land. He also plans to make a search for her plane, and if found, to bring the wreckage to the surface.

Mr. Goerner, toward the end of the lecture, made some very interesting comments concerning the power of the press in making it possible for him to begin his investigation concerning the Earhart mishap.

"This Country has the greatest amount of freedom for its journalists of any country in the history of man."

Goerner went on to say that he was able to "elbow presidents, the Central Intelligents Agency, and parts of the military," because the press has got too much power to suppressed.

Fred Goerner

However, Goerner said, "the press has got to improve itself too. There is too much surface investigation and we've got to elevate our standards of journalism. We've got to have more and better trained journalists." Goerner also believes that, "we've got to question the executive branch of the government more." Goerner went on to say, "Journalists must not only be free to preserve the truth but also free to gain it. When people are properly informed about what's going on in the world, they're going to make the right decisions."

Goerner ended his lecture by using an axiom, which says something in the effect that a man who does not know his freer doesn't recognize it, and is condemned to relive it. "I don't want us," Goerner said, "to relive the kinds of events that took place in World War II."

COIL—A Learning Supplement

A $3,000 grant from the school budget enabled City College to set up the Center Of Independent Learning (COIL).

COIL, founded by Chemistry instructor Eugene Roberts, is a self-tutoring program for any student who needs help in a given subject or just wants a review.

Various materials are available in such fields as English, Engineering, and Physics. A great deal of material is available on math and chemistry, including homework keys for chemistry.

Books and materials may be checked out by the hour, day, or weekend. The best time to visit COIL is every hour on the half hour, and between 4-5 in the afternoon. It is located in C-305, right next to the campus library.

Also available at COIL are tapes with book and filmstrip on the subject of note-taking. This particular film with tape and book contains a story, for which one is to take notes. After this, the tape explains what the notes should have contained and why. In this way better note-taking methods are learned.

Students who use COIL are required to fill out an application card. When checking out materials, a check out card is required to be filled out. Students will be given a booklet that explains in detail how COIL works and instructions about using and returning books and other materials.

Students are not fined for late material returns. In case of a late return, however, students may be asked if they will donate some of their spare time in working in the COIL office, to which they can accept or reject depending on their choice.

Of the many tutoring centers, COIL at CCSF has been praised by Sonoma State as the best because it is run by the students, not the faculty.

For further information, see Mr. Roberts in S-237.

Crime Rate Down—An Editorial by Bruno Forner

A recent announcement made by Mayor Alioto points out the fact that San Francisco's crime rate has gone down 12 per cent for the first four months of 1970.

The figures show that the number of stolen automobiles has gone down 20 per cent (16 per cent in April). Robbery decreased also by 20 per cent during the quarter (9 per cent the last month). Burglary took a drop of 4 per cent (1 per cent in April), while aggravated assault went down 2 per cent but increased 27 per cent in April. Rape is up 21 per cent but went down 7 per cent in April. The homocide rate has remained along an even keel during the same two periods of time.

Not bad, right? Now all we have to do is to figure out what caused it.

The first thing we must remember is that the crime rate has been decreasing (overall) monthly since the beginning of this year. If you recall, San Francisco got a new Chief of Police at that time. If there is any connection, then Chief Nelder is to be commended for his devotion to the crime problem. So should our men in Blue.

I would like to add that the homicide rate remaining the same is a milestone. For years that rate has been increasing steadily, and now it is not increasing or decreasing. Maybe it can go down for a change in the near future.

English Teachers' Five-Day Flagpole Fast

Brown Miller and Barbara Bell Try to Re-create Suffering In Asia

By Shirley Fogarino

H. Brown Miller, an English instructor at City College announced on Monday, May 11, that he and a colleague, Barbara Bell, would begin a five-day hunger-fast and peace vigil which would take place at the college's flagpole from May 11-18.

Miller invited any student or faculty member to join the vigil, which was established as a protest against President Nixon's recent decisions concerning the transferral of American troops to Cambodia.

This interview took place on the afternoon of the fourth day of the vigil:

S. F.: How do you feel after almost five days out here?

B. B.: I feel very good. I'm not hungry, I feel weak, and I can't walk up and down stairs.

H. B. M.: I feel physically weak, especially when I try to climb stairs or exert myself in any way, but mentally and spiritually, I feel fantastic! I feel better; I feel like I have more of the right kind of energy, of the good kind of energy, more than I've ever had in my life. It's really been a valuable learning experience for me.

S. F.: Have you been gaining anything from this vigil?

B. B.: One of the things I've been gaining is that I am learning how I would like to conduct my classes out here. What's happened is that this vigil has turned into a teach-in. The students are gathering around us, they are shooting questions at us; they're debating among themselves and it's very exciting. Students are talking about the things that are meaningful to them, and I frequently try to get them to do this in my classes, most of the time without any success. I can't seem to get the students motivated to talk about racial issues, the things that really interest them whereas out here, the reaction has been completely different. The students are excited about what's going on in the school; they're very curious about what I'm doing. The situation sets them off into discussions that I wish we could have in the classroom.

H. B. M.: Well, I hope that it'll get people not only on this campus but on other campuses, to think and to try to find some way that they can act. I hope it illustrates to the nation and to the students of the nation that education does not have to be something isolated in the classroom, it can be something active that goes out into the world, into the community and that's where the truly valuable learning situation is. The classroom is fine; books are fine, but if the classroom and books are ends in themselves, then they're really a farce; they're nothing. If they are means of an end that's humanitarian and makes a better world for everybody to live in, then that's what real education is to me.

S. F.: How have your students been reacting to this?

B. B.: I try to offer my students the option of coming out here to meet me or not, although today I said simply I'd be holding class here. Some of my students have objected to this. They feel that I'm bringing my politics into the classroom and that I have no right to do that. By and large, the students have been very curious, very enthusiastic and I think that the discussions that we have had, we've been able to relate to the material we are covering in class. It's been very stimulating.

H. B. M.: Most of my students seem to be proud to have a teacher that will do something real and will put himself on the line. Obviously, there are some who are confused by it and some that are actually hostile toward it. I haven't really been encouraging them to do anything except for to think for themselves, to try to make up their own minds according to their own consciences.

S. F.: What are your views on the Cambodian issue and the entire Vietnam issue?

B. B.: Well, I have wanted to pull out of Vietnam ever since we got there. It's very true that after the Cambodian invasion and the Kent State incident, I felt that I had to do something to make some kind of statement. I couldn't remain passive.

H. B. M.: I think that the Vietnamese war should have been a civil war between North and South Vietnam. The fact that the United States did not allow the elections to happen back when they were about to happen shows that the United States expressed a fear of losing a hold in that country. Some people have wondered why we are trying to keep Communism out of an Asian country when we tolerate it a few miles off of our shores in Cuba. There seems to be some inconsistency to the Domino theory there. So one explanation there is that, for example, Vietnam has the richest tungsten deposits of any country in the world and the United States, for its industry, will need these tungsten deposits to mine. If, therefore, we do lose Vietnam to an unfriendly Communist government, we'll be out of a lot of money-making tungsten.

S. F.: (To Miller): Then you think we're out for capatilistic gain?

H. B. M.: I think it's essentially an imperialistic endeavor. One of the points that Barbara Bell and I are trying to make is that our nation, right now, requires fifty per cent of the world's natural resources to keep up its standard of living. In the next thirty years, it is projected that our population will double, therefore, at that time we will need one-hundred per cent of the world's natural resources to keep up our standard of living. It's time that we stopped being so greedy.

S. F.: Do you really think that your action will influence the Nixon administration in its policies toward the war?

B. B.: Not necessarily. I don't have any ideas of what effect this is going to have except at City College. What happens at City College isn't necessarily going to affect the Administration. If City College manages to create a good organization—a good peace movement—then City College could join the rest of the schools in the country and I think that is very important. Everybody has to get together now.

H. B. M.: If you'd have asked me that a month ago or even a week ago, I probably would have been very skeptical and said that I thought the chances were zero, and I still have a streak of skepticism in me, but just because of the fantastic response here at City College and the many colleges across the country, right now I wouldn't be able to say. I do have hope right now but I can't make any prediction.

S. F.: How many have joined you in your fast out here?

B. B.: I believe we have about seven or eight people who are fasting. We have a number of people who are joining us at night. I think this is being very effective here at City College. Mostly, I think it's the curiosity. People are coming up and asking, "What are you doing; why are you doing it?" and then starting to examine themselves as far as they are concerned.

H. B. M.: We did this especially to get the students here on campus to see that teachers can involve not just their minds, but their minds and bodies in a really active learning situation. I would hope that this would rid the college of the apathy that has plagued the students for a long time. One reason I did this was to find out whether or not I had the courage and the commitment to do it. I wanted to find out something about myself, too. Student response has been fantastic. It's been much more than I expected it to be.

S. F.: How long have you been teaching at City College?

B. B.: This is the end of my third year here.

H. B. M.: Three years.

S. F.: What are your political beliefs?

B. B.: For the past year I have said that I have none. I used to be a democrat; I used to consider myself a liberal. I haven't been able to consider myself anything for over a year.

H. B. M.: In the past, my ideas have leaned left-of-center but actually, until this week, I've never taken any strong political action. I've voted; I've signed petitions; I've written letters to senators; all the easy paper-work type of politics. Now, for the first time, I'm really becoming committed. I would rather not characterize myself as left-wing. I'd rather just think of myself as someone who values human life over property.

S. F.: What happens after this?

B. B.: After this? I've been giving that a lot of thought. I think I'd like to work on campus with the Experimental College, working with some committees there and trying to help them at the Experimental College. As far as my long range plans are concerned, I think that I will have to join some pacifist organization, but I want to investigate that first, and find out what the different groups are doing.

H. B. M.: One thing we want to do is to go around and talk to classes and try to reach as many students as possible. Other things that we can do are now being discussed between the three of us—myself, Barbara Bell and Rich Nolan. We're hoping for suggestions from other teachers, for suggestions from other students and I think we'll have to be more creative in the future. This fast is only a beginning, but it's only a beginning.

S. F.: Do you have anything that you would like to add?

H. B. M.: I'm tired.

Barbara Bell and Brown Miller at their fasting grounds.

One of the college's most notable anti-war protests taking place at the flagpole.

Opinion:

Democracy In Student Govt.

By Steven Mendelsohn, Student Council

On May 18, 1970, the Student Council voted to allocate $100 of the remaining $145.15 in our budget to the Anti-War Coalition in B-5. While the effort to obtain support for the anti-War movement is to be commended, this particular action is to be deplored. The Federal government has sought to force wage earners to make a "voluntary" contribution to the political party of their choice, since the mid-1960's. The liberal Student Council has now succeeded where conservative Washington administrations have failed. They have succeeded in using student funds, especially Student Body card funds, to finance their own particular political charity.

National politics should not be financed without a vote of the students. To do otherwise is to ignore the minority views entirely. This means alienating people who would otherwise support the wide range of anti-war measures.

Since the original idea of using student funds to finance regular campus activities has been broken, all I can urge the Spiro T. Agnew "Silent Majoritiest" people to-do (since the Student Council feels it must spend the money) is come down to B-401 and try to clean us out of the remaining $45.15 left in this term's budget.

Shows Togetherness

By Tom Cleaver,
Feature Editor

Despite myriad hassles in organizing something no one who is involved has ever organized. the strike at CCSF is the most together of any junior college in the Bay Area.

At the College of San Mateo, the board of trustees voted to support President Nixon's policy in Southeast Asia. According to Susan Conlan, CSM students have not been able to get it together there. Several hundred students have worked out an organization for a strike, but have not been able to build student support because they have not been able to get the faculty support CCSF is enjoying due to the position of the trustees. Students at CSM are working around the Stanford Strike, going out to high schools on the peninsula, talking about the national strike and passing out literature on the war and the invasion of Cambodia.

At Merritt JC, a deep split exists between the black and white students at the school, with the white students wanting to support the national strike and go out in solidarity, and the blacks feeling that it is not important enough to them. Race war nearly broke out last week when a strike rally was called there.

At College of Marin, students are working on the strike, but nothing has been able to come about to kick things off the way last Monday's rally did at City.

National Student Strike Headquarters, at San Jose State has asked the City College Strike Committee to set up a coordinating committee, to go around to the other JC's in the area, to help them get things off the ground. Students from the strike committee are visiting other schools this week, speaking at rallies, and talking with the other strike committees about the way things were developed here. City College is also sending out speakers to Bay Area high schools, to community organizations, and to other groups, speaking about the strike and what they hope to accomplish.

After much fumbling at the beginning, the strike committee here has managed to develop a smooth organization. Last week, until the administration officially adopted the "academic amnesty" program, students were caught in mid-stride, so to speak. After the announcement, student participation in the various working committees skyrocketed.

Canvassing of neighborhoods throughout the city is being coordinated at CCSF. People are going door-to-door, asking people to sign petitions in support of the Nelson Amendment—to cut off funds for the Cambodian operation. They are also soliciting signatures on petitions to be sent to the President, getting people to write letters to their senators and congressmen, and in general doing everything possible to involve people in the democratic process.

As has been said many times since the strike first began, "Apathy U" has been laid to rest. At last.

A Statement to the Student Body

We of the Student Renaissance Coalition (SRC) would like to take this opportunity to commend those faculty members who have supported the actions of students at City College against the war and repression in America. For the first time, faculty and students have come together on an issue of importance, in a manner that can build an ongoing faculty-student movement for change at City College.

We feel that education must begin with action and commitment; that actual experience and involvement are the only truly valuable learning situations. By their actions of the last week, the faculty of this school has come together with students in a way that will lead to this from now on.

Last month, SRC published its program for change on the campus. Included in this program were almost all of the demands now being carried out in the strike. SRC members have been active in working for these things in the strike. We called for deep changes in the bookstore operations, and people are working to bring that about. We called for the development of a child day-care center for the City College community, and people are working to bring this to reality during this struggle. We callled for the development of a faculty-student union, and events of the last week have gone far towards the development of this. We called for an expansion of involvement for the Experimental College, and the motion created by the struggle has gone far towards developing this. Our demand for a teaching assistant's program has been advanced by these recent events, and the possibility of developing this has been made real by this struggle.

We now call on students to not lose sight of these things. The strike has gone far to accomplish all this, but an ongoing effort beyond the end of the strike, beyond the end of the semester, is needed. We cannot cop out on something that might seem minor at the present time: the Student Council elections. The fact that this strike has gone as well as it has is due in no small measure to the fact that there were people on this year's student council who—when the chips came down—did represent the new mood of City College, and were able to represent this mood of the school in dealings with the faculty and the administration. We must maintain this representation on next year's council, and increase it. The Rah-Rah Days are done. "Apathy U" is dead. City College has joined the modern world.

The candidates on the ballot with the initials SRC after their names have demonstrated concretely by their actions their commitment to achieving their demands that have come from you, the students. We are committed to maintaining that struggle and expanding it. We are hoping to create the renaissance on this campus that has begun with the strike.

Here is the SRC PROGRAM as announced April 10, 1970:

1. We call for the development of a child day-care center to serve the needs of students, faculty, and campus employees.
2. We call for a change in the operation of the Associated Students Bookstore, to lower prices of textbooks and course materials for the students at City College.
3. We call for an expansion of the Experimental College so that students can take a fuller role in their own education.
4. We call for the development of a faculty-student union, to improve the student-teacher relationship at City College.
5. We call for the development of a teaching assistant's program, to improve the educational process at City College.
6. We demand that there be no censorship of student-controlled media, to allow for the fullest development of intellectual creativity and knowledge of the world we must live in.

The following students will have SRC after their names on the ballot:

A.S. President
Roger Cassell
A.S. Vice President
Mike Devine
Student Council
1. Charlie Borden
2. Tom Cleaver
3. John Goebel
4. Pat Horan
5. Jo Ann King
6. Deborah Marchi
7. Don Rich
8. Bonnie Solomon

Arab Speaker Denounces U.S.

By Jim Browning

Flirahim Taulasha, executive director of the American Committee for Justice in the Middle East, said last Thursday that the "United States is at fault for the serious situation in the Middle East between the Arab and Jewish people."

Mr. Taulasha's May 14 lecture was the first event of Palestine Liberation week sponsored by the Arab Students Association of City College.

"In 1948," said Taulasha, "when colonilization around the world was all but dying out, some large powers, especially the United States and England, persisted in their demand that a Zionist colony be set up in the Middle East."

The Zionist movement was launched in Europe in 1897 by Theordore Hurtzell as a reaction to renascent European anti-Semitism. Its aim was "to create for the Jewish people a home in Palestine"—through mass immigration and systematic colonization and with the help of European powers.

"They justified their demands by saying that a Zionist state was needed in the Middle East because of the strong anti-Semitism against the Jewish people in Europe and in the world," said Taulasha.

"And what followed was a reign of terror," Taulasha added. "Arab people living in Palestine were killed or exiled, and their land and homes seized—$100 million worth of Arab owned land has been seized in Palestine since 1948—to make room for the establishment of a Zionist colony.

Although Jews consistute only 33 per cent of the population in Palestine, they have managed, with the help from some U.S. business' who are using the Zionists movement to help their own cause, to set up a Zionist colony.

"The United States has consistently supported the Zionist movement," Taulasha said. "Besides being the major supplier of arms to Israel, U.S. businesses sell Israeli bonds throughout the world and in this country."

U.S. businesses give Israel between $400 and $600 million in aid each year and account for approximately 83 per cent of the industrial output in that country.

"The U.S. businesses are using the Zionist movement in an attempt to reach the vast resources of the Middle East," Taulasha added.

Flirahim Taulasha

"The Arab people of the Middle East are not against the Jewish people, with whom they want to live in peace. They're against the Zionist movement which has displaced many Arab people living in Palestine and which is suppressing all people of the Middle East in order that U.S. imperialism can get a foot into the rich Middle East."

Taulasha was also critical of the coverage of the Middle East situation by the news media in this country.

Ecology Group Deplores S.R.'s Plastic Cups

"Ecology begins at home" is apparently the motto of the Experimental College Ecology Group.

Jane Prescott, an organizer of the group, is protesting the change from china to plastic cups in the Hotel and Restaurant department and has proposed a boycott of the disposable plastics.

"The main problem," Jane explained, "is that plastics aren't recycled." Also, the litter problem on this campus will increase.

Plastic products have been criticized because there is presently no known method to reclaim the products for re-use. Burning certain plastics emits a poisonous gas called phoxene, which was used in World War I warfare.

Another Film Shot In San Francisco

By Fred Morales, Jr.

San Francisco has once again been chosen for the filming of a new movie, "Fools" which is being shot entirely in The City and will be released towards the end of the year.

The movie was written by an actor, Robert Rudelson, and stars Jason Robards and Katharine Ross.

"What we really have is kind of a heavy comedy," said the director, Tom Gries. "It says what our times are about without being obvious or blatant about it."

The movie traces the events in the life of a disillusioned actor, who has come to San Francisco to think things over and get a good look at himself. The disillusioned actor is played by Jason Robards, and his newly found love is played by Katharine Ross, who is also the wife of a millionaire lawyer at the same time.

Miss Ross, best known for her roles in "The Graduate" and "Butch Cassidy and The Sundance Kid," started her acting career by playing in several television shows and a few movies, such as "Shenandoah" with James Stewart. She said that, she chose to play in "Fools" because, among other things, she liked the script.

When asked why she thought more movies were being filmed on location rather than in Hollywood studios, she said "I don't think you can use a back lot any more, and I don't think you can use a set any more. I think you have to do the picture where it takes place. People are too sophisticated—maybe it's because of television—you see too many real places, so that when you say this is such and such a place, it better be that place."

One of the first scenes of the movie takes place at Aquatic Park near Fisherman's Wharf. As the warm breeze blows in off the bay, the director yells "Action!" and the filming is underway. The director looks on approvingly while the cameraman gazes through the viewfinder of the camera, only several feet from the subject. Three people, singing and playing guitars, sit on the grass as the discerning eye of the camera records the scene on film.

The crowd watches attentively as the crew goes through the routine actions of making a movie. Hundreds of cameras click and the question, "What are they doing here?" is on the lips of the spectators. Despite several minor difficulties with the over enthusiastic crowd, the shooting seems to go smoothly. After a few hours, the crowd thins out and the crew loads the equipment into the trucks.

Several weeks later the plot thickens. St. Bridgid's Church becomes the site, and is turned into a maze of cables, lights, cameras, and sound equipment. The filming has almost been completed and only a few more crucial scenes need to be taken. First they rehearse the tragic sequence of events. The scene opens with Miss Ross running into the church almost in hysterics. As she runs down the aisle, her husband follows her, points a gun at her, and pulls the trigger. She falls to the floor and the scene ends. She is commended by the director for her splendid acting. Then, the cast and crew take their place, and once again the fantasy of movie making becomes a reality.

Katherine Ross sits with Joan Baez' sister, Mimi, who taught Miss Ross to "fake it" on the guitar.

"Fellini Satyricon"—Smooth and Delightful

As a film maker, Federico Fellini resembles E. E. Cummings as a poet. He starts smoothly, comprehensibly, delighting the audience with its own powers of apprehension. Then he leads it helter-skelter through a surrealist void of limbo-like landscapes, faded, unreal sunshines, and human monsters who scrabble gibbering across the background while the protagonists meander through the world's wierdest Disneyland.

"Fellini Satyricon" is, to date, the acme of this style, and make no mistake, the title tells exactly what the film is: Fellini's version of the Satyricon rather than, as the newspaper blurbs would have us believe, "Fellini's 'Satyricon' "—that is, merely his production of Petronius Arbiter's Latin classic. Petronius was, by the way, a noble Roman voluptuary who lived during Nero's caesarship. You remember him because Leo Genn played his part opposite Peter Ustinov's Nero in the Hollywood epic "Quo Vadis." You'll also recall that Petronius was the Andy Warhol of his era, its imperially ordained arbiter of food, fashion, and freakiness. His Satyricon was a long-winded putdown of Roman high society's vulgar luxury, exemplified by the raucous, wine-bibbing, fodder-swilling, toga-lifting, Trimalchian orgy —now canonized in popular thinking as typical Roman life. Under Fellini's direction, Trimalchio's banquet becomes merely the best episode in the rake's progress of two Italian picaros, Encolpius and Ascyltos.

The movie opens with these two hotbloods fighting over possession of their mutually-owned pretty-boy. Encolpius takes him/ Cut to a bawdy-house. Aschitos retrieves him. There is an carthquake. Cut to an art gallery where Encolpius is invited to Trimalchio's banquet. After the orgy and its concluding mock funeral, he lics out in the fields, "bombed" as they used to say. Cut to a slave galley, where Encolpius, his friend, and their little Giton have unaccountably been imprisoned by Lichias, an imperial favorite. Far off Caesar kills himself, A. and E. escape to a villa where the lord and lady have also committed suicide. Cut to the desert where the heroes learn of a miraculous albino hermaphrodite. They kidnap him—heaven knows why at this point—and he dies later of dehydration in the desert. Cut to a mod coliseum in which Encolpius fights a minotaur, wins a wench, and goes impotent. Cut to a fabulous bordello called "the Garden of Delights," thence to a seaside witch's lair—where, through the application of a little therapeutic sex, Encolpius is cured. Cut to Asceltos' death, cut to a parting shot of cannibalism; cut to Encolpius striding into the distance as the sun sinks slowly into the Mediterranean, raising its median temperature 50 degrees . . .

All this is delivered with a fantasy aura that alternates between daydream and nightmare. Satyricon is Fellini's documentary of a state of mind: to wit, people's conception of antiquity. It is so fragmented because, in Fellini's words, that is "emblematic of the fragmented way the ancient world appears to us today." What else springs to mind when ancient Rome is mentioned but its impossible gaud and implacable brutality? Both these qualities are pre-eminent in the film, which is alternately as garish and bedizened as a circus sideshow, and as dully violent as a 'Hell's-Angels' stomp. In one episode an actor must undergo amputation of his hand in the course of his play. A hapless crippled half-wit is substituted, the cut is made, the hand is tied back onto the stump—all this full front and in livid technicolor, mind—and the actor resumes the stage, bawling about a divine miracle which has restored "his" hand. His audience spits invective and throws overripe fruit at this point, not because the scene was too brutal, but too hammy. So much for Roman sensibilities and our inkling of same.

Certainly the film achieves no particular historic alr: it seems as contemporary as yesterday's high camp. Mountains of much publicized time and effort were expended on ultimately molehill effects, i. e., fleeting faces, gestures, situations, objects, and the entire pantheon of typical Fellini chimerae. They all, of course, are vital to the atmosphere of the film, but are so breathlessly terse that it's a wise move to go to the matinee showing and sit through the whole twice. Still, each detail is faintly recognizable under its inflated and monstrous aspect. A simple decapitation ends with the victim's head staring wonderingly up at the audience from the waves of the sea. A noble cuts his wrists and bemusedly bleeds to death sitting over wine with his wife. A gladitorial cheering section urges its favorite on with a nicely upbeat chorus of turkey gobbles. You name it and it's likely to happen somewhere in the film.

It is fortunate that action speaks louder than words in Satyricon, because the dialog proceeds in Italian, German, and vulgar Latin, which is scantily translated in subtitles; sometimes whole scenes flit by with no translation at all. Whatever rhetoric is involved is also embodied in the action, for scarcely an idea is voiced throughout except for Eumolpus the Poet's impassioned cry, "What happened to philosophy, which once taught us the art of living?" Occasionally there are high moments of unintentional humor. In fighting the minotaur, Encolpius finally grovels before it, expecting death and wailing aloud, "I'm not a gladiator; I'm a student!" The day the reviewer was there, the house audience was comprised mainly of students on R&R from the campus generational wars, and they laughed right hard at this quip.

Finally, Satyricon presents the juiciest orgy in cinema history. It is full of rosy wine, bawdy women, wanton song, cootch dances, communal pot-smoking, sweating coolies, and raunchy delicacies. These included stuffed sheep's eyes, individually served pig snouts, a whole half cow with hide and head intact, and the piece de resistance: an entire roasted hog, trundled in on a cart, and ceremonially "gutted" at table, yielding braised hearts, kidneys, and livers, spicy sausages, stuffed pigeons and songbirds, roast chicken and capon, buttered fish, boiled tripe, etc. The orgiasts dived in with greasy, voracious abandon, and concurrently a curious sympathetic reaction occurred in the audience. Ears became pointed, noses extended, teeth sharpened into fangs, and faces became furry. Certainly in going home the reviewer had to restrain herself from lunging at the wares on the local butcher's counter. Fellini has justified Satyricon's first-class food-tripping with the pleasant logic that he wanted to create "a more credible ancient world where food was probably the greatest luxury. Rich people did not consume—there is no consumption without industrial mass production—they indulged. In Trimalchio's house, the only thing taken seriously was food."

Vogue magazine calls the Satyricon "pompeian and psychedelic, byzantine and pop, Mondrian and Klee mixed with primitive art." It is indeed a film of plenteous visual wealth, if tiny spiritual content. And that latter judgment is purely subjective because it's the sort of movie one loves to become embroiled in—a sort of cinematic interlocking-wire puzzle. You feel what you see. Surely, if it says nothing of the beauty that was greasy, it says worlds about the glory that was Rome.

—Sophie Scholl

Abortion Petition Campaign

The California Committee to Legalize Abortion has filed an initiative measure in Sacramento to repeal existing state laws on abortion and to make the decision of abortion a matter between the individual woman and her private physician.

The abortion petition campaign is seeking 325,000 signatures of registered California voters to have the issue placed on the November ballot. Its supporters will be gathering signatures until June 11, and will be able to use help on this petition until June 15. Anyone who wishes to contribute time, money, or ideas to the project may call 564-0181.

A table will be set up at Glide Memorial Church, Taylor and Ellis Sts., every Sunday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. where petitions will be available to sign or circulate and where filed petitions may be returned. If you wish to get petitions at school you can get them from Sue O'Sullivan by leaving your name with the group: initiative projects in experimental college B5 or by visiting Glide or leaving your name with teacher Lucile Meredith or student Sue O'Sullivan.

Reach Into Community

By Tom Cleaver

City College students are now working to get into the communities around the school with their anti-war message. The Canvassing Committee at the Experimental College has organized classes and is bringing groups of canvassers together for effective action.

The classes, which are held daily in the bungalows, are held in order to give orientation to students who have never engaged in door-to-door canvassing before. Several faculty members with experience in political and community organizing are leading the discussion groups. Topics include how to talk to hostile people, how to get a dialogue going, how to talk people into signing petitions, writing letters, etc.

Some of the classes are concerned with the history of how the United States got involved in Southeast Asia, what is going on in Vietnam and Cambodia and the economic effects here of the war. This is done to give the students the background necessary to be able to talk with people about the war.

After three or four canvassing workshops, students get together to go into the community. Some students who live in other parts of the city have gotten themselves together into neighborhood groups to go out and talk to people in the evenings after work. During the day, students are canvassing in the immediate area around City College.

"We've had good response in the Sunset," said one girl who has been canvassing the area for the last several days. "Many of the women are very disturbed about the war, and are willing to sign the McGovern-Hatfield petitions, and several are willing to sign the petitions to put the question of the war on the November ballot here. A lot of people have been moved to write their congressmen and senators, to express their disapproval of the war."

Students are asking the people they contact to sign petitions in support of the Vasconcellos Bill—the assembly bill that would bar California servicemen from serving in any war that has not been declared by Congress — the McGovern-Hatfield Amendment that would cut off funds for combat operations in Southeast Asia after December 30, 1970, and appropriate only funds for the complete withdrawal of troops by June 30, 1971, and for the referendum on the war which people hope to place on the San Francisco ballot this November.

Additionally, the students are asking people to make their views known in letters and telegrams to their elected representatives, and to sign petitions against the war to be sent to the President.

"What we're trying to do is reach the people who haven't said anything against the war, the ones Nixon calls the Silent Majority, and end their silence. We're trying to get the political process back into working order," says Charles Borden, one of the chairmen of the canvassing committee being conducted by the Student Council and SRC.

Another reason for going into the community is so that students and residents can get to know each other, and dispel many misconceptions each group holds over the other.

"We want to show that students don't have horns and tails and foam at the mouth," says one man involved in the program.

The canvassing committee does not plan on stopping its work when school is over for the semester.

According to Pat Horan, a leader of the group and a member of SRC, "We will probably decide on political action in support of some candidates who take positions we're in favor of."

Beyond the fact that a few of the people involved in the campaign personally support George Brown for Senator, the group has made no definite decisions about supporting particular candidates in the fall elections. "We'll have to wait until after the primaries, and see just who is actually running before we decide," says Miss Horan. Whatever is done, the committee hopes to be able to continue taking its message to the people throughout the summer and into the fall, if necessary.

La Raza Unida Activities

Ed. note: The following statement was submitted to the Guardsman by Eduardo E. Medina of La Raza Unida, CCSF.

LATINO! Do you cringe when you hear your mother making excuses to the landlord for not having the rent on time?

How often do you curse the landlord when you find a dead rat in the kitchen or when you have to use the damp and deteriorating bathroom?

How many times did you have to throw away hard-won food because the cockroaches got to it first? Yet the rent had to be paid for all these conveniences.

How may of you have parents whose souls are owned by finance companies?

Did you ever smoulder with rage while you had to wait five or six hours in the emergency section of General Hospital because your family couldn't afford private care for a little brother or sister?

Did your mind ever ignite as you listened to trumped-up charges against you at the Hall of Justice?

How did a $2500 bail sound to you?

Did you ever cry while you were being held in solitary confinement?

All of these injustices have become a way of life for hundreds of families in the Latino ghetto. You are nobody's inferior but everyone's equal. You're not a second rate human being without power.

UNITE! Come to La Raza Unida and help—B-209 (behind Cloud Hall).

Chicano Moratorium

Chicano Moratorium Day will be Saturday, May 30. A program of events has been scheduled for its observance in San Francisco.

At 11 a.m., a march will assemble at Garfield Park located at 25th and Harrison Streets. It will proceed down Harrison to 19th Street. From there it will continue to Mission Dolores Park where a rally will take place at noon.

Speakers at the rally will include Dolores Huerta (United Farmworkers), Abe Tapia (Pres., Mex.-Am. Political Assoc.), Froben Lozada (Chmn. Chicano Studies, Merritt Coll.), Rosalio Munoz (Chmn. Chicano Mor., L.A.), Bebe Perez (Welfare Rights Organization), Al Miller (Indians of All Tribes), Ricardo Romo (Peace & Freedom cand. for Governor), Bert Donlin (Latin-Americans for Peace & Justice, ILWU Local 10), Rogalio Gomez from U.C. Berkeley, and several Latino G.I.'s.

The march is in respect for over 8,000 brothers of La Raza who have died in Indochina, for equality and justice at home, and for an immediate end to the war. Participants are urged to wear something black, especially arm bands.

How To Get Involved With Anti-War

Inside the Experimental College, Bungalow 5; the hotbed of City College anti-war activities.

By Bill Collins

A student can do many things to help the anti-war movement.

Initially, the experimental college was very crowded, with many anti-war people circulating among themselves, not in the community.

On Thursday, Jerry George, an instructor and leader of the effort at SF State, suggested that students get out of the experimental college, and take their case to their fellow students.

On Friday, the bungalow was less crowded, as concerned students got moving.

A number of dedicated students are circulating from door-to-door in the neighborhoods, explaining their anti-war views to housewives, senior citizens, and anyone willing to open the door and listen.

Thousands of people can be reached by way of the radio "talk shows." Students here have used this forum to back anti-war candidates.

Others have phoned their congressmen and Senators' local offices at the Federal Office Building to endorse Congressional efforts to block war funds.

Petitions are circulating favoring this bill to cut off war funds, the bill in the California legislature to allow California's sons to avoid this war, and also endorsing Congressman George Brown's resolution to impeach President Nixon.

Savings bonds are being cashed as a protest and because the government uses the money for war activities.

Of course, telegrams are still being sent to urge congressional opposition to the President's invasion of Cambodia.

Also, on Friday, May 15, Rich Noble, Brown Miller, and the sunburned Barbara Bell, all English teachers, broke their five-day fast at 6 p.m. with home-made bread.

How Could Anyone Shoot a Student?

President Nixon's recent order to invade Cambodia brought about a loud response all over the U.S. to the absurdity of Vietnam. In the midst of this concentrated concern, four students were massacred at Kent State which made the whole of America and the world scream out. Students on campus being shot. Why? How could anyone shoot a student? This kind of act is usually rationalized by the trigger fingers' brain that whoever catches the bullet "was a bum, not a student," or an "animal not a person."

Many students, teachers, and off-campus figures continue renouncing the political and military institutions. Other groups begin to remember similar slayings that occurred, reoccurred and were forgotten. They seemed to have been in the same form of protest as Kent State, but they didn't have a Cambodia. If Cambodia hadn't happened and Vietnam had continued on its same course, would the concern for the Kent state killings have been so great?

South Carolina State College was the scene of three killings in 1968 for protests. Obviously, there was no Cambodia. It was a simple case of civil rights. Instead of the national guardsmen being tired and concerned, the patrolman was hit in the head with a piece of lumber. He thought he had been shot and began firing. An investigation followed. An investigation always follows as sort of a clean-up gesture.

Augusta, Georgia had a similar event just recently. Five were killed over what began as a protest over a teenager's death in jail. It ended up as a full-scale riot with looting and shooting, and as a result three men and two boys bit the dust. Of the five, four were shot in the back. James Stokes, 19, one of the five, was shot only once. Police used double ought buckshot. In such a loading, nine pellets, each the size of a 22 caliber slug, are discharged when the gun is fired. It is obvious the officer had no intention of wounding the young man or apprehending him with a Rhino shotgun. If the term "being blown away" ever pertained to anyone, it does now.

If Cambodia has started something that reveals one shade of man being as cruel to his own as he is to other shades, then it is time for this shade to check itself. It is clear now what one man does to others he will do to himself.

Something New Under the Flag

Volunteers for George Brown are part of the Anti-war drive.

By Tom Walsh

Last week, in a precedent-setting move, a committee of students and faculty set up a George Brown campaign table under the flagpole. Brown is a candidate in the Democratic Primary for the U.S. Senate seat now held by George Murphy.

In the recent ground swell of anti-war activity, many students have recognized the Brown candidacy as a welcome opportunity to exert some positive influence. Congressman George Brown, who represents a southern California district, was the first member of the House of Representatives to speak out against the war in Vietnam. Since 1965, he has consistently voted against arms appropriations and special tax levies for the Indochina war.

A long-time supporter of the grape boycott, who also proposed banning off-shore drilling in the Santa Barbara Channel a year before the oil leak, George Brown has been endorsed by Cesar Chavez. Dr. Paul Ehrlich and Willie Brown, Jr., among others. He recently was honored by Mothers for Peace who voted him the title of Honorary Mother.

This is the first time, in the memory of those associated with the Brown campaign on campus, that support for a candidate for public office has surfaced here in such a tangible way.

Hopefully George Brown's campaign will be a harbinger of the birth of political awareness on this campus, and will lead to the realization that through hard work it is still possible to translate one's ideals into effective political change.

Death Of A Strike

Colorado State University in Fort Collins, Colorado, is no "activist school." It still has a big football-and-fraternity scene, though the changes that have affected students in the last several years have had an effect on the students there, sitting at the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

Before the killings at Kent State and the invasion of Cambodia, the CSU anti-war movement was proportionately smaller than that which existed at City College. In the midwest, it is easy to be uninvolved with the rest of the world. During the week after Kent State, all that changed, as it did on many other campuses.

The day after the killings, a large rally of several thousand students was held on campus—the largest anti-war rally ever held on the campus, as a matter of fact. Over the next three days, while students at City College were not getting themselves together and getting the school closed, CSU students were holding marches, rallies, and demonstrations throughout the campus. Enthusiasm was building for a strike that would reconstitute the university and turn it into an anti-war center. That Friday, May 8, a rally of over 5,000 students was held, and it was decided after long debate to hold a larger rally the following Monday and go on strike.

While that meeting was going on, another meeting was going on somewhere. A small group of people—whether they were students or nonstudents has not yet been ascertained—burned down Old Main, the oldest classroom building on the campus, and a thing of architectural beauty and campus tradition. The building was burned by three molotov cocktails thrown into the basement, and was gutted before the fire department was able to bring the fire under control.

The next Monday, May 11, while CCSF was holding the largest rally in the school's history, and larger events were happening throughout the country, nothing was happening at CSU. Moderate students, who had just come around to the idea of publicly opposing the war and perhaps organizing action against it, withdrew their support for a strike that might turn violent. Even though none of the strike leadership had been involved in the firebombing, and though all strikers had been at the meeting, the strike idea was permanently associated in most students' minds with the firebombing of Old Main.

The actions of two or three people, acting as a "revolutionary vanguard," destroyed the work of several thousand others who had been working to build a mass anti-war movement at CSU. Next fall, because of this, there will be no long-term movement at a school that needs one desperately to bring about change on the campus.

Let's hope that people in California have had enough of fighting the cops and playing "Che Guevara;" this is the opportunity of a lifetime to mobilize a lot of people to fascist views. It has to be done in ways that relate to those people we are trying to reach, not in ways that kill what we want to build. —T.C.

On and Off Campus

Other Planets

"Is there Life on Mars?" will be a discussion presented today from 1:00 p.m. - 2 p.m. in S-100 by Dr. Cyril Pommamperuma.

Dr. Pommamperuma will also give a lecture exploring the possibility of organic matter on the moon from 12-1 today in the Little Theater. In addition, he will lecture on the Studies of Life's Origin today from 10-11 in S-100.

Dream Shows

NOCTURNAL DREAM SHOWS will present the following program at the PALACE THEATER on Columbus and Powell Streets on May 29 and 30 (Friday and Saturday midnights).

NEW ORLEANS, a fabulous blues saga with Billy Holiday, Louis Armstrong, and Woody Herman.

BESSIE SMITH, Charles Levine's autopsy of a singer's tragic death.

JAMMIN' THE BLUES, Gjon Mili's all-star jam session with Lester Young and Barney Kissel.

RHAPSODY IN WOOD, a puppetoon featuring Woody Herman.

JASPER'S MINSTRELS, with "The Great Jaspah," and

PHANTOM EMPIRE, chapter six at Radio Ranch.

For further information, call Sebastian at 861-4396.

Rummage Sale

A rummage sale will take place at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, 1399 - 43rd Ave. (corner of Judah) on Saturday, June 6 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. It will be a benefit for "Fogline" (formerly "Sunset Switchboard"). Rummage may be donated between 4 p.m. and 12 midnight any day before June 4.

Draft Counseling

Draft counseling by Mike Mitroff is available in the Experimental College, B-5 on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 10-11 a.m. and Tuesdays and Thursdays from 12-1:30 p.m. On Saturdays, counseling is available by phoning 668-9036.

Fillmore West

Auditions will be held at the Fillmore West on Tuesday, May 26 featuring the Johnny Mars Band, Joshua, and Fabulous Violations. Lights will be by Front Lights. The program begins at 7 p.m. with a basketball game between the Fillmore Fingers and The Opposition. Admission is one dollar.

Mike Bloomfield and Friends, Blues Image, and Silver Metre will perform at the Fillmore West from May 26 to 31. Lights will be by the Brotherhood of Light. The Fillmore West will be open from 8:30 to 2 a.m. all four days and is located at Market and Van Ness.

Anti-war Games

The Neighborhood Arts Program of the San Francisco Art Commission is sponsoring a program called "Anti-war Games" on May 27 and 28 and a performance of "A Midsummer's Night Dream" by the New Shakespeare Company on May 31 at the Julian Theatre, 953 De Haro Street. Tickets are $1.50 for students, and $2.00 for general admission. For further information, call 721-5290.

Bury The Dead

"Bury the Dead," an anti-war production by Irwin Shaw, will be presented by the students of the City College Drama department on Tuesday, June 9 in the college's Little Theater. Curtain time is 8 p.m. Donations will be requested of those who attend the play and will be contributed to the peace movement.

Snakes

Al Young, author of the book, "Snakes," will speak at the Black Writers Workshop, 394 Hayes Street, at 8 p.m. on Monday, June 1. Admission is free.

Petitions

The McGovern-Hatfield bill to end the war, the Vasconcellos, McCarthy, Sietory bill A.B. 1674 stating that no Californian may go to an undeclared war, and the Ban The Span petitions may all be signed outside of room S-304.

Rock Festival

The United Farmworkers, AFL-CIO will present a Rock Festival Benefit for Retirement Village Friday, June 19, 1970 from 5:30 p.m. to 12 midnight at Glide Memorial Church, 330 Ellis Street in San Francisco. The $1.50 tickets might be bought from La Raza in B-209 or Glide Church. The United Farmworkers are distributing cards for customers to give to store managers asking that Union grapes only be sold. Glide has these cards and La Raza will probably soon get them. Phone 282-3772 for more information about getting the cards.

La Raza Trip

On Friday, June 5, La Raza Unida CCSF will have a chartered bus with room for 45 students going down to the Coachella Valley (near the U.S. and Mexican border) to support Cesar Chavez in his grape strike. Those interested in going may sign up in La Raza Room B-209. The return trip will be Sunday, June 7. All visitors are welcome to B-209.

Benefit

The New Shakespeare Company is presenting Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream as a benefit for the United Farm Workers Sunday, May 31. The performance starts at 8:30 in the north wing of Trinity Episcopal Church on Gough Street and will cost $2 for students and $3 for general audience. Phone 282-3772 for more information.

"Picnic"

"Picnic on the Battlefield," a satirical farce on war, will be presented in the Little Theater on Monday, June 1, by the City College Drama department. Two presentations, one at 10:00 a.m., the other at 1:00 p.m., will be given. Admission is free.

Nurserymen's Award

Thomas Chasseur, a City College student, is the 1970 recipient of the California Association of Nurserymen's scholarship. The award, an engraved plaque and $50, was presented at the May meeting of the club's peninsula chapter in San Mateo. Harry Nelson, chairman of the college's Ornamental Horticulture department, watches as William Leonard, peninsula chapter president, presents the award.

Hayden Speaks Here On U.S. Imperialism

(Continued from Page 1)

hard pressed to expand the war further, and if the U.S. does expand the war, it could signal the beginning of the end for the U.S. in Asia and throughout the world."

Hayden also thinks that the war is responsible for the current repressive atmosphere of this country.

'LAW'N ORDER'

"The same people who are escalating the war in Southeast Asia are also responsible for the escalation of 'law and order' here at home," said Hayden.

"While American troops are fighting and dying over there (Vietnam) to defend democracy, we see a police state forming in this country. We see the suspension of individual rights and the imprisonment of political prisoners like the Panthers, who are presenting to the American public an alternative to this racist and corrupt system."

Hayden attributes the police state conditions to widespread unrest against the war that caused former president Lyndon Johnson to retire from office.

"We have seen that the widespread unrest caused Johnson to retire and perhaps prevented another 200,000 troops from being sent to Vietnam.

REPRESSIVE MEASURES

"But with this unrest we have seen the ruling class take harsh repressive measures to assure that the people weren't speaking out against them.

"And why?" Hayden asked. "Because they (the ruling class) were seeing mass opposition to them by the people and they wanted to get rid of it.

"We must realize that the National Guard and police are political organizations," Hayden added, "whose politics come out of a barrel of a gun.

"And if we are to present a united front against racist and imperialist wars like the one going on presently in Southeast Asia, we should not rely on liberals or traditional leaders, but go out into the community and tell the people and get their support."

A 'COP-OUT'

Ray Tomkins, BSU member from S.F. State, criticized the rally as being a "cop-out."

"You sit here talking about how the war is bad," Tompkins said, "but what about the racist attacks on Third World people going on around the world?

"Talk is cheap, it's what you do that counts. You talk about the war, but what about racism?

"This country's colleges and universities have to be the most racist institutions in the country, but you don't talk about racism on the campus or how to end the racist attacks on Third World people.

"America has never looked on Third World people as people," Tomkins added, "but as mere animals who deserve to be beaten and jailed.

RACISM?

"You talk about the war in Vietnam but what about racism?

Tom Hayden

"Third World people are being systematically oppressed every day in this country and throughout the world. They're being gassed, clubbed, jailed and beaten and you talk about how the war is bad.

"Has it ever dawned on you that this war in Southeast Asia is a racist war? It's a war being conducted by troops who are mainly Third World people against the Third World people of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia."

Toni Haram of the Concerned Students for Action, also attacked the racist nature of the rally.

"Third World people are being oppressed all over the world and we sit here talking about the morality of a war 10,000 miles away.

RACIST WARS

"Racism is at the root of racist wars like the one in Indo-China," Toni added.

"We should concern ourselves with the racist nature of this college with its police cadet patrols and the racist attacks on the Third World students and workers of this country. We should concern ourselves with immediately every phase of racism on this campus — be it the racist police science department or the racist nature of the textbooks and instructors and the discriminatory nature of some of the departments on campus like the Hotel and Restaurant Department.

"We should address ourselves to ending all forms of racism in this country and in the world."

SIT-IN

Miss Haram then urged the audience to sit-in at the Educational Services building to protest the deaths of six Blacks in Augusta, Georgia and the presence of police cadet patrols on campus.

Other speakers included English instructor Dan Allen who told students "that they should get together and oppose the war;" Father Boyle, of the Sacred Heart Church, who read from a letter addressed to President Nixon from several religious leaders who labeled Nixon's decisions to send troops into Cambodia as an "attempt to expand the war and lose sight of peace in Southeast Asia;" Brian Gould, from the U.C. Medical Center who said that "the war will not be over until people get upset and speak out their opposition to it;" and a member of the Berkeley Strike Committee.

FINAL EXAMS

WEDNESDAY, 3 JUNE 1970

Chemistry 1A	8-12
Chemistry 1B	8-12
Business 160	1-5
Business Ad 1A	1-5

THURSDAY, 4 JUNE 1970

8-9	Daily	8-12
8-9	MWF	8-10
8-9	TTh
8-9:25	TTh	10:30-12:30
8:45-11	TTh
2-3	Daily	1-5
2-3	MWF	1-3
2-3	TTh
2-3:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
2:45-4	TTh

FRIDAY, 5 JUNE 1970

11-12	Daily	8-12
11-12	MWF	8-10
11T, 11TF, 11TTh		10:30-12:30
4-5	Daily	1-5
4-5	MWF	1-3
4-5	TTh
4-5:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
4:45-6	TTh

MONDAY, 8 JUNE 1970

8-9	Friday only	8-10
9-10	Friday only	10-12
1-2	Daily	1-5
1-2	MWF	1-3
1-2	TTh
1-2:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
1:45-3	TTh

TUESDAY, 9 JUNE 1970

7-8	Daily	8-12
7-8	MWF	8-10
7-8	TTh
7-8:25	TTh	10:30-12:30
7:45-9	TTh
12-1	Daily	1-5
12-1	MWF	1-3
12-1	TTh
12-1:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
12:45-2	TTh

WEDNESDAY, 10 JUNE 1970

10-11	Daily	8-12
10-11	MWF	8-10
10-11	TTh	10:30-12:30
10-11TTh	11T	10:30-12:30

THURSDAY, 11 JUNE 1970

9-10	Daily	8-12
9-10	MWF	8-10
9-10	TTh
9-10:30	TTh	10:30-12:30
9:45-11	TTh
3-4	Daily	1-5
3-4	MWF	1-3
3-4	TTh
3-4:25	TTh	3:30-5:30
3:45-5	TTh

FRIDAY, 12 JUNE 1970

10-11	Friday only	8-10
11-12	Friday only	10-12
12-1	Friday only	8-10
1-2	Friday only	10-12
5-6	Daily	8-12
5-6	MWF	8-10

N.B. A class that meets at more than one of the times on this list will take its final test according to the earliest time scheduled in the regular school week: e.g. a class that meets MWF9 and WF 8 will have its final test on 4 June.

Council Donates $100 To Anti-War Program — Suggests Plaque For Conlan

One hundred dollars was donated to the Experimental College's anti-war program at the May 18 session of Student Council.

Councilman Harvey Rappaport made the motion that the council make a donation to the anti-war activities. He said that the monies could be taken out of the income tax.

The motion was seconded and a vote was taken with seven members in favor, four against, and two abstaining.

The money will be given to English instructor Don Peterson, the faculty adviser of the program.

SPECIAL PLAQUE

Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, brought up the idea of awarding a special plaque to President Conlan. Councilman Jum Keany made the motion to award the plaque to Dr. Conlan upon his retirement. The vote was five to four with four members abstaining.

BESIEGED

Mike Devine of the Finance Committee mentioned that he has been besieged with $52,000 in requests from campus organizations against the fact that Student Council has only $45,000 to give out. Finance hearings were later held to validate these requests.

MINORITY V.P.

Renato Larin proposed that if Dr. Batmale becomes the new President of City College (leaving the vice-presidency open), then his former position should be filled by a representative of a minority group. No action was taken, and the meeting adjourned at 12:40.

At the Wednesday, May 20 session, it was proposed by John Goebel that an amendment setting a three-unit minimum for Student Council candidates be added to the constitution.

"A lot of us have dropped at least four or five units to be on the council," Goebel said. "Sometimes, to be members of this body, we have to drop academics for it."

SLIDE SHOW

Finally, Roger Cassell presented a slide show of the Asilomar Conference held earlier this month. It was accompanied by a tape recording of A.S. President Renato Larin and Councilman Steve Mendelsohn snoring in their motel room.

Letter to the Editor:

BY WHAT AUTHORITY?

May 13, 1970

The Faculty Senate Resolution allowing instructors to reconstitute the operations of their classes along political lines is an illegal and immoral arrogation of power. Surprisingly so, when the very proponents of the resolution claim a special concern with the constitutionality of President Nixon's recent actions.

The public schools belong to all the citizens of San Francisco. Their general structure, goals and operations are therefore matters for all the people to determine.

No mandate has been given to the current faculty, administration or student body to turn the schools into instruments for political change. We willfully exploit the trust of the people and nullify their rights when we engage in actions which only they or their elected representatives can legitimately perform.

Those who shout, "power to the people," make a mockery of the democratic process when they deliberately confuse their own special perception and will with those of the general citizenry.

Therefore, no faculty member who genuinely understands and respects the democratic traditions and institutions of our society should feel morally or legally bound by or compelled to follow along with the unconstitutional Faculty Senate resolution.

Power to the people — ALL OF THEM

A. Levine — Sociology Instructor

Dr. George Abed Speaks On Palestine

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Dr. George Abed spoke to students on "The Palestine Struggle and U.S. Imperialism in the Middle East" on May 21. Dr. Abed is a Palestinian Arab, and he is currently finishing work at U.C. in economics.

He began his lecture by saying, "The central problem I will talk about today is the basic conflicts between the Israelis and the Palestinians on the land of Palestine which consists of the current cease-fire lines. It was only when the Zionist movement tried to establish the Jewish race a conflict arose between the Jews and the indigenous groups living there. The conflict was simmering and came to a boil in 1947-1948. In 1967 another occupation took place and the Israelis occupied land that belonged to Egypt and Syria. I think these are the two main causes of the conflict."

Dr. Abed gave three basic facts about the success of the Zionist movement. They were: (1) "The establishment of a Jewish state that is exclusively oriented to the interest of the Jewish people, to the exclusion of the native population by integrating the rest of the Jewish people into this new state. (2) The Palestinian society was dismembered. (3) Primitive regimes received a legitimate sense of power over the Palestinians. Imperialist countries acted through the primitive regimes to manipulate the Palestinians to allow Israel to grow and become strong in order to prevent the Palestinians from getting their land back. This is why Israel was able to build its military up to great strength."

The Palestinians between 1948 and 1967 remained completely apathetic and dependent on the U.N. or the Arab governments to bring back their rights. The Palestinians were essentially dependent on the Arab governments, but the Arabs were not able to bring about a revolution and give power back to the people. In 1967, the war showed the Palestinians the corruption and incompetence of the Arab regimes and the fantastic military power Israel had and how able they were to mobilize their people and use money that flowed in to make their power greater. Palestinians then felt the only way to get their rights was by a continuing struggle. 1967 was the break between the Palestinians' dependence on Arab rule, and the Palestinians began to operate on their own basis to get their rights regardless of the United Nations or Arab regimes.

In speaking of the revolution, Abed said, "The Palestinian revolution addressed itself to what to do about the Zionist state action. They also wondered how to unite the Palestinian people. The Palestinians also intended to expose the bourgeois regimes of the Arabs and radicalize the masses. Also, the Palestinian revolution could not help but address itself to U.S. imperialism and put control of their natural resources back in the hands of the people. It is a big job. The Palestinians will need nation-wide support of the revolution. We are in an age of communications that will expose what is happening inside and thus get help from the outside."

Dr. Abed then stated his objections to Zionism.

"My objections to Zionism rest on several characteristics. The Zionists have inflicted injustice and harm on the Arabs. Zionism is subordinating the rights of the individual to the colonizing people. The Israeli people completely misunderstand the needs of the Arabs. They have downgraded the role of the Arabs throughout the development of Zionism. The whole myth of non-existence of the colonial Zionists is that the Arabs are part of nature and have to be cleared out. Zionism is based on the belief that the Arab people cannot be assimilated into Jewish society.

"The Palestinian revolution is trying to reconstitute the dismembered Palestinian society and to mobilize the Palestinian people, particularly refugees, and give them a sense of belonging. They are also developing institutions of society such as political schools and mobile hospitals so that when they come back into power they will be organized to take over the government. The Palestinians, once they win the struggle, should be ready to reconstruct the society that was lost in 1947 and 1948."

In conclusion, Dr. Abed said, "All the Palestinians want to do is show that the exclusive Jewish state was wrong. They want to set a more humanistic state where everyone can live together as people. The only way to allow them both to exist equally and fairly is to allow them to live equally and fairly. The Palestinians want the establishment of a secular democratic state. We must depend for solution on the defeat of the Zionist or any racist society that exists there. The Zionist solution is to colonize everything and forget about the rights of the native people. Autonomy in the state is another solution. The Jewish and Palestinian peoples each would have community autonomy and participate in the government and share the wealth received from the natural resources of the country. Two autonomous communities with a federal state or a secular democratic state are the only solutions for the problem."

Goerner . . .

(Continued from Page 2)

Despite this super-secrecy, Mr. Goerner emphasized that he feels the United States has the greatest amount of press freedom of any country in the world. He will be taking advantage of it this summer by returning to Saipan, this time to search the ocean depths for the wreckage of Amelia Earhart's plane which, if found, would help solve one of the greatest mysteries to evolve out of World War II.

Several hundred students participated in a silent march here Friday, reminding us of the killing of six blacks in Augusta, Georgia, and two in Jackson University in Mississippi. A drum was the only sound heard in the courtyard as a casket was carried to the ram. Students stood facing the flagpole, with their arms locked. They followed to the ram. Nothing was said, but there was room for thought.

Project FEAST For Future Restauranteurs

The Hotel and Restaurant Foundation of City College will be the host for high school instructors participating in Project FEAST, a training program which will take place this summer.

FEAST, an acronym for Food Education And Service Training, is a high school program developed to provide hospitality and food service orientation through offering in-service and pre-service training to secondary school teachers. They, in turn, can offer meaningful high school programs to those students who previously had been "under-achievers" as well as above or below average.

The goal of project FEAST in the individual high school is to prepare students, upon graduation, for further education or immediate employment in the hospitality and food service industry. The two-year program is established in the 11th and 12th grade with emphasis on basic education adapted to the food service industry, to reinforce students' potential development if they wish to enter the industry directly from high school.

FEAST is now in its sixth year of operation. The program is in effect in six western states and is drawing attention from as far away as New England.

The project began in 1964, a year after the Federal Vocational Act of 1963, opened the way to innovative instructional programs. It provides alliance between education and industry.

"It meets the need of students seeking a realistic education, of teachers interested in student-oriented programs and of industries seeking qualified personnel," said Mrs. Hilda Watson Gifford, FEAST's director. Before taking the position of FEAST's coordinator, Mrs. Gifford spent 17 years as chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant department at City College.

A number of groups and agencies have cooperated in funding the planning, teacher-training and administration of project FEAST. It also receives support from the Statler Foundation, the Vocational Education Act and the Education Professions Development Act.

Prior to starting a Project FEAST program, each school sends a "team" of teachers to four weeks of workshop training at City College's Hotel and Restaurant Department. Here, FEAST draws upon the experience of the College's vocational food instructors, teaching staff and total operation. In addition, qualified industry personnel give the secondary school teacher an opportunity to see the relationship of his subject matter to effectively teaching the many occupations in the hospitality and service industry.

Each team will include high school teachers from three departments—home economics, English and business mathematics—as well as a counselor and cafeteria manager. Teachers, during the workshop, will prepare instructional outlines and gather materials for their particular subject as well as cooperate with other team members to insure an interdisciplinary approach built around the reinforcing the occupational training experience.

The workshop program will be housed in Smith Hall and Statler Wing. The selection of equipment and its layout was made in cooperation with industry representatives to assure a complete industry-type facility.

On & Off Campus

Body Movement

A "body movement group" is being formed with the express movement of "come together, dance together, grow together." Call Marie Sullivan at 282-3628 or 282-0869 for further information.

Child Day-Care

There is a definite need to help parents attending City College with child care problems. Parents on campus who have baby sitting problems are getting together behind the idea of a day-care center and invite your support. Come to the meeting on Thursday, May 21 at 11 o'clock in room C-220.

Veterans

College veterans must return their certificate of attendance cards as soon as possible. Run, don't walk to the Veterans Affairs Office in room 202 of the Educational Services Building.

Student Council Candidates

The following people are candidates for the Fall 1970 Student Council:

Charles Borden (SRC)
Joseph Chan
Tom Cleaver (SRC)
Joe Doyle
Susan Fong
Bruno Forner
Franklin Fung
John Goebel (SRC)
Patricia Horan (SRC)
Daryll Johnson
JoAnn King (SRC)
Dora Liang
Deborah Marchi (SRC)
Sue O'Sullivan
Martin Poon
Don Rich (SR)
Tess Smith
Bonnie Solomon (SRC)
Chase Sun
Sherman Tam
Sui Keun Tsang
Rosary Wong

• SRC stands for Student Renaissance Coalition.

BAPAC Is Open For Peace

Bay Area Peace Action Coalition is open from 7:30 a.m. - 9:30 daily for peace activities such as getting the following declaration on the S.F. ballot in November. Petitions are in B5 and you can help by phoning or visiting BAPAC at 992 Valencia St., S.F., Ca. 94110. Phone 282-8160, especially on Saturdays which is when groups of people get together to circulate and inform people about the petition or on weekdays after 6 p.m. when people put the district and precinct numbers on the petition as required by City Hall.

The petition reads, "It is the policy of the People of the City and County of San Francisco that there be an immediate cease fire and immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Vietnam so that the Vietnamese people can settle their own problems. The reason for the proposed petition is to enable the people to express their opinion on the Vietnam war by ballot."

The petitions must be circulated by a registered voter and the statement will be on the November ballot if 12,000 valid signatures are collected. To get that many valid signatures it is necessary to collect 25-30 thousand of them in SF before July 15 and present the signatures which anyone can do before August 2. People working on this at school include the Petition Committee head, Harvey Rappaport and Sue O'Sullivan.

the Guardsman

Staff

SPRING 1970

Managing Editor — Paul Thiele
News Editor — Jim Browning
Feature Editor — Tom Cleaver
Sports — Mike Chan, Joe Konte

REPORTERS:
Elizabeth Driscoll, Bruno Farner, Shirley Fagerino, David Hagunin, Ron Wilkinson, Bill Collins, Brenda L. Manders, Erik Heldfond, Monte Glover.

PHOTOGRAPHERS:
Eugene H. Brown, Mike Li

Advisor — Mary Blair

The Guardsman is the weekly publication of the students of the journalism department of City College of San Francisco. It is published each Wednesday during the college year with the exception of holidays and vacations. The opinions expressed in the columns and editorials are those of the individual writers and not necessarily those of the Guardsman, the department or the college. Editorial office, 304, Science Hall; telephone 587-7272, ext. 446 or 447. Mail address: 50 Phelan Ave., San Francisco, 94112.

CCSF's Language Offerings Set

Of the approximate 15,000 students who attend City College, a good number are enrolled in the foreign language courses whose curricula consist mainly of Chinese, French, German and Spanish.

Recently, however, a number of City College students have sought to take different foreign languages other than the conventional ones mentioned above. There has been talk of reviving a few so-called "dead" languages to offer them to interested students.

Russian, Italian, Latin and Greek are among the languages that are no longer available in course-offerings at City College because of the lack of student interest. Previously, when such courses were offered, there was little student enrollment and often, the teachers found themselves cancelling classes.

A group of students has banned together to re-instate a Russian language course on campus and Dr. Doris E. Heinreid, chairman of the college's foreign languages department, has seen to it that Russian 1 and 5A will be offered among the curriculum of evening courses during the Fall 1970 semester.

"We should re-institute Russian again," said Dr. Heinreid. "With the community makeup as it now stands, we should also be teaching Japanese," she added.

Dr. Heinreid went on to comment about the possibility of reviving other foreign languages on campus. "Italian has been 'dead' at City College for a least ten years, questions are asked about the possibility of offering the course, but there is no push for it. Latin 'died' before Italian and the Greek language has been non-existant on campus since the 1940's. If the students would not only ask for but enroll in these courses, they would be offered."

French, Italian, German and Chinese seem to be the preferred foreign language courses among City College students. German is usually taken by science students. French and Spanish are taken by those who plan to transfer to a university. There is a high enrollment rate in the Chinese Mandarin courses and a stable rate in the Cantonese offering of the language.

A relatively new crop of languages which will be offered during the course of the next year will be as follows:

- Chinese 1, 2, 3, 10A, 10B, 10C, 39 and 49—to be offered during the next academic year.
- Spanish 11, 12, 29A, 29B, 29C, 29D, 39A, 39B, 39C, 39D,—to be offered during the next academic year.
- Spanish 5A—to be offered during Fall, 1970.
- Spanish 5B—to be offered during Spring, 1971.
- Russian 1, 5A—to be offered in the evening sessions of Fall, 1970.
- French 41—to be offered during the next academic year.
- German 10—to be offered during the evening sessions of Fall, 1970.
- Filipino 1—to be offered during the Summer of 1970.

The above courses are described in the new City College catalogue which will go on sale in the campus bookstore (cost, 75 cents) during the summer.

Day-Long Poetry Read-In At Visual Arts Building

On Thursday, May 28, some City College students and faculty members will voice their opposition to the Indochina War with a day-long poetry read-in at the Visual Arts building.

SIGNIFICANCE

The details of "Poetry For Peace" were released by Steve Levinson of the English department. The date in itself has special significance as it's just prior to the observance of Memorial Day. The read-in will occur from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in room 114 of the Visual Arts building (adjacent to the Art building), with each participant using twenty minutes of time.

Levinson said that some of the students and faculty members will read poetry that they have composed specifically for that day. Roger Cassell and Charles Smith, both members of the Student Council, will be reading poetry they have written. Four faculty members will also be reading their own poetry. They are Dan Allen, David Rath, Brown Miller and Merritt Beekerman.

A partial list of other faculty members who will be reading poetry are Jim Haran, John Morefield, Jim Cagnacci, Barbara Bell, Don Snepp, Bob Berman and Richard Noble.

Statler Wing V.D. Teach-In On Thursday

By Jim Tutt

A V.D. teach-in has been scheduled in Statler Wing on Thursday, May 28 at 11 a.m.

Mr. Ronald S. Cremo, Public Health Advisor for the Bureau of Communicable Disease Control, will be present at the teach-in answering questions concerning V.D.

Also represented on both May 27 and 28 will be the Student Health Service (190 Science Building) with surveys for all students to fill out. These surveys ask for the opinion of students on health needs and the best kinds of services. It is extremely important that all concerned students fill out one of these surveys in order to expand the Health Service and also develop new services for students.

Diagnosis and or treatment of venereal disease does not require parental consent.

The rampages of V.D. are extremely great. The threat of blindness, sterility, and even death will affect as many as 500,000 Californians this year as V.D continues to be the state's number one epidemic.

The California State Department of Public Health estimates that one out of every ten young adults between the ages of 15 and 25 will be infected during 1970. Even more frightening is that only one out of every four or five cases are reported.

Gonorrhea is the most prevalent of the venereal diseases because it is highly infectious and does not always produce symptoms in the early stages. Particularly among women, there are usually no symptoms until the disease spreads into the womb and causes great pain. In men the disease can in most cases be detected within a few days by a burning sensation and a slight discharge. Gonorrhea, untreated, can cause arthritis, prostitis, and sterility in men. In women, it can cause a major pelvic infection which could require a hysterectomy.

Syphilis affects men and women the same, with the germ usually entering through the skin. The first symptom appears in 20 to 90 days as a sore, which eventually disappears as the germs continue to spread throughout the body. At the second stage, a rash or sores may appear. At this point syphilis can still be cured by penicillin. The secondary symptoms may disappear, and the infected person may feel fine and go on for years still carrying and spreading the infection of syphilis. If during this time the germs should further spread, they may attack the heart, brain, and spinal cord. The results could be blindness, insanity, and death.

Organizations Need Summer Volunteers

Introduction by Heldford

For most students, summer vacation means an end to the often tedious pursuit of knowledge. To bask away the frightening memories of overdue papers and impending exams, under the comforting warmth of the summer sun. Although one may escape the superficial worries of academia by simply removing them for a three month period, sand and surf do not suffice as a cure to the sickness which plagues our world today. Hunger and senseless blood-letting do not disappear as the mid-June sun shines upon the gypsied masses.

It is difficult to forget the burning babies and fiery hate, which have seduced this earth into a teeming jungle of death and despair. For people to clear their consciences with apathetic ambiguities and irresponsible indifferences is to only feed the fire of destruction which one day will engulf all humanity and render it back to the dust from which it rose. All students upon the campus of this college are directly or indirectly affected by the madness which reigns prominently over the world today. Therefore, it is our responsibility to strive toward an effective and lasting end of it.

The following is a list of Bay Area organizations in need of summer volunteers. These groups are not limited specifically to the movement for Peace in Indo-China for although that may be a primary affliction, it by no means is our only one. The Guardsman urges all students to answer the cry for help which echoes so loudly from every corner of our earth.

COMMUNITY AND SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

S.F. City Switchboard	558-6161
Chinatown Switchboard	421-0943
Chinatown-North Beach Community Center	392-4627
American Indian Center	552-1071
Jewish Community Center	346-6040
Neighborhood Arts Program	922-0104
Haight-Ashbury Free Clinic	431-1714
Parks and Recreation Department	558-3706
Black Panther Party	346-4013
NAACP	986-6992
United Filipino Association	989-5402
Mission Rebels	431-2224
Latin Youth Association	648-1144
Japanese-American Association	921-1782
Chinese-American Citizens Alliance	982-4618
Lions for Black Unity (Berkeley)	849-1277
Catholic Youth Organization	431-1618
Youth for Service	989-3780
Western Addition Community Organization	922-5757
The Diggers	863-9718
Glide Foundation	771-6300
YMCA	885-0460
YWCA	775-6500
Student League	397-0445
Chinatown-North Beach Youth Council	776-9672
Chinatown Economic Development Agency	397-5305
Baker Place	567-1498
Council of Churches	861-4726
Hunters Point Health Service	822-3130
Mission Coalition	647-3140
Chinatown Clinic	558-3158
Mission Medical Clinic	552-3870
Red Cross	776-1500
Environmental Workshop	921-2860
United Nations Association	435-5587
United Farm Workers Organizing Committee	282-2772
Berkeley Switchboard	549-0619
Ecology Action Center	849-3388
Welfare Rights Council	826-5151
INVOLVE (18 year-old vote campaign)	626-7410
Catholic Peace Fellowship	621-8787
Marin Switchboard	456-5305
American Friends Service Committee	752-7766
Vocations for Social Change	339-8745
Committee United for Political Prisoners (CUPP)	771-6300
Black Panther Community Clrs.	822-8471 and 346-4013

EMPLOYMENT INFORMATION

Federal Job Information Center	556-6668
Post Office Employment Bureau	556-1547
Office of Economic Opportunity	556-3706
U. S. Department of Labor	556-5583
California Department of Employment	557-1000
Concentrated Employment Program	771-7100
Civil Service (S. F.)	558-4923
S.F. Health Department	558-3942
S.F. Department of Social Services	558-6161
S.F. State Personnel Department	469-1764
City College Job Placement Center	558-7272, Ext. 332
National Alliance of Businessmen	421-9660
OEO Job Corps	391-2865
Job Corps	863-2655
Economic Opportunity Council	282-8505
S.F. Volunteer Bureau	885-6574
Youth Opportunity Center (Bayview)	822-7270
YOC (Western Addition)	557-3898
YOC (Central City)	557-1230
YOC (Chinatown-North Beach)	433-0575
YOC (Mission District)	826-5151
Huckleberry House	626-1886
Mission Switchboard	863-3040
Haight-Ashbury Switchboard	387-3575

Action Shots of Lacrosse

In the above Ram lacrosse player Michael Chan rolls past the stick of defender Daniel Roft during a lacrosse scrimmage at City. To the right Dan Roft lets loose a shot at the goal.
Contributed by Mike Li

Athletic Scholarships A Motivation At CCSF

By Ron Wilkerson

"No sports, they must be out of their minds." This statement was made by an athlete in regard to the recent attempt to cancel students activities.

If it weren't for athletics, many wouldn't even be in college or for that matter high school. Coach Lou Vasquez stated, "Athletics serve as a motivating force for young men to stay in college and continue their education."

Without athletics and the possibilities of scholarships and in some cases professional careers, many young men might not even enroll. Coach Vasquez also stressed imperative attention to the fact that "athletes should be realistic about their future and have supplementary goals in case aspirations are not met.

It would be foolish to depend entirely upon athletic ability and not have something to fall back on in case of injury or "he just couldn't cut the mustard."

Here is a list of athletes who have gone to City and have become successful men outside professional sports.

Burhl Toler—Principal of Benjamin Franklin Junior High School
Bob Tealer—Head of E.O.C. at Berkeley
Ron Coleman—Track Coach at Wilson
Carson English — Track Coach at Denman
James Thomas — Track Coach at Roosevelt
Adam Banks—Track Coach at Balboa

It's obvious that these men had more than one route to successful careers. Majoring in physical education is fine, and coaching youngsters is beautiful, but one should have other possible outlets for "making it."

Here is a large second list of athletes on scholarships who have gone on to four year schools or will be going.

Andre Hicks—Sacramento State—football
Mike Baines—Sacramento State—football
Willie Lewis—Arizona University—football
Ralph Bayard—University of Washington—football
Dan Parrish—U.S.F.—football
Jerry Vangar—San Fernando—football
Mike Carter—Sacramento State—football
Joe Bell—University of Washington—football
Ernie Provost—Cal State Hayward—track
Jesse Audeberry — L.A. State—basketball
Ed Diaz—Sacramento State—football
Greg Jackson—Sacramento State—football-track
Vince Ansley—University of Calif.—football-track
Vic Carry—University of Calif.—track
George Rush—Hayward State—football
Steve Jordan—San Francisco State—track-football
Dwight Tucker—San Jose State—football
Scott Hayward—Cal Poly—track
Hoy Henderson—Hayward State—track
August Berry—Hayward State—track
Vince Anderson—University of Southern Cal—baseball
Bob Tealer—Drake—basketball
Gary Lewis—University of Southern Cal—pro football
Burhl Tolcr—U.S.F.—pro football
Ollie Matson—U.S.F.—pro football
Al Cowlings—U.S.C.—pro football
Mike Taylor—U.S.C.—pro football
O.J. Simpson—U.S.C.—pro football
Rich Nole—pro basketball
Walt Williams—pro baseball
Bill Kilpatrick—pro basketball
Willie Wise—pro basketball
Gene Williams—pro basketball
Doyle Miller—West Texas State—football
Maurice Pittman—Sacramento State—football
Mike Strike—Sacramento State—football
Ronnie Jones—Trinity Texas—football
Tommie Mayfield — San Francisco State—football-basketball
Craig Martin — Stanford — football
Calvin Booth — Sacramento State—football
Darryl Fregia—Stanford — basketball
Otto Coleman—Sacramento State—football
Eddie Perkins—U.O.P.—football
Bu Dyson — Arizona — football
Jerald Dyson—SF State—football
James Chisholm—SF State—football
Jimmie Anderson—SF State—football
Chuck Hannon—SF State—basketball
Greg Price—San Diego state—basketball
Tom McVee—SF State—basketball
Daryle Johnson—Univ. of Detroit—basketball

Rams Place 9 In GGC Finals

The Golden Gate Conference Track finals or the Merritt Thunderbird show are now over and done with in San Jose. The weather over at San Jose State last Thursday was sunny and a warm 83 degrees. The finals were held in San Jose State's Spartan Tartan (the name is for real?) A light wind prevailed over the field.

While Merritt blew everyone off the track the CCSF Rams qualified nine men for the Northern California Finals.

The Rams placed their men through a couple of distance and field events. Triple jumper Donnie Bruce took a strong third in that event. Bruce's jumps covered 47' and 9". Taking an easy second in the high jump was C.C.S.F.'s Bill Metcalf, whose final best mark was 6'6".

Beating out fellow Ram teammate Humberto Hernandez for third place in the mile was Dave Power. Power was clocked for the mile in 4:20.6. The Ram 440 relay team took third in their event with a 42.1 second timing.

Joe Konte:

Pro Grid Sked Unusual

Commissioner Pete Rozelle's recently announced National Football League's schedule for the 1970 season appears to be the most interesting ever assembled.

Football! I can hear you screaming now about what this guy's doing writing football in the midst of baseball season. Well, to be honest, many people feel bored with the antics of the big leagues. So as a community service, we present a look at what football fans will have in store in the coming year.

A few of the interesting facets of the new schedule includes: 1) key rivalries will be opened up; 2) new division setups; 3) the introduction of Monday night football.

The many new rivalries could be the best move the league ever made. For years, such naturals as the Jets-Giants, 49ers-Raiders, Chargers-Rams, and Oilers-Cowboys only met in pre-season affairs. This resembles the plight of baseball, which has used tradition as an excuse to avoid the crowd-pleasing rivalries like the Giants-Athletics, Angels-Dodgers, and Mets-Yankees.

If you came in late, we'd like to introduce you to the new NFL. The grid brains have taken all the AFL clubs (remember that league) and lumped them with the NFL teams to form one big happy circuit. This move makes much sense, since that AFL was inferior to the powerful established league. After all, besides winning the last-two super bowls, and beating the NFL in exhibition, that old AFL was nothing.

Under the title of the National Football League, the twenty-six clubs will be divided into two thirteen-team conferences, the National Football Conference and the American Football Conference. From here the two conferences are again split down to three divisions, with five teams in one division and four each in the other two.

Are you still with me?

The next step, of course, is to place each club into either the Eastern, Western, or Central division. Now Rozelle's an intelligent man when it comes to pro football, but his knowledge in geography is lacking. For example, the commissioner has placed Atlanta in the Western Division and Dallas in the East of the NFC. Now, we know this is a changing world, but we're sure that Dallas is more west than Atlanta.

Another key step for the football world will be the beginning of Monday night football at a full time basis, meaning competition from Laugh-In. This will cut down on the Sunday double headers, which have probably caused some broken homes the past few years. The husband would carry a couple of six packs of beer into the living room, settle himself into the big easy chair, and sit there staring at the tube for over six hours. Pity the poor wife who has to sit through two long games, while the old man enjoys himself. It's enough to make the most patient wife sign up with women's liberation. We can imagine the plight now of the poor wife, as her hubby plunks his carcass in the chair again on Monday night to watch more football. It may even turn the greatest marriage into a laugh-in.

An interesting year indeed for football, and its fans. We're kind of looking forward to the first TV night game when Joe Namath and the New York Jets, a former American Football club, now of the Eastern Division of the AFC, meets one of the three old NFL teams, the Cleveland Browns of the Central Division of the AFC in an NFL game.

Gee, maybe old boring baseball isn't so bad after all. At least, it's simpler.

Conductor of the City College Pep Band, Joseph Alessi, stands with the 1970 junior college band division first prize trophy won at the Luther Burbank Rose Festival at Santa Rosa. Student conductors of the band are Todd Levy and Steve Wilkerson.

Tennis 3rd In League 5-2 Record

Coach Roy Diedrechsen's Ram tennis team finished third in a not so surprising GGC tennis league. Way back when the season began, Diedrechsen made the razor sharp prediction that the Rams had a strong chance of finishing third in the league.

How right he was for Foothill took first with a 7-0 record, while Chabot licked the heels of the champs with a 6-1 record. The Rams recorded a respectable 5-2 record to clinch third.

On the bright side, Jim Turner, the Rams' number one man in the singles department qualified for the Northern California Junior College finals. In the doubles City qualified again, Turner and Paul Smelokoff for the finals.

Cagers Title Drive Big Story Of '70

Larry Haren, who turned from gridiron to hardcourts, whips pass through defenders.

'Year Of Ram For CCSF Hoop Champs

On the hardwood world of basketball, 1970 was the "Year of the Ram." The highlights were a championship team, the player of the year, and the Golden Gate Conference's coach of the year.

The team of course, was the hustling CCSF crew. The Rams didn't stop winning the big ones until they reached the State Playoffs. But the cagers did win the "big ones."

One of these contests came at the close of the season, and on stake was a free trip to the State Tourney. The opponent was Laney College, and anyone who was at the cesf gym that night will never forget the effort of this fired up club. The Rams opened up the second half supporting a sixteen point lead. But at the time to play expired, so did the Rams. With 0:40 left, the lead was down to two. A tenacious defense forced a turnover, however, and the Rams were victors.

The player of the year was super Daryle Johnson, who did everything at the games but sell tickets. The 6-6 phenon from Illinois was the tifth leading scorer in the league. In fourteen games, the gangling forward pumped in 88 field goals and 66 free throws for a total of 242 points and an average of 17 points a game.

The coach was the incomparable Sid Phelan, who won his seventh title in the last eight years. That team effort you may have noticed was no mistake, but the work of a basketball genius in Phelan.

Because it was such a great

Sid Phelan.

team effort, there were many other Ram cagers that led the title chase. Bill Metcalfe, a second team selection, was another spark. Larry Haren, an All-City high school athlete, traded in his helmet and shoulder pads for a pair of sneakers in pacing the Ram attack. Others who made key contributions were Terry Bradley, Jerry Le Blanc, Olaf Peterson, Greg Price, and Tom McVey.

Win Over Foothill Lone Highlite Of Rams Worst Season In 31 Years

The Rams began the 1969 preseason off by fumbling the ball away to American River College on their first offensive play of the year. Little did anyone realize at the time that the fumble was an indication of the total frustration that would haunt the gridders throughout the campaign.

Nine games later: that frustration was complete as CCSF salvaged only two wins in nine tries while finishing in eighth place. The record was the worst suffered by a Ram football team since 1938.

The first win of the year came against Delta College, but their only league victory was gained at the expense of Foothill. A superb defensive effort by the local gridders was responsible for the lopsided 43-12 victory. Defensive back Robert Red keyed the Rams surge with two runbacks for touchdowns of intercepted passes. In all, the defense accounted for 26 of the 43 points scored, and set up the other scores. It was truly a long day for Foothill's star passer, Tod Starks, who spent much of the afternoon on the seat of his pants.

But the remainder of the trying season was one of gloom for the Rams. San Mateo picked up their first win against a CCSF club in seven years with a 30-14 win. San Jose overcame a 15-7 fourth quarter lead to whip the Rams 22-15. And Diablo Valley ran the SF men ragged, using their second string with four minutes yet to play in the first half.

Even with such a poor year, the Rams still impressed enough people as five players were named to the All League squad. Dan Parrish, a 6-2, 240 pound lineman and Robert Red made the first team.

Another plus for CCSF was their swift halfback, Ron Jones, who rushed for 505 yards, placing him fifth in the league.

Ram defense punished star Foothill QB, Tod Starks, all day in only league win, 43-12.

'69-70 CCSF Sports Capsule

—John Susko grabbed the headlines of the golf season when he captured the Western Collegiate Tournament on March 24. The Ram ace beat out a field of 160 golfers for the win. His rounds included a record breaking 66, 76, and 79.

The team finished in fourth place in league play with an 8-6 mark. Top scorers were Susko, averaging 76.3 and Greg Corvi, 78.2.

—The water polo team and the swimming squad had one thing in common during their respective seasons: neither won a contest. The swimmers' problem was numbers. Their nine man team was composed of only one diver and eight swimmers as compared to opposing schools which had five divers and thirty swimmers.

Frank Johnson was the star of the lowly Rams' water polo team, which increased its losing streak to twenty with a second straight 0-10 year. The highlight of the season came on October 30, when Johnson scored a record eight goals in one game as the Rams lost, 20-11.

—The soccer team came within one game of winning the title, finally settling for an 8-2-1 mark and a second place finish. Star booters Harry Best, Jose Tovar, and Al Seaves were elected to the GGC all-league team. Goalie Bill Christensen was named on the second team.

—The baseball team survived an atrocious start which saw them commit twenty-one errors in the first three games to finish with a respectable 11-10 mark.

At one point of the year, the Rams won five in a row and seven of eight. The quiet City College bats erupted during that streak, leading the CCSF club to a few slugfest victories. These scores included a 12-1 win over Merritt, 9-3 against Chabot, 9-6 versus Diablo Valley, and 10-7 over Foothill.

The stars were aplenty for the Rams in their battle to finish the year above the .500 mark. Some of these players included Bob Crosat, Vince Anderson, Red Ramos, and John Farrell. Two key stars of the club were pitchers Ray Spediacci and Rick Escalambre. Besides their pitching prowess, the duo also put their bats to work often enough to help their own causes.

Tracy, Hernandez Pace Cross Country

The powerful Ram cross Country team met their match on November 14, and the result was a second place finish in the tough GGC.

San Jose did the dirty work, nipping the Ram thinclads 27-29, and gaining the conference as well as round robin titles.

The 1969 cross country team was led by a pair of dynamic runners, Jim Tracy and Humberto Hernandez. The phenomenal Tracy presently holds three course records. His work has been a big plus to the lungbusters throughout the year.

One example of this came at the meet against Diablo Valley when Tracy powered the Rams to victory with his 20:25 clocking. The win at that time was his fifth in as many tries with GGC competition.

Hernandez is considered by many to be just as strong as Tracy. He proved that when the fleet footed runner tied the CCSF mile record at 4:14.7. The 5'3", 114 pounder came through in clutch style with a second place finish in the crucial Chabot meet, while Tracy faltered with a seventh place finish.

Jim Tracy (1) and Humberto Hernandez.

Editor's Note

The City College sports year of 1969-70 held many thrills for its fans. From a championship basketball team to a disappointing football club, the Ram athletes were never short in the excitement they produced.

Near misses for titles in soccer and cross country were points of frustrations for Ram fans, but the real frustration has to be Curt Decker's swimmers, who are plagued by small turnouts. On this page, you can relive the trials of a sports season with the Rams.

City College of San Francisco
Official publication of the Journalism students
Volume 71 Number 1

the Guardsman

October 5, 1970

He's a big man on campus who wears two hats. Call him Superintendent, or call him President. His name is Louis Batmale

Story on Page 3

She's a tradition-breaker; the first woman elected to the top spot in student government! Call her President. Her name is Judy Kay.

Story on Page 2

Judy Kay Heads Student Body
Mike Devine Wins Second Spot

Judy Kay is the first woman in the history of San Francisco City College to be elected to the top spot in student government. She defeated Roger Cassell to become Fall 1970 Associated Student president.

The race attracted a higher percentage of voters than previous elections which may indicate a revival of concern for student government at City College.

A total of 973 votes were cast out of a possible 11,310, about 8½ per cent of the student body. Miss Kay received 471 votes while Cassell polled 398.

The office of vice president was won by Mike Devine who drew 482 votes topping opponent Victoria Reiter with 330.

Judy Kay, AS President

Judy Kay has been active in the college tutorial program and served as student director in Fall 1969 and secretary two semesters earlier.

Miss Kay would like to see Student Council get together with the Academic Senate for occasional meetings and invite faculty members to drop by the Student Union building to talk with students.

Vice President Mike Devine has been a member of Student Council for the past two semesters and was finance chairman last term. Currently he is a member of the Bookstore Committee, which is made up of three Student Council members, three faculty members and three administrators.

Devine said that he will propose opening a used book store dealing with used books only under the direction of the A.S. Bookstore Manager, Richard Main.

"We have a large unfurnished basement in the Student Union building that is not being used for anything," Devine said. "We could probably establish the bookstore there."

He would also like the used book store to be staffed by as many students as possible. The present A.S. Bookstore would sell new books and various school supplies.

Devine will be finance chairman again this semester.

"I'd like to see that all members of organizations sponsored by Student Council buy student body cards," he said. "This is a rule set down by the Financial Code that is rarely enforced but will be this semester."

The Fall 1970 Student Council consists of Susan Fong, Rosary Wong, Joseph Chan, Sherman Tam, Dora Liang, Franklin Fung, Martin Poon, Raymond Tsang, Chase Sun, Tom Cleaver, Pat Horan, Charles Borden, Bonnie Solomon, and John Goebel replacing JoAnn King who could not serve this semester.

Student Council meets every Monday and Wednesday afternoon from 12-1 in the new Student Union Building across from Smith Hall cafeteria.

The student council spent the entire meeting on Monday talking about a proposed child day care center. Mr. Donald Peterson, one of the co-sponsors of the child care center, asked the council for a budget of $3,000 so that a pilot program could be established for the months of November, December, and January. The meeting ended with no decision being made as to whether or not the money would be allocated.

The council opened Wednesday, September 23 meeting by continuing the debate on the day-care center. Tom Cleaver made a motion to appropriate $2,000 to the Child Day-care Center, with the balance of $1,000 to be paid next semester (Spring 1970). This motion was voted down by a vote of 6 for and 9 against.

Another motion to grant the proposed center $1,500 was voted on and passed. Under this motion, a representative of Student Council will check on the progress of the Child Day-care Center, and if all goes well, the balance will be given to the center later on in the semester.

The next order of business was brought about by Dora Liang. She wanted to know about the new system of grading: That when you receive a final grade of "F" you can take that course over again. The new grade will count on your grade-point average, while the former grade ("F") will be lined out—but not erased—from your record. What Dora wanted to find out was if the system was retroactive and if it also worked for "D's." The council referred the issue to the Curriculum Committee.

The final issue at the Wednesday meeting was brought up by Bonnie Solomon. She had talked to Paul Fisher, head of the Academic Committee, who agreed to permit five students to attend the Executive Meetings of the Academic Senate. Bonnie made a motion that two of the five members come from Student Council, and the other three members would be chosen from minority groups.

Mike Devine, AS Vice President

Big Budget Alloted
City College District

The 1970-71 budget adopted for the San Francisco Community College District is $19,775,923.

The multi-million dollar budget is designed to serve some 88,000 students; 12,586 in City College 2-year programs and some 4,175 in extended day classes; 8,000 in Adult-Occupational education, and upwards of 63,000 in the Adult Education curriculum.

This is how the San Francisco Community College budget is allocated:

College Division	$13,018,081
Adult-Occupational	5,216,930
District Office	1,540,912
Total Budget	$19,775,923

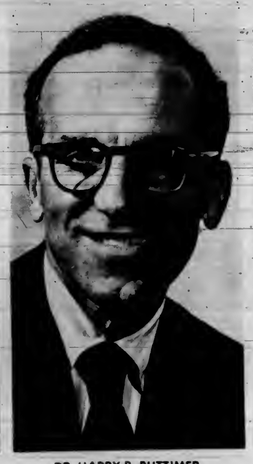
The current expense for education, per ADA for 1970-71 is $912.64. This figure excludes funds for capital outlay and undisturbed reserve.

How is the new district budget funded? From the following sources, according to Jun Iwamoto, Business Manager:

Ad Valorem Taxes	$13,972,727	10%
State Aid (basic & equalization)	5,188,838	26%
Other Income	461,000	2%
Federal Aid	153,358	1%
Total Income	$19,775,923	100%

Financially, the establishment of a new educational entity in the community was beneficial to everyone involved.

Jun Iwamoto is responsible for collecting, evaluating, collating, and computing these astronomical figures. He's business manager for the new district. A City College graduate, he's had eighteen years of experience in governmental accounting; has a B.A. in business from Golden Gate College and is currently working on an M.B.A. degree.



Multi-million dollar budget provides education for thousands of students

Top Administration Post Changes

DR. LOUIS F. BATMALE
New City College President

DR. HARRY R. BUTTIMER
Assistant Superintendent, City College Division

Dr. Louis F. Batmale, 57, is the new president of City College of San Francisco and Superintendent of the new San Francisco Community College District.

The San Francisco Board of Education, sitting as the Governing Board of the San Francisco Community College District, appointed Batmale to succeed Dr. Louis G. Conlan who has served as president of the two-year public college since 1949.

The key men on Dr. Louis Batmale's new San Francisco Community College District team are Dr. Harry R. Buttimer, Jr., City College Division; James Dierke, Adult-Occupational Division, and Dr. Steven Morena, Assistant Superintendent, Administration. Dr. Harry Buttimer will operate City College of San Francisco. As chief administrative officer, he exercises broad supervision over its three divisions—instruction, student welfare and business—meeting regularly with administrative staff and President's Council members to formulate and execute policies for the college.

James Dierke heads the Adult-Occupational Division, a post with which he is thoroughly familiar having served the San Francisco Unified School District in this capacity for the last two years. Dierke will coordinate and administer programs for all day and evening adult occupational schools.

Dr. Steven Morena, Assistant Superintendent, Administration, will have major responsibilities for personnel matters, coordinating district-wide recruitment, referral and processing for both the City College and Adult-Occupational divisions. Morena will assist the Superintendent with community relations and publications development.

BATMALE

Dr. Batmale, a native San Franciscan, has served at City College for the past twenty-two years, first in the counselling department and then in successive administrative positions Dean of Student Activities, Dean of Semiprofessional Programs, Dean of Instruction, Coordinator of Technical Terminal Programs, Vice President and Assistant Superintendent.

The [illegible]-president has been instrumental in the development of occupational education curriculum at the college, bringing courses of college technical programs to forty-two since 1954.

Batmale serves as a member of the Board of Directors, California Junior College Association; Certification Commission of the Educational Institute-American Hotel and Motel Association, and chairman, State Athletic Committee, CJCA.

Other affiliations include University of San Francisco Alumni Association, past president; San Francisco Field Administrators, past president; San Francisco Heart Association, member Board of Governors; Harkness-Hospital, Board of Directors.

Dr. Batmale, third president of San Francisco's community college, takes over leadership at a critical moment in the history of the institution. City College separated from the San Francisco Unified School District July 1, 1970, and now functions as the San Francisco Community College District and assumes responsibility for adult education in the community.

A career educator, Dr. Batmale was graduated from University of San Francisco in 1934 with a Bachelor of Science degree. In 1947 he was awarded the Master of Arts degree from University of California, Berkeley, and the Doctor of Education degree in 1955.

He started teaching in the San Francisco public schools in 1936 at Galileo Adult School.

In World War II Batmale served as a Lieutenant, Junior Grade, with the Fifth Amphibian Fleet, United States Navy.

Dr. Batmale is recognized in athletic circles for his outstanding skills as a basketball player, coach and official.

BUTTIMER

The new City College of San Francisco president-superintendent is a consultant to the Ford Foundation on vocational and technical education; the American Association of Junior Colleges; the Center for Technical Education, San Francisco State College, and an adviser to Project Feast (Food Education and Services Technology).

Dr. Harry R. Buttimer is no stranger to this campus. From 1947 to 1960 he was instructor and head of the business department at City College. For the next three years, he was associate professor and coordinator of the business administration department at California State College at Hayward. In 1963, he took a leave of absence to become a consultant for a San Francisco land development and construction firm that was doing business on a nation-wide scale.

Dr. Buttimer returned to CCSF in 1964 as a Dean of Instruction. In 1967 he was made coordinator of educational management. In April of this year, he was appointed assistant superintendent, college division.

Dr. Buttimer's degrees include: Bachelor's degree, UC Berkeley; Master of Business Administration, UC Berkeley; Certified Public Accountant, State of California (1948); and a Ph.D., Stanford University (1959).

Meet the men who are responsible for the daily operation and future growth of City College

DIERKE

James Dierke, a newcomer to this campus, is a San Francisco native having received most of his formal education in the San Francisco public school system. He received his bachelor's degree from San Francisco State College in 1934 in the fields of education, health, physical education, and biology. He received an M.A. in Education at Stanford University in 1936.

From 1934 until 1955 he served in the capacities of teacher, assistant principal, and principal at various junior high schools in the San Francisco Unified School District. He was appointed Assistant Superintendent in charge of junior high schools in June, 1955.

In 1970, he was appointed assistant superintendent of adult-occupational education for the new San Francisco Community College District.

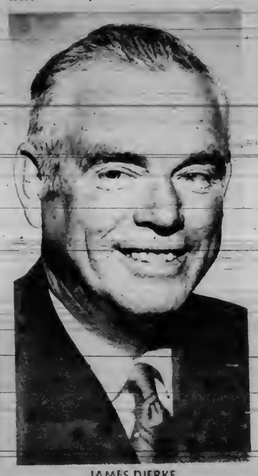
Mr. Dierke has held a number of positions in the California Association of Secondary School Administration. From 1948 to 1964 he was professor of secondary education and supervision in graduate school at the University of San Francisco.

Dierke is Consultant, N.E.A., National School Drop-out Study, member of Board of Directors, San Francisco chapter of the junior Red Cross, member of the Mayor's San Francisco Youth Committee, member of the State Department of Education's Vocational Educational Large Urban Cities Program, and a member of the American Vocational Program. In 1929, he was elected Student Body President at Mission High School.

MORENA

Dr. Morena, also new to this campus, attended Galileo High School, San Francisco State College, where he received his bachelor's degree, and Stanford University, where he obtained his Master's degree in Administration and his Doctorate in Education.

After three years as a Lieutenant in the United States Navy, Dr. Morena became a counselor at James Lick Junior High School in the City from 1947 to 1957. He then moved on to Portola Junior High School, where he was head counselor until 1964.



In 1965, he moved across the bay to Laney College in Oakland where he became, in order, counselor, head counselor, assistant dean, and president.

Dr. Morena is a member of the Inter-Racial Committee, Equal Employment Committee for the building program, and the Ethnic Balance Committee.

It is these four men who will head up the new San Francisco Community College District. These men will be working in conjunction with their governing board, the San Francisco Board of Education, which is in a separate capacity from the Unified School District.

DR. STEVEN MORENA
Assistant Superintendent, Administration

JAMES DIERKE
Assistant Superintendent Adult/Occupational Division

California State Colleges Advance Application Date

All California State Colleges will observe new admission procedures for the fall term of 1971 which differ sharply from previous semesters.

Students who want to enter any of the 19 state colleges in fall 1971 must apply this November under the system's new common admissions program.

The two main provisions of the new system are:

A single application for admission by each prospective student, on which he lists his campus of first preference along with as many as three other campuses he is willing to attend if there is no room at his first choice.

A one-month period each year during which applications for admission will be accepted by all campuses — after which successful applicants, if there are more applicants than openings, will be selected according to new guidelines.

The new system was necessitated by problems stemming from rising enrollment pressures.

Previously, prospective students could apply for a number of campuses, which resulted in confusion for both campus officials and applicants.

If they were turned down because of lack of space, there were only occasional attempts to refer the unsuccessful applicants to campuses where openings still existed.

Under the new system, an application which cannot be accommodated by the campus of first choice will automatically be forwarded to the second campus listed by the applicant and so on.

Eight state colleges, San Jose, Chico, Fullerton, Humboldt, Sacramento, San Fernando Valley, San Francisco and Sonoma, are listed by the chancellor's office as likely to receive more qualified applications than they can accept.

New guidelines to be used at campuses where applications exceed the number of openings were approved by the state college trustees earlier this year.

The guidelines begin by allowing each campus to set enrollment quotas by categories, such as academic area and class level.

Then the quotas are filled according to a system of priorities that gives first preference to California veterans and transfer students from two-year community colleges.

Factors such as hardship, previous attendance, past service, degree sought, and special ability will also be considered.

Admission application forms will be available by Oct. 15.

Applications may be filed, along with a $20 processing fee, between November 2 and 30. Applicants will be informed of their acceptance in March 1970.

Late admission applications will be taken starting Dec. 1 at campuses where openings still exist.

Carpeted Floors Featured In New 'Wong Design' Buildings Near Arts Wing

BY PAUL THIELE

Seventeen new bungalows built for the campus during the summer vacation should help keep pace with the increasing enrollment here.

The exteriors of the new bungalows were designed by Robert K. Wong, architect. They are more imaginative than the 28 other relocatable rooms around the campus, but the only difference between interiors is that the floors of the new rooms are carpeted while the older ones are plain tile.

According to Campus Construction Coordinator, Vic Vaio, installation of furniture and equipment is the only thing keeping the new bungalows, Student Union building, and Visual Arts building from being complete. Some of the bungalows are currently being used while the others do not have desks yet.

Furniture for the Student Union building is ready to arrive but the large upper level lounge area will not be furnished until the carpet is delivered, hopefully by the end of this month.

The college's photography department has not received its equipment yet and is operating on a limited basis in the Visual Arts building east of the Arts wing. Advertising art and printing facilities, reading labs, lecture halls, and offices are in full use in the Visual Arts building.

Vaio attributed summer-long shipping strikes for the slowdown in delivery of furniture and equipment.

Further expansion may start this November with the Creative Arts extension to be built west of the Arts wing if the governing board of the community college district approves the plans on October 6. This structure will comprise brand new television and radio studios, music practice rooms, and twenty classrooms. The estimated cost of the building is $1,511,000 and the completion date is approximately twenty months after the groundbreaking. One problem posed by the new building will be a reduction of faculty parking space.

"At the present time there's no solution to that problem," Vaio said.

Another upcoming construction project is the "Utility Plan" to begin next month. It will update the fire alarm system on campus and improve lighting on the outdoor pathways, especially the one encircling the football field. Mercury vapor beam lights will be mounted on the roofs of the men's and women's gym for more convenient walking in those areas.

Vaio mentioned that he is trying to have the low vandalized lights, like those on the front steps of Science Hall, replaced by higher light standards and hopes that they will be usable by January, 1971.

One of 17 new "Wong Design" bungalows near the Arts wing

Campus Services Offered This Fall

What campus services are available to students? Copies of Action Guide '70 were available during registration. For those students who misplaced their copies of this handy booklet, the Guardsman reprints a list of particular interest to new students.

VOLUNTARY HEALTH PLAN is available to all students. Carried by Blue Cross Hospital Service of Calif., you get hospitalization and related costs; physician and surgeon benefits and out-patient help. Cost: $3.50 a month. Inquire at S-190 or Student Union.

CAMPUS BOOKSTORE stocks all required college text books and school supplies, from pens to pastel paints. Nylon hose, rock records and a terrific paper back book selection are yours, with discounts, when you own an AS card. Store profits help support student activities. Open 7:30 a.m.-7:15 p.m., M-Th., 7:30-4:00 p.m., Friday.

COIL (Center of Independent Learning) provides students with materials especially prepared to enable them to cover a subject or topic entirely on their own. Materials are available on a wide variety of subjects including chemistry and math. COIL can help you supplement class work. Come into Cloud Hall, Room 305.

COUNSELING AND GUIDANCE provides both individual and group assistance to help you plan your course of study, adjust to college life, deal with academic-vocational and personal problems. Confer with your assigned counsellor by appointment, or call on the counsellor during the day. E-205.

DRAFT COUNSELING is available to all men on campus. Granted there are many requirements and complicated regulations in connection with your draft status and there is a skilled draft counsellor to advise you at City. Know how to deal with the selective service regulations. Bungalow 5.

FINANCIAL AID is available to students who qualify, or are in need, from a variety of sources and varying sums. Federal aid programs permit you to borrow the cost of your 2-year education, to be repaid in the future, or you can get an outright grant to help you stay in college. E-109B, Mr. Castellino.

LOST AND FOUND—Each semester at City personal belongings such as sweaters, coats, umbrellas, books, are lost, found, and held till owners can identify them. Whether you're a finder or loser, you can claim or turn in lost articles at one of the following rooms: Arts—201; Ed Services—106 or Campus Police, Cloud—119.

PLACEMENT SERVICE is ready to help you find a job whether you are a graduate of City or presently attending. You can find seasonal, part-time or full time work. Don't hesitate to see Mr. Amori or Mr. Crippen about work that can help keep you in college, or start you on a new career. Placement Office, S-132.

REGISTRAR'S OFFICE in Ed. Services 107 is the statistical heartbeat of City. Impersonal electronic brains team with warm, friendly humans to deal with entrance problems, transcript transfers, leaves of absence and class drops. All your performance records are kept and available in E-107.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES OFFICE is the seat of all information regarding student affairs on campus. Dean Arthur Samuels will supply tips on student travel, insurance, and how to run for student office. Office aproves all posted announcements and leaflet distribution. Student Union; AS Office.

STUDENT BANK is the Chase-Manhattan of the City College Campus. All student funds are dispersed through the bank, with the presentation of official vouchers, signed by advisors. The bank offers check cashing service up to $10 for AS Card holders. A welcome service—E207.

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES are handled by a full time public health nurse and a skilled counselling staff. The nurse renders minor medical care and referrals are made by the counsellors for rehabilitation, guidance and welfare. Special parking permits and elevator keys are issued, too. S-190.

TUTORIAL CENTER offers all forms of educational assistance to City College students. Tutoring is done by students and faculty. Every effort is made to suit the convenience of the student. Inquire about the offerings at Tutorial. If your problem isn't being handled, a tutor will be searched out to help you. Daily, 9:00 a.m.-4:30 p.m., S-142.

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS OFFICE gives specific information and service to men and women who have performed in the service of their country. There are special programs and financial assistance available—help you may not know exists. All vets should visit the VOF, E-202.

Advice, Volunteer Work, And New Rules

Need Some Advice?

A "Student Advice Center" has been formed at City College to aid any student with information ranging from activities on campus to personal problems.

The newly found organization, which opened on August 26, is run solely by four City College students, Renato Larin, former AS president, heads the group, which is composed of one member from each of the major ethnic factions of the school: white, black, Chinese, and Chicano. The other three students are Jocelyn Wong, member of experimental college and avid worker of the peace movement; James O'Donnell, active in the preventing of the Mission to be split into districts; and Charles Smith, one of the original organizers of the peace movement on campus, and a member of student council.

Some of the basic purposes of the student center are to provide students with advice on scholarships, programming procedures, activities on campus, and registration. The center also aids the student in changing or dropping classes; changing major or counselor, transferring to another college or University, and in gaining financial aid.

Besides the pre-mentioned services, the advice center also gives the student other in-depth information. These include the arranging of appointments for other colleges, and the setting up of minority students in the Educational Opportunity Program (EOP) on other campuses. The group is in contact with the health center and can make appointments for troubled students with psychotherapist Ken Davis.

The formation of the center was achieved through the "encouraging response" of President Batmale, Assistant Superintendent Buttimer, and Dean Grady.

Larin has asked for all students to drop in to the center, which is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. It is located in back of the Educational Services building in E-109.

Volunteers Needed

Volunteers who wish to tutor can learn to do so at an all day workshop on Saturday, October 3, 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at the YWCA, 620 Sutter Street.

Practical Guidelines and techniques will be discussed by Dr. Eugene McCreary.

Small group workshops in the afternoon will concentrate on motivation, methods and materials, with Mrs. Lelia Dukes, Mrs. Ruth Klompus, and Mrs. Patricia Park acting as discussion leaders. Participants are asked to bring a bag lunch. Coffee and tea will be provided.

This workshop is open to all and is free to the public. It is sponsored by the Volunteer Bureau of San Francisco in cooperation with the Adult and Occupational Educational Division of the San Francisco Community College District.

For additional information, call the Volunteer Bureau at 885-6574.

Auto Tags Hiked

Students who park their automobiles on the City College campus without a parking permit this fall will have to pay a steep price for parking violation.

Parking tickets were recently raised from two dollars to ten dollars throughout San Francisco. The new boost in fines will affect those autos left in areas where parking is prohibited. Such zones include yellow, white and green painted curbs, and any other illegal parking zone.

City College campus police will continue to enforce the parking regulations in order to give students who obtained parking permits a place to park their cars. All tickets are handled by the city—the campus police issue them and send them downtown at the end of the day.

Used Book Sale

Used books can be bought, sold, or traded at the Experimental College Book Exchange in Bungalow 5 on Cloud Circle.

The idea behind the book exchange is to have students re-cycle books among themselves instead of dealing with the bookstores which buy books back for less than half as much as the student pays for it.

One of the problems with the book exchange is that there are hundreds of people participating instead of thousands. Jane Killebrew of the Experimental College said that if several thousand people exchange books rather than a few hundred, there will be more variety and less student disappointment.

The book exchange is not in competition with the campus bookstores and it is dealing only with used books. There are no books being sold at the Experimental College. All trading is done personally or by telephone. Students are asked to save their books for two or three weeks after the end of this semester and participate in the book exchange.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

During registration a pouch bag was found with some money in it. The owner can claim this by coming to the Dean's office in room E-106 and giving identification.

the Guardsman

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
PAUL THIELE
SPORTS EDITOR
MIKE CHAN
ASSIGNMENTS
JIM BROWNING
STAFF
Bruno Forner, Joe Konte, Virginio Elliott, Gary Delucchi, Ken Childs, Dennis McGhee, Cynthia Dowson, Frankie Schafer, Katherine Dempsey.
ADVISER
MRS. DORRY COPPOLETTA

Contact Lens / Do You Plan to Buy A Student Body Card?

Debbie Shea, Psychology Major

I'm not buying one because they're $7.50 and that's too much money. All you get for it is a parking permit and I can find a parking place somewhere near the campus without a permit. I have ghost hours. At the hours I'm here, nobody else is.

Gregory Southall, History Major

I haven't bought one yet but I will as soon as I get some money. I don't have a car but I've heard that you can get discounts with a student body card. I don't know exactly what percentage of the cost is taken off each item, but if they're discounts, I'll take them.

Dave Eskesen, Art Major

I plan on getting one but I haven't had the money lately. To be truthful, I'm buying it because I need a parking permit. Off-hand I can't think of any other reason for buying one.

Donna Vavuris, Teacher Assistance Major

I haven't bought one yet but I think I will. Buying a student body card supports the college. I'd probably use the discounts provided by the card and I might be able to use the parking permit sometime this semester. I also plan to attend some of the football games this semester.

James K. Stokes, Engineering Major

I only have one class a day so it wouldn't be beneficial. During the rainy season a great deal of people may buy them because they'll be driving to school. Parking is the main reason for buying one. Being an adult, most of my entertainment isn't on the same level as most college students'.

Richard Clement, Gen. Ed. Major

I don't plan to buy a student body card. I'm only going to be here part-time and I won't be driving very often. I used to buy them for the parking permit. Most people aren't actually interested in the cards, but the permits that come with them. Besides, I never get around to using any of the discounts.

What's City College All About?

It's Always a Problem Deciding Which Classes to Take

Onward and Upward Toward the Truth

A campus is more than buildings, books and equipment. It is a forum for people to exchange ideas; to learn facts; to seek truth. It is a market place offering opportunities for a personal commitment to life-long learning and life-long striving for a better world.

People . . . . People . . . People!

Art in Action

Concentration Is Necessary With Creativity

Relaxation—The Pause That Refreshes

Registration Can Be a Long and Frustrating Experience

the Guardsman

SPORTS

Pictured on this carry is LA Valley's Bob Barber. He rushed for 169 net yards on 30 carries. Assisting on the tackle is Ram cornerback Vern Thomas (No. 44).

Photo by Martin Denmark

Rams Sneak By LA Valley 13-7
San Joaquin Delta Crushed 36

Coming off their exhibition season with two victories, the Ram gridders will start league play against highly seeded Chabot College this Saturday at Chabot. Game time is 8 p.m.

For the record, the Rams overcame the visiting Los Angeles Valley Monarchs 13-7 in a tough defensive battle at City College Saturday, September the 19th. Just last Saturday the Rams rolled over the San Joaquin Delta Mustangs 34-7 at Tracy.

Highlighting the Ram victory over the Los Angeles Valley Monarchs were numerous outstanding defensive and specialty team plays.

Both Ram scores came on specialty team plays (one PAT failed) as the Ram offense gained only 117 yards. On one Ram score, defensive tackle Jerry Grays leaped high enough to lay a hand onto the ball. Ram linebacker Andy Johnson scooped up the ball among a throng of Rams, and scrambled 5 yards for the score.

Just 2:51 later Ram flanker-back Robert Red took a Monarch punt on his own 7 and raced toward the sidelines sprinting and stutter stepping by grasping Monarch hands. Breaking upfield Red raced his way into the end zone carrying a struggling defender on his back.

All hopes of a comeback victory for the Monarchs were dashed when with just 3:17 left in the game the Monarchs were destroyed. Attempting to pass on his own 41, Qb Dale Criscione was dumped for a 17-yard loss by outside linebacker Al Levi. Trying to pass again Criscione was smothered by the whole left side of the Ram line. Having to go 31 yards for a first down, Criscione tried to set up a screen pass but was hurried into an incomplete by the hardcharging Rams.

Even though the Rams gave up 319 yards, the Ram defense time and time again came up with the big plays to push the Monarchs away from possible scores.

In last week's victory against the San Joaquin Delta Mustangs, the offense blew the game wide open for the defense-minded Rams. Starting Ram QB Frank Oross busted the game open with his tough rushing and accurate passing.

The first Ram score was set up by a Mustang fumble on the Mustang 20 (in all the Mustangs fumbled 8 times, recovering only 2) and Oross' quarterback keeper which went for 18 yards. On the next play, halfback Derrick Williams plunged over from the 2 for the touchdown.

A scant 7 seconds later Mustang halfback Gary Forsythe fumbled on the kick off and Ram Al Levi recovered it.

Three plays later, Oross hit flanker-back Robert Red on a flag pattern in the right corner of the end zone, from the Mustang 23.

The only Mustang score came from a 55-yard run by Gary Forsythe, 7:41 in the second quarter. All in all the Ram defense gave yards but never the score.

The big game breaker in the contest came with just 11 seconds to go in the first half. The score was still a very close 7 to 13 Rams. Quarterback Frank Oross dropped back to pass, but had to flee the pocket and head for the right sideline as the Mustangs poured through the line. Almost out of bounds, Oross flips over the middle a pass to tight end Larry Haren who heads straight upfield and reverses his direction and sprints toward the left side of the end zone, and easily scores standing up.

With that score the fighting Mustangs seemed flat and listless, for in the second half the Rams immediately took charge of the situation as they steadily marched upfield and culminated their opening drive with a quarterback keeper. Oross, on a broken play, weaved and twisted through Mustang defenders for the touchdown.

The scoring binge finally was halted, after the Rams on their next series of downs drove 73 yards in 15 plays ending with a Darrel Mitchell plunge, to end the scoring at 34-7.

In the statistics Oross was 9 for 12 in the passing and he also rushed for 46 yards. Tight end Larry Haren took 4 passes for 94 yards and 1 touchdown.

On total offense the Rams gained 359 yards to the Mustangs' 205. The Rams' passing yardage actually outgained their rushing: 194 to 165, while the tough Ram line permitted the Mustangs only 55 yards on the ground.

Rams' Soccer Team Might Win 'Em. All

By the time this article is in print City College's 1970 Soccer season will have begun. Starting with September 19 against Pacific College at Fresno, the Rams will be kicking their way through league (Western JC Conference) and non-league opponents this season till Thursday, November 19 when they finish against Diablo Valley.

In discussing the Rams' chances for a championship this season soccer coach Roy Dederichsen contended that San Francisco and Skyline College have the best chances of unseating the defending champion, Canada College.

This Ram team, Dederichsen said, "probably could develop into the best team since 1968." However as of right now Dederichsen went on to say that the determination and the general attitude of the team to win has not been tested yet. He emphasized that dedication and hard work will reap the winds for the Rams.

The mainstay strength of this squad will be its depth, for out of a talented 24-man squad, twenty of the players are of equal caliber. The Rams will back seven veterans, a few of which are All-Conference Paul Sousa, Bill Arbic, and Chuck Zentgraf. Newcomers to the squad are All-City Bill Fielder (Balboa), Bill Berzin (George Washington), All-City Mauricio Aree (Samuel Gompers), Angelus Karras (Lincoln), All-City Ramy Castro (Balboa), and Frank Alcaraz (Balboa).

Two outstanding goal-keepers Ruddy Espinoza and Many Berrios will be returning after a brief absence.

If there is a weakness on this team it will be a lack of defensive players. This gap was brought about by the departure of All-American Jose Tovar. He will be sorely missed but the void is expected to be filled by the team's depth.

69's Pushovers Still Questionable

Just one year ago, the City College Rams were dealt their worst football campaign in decades. Their overall record for 1969 was 2 wins and 7 defeats, not since the 1930's have the Rams had such a dismal season. As one coach noted last year "This will never happen again."

That prophecy it seems just might come true this season, even though nothing concrete will emerge until the first game. According to head football coach "Dutch" Elston through a lot of possibilities and hard work a real fine football team may emerge.

Elston said of his team that with some come-through performances the team will be all right. A big factor behind the coach's statement that although the team is welcoming back a large number of starters from last year, many of these same veterans have been shifted to new positions. Now, not only the rookies will be tested but also the veterans.

On his personnel, Elston mentioned, some men that could really help take the Rams to a winning season. Elston singled out Mike Williams and Charlie Lewis as two real fine guards. He also gave special notice to some of his ends: Larry Haran, Frank Johnson, James Odom, and Robert Red a flanker and an All-Conference defensive back. Running backs Darrel Mitchell and Derrick Williams are both looking good, and Elston says of Williams that he "looks extremely good."

This season, the Rams will be going with four quarterbacks. One is second-year quarterback Rick Calgano converted to quarterback from halfback is second-year man Frank Oross, and newcomers Elvin Smith and Randy Karp fill out the list. All of them are throwing well and the starting job hasn't been sewed up by anyone yet.

The Rams held a controlled scrimmage on the 12th of September against San Francisco State's Frosh team. The score ended up as a 12-12 tie. The Rams scored their points on two runs, both runs were in excess of fifty yards apiece. The two touchdown carriers were Derrick Williams and Darrel Mitchell. The Rams were penalized nine times for 45 yards, all of the penalties were offsides.

City College of San Francisco
Published by the Journalism students
Volume 71 Number 2

the Guardsman

October 19, 1970

"There is a possibility of life on other planets . . . mainly Mars, Venus, and Jupiter. Slides offer evidence."
—Dr. S. I. Rasool

• Page 2

"Being on stage is where it's at for me, God, I can really get into it."
—Janis Joplin

• Page 3

"Give us four days and we can change something that has lasted for four years."
—Russ Miller

• Page 2

It's the Season for Speakers

Russ Miller Sounds Off

By Joe Konte

Russ Miller, Democrat nominee for the seat held by Congressman William S. Mailliard in the 6th district, spoke on a wide range of topics at the college lecture series October 6 at the Little Theatre.

Miller spoke confidently of the progress of his drive to unseat Mailliard, stating that he has more issues against the congressman and that he now has the numbers to defeat Mailliard. As an example of his increasing support, Miller cited the making up of a 5000 vote deficit in Marin County.

Miller, while addressing the audience, pleaded for their support:

"Advertising can't win it — people win it by dialing phones and ringing doorbells. — We need your support. Give us four days and we can change something that has lasted for four years."

He also suggested that it is better to help defeat the candidate you disagree with than complain about him when it's too late.

On the subject of foreign policy, Miller touched briefly on the topics of U.S. affairs in Southeast Asia and the Middle East.

Miller supported the withdrawal plans, but he made it clear that there should be "no hedging" in getting out of Indochina, and that we should get out as soon as we can.

"War is totally productive to social and world politics, but totally unproductive to young men that are dying and to the people of Vietnam," Miller said.

Regarding the Mideast quagmire, Miller is in favor of defending Israel.

"We had a part in setting up the country. We're in favor of democratic government by the people and we encourage that sort of thing," he said.

He further explained that he would be in favor of giving airplanes to Israel, although he would "stop at sending troops in." It was also Miller's observation that 80 per cent of European oil goes through Israel, and that losing Israel would cause Europe to "dry up."

Miller then set prey on the draft, saying that he'd vote against draft legislation.

"The draft encourages the government to go to war," he said, and added that the Pentagon "wouldn't be in others' business" if not for the draft.

On local issues, Miller attacked the plan for the Peripheral Canal noting that the San Francisco Bay should not be destroyed by concrete. As an example why the canal project should be abandoned, Miller cited a case in Marin County. Houses situated where the Tamalpais Creek meets the Corte Madera Creek are flooded when the rains come. The answer for the flooding crisis was the building of a U-shaped canal. Miller said this "Ruined beautiful country."

Miller mentioned welfare, attacking those who say that welfare is "screwing the public."

"It's not true," he said, "The problem is the dignity of the person unable to get a job — a productive job — that will help the person to preserve his family the way he wants to do it, not how we want him to do it."

Dr. Rasool Digs Venus

By Elizabeth Driscoll

Dr. S. Ichtiaque Rasool, senior research physicist of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Goddard Institute for space studies, spoke to students last week on the exploration of the solar system.

Dr. Rasool's lecture focused upon the possibility of life on other planets, mainly Mars, Venus, and Jupiter. He also showed slides taken by the Mariner space probes of Mars, slides on the formation of stars, and a slide of a height map of Mars.

"Mars is about a tenth of the mass of the Earth with much the same density, and its atmosphere is made up of carbon dioxide," Rasool said. "The Mariner space probes took pictures of Mars and showed that it looks much like its neighbor, the Moon."

The possibility of life on Mars can be seen through evidence of erosion on the planet.

"The rims of some craters on Mars show evidence of erosion, perhaps by oceans that existed in Mars early history," Rasool stated.

He then discussed the planet Venus.

"Venus is almost the same size as the Earth. Pictures taken of Venus and the Earth show that the two planets look much alike. Using radio waves bounced off Venus, we found that the temperature there is 1000 degrees Fahrenheit," Rasool said. "The atmosphere is very heavy and thick, and its atmosphere is pure carbon dioxide." The radio-wave technique was also used to determine Mars atmosphere, he said.

"Jupiter," said Rasool, "is ten times bigger and three times more massive than Earth. The giant red spot on Jupiter moves longitudinally, and sometimes does not rotate with the planet. There are some theories about the red spot, but we don't know exactly what it is."

Dr. Rasool then explained the possibility of life existing on Jupiter.

"We don't know if there is a surface on Jupiter. At the temperature of the plant, (225 degrees) you may not have a surface at all. The important thing is that the atmosphere contains the necessary gases for the formation of life. We think the atmosphere of Jupiter is methane-ammonia. If this is true of Jupiter, we may have the beginnings of life, and if we can determine that there are complex organic compounds on Jupiter, then we will have an idea of how life can originate."

Dr. Rasool received his Bachelor of Science degree in physics at the age of seventeen from the University of Lucknow, India and his Ph.D. in Atmospheric Physics at the age of twenty-three from the University of Paris, France.

He concluded his lecture with a question and answer session.

Take advantage of the many speakers who are available to students

Former Diplomat To Speak on Campus

Fulton Freeman, former United States Ambassador to Mexico and currently President of the Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies, will be the College Hour lecturer on Thursday, October 22, at 11 a.m. in the college theater.

Fulton Freeman

Freeman's topic will be "Labor Problems Along the Mexican-U.S. Frontier."

Freeman began his diplomatic career in Mexico at the age of 24 when he entered the U.S. Foreign Service as a vice-consul there.

While working for the United States as a language attache in Peiping, China, he was detained by the Japanese after Pearl Harbor. He returned to the United States in 1942 and went back to China in 1943.

He served in Latin America in 1958 as a senior foreign service inspector. In 1961, President Kennedy appointed him U.S. ambassador to Columbia. Three years later, President Johnson chose him to succeed Thomas C. Mann as ambassador to Mexico. He resigned from that job on January 15, 1969 and retired from the Foreign Service on January 31 after 30 years of service.

Freeman will hold a seminar-discussion session in the Gang Room of the Student Union building later in the day.

Lake Knows China Salih Probes Arabs

By Timothy Thompson

Joseph Lake, Intelligence Analyst for the U.S. State Department's Bureau of Intelligence, spoke to students last week on "Chinese Foreign Policy."

Lake discussed aspects of China's internal problems and its involvement in the world's power struggle. The most graphic was the fact that China's 800 million people are crowded into an area roughly the size of the U.S. In a country of 1200 people per square mile, the gross national product is $80 billion (U.S. - $860 billion) and the average income is $100 a year (U.S.- $4300).

Lake pointed out that in China, both history and tradition have been markedly different than in the West. The Chinese think and feel largely unlike Americans. They have traditionally been withdrawn and self-centered, said Lake, and even now expect the world to come to them for communication. Also, the Chinese tend to think of themselves as leaders of a world revolutionary spirit among the poorer nations.

China's foreign policy is enforced by the might of 250 million Army Infantrymen. But the Chinese have created problems for themselves through "policy ineptitude" such as the recently ended Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution." He said that the cultural revolution failed in its goal to purge the bureaucratic system of undesirable officials because now many of those expelled officials are returning to office. All the cultural revolution seems to have done is disrupt society.

"Today, China is reassessing its role in the world and seems to be striving for one of the top power positions," Lake said. "Goals have not changed, but tactics have. China seems to be considering the range of options in dealing with the United States."

Lake concluded his lecture by assuring the audience that no "long-range solutions for long-range problems" exist in Washington's portfolio on China. "Washington," he said, "has no definite answers."

During a question and answer session, it was asked when China would be admitted to the United Nations. "Last year, the margin of difference was only eight votes. This year, it will be even closer. U Thant has set the admission date only two years away."

Who will succeed Mao? "Lin Piao is a powerful man in the heirarchy, but it is impossible now to say who will take Mao's place."

What will be China's attitude toward the world? "Most likely," said Lake, "China in years to come will follow its history of semi-isolation and because of this will create continuing problems for itself and the world."

By Virginia Elliott

In semi-Fu Manchu mustache, green army jacket and saving hair, Comrade Salih of the Democratic Popular Front for the liberation of Palestine spoke last week to a group of City College students on campus. The Committee Against Racism, the Progressive Labor Party, and the Arab Student Club sponsored him.

Salih clarified the struggle between the establishment, government, and the Palestinian armed forces by giving a historical and social perspective to the much-garbled picture. He told of the growth of Zionism, the making of the state of Israel by Jews, colonial English and American capital and the growth of Palestinian Nationalism at war with Zionism and the royalist regime of Jordan's King Hussein.

The story on the surface is that the Jews made an exodus to Palestine and created Israel under the colonization of the English and French. This upset the Arabs who thought it was their land. Salih tied the first two facts together.

"Zionism is a Jewish nationalistic movement that grew and developed in Europe during the second half of the 19th century and reached maturity when capitalism reached its highest phase."

Further, he said the movement carried with it "all the fruits of science, technology and new methods of violence" and was thus able to "push slowly and progressively to colonize Palestine." His complaint was that "the coming of the Zionists and the taking over of Palestine was done in the shadow of the English colonial interests."

After the English left, he said, a more insidious and subtle form of colonization took hold over the Palestinians because "the social and political existence of the state depended on the colonial powers from which they got their freedom." Therefore, the Palestinians are still fighting colonialism against imperial and chauvinistic aggression represented by Hussein, the Zionists and American capital interests.

The main problem, Salih said, is that "the ruling class of the country exploits cheap labor and our human and natural resources, living out lives of wasteful consumption while the rest live in grinding poverty." This is "a good basis for revolution," he said.

Spreading his thin arms out in a gesture of largeness, he said that the conclusion to the fight must be the establishment of a socialistic, liberal government. The purpose of the Democratic Popular Front is "to build the proletarian party which is based on the poor workers and the peasants while struggling against the enemy." The fight will be aborted, he feels, without "the leadership of the proletariat and without establishing socialistic rule whereby the resources go back to the people themselves."

It is not their objective, he said, to make the Israelites leave, but to have a state where "numbers of Jews, Christians, and Moslems can live together with equal rights." The fight is not anti-semetic but anti-bourgeoisie.

"However," said Salih sardonically, "the Arab establishment government thinks the national salvation is a present which the Arabs will give the Palestinians." Salih forsees that the "poor will return to the poor and feudal lord to feudal lord."

After the talk, students avidly questioned Salih. Concerning airplane hijacking, he said it must be kept in mind that the acts were not done by all. The Democratic Popular Front publicly criticized the plane escapade because of the possible repercussions they may receive.

"However, it has shown that the Palestinians are not paper tigers — they have teeth and they bite back," Salih said. Furthermore, the Front wants to mobilize the Arabs by "more than the emotional euphoria over an act in which ten people were involved."

A pretty girl leaned intently into the conversation and said that Israel was a socialist country pioneered by the kibbutz makers. Not thrown from his steely grasp on the issues, Salih politely replied that "the proportionate production of the kibbutz is very minimal and cannot exist within the fundamental capitalism where the national income is produced by privately owned concerns." He heatedly referred to Israel's connections with American imperialism, stressing that Israel can hardly be allied socialistic when the working class there is not in power.

When asked what the American revolutionaries could do to aid the Palestinians, he mentioned that when President Nixon was considering sending troops into the area, the anti-war movement did not respond as they had to his Vietnam decisions, and that this is the sort of awareness needed — awareness that the Palestinian struggle is a war on imperialistic domination united with all wars against that system.

Salih was asked about what effect Nasser's death would have on the Arab world.

"Egypt will go more Egyptian," he said, explaining that Nasser had "followed the line of being the leader of the Arab nation," and without him Egypt would not be as pro-Arab but would give their own social concerns more attention.

Salih concluded by saying that the Arabs are not just trying to get some land for themselves, but they are striving to reorder the class structure and change the government so it can serve the people.

"I knew Janis Joplin" By Jim Toland

Janis Joplin, "The queen of Rock," was found dead in her Hollywood hotel room Sunday night, October 4th. An autopsy revealed that the twenty-seven year old rock and blues artist died of an overdose of heroin. There were fresh needle marks on her left arm.

I met Janis early in 1967, at a party on Cole Street in the Haight-Ashbury district. The "hippie movement" had just become popular, flower children were blossoming everywhere, and Janis Joplin, singing with Big Brother and the Holding Company, was a frequent attraction at the psychedelic-rock dances in the old Avalon Ballroom on Sutter Street.

The party was wild, by anyone's standards. I was sitting in the kitchen sipping a jug of burgundy wine, when someone lifted it out of my hands, leaving the last sip dripping down my shirt. The usually loud, perspiring, Janis Joplin was sedately chugging away at my gallon of wine.

"I'll show you how to handle one of these (referring to the bottle of wine) honey," she said, in her husky Texas accent as she laughed. She sat down and we talked.

Janis came from Port Arthur, Texas, where her father was an engineer. She loathed her home town because she felt that the people there didn't give her a chance. "Port Arthur isn't the place to try leading a free existence," she commented. Janis, although outwardly she didn't show it, had been hurt. "Rejection is hard to take, honey!"

Janis Joplin started her singing career in a beer joint outside of Austin. She went on to sing one night "gigs" in New York's swinging East Village and in San Francisco's Bohemian North Beach. "I sang in just about anyplace they'd have me." She did a lot of hitchhiking and soon wearied of scuffling for a living.

In 1965, Janis went home to Texas to attend school. She enrolled in Lamar State College of Technology with vague plans to enter the teaching profession. Her "straight ambitions" lasted about a year. When she got word that Big Brother and the Holding Company needed a female vocalist, she came to San Francisco and landed the job.

We spent a few hours together at the party and when we parted I wished her luck at the upcoming Monterey Pop Festival.

Monterey, 1967, was a memorable avent to all rock music enthusiasts. It was one of the most exciting happenings to ever come out of the "rock culture." Big Brother and the Holding Company and especially Janis Joplin, was the sensation of the whole show.

Janis appeared on stage and gave a tumultous rendition of the old blues classic, Ball and Chain. Her version of this song sold over a million copies when it was later recorded.

Janis Joplin was a star with a vibrant personality and big, mellow voice. She left Big Brother late in 1968 and formed her own back-up-band. She was on her own.

In the early fall of 1969, I was ordering a roast beef sandwich in a delicatessen on 22nd Street, when I heard that gruff Texas voice ask for "a pack of Marlboros." I turned around and after a few minutes of conversation Janis Joplin remembered me.

We continued the conversation in my apartment, a half block away. We sat at the red, white and blue kitchen table and I ate my sandwich while she drank the Old Crow which I kept on hand for special occasions. "I usually drink Southern Comfort," she said sarcastically as she laughed.

Janis was disturbed about some of the changes that had taken place in San Francisco. She missed some of the "old people" and "old places." The hideous death of the Haight-Ashbury district depressed her; the "good times" were gone. Janis wanted to move to Marin County (She finally moved to Sausalito). "It would be a change, man; I dig changes."

Jim Toland is a reporter in Journalism 21 class. He is pictured in the Guardsman office as he typed his exclusive interview with Janis Joplin.

Janis Joplin wasn't afraid of losing her voice, "it might outlive me." Like most artists she was never completely satisfied with all of her works. When I mentioned that her album, Cheap Thrills, was one of my favorites, she said it definitely wasn't one of hers.

"Being on stage is where it's at, for me, God, I can really get into it." She believed that man should love his fellow man and that love was the universal answer to all problems. "Love is really where it's at, man."

We finished the sandwich and the Old Crow and went to North Beach. When we walked into the Coffee Gallery on Grant Avenue, we were immediately surrounded by people. Everyone loved Janis and Janis loved all people; "People, just think about it; people are so far out!"

Even with all of these people surrounding her you could sense a certain loneliness about her. She seemed to be one of those people who could be lonely in Times Square on New Year's Eve.

We left the Coffee Gallery late that night and drove around the city for awhile in her psychedelic Porsche. When Janis left me at my apartment she said that she would drop by sometime. That was the last time I saw her.

Wednesday, October 7, 1970, her ashes were scattered off the coast of Marin County.

More on Specialists Lake and Salih

Continued from Page 2

Lake

solutions for long-range problems" exist in Washington's portfolio on China. "Washington," he said, "has no definite answers."

During a question and answer session, it was asked when China would be admitted to the United Nations. "Last year, the margin of difference was only eight votes. This year, it will be even closer. U Thant has set the admission date only two years away."

Who will succeed Mao? "Lin Piao is a powerful man in the heirarchy, but it is impossible now to say who will take Mao's place."

What will be China's attitude toward the world? "Most likely," said Lake, "China in years to come will follow its history of semi-isolation and because of this will create continuing problems for itself and the world."

Salih

the colonial powers from which they got their freedom." Therefore, the Palestinians are still fighting colonialism against imperial and chauvinistic aggression represented by Hussein, the Zionists and American capital interests.

The main problem, Salih said, is that "the ruling class of the country exploits cheap labor and our human and natural resources, living out lives of wasteful consumption while the rest live in grinding poverty." This is "a good basis for revolution," he said.

Spreading his thin arms out in a gesture of largeness, he said that the conclusion to the fight must be the establishment of a socialistic, liberal government. The purpose of the Democratic Popular Front is "to build the proletarian party which is based on the poor workers and the peasants while struggling against the enemy." The fight will be aborted, he feels, without "the leadership of the proletariat and without establishing socialistic rule whereby the resources go back to the people themselves."

It is not their objective, he said, to make the Israelites leave, but to have a state where "numbers of Jews, Christians, and Moslems can live together with equal rights." The fight is not anti-semetic but anti-bourgeoisie.

"However," said Salih sardonically, "the Arab establishment government thinks the national salvation is a present which the Arabs will give the Palestinians." Salih forsees that the "poor will return to the poor and feudal lord to feudal lord."

After the talk, students avidly questioned Salih. Concerning airplane hijacking, he said it must be kept in mind that the acts were not done by all. The Democratic Popular Front publicly criticized the plane escapade because of the possible repercussions they may receive.

"However, it has shown that the Palestinians are not paper tigers — they have teeth and they bite back," Salih said. Furthermore, the Front wants to mobilize the Arabs by "more than the emotional euphoria over an act in which ten people were involved."

A pretty girl leaned intently into the conversation and said that Israel was a socialist country pioneered by the kibbutz makers. Not thrown from his steely grasp on the issues, Salih politely replied that "the proportionate production of the kibbutz is very minimal and cannot exist within the fundamental capitalism where the national income is produced by privately owned concerns." He heatedly referred to Israel's connections with American imperialism, stressing that Israel can hardly be allied socialistic when the working class there is not in power.

When asked what the American revolutionaries could do to aid the Palestinians, he mentioned that when President Nixon was considering sending troops into the area, the anti-war movement did not respond as they had to his Vietnam decisions, and that this is the sort of awareness needed — awareness that the Palestinian struggle is a war on imperialistic domination united with all wars against that system.

Salih was asked about what effect Nasser's death would have on the Arab world.

"Egypt will go more Egyptian," he said, explaining that Nasser had "followed the line of being the leader of the Arab nation," and without him Egypt would not be as pro-Arab but would give their own social concerns more attention.

Salih concluded by saying that the Arabs are not just trying to get some land for themselves, but they are striving to reorder the class structure and change the government so it can serve the people.

the Guardsman

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
PAUL THIELE
SPORTS EDITOR
MIKE CHAN
ASSIGNMENTS
JOE KONTE
STAFF

John Cantu, Bill Collins, Steve Colter, Gary Delucchi, Catherine Dempsey, Martin Denmark, Mike Devine, Elizabeth Driscoll, Virginia Elliot, Shirley Feguring, Norma Fong, Bruno Forner, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Pauline Guillermo, Edward Hartzler, Mike Li, Ted Lyou, John MacDonald, Rick Marianetti, Dennis McGhee, Mike Millard, Marilyn Murphy, Matt Nelson, Ronald Patrick, Ralph Pope, Charles Frongos, Tim Thompson, James Tolland, Dorothy Shinder.

ADVISER
MRS. DORRY COPPOLETTA

Editors Note: Congressman William S. Mailliard incumbent from the 6th district, will speak in the College Theatre on Tuesday, October 27 from 11 a.m. to noon.

We regret that this issue of the GUARDSMAN was delayed due to a fire that broke out in the computer type composer in the print shop.

Contrary to rumor, it wasn't the "hot" copy or censorship - just a temperamental computer on strike!

Philippine Studies Needs Teachers

Philippine Studies at City College started this year with the support of the students, teachers and community.

The person who is the most responsible for this program is Ruben Estandian, Student Chairman, who introduced various persons and presented the Philippine Ethnic Studies proposals to City College. Jose Bonpua Jr., a teacher at Serra High School, read part of the report, and Mr. Esclamado, editor and publisher of the "Philippine News," complimented students at City College for their efforts in introducing something new to the campus.

"The school," stated Ruben Estandian, "is fortunate to get teachers for this new program, but there are only three Filipino teachers and there is a need for more. The classes are also too close together in the afternoon, and are hard to get when you have to take a required course which conflicts with a Philippine course. There were fourteen courses in Philippine Studies that the students wanted, but only six were accepted."

The courses are as follows: Anthropology 14, 15. Cultural Anthropology of the Philippines; History 36, History of Southeast Asia; History 37, History of the Philippines; Political Science 47, Politics and Governments of Southeast Asia; Philipino 1, Elementary Philipino; and also Philipino 10A-10B-10C.

Dean Jack Aldridge said that the Philippine courses are gaining much popularity among students enrolling here, and added that all these courses are suitable for the University of California and California state colleges.

No equipment costs for Philippine Studies during 1970-71 are expected, however, some provision should be made for instructional supplies. The sum of $300 would appear to be adequate and would be expended primarily for Philipino Language tapes to be used in the language laboratory.

Tutorial Center Moves Upstairs

The City College Tutorial Program has begun a fourth semester in a new campus location. Transferring from room S-142 to S-347, the Program and its tutor-participants will help students who request assistance in learning to grasp the basics of introductory and elementary courses.

EXPANDED PROGRAM

Founded in the Spring of 1969, the program has expanded and now has a larger facility which will attempt to meet the increasing demands for tutorial aid.

"The center puts great emphasis on trying to reach students who are prospective drop-outs," said Dr. Lance Rogers, director of the center.

"And," added Dr. Rogers, "introductory and elementary courses are concentrated upon because students often become discouraged with a beginning subject and are reluctant to go on."

The tutors involved in the program are generally dedicated and enthusiastic about their work and are recruited in three different ways. That is, the student may volunteer, he may take a course in student leadership (Community Service 45 deals directly with the Tutorial Center Program), or he may apply for a salaried position as a lab-assistant.

STUDENTS GET TOGETHER

"The Tutorial Program," said Dr. Rogers, "gives students the chance to work together and to take advantage of the academic facilities available to them on campus." Many tutors are able to help the newer students become familiarized with the City College campus. Often, both tutor and tutee will take advantage of the College Center of Independent Learning, (COIL), located in C-305, where a wide range of study aids may be used, free of charge.

The Tutorial Center is ready to lend its services to any City College student, without cost. All one need do to take advantage of the program is to go to S-347 between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Questions, comments and suggestions will gladly be solicited.

Sisters Mobilize To Explore Alternative Roles

Sisters are uniting at City College to bring women out of the white tornado and up from the sinks. Need of a movement on this campus was evident from the problems unearthed at the first meeting of Women's Liberation.

Women's Liberation is a movement of women who recognize the limitations of the roles assigned to them by society and are seeking alternatives to them.

Those who think that these roles are flattering and harmless might consider the financial, emotional and physical storms braved by the women who spoke out at the first meeting.

One City College woman who worked as a welder was unable to get work in her field at all and was told that work was too hard for her so she turned to "feminine" jobs she found boring and was unskilled to do.

These examples would remain as a few bad brushes with the work world if it weren't that work has become as crucial to women as to men.

"We are not just asking for pin money," said W. L. member Pat Condry. "One out of four black women support their family, as do one out of eight white women."

The women spoke of that long-nurtured institution, the male ogler. They pointed out that men are not content to stand on the corner watching girls go by, but insult and threaten them. These insults might not be so bad, but the brutality and rape that often follow are.

The incident of a coed being raped in the Sunset several weeks ago might have been avoided had the girl known how to defend herself against the man who shoved her into the van. Three women from the movement feel that there is an urgent need on this campus for karate to be taught as part of the P.E. program — more of a need than the social game of tennis. Pat Condry (Anthro. major), Lyn Kentosh (premed) and Susan Tebay are some of the women trying to pull together the threads of women's despair and make a mobile force of the fabric. They explored the whys of rape. Isn't this an acting-out of the attitudes that society latently holds? Women as animals — sex objects, inferiors? Rape and jeering, they feel can no longer be tolerated as a natural society amenity.

An effective, and not a token child care center is being sought by the women who think that it should be predicated on the belief that women need as much leisure, concentration and education as men to fulfill themselves materially and psychologically. Some women had to bring screaming and unhappy children to their classes or to registration. They must live in a larger place to accommodate the child, pay more rent, as well as pay up to a hundred dollars a month in child care. These mothers are intense on the child care question. Even with an eight-hour a day center, a mother would still have little free time to study or be alone. Her work world, the noise and demand it entails would not end at five or six as a man's does.

Women's Lib wants to see more literature in the campus bookstore that appeals to socially aware women. Millett's "Politics of Sex" and Celestine Ware's "Woman Power" are two startling and relevant books that women want included among the playboys. W. L. needs space to meet on campus and preferably an office out of which to circulate literature. They have an eye on the job-training programs with regard to what happens to women in them and what problems exist. They want women speakers for the lecture series who can talk on something other than "comparative detergentry."

The first two meetings of W.L. have had a small attendance. These women are "the building blocks," Pat Condry said, but the task at hand is to recruit many more. Pat made it clear that there are no "super-chiefs" in the group — women have too long undermined each other with competition on a sexual basis and must avoid competing now on an intellectual prestige basis.

Women are meeting in small groups in the evening to talk as sisters and friends about the social boat they are all afloat in. A woman's studies course is in the works for the Experimental College. Women's wind-up history films and newsletters from the Women's Office are possibilities for on-campus innovations. The major philosophy of W.L. is freedom from crushing, archaic and inhumane social roles for both men and women — and a use of the woman-power available. The women, however, do not desire to ape male mannerisms or the masculine stereotype — they want to avoid stereotypes altogether. They are not ashamed of their commited and energy-propelled emotions, but desire to lift the ridicule and distortion placed on these emotions.

The narrow notion that W.L. is heartless to children, mannish and neurotic is being exploded by the movement at CCSF. A mother in the group said that her rapport with her children has improved since she has been able to do something about the sources of her frustrations, and foresees a day in which the individual dreams of all women — housewives, mothers, the poor — will be given free rein and value.

Child Care Center Coming to Campus

City College's child care program will be operating on a pilot basis by mid-November or early December at the Ingleside Presbyterian Church on Ocean and Granada Avenues. The program will accommodate 50 children by next semester.

A double shift is planned with an eye to serving as many children as possible. Don Peterson, faculty adviser to the Experimental College, said there will be some exceptions to the double shift (morning or afternoon hours). A mother who must attend all day may be able to help out at the church on their free time. The main idea is to work with the administration to allow mothers to pre-register for all morning or all afternoon classes.

The shortcomings of the program at this point, such as short hours, no meals, and limited space, lie not with the faculty, staff, and students who have volunteered their services — rather with the funding priorities of the community, the state school system, and the general attitude of society that mothers are not a good risk in education.

Funding from grants, public foundations, and HEW are being sought. However, various foundations already support centers throughout the city, and these centers in turn serve a limited number of mothers and take as long as a year on the waiting lists to get into.

"Ostensibly there will be no fees," said Mr. Peterson, "but that will depend on funds, the mothers' income and other factors."

In the beginning, student mothers will be the first considered, and there is a "student emphasis" on the program, Mr. Peterson stressed. Some members of Women's Lib feel that staff members should have the same right to the facilities at the outset as students. However, staff members probably have less financial need than the student mother in most cases, and all cannot be served at once.

Peterson said future plans are to get an HEW curriculum at the school where students going into childcare fields could do their field work at the center. Three members of the work-study program will be directing the center on a volunteer basis, and qualified women such as Mr. Peterson's psychologist wife have offered to help out.

Those interested in more information may contact Pat Horan, Mr. Dunlap or Mr. Peterson at B-5, Experimental College.

Happenings

Evening division students of Art History 1-C are producing a "Renaissance Fair" during class time from October 19 to November 2.

Guests are welcome to attend and view the CCSF Renaissance players in a condensed performance of Machiavelli's play, "The Mandrake." The play will be produced with background period music provided by Carol Heald.

There will be demonstration in tapestry making by Berti Brown; costumes of the period by Ingrid Conroy, and fresco painting by Caroline Swensen. Refreshments will be provided by Chris Roberts. The "Renaissance Fair" is sponsored by Arthur Irwin, art instructor.

• • •

City College Music department will be presenting a series of student recitals called "Second Tuesday" on the second Tuesday of each month in Arts building choral room 133 at 12 noon to 1:00 p.m.

Featured on each program will be solos and duets by piano ensemble and repertoire classes.

The dates are November 10, December 8 and January 12. Two concerts were held in October.

• • •

The City College branch of the Sierra Club is active again this semester. Some of the goals that the club hopes to achieve this semester are:

— To explore, enjoy, and preserve the Sierra Nevada and other scenic resources of the world, its forests, waters, wildlife and wilderness.

— To educate the people with regard to the national and state forests, parks, monuments, and other natural resources of special scenic beauty.

— To enlist public interest and cooperation in protecting them.

— To promote understanding and awareness of the impact of modern society on man and his environment.

— To stimulate the consideration of quality urban living.

— To encourage participation by students in citizen action for the creation, preservation, protection, and restoration of aesthetically valuable environments, and — To promote Sierra Club and Bay Chapter activities and policies.

The sierra Club of City College meets every other Thursday at 11 a.m. in room S-335. The next meeting is on October 22.

William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar will be presented by San Francisco City College Drama Department Wednesday, October 28 through Saturday, October 31, at 8 p.m. in the City College Theater, on Phelan at Judson Avenues. General admission is $1.00; Students 50 cents. There is no charge for San Francisco City College Students.

James Haran, director of the play, believes that Julius Caesar illustrates why Shakespeare is considered one of the finest playwrights of all time. His dramatization of the history of Rome 2000 years ago, is modern showing how violence begets violence, and mob rule accomplishes nothing but anarchy.

Jim Orin, supervising stage production, feels that the simplistic stage setting enhances the timeless theme of the play. The set was designed by Denis Hudson.

There will be additional performances on November 10th and 13th, 8 p.m. at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, located on 19th Avenue at Sloat.

• • •

Fall 1970 marks the second year of the Arab Student Club at City College. Their first meeting this semester was held on September 29, 1970.

One of their objectives for this semester is having members of the club speak in political science classes to inform students more about the Middle East crisis. They would also like to see an Arab studies curriculum at City College.

Officers for this semester are Zuheir Erakai, president; Hani Kasses, vice president; and Afaf Kailel, treasurer.

• • •

"Windows of the Soul" will be shown at room VA-115 on Thursday, October 22 at 11 a.m.

The film tells how man's five senses (sight, hearing, touch, taste, and smell) are not really reliable. It also tells how man's brains interpret sensory information from these sense organs incorrectly.

Science and non-science majors will be highly interested in this discussion of man's relationship to his environment through his 5 senses. Find out what "silent" sound is and how man's brains "see".

The film has been shown at several World's Fairs. Admission is free, and it is sponsored by Chi Alpha — Campus For Christ.

AS Council Quizzes Criminology Chief

By Bruno Forner

The Student Council meeting of October 12 set a record of some sort for votes. By the time the meeting was over, three decisions were unanimous and one was a near miss.

The first vote came on the issue of sending a recommendation to the Academic Senate of placing students on the Hiring Committee for counselors.

The second unanimity occurred on a motion to waive the minimum membership regulation for the newly formed Math Club. The club has only ten members, five short of the minimum fifteen. A representative of the club said that they'd like to have it waived so that the club could get started in its organization. The only request from the council was to have a constitution drawn up.

The third unanimous vote came on a motion by Martin Poon to have the Student Review Board investigate the case of History instructor Quinn Martin. It was also added into the motion to invite Dean of Students Ralph Hillsman to a questioning period on the case.

John Goebel then moved to have Student Council endorse the October 31 moratorium. That was a near miss — 12-1-2.

The last action was a motion by Martin Poon to sing Happy Birthday to Dean Samuels.

The meeting of Wednesday, October 14 was a questioning period with Mr. Lawrence Lawson, the chairman of the Criminology Department.

Lawson was asked why fines were raised from two dollars to ten. He replied that it was to keep students from parking in the faculty parking area.

The next round of questions was about Campus Police. Lawson said that out of 200 criminology majors, forty were police. Each one contributed five hours to the campus force, sometimes even more. Lawson said that, comparatively speaking, CCSF Campus Police was understaffed. The purpose of the campus police was to keep San Francisco police off the CCSF campus. Lawson said that their authority to arrest people comes under citizen's arrest, although each one is sworn in as a special police by the City. The only prerequisite is that the candidate take Criminology 52.

"We're asking an eighteen or nineteen year-old person to perform the same job as a twenty-five year-old is doing," Lawson stated.

Dean Samuels brought up the topic of the bike rack by saying he received a note saying: 'The Robbers Have Begun.' He said that recently, two kids were caught breaking chains on the rack. They were both high school kids.

John Goebel asked why they (the campus police) were given nightsticks. Lawson said that they were a psychological device.

The Montemayor-Rich case was then discussed in a stock market session (bull it and bear it). After a few minutes of this, Samuels noted that it was the only case of harassment yet reported.

After Lawson, left, the problem of card-playing in Statler Wing was brought up by a member of the audience. He proposed either having specific times for card-playing in Statler Wing or enforcing a "No-gambling" type of regulation there and using the lower level of the Student Union Building for a casino. The Council decided to table the discussion on the matter until next Monday. That vote, in the spirit of the previous Monday, was unanimous.

Hans Morgenthau, Foreign Policy Expert, to Speak

Hans J. Morgenthau will give a special lecture at 3 p.m. Thursday, October 22 in E-101.

When Morgenthau spoke in Bombay last year, professors and students came from long distances upon hearing that he would appear. He attracted a crowd of 3000 people into an autitorium with a capacity of about 1500.

Morgenthau's lecture will deal with American foreign and military policy.

Dr. Morgenthau is a Distinguished Service Professor of Political Science and Modern History, University of Chicago, and Leonard Davis Distinguished Professor of Political Science, City University of New York.

Morgenthau has also taught at many other universities, among them are Harvard, University of California at Berkeley, Yale, and Columbia.

Since 1950 he has served as director of the Center for Study of American Foreign and Military Policy at the guniversity of Chicago. He is consultan to the Department of State; and was, in 1966, senior research fellow with the Council on Foreign Relations.

Morgenthau is also the author of many books on international relations; his most recent works are, Politics in the Twentieth Century (3 vols., 1962); A New Foreign Policy for the United States (1969); and Truth and Power, to be published in 1970.

"Being an art major with virtually no art classes in my schedule, this strip has become my most important class. I hope to improve it through the semester with experience and the benefit of cartooning classes at another college I attend."

Dennis McGhee

Gourmet Chef Acherman is a perfectionist

Today's Cooks Are Tomorrow's Gourmets

Students in the Hotel-Restaurant Program at City College are motivated. Why shouldn't they be? They know that graduates are likely to end up with an interesting job.

Graduates are now employed as chefs on sleek ocean-going luxury ships; manager of a far east Hilton Hotel; manager of a ski resort; head of food purchasing of a luxury hotel chain; and President of Sambo's Pancake House chain.

While the students are learning they are also dreaming of the job that waits for them and the interesting career with unlimited possibilities.

What's it like during the training period? Students admit that they often feel "all thumbs" with so many things to remember that they often think they'll never make it through the two-year course.

What's the worse thing that ever happened to a student? Dropping a whole tray of filled water glasses in the faculty dining room. What a noise!

Larry Wong, head of the H&R program is a success story. He was graduated from the program in 1936. He speaks of the opportunities for students of all ethnic and racial backgrounds. "Currently we have 15 Black students; 28 Orientals, 2 American Indians, 13 other non-White, 17 Chicanos; and 160 White students enrolled in the program."

Students agree they have a first rate faculty in the H&R program since it includes chefs who total about 300 years of experience. These super chefs bring an international flair to their teaching. They have a diversified background of Italian, Swiss, Norwegian, French and German culinary know-how.

The Hotel and Restaurant Program is designed so that students may satisfy the requirements for graduation from the College and receive the degree of Associate in Arts.

Students may specialize in either hotel and restaurant operation or food preparation. Work experience is an important element of the training period.

Advisory committees represent hotel and restaurant employees and labor unions. These groups help to place graduates and also provide work-experience employment for students.

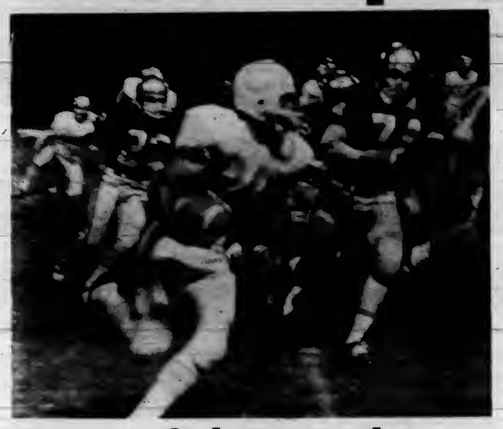
The student who serves behind the counter at the cafeteria may be the future gourmet chef of San Francisco's finest hotel!

Mouth-watering cakes must look as appealing as they taste

Chef Frank Bratt shows how to make gourmet salads

David Borelli checks meal planning with students.

How much does the meat weigh before cooking?



The customer is always right so the hamburgers better be hot and tasty

the Guardsman

SPORTS

Rams Split With Foes

Again, there are two stories to be told about the Ram gridders. The first occurred on Saturday, October 3 when the fourth-ranked Chabot Gladiators broke the Ram winning streak at two by putting down the rasm 48-23. The better of the two stories happened just last Friday when the Merritt Thunderbrids felt the wrath of the Rams, for the Rams routed Merritt 55-14 at City College Stadium.

Well first things first, there were really two games played against the Rams at Chabot that Saturday night. In the first one the Gladiators ran over the Rams 34-9. In the second half or second game the Rams played head to head with the Gladiators and came off with a 14-14 tie.

However you can't divide the facts that in four quarters Chabot ran up 48 points while giving up only 23, yet the game's overall statistics are very nearly similar, offensively. The Rams struck up 16 first downs to Chabot's 17 first downs. Chabot threw for only 38 yards while the Rams compiled 154 yards in the air. On the ground Chabot thrashed the Rams for 292 yards while only permitting the Rams 198 rushing yards.

The Rams lagged behind Chabot in total offense by a mere 64 yards, but the scoreboard gave the Gladiators a 25 point margin of victory.

CHABOT WINS

The key to Chabot's victory was not just their speed and quickness, but their playbook. Performing with excellent execution, the Gladiators ran off a multitude of double and triple reverse plays.

Chabot quarterback Bill August expertly drove his team to paydirt 6 times. On a triple reverse August scored standing up on a nine yard run. He scored two touchdowns on rollout passes, and the four other scores were racked up by his backfield.

Highlighting the Ram effort were Rams Frank Oross, Robert Red, and Elvin Smith. Ram flanker-halfback Robert Red sparked the kickoff return department with his 33, 35, and 37 yard returns. Quarterback Frank Oross ran a shifty weaving run of 39 yards that set up the Rams for their first touchdown. Flanker Elvin Smith caught 4 passes for 78 yards.

The victory over Merritt was in large part due to the interceptions of Merritt passes, and a Merritt punter called Watson. Mr. Watson made his debut before Ram fans on a fourth and 24 punting situation. Back to punt Watson kicks and the punt is blocked by linebacker Al Levi, and the tumbling ball is taken by defensive end Andy Johnson who scores on a 55 yard jaunt with just 2:34 gone in the first quarter.

The next Ram score was again set up by Mr. Watson, when he fumbled a bad snap from center on fourth down. Bouncing away from Watson's hands the ball was finally recovered by Ram tackle Henry Ward on Merritt's 9 yard line.

Just four plays later, halfback Derrick Williams went off tackle for the score from the one, just four seconds into the second quarter.

Fourteen points behind, the Thunderbirds again had the ball but were stymied by a quick passs rush from the Ram front liners. In a fourth and 23 bind, Watson as again called in to punt, and this time he did get his kick off, but the ball bounced off the helmet of his own blocker, situated a few yards in front of him. In the confusion a multitude of Rams jumped onto the ball on the Merritt three. Two plays later halfback Darrel Mitchell drove in from the one with 11:52 still left in the second quarter. The point after was no good and the score was Rams 20, Merritt zero.

MERRITT MOVES

Merritt quarterback Jim Fross finally started to move his team but a penalty threw them back 15 yards to their own 22. Two plays later on second and eighteen, Fross was intercepted by cornerback Robert Red who on a slightering run returned the ball 32 yards, and was finally pulled down on the Merritt six. Quarterback Frank Oross scored on a keeper on fourth down. The PAT missed and with 8:04 still left in the half the Rams led 26-0.

Merritt still couldn't get anything going and did punt successfully this time. On the first down Oross went back to pass, and was almost buried by a thunderous pass rush. Oross heaved a pass toward the left side line to running back Floyd Coleman who sped 63 yards behind some excellent downfield blocking before being knocked down.

Operating from the Merritt one, Oross went over to run the tally up to 33-0 Rams. The clock read 6:35 to go in the first half.

However Merritt now seemed to come alive as they drove behind the arm of Bob Romano, as he moved the Thunderbirds 81 yards for the score. Their big play was a defensive pass interference call that took the Rams for 29 yards, and gave Merritt the ball on the Ram one. On the next play halfback Mack Douglas scored Merritt's first points with 1:10 left. The score read 33-6 when Merritt's two point conversion failed.

RAMS DOMINATE

Starting off the second half with the ball, Merritt on their first series threw an interception to lineman Pat Grihesey who returned it 24 yards for a touchdown. The extra point was good and the score was 40-6, less than two minutes into the second half.

The game from that point soon settled down, and the Merritt offense now began to consistently move. On every turn though they were thwarted by the tough Ram defense. However Merritt finally did get back onto the scoreboard when they caught Floyd Coleman in the Ram end zone for a safety. A few series later Romano culminated a 51-yard drive with a draw to Douglass for the second Merritt touchdown. With 12:20 left the score was 40-14.

The Ram offense now began to reassert themselves as they marched 52 yards in 8 straight running plays for the score. Coleman went 6 yards for the score with 8:11 left in the game.

However one more touchdown remained for the Rams to score, and on a sweep with just 6 seconds left Cordell Hawkins scored from the six. With a successful two point conversion the final score read 55-14.

Powerful Canada Undefeated Booters

The City College Ram soccer team has certainly been playing on the right track lately. In fact, the Rams are undefeated in both their league and non-league games.

The Ram booters demolished San Francisco State's team 8-2, blasted the College of Pacific of Fresno 8-0, creamed league playmate College of Marin 6-0, and spotted lowly West Valley JC 2-0.

Now here is the kicker, the Western JC league champion Canada met and played the Rams last Tuesday the sixth. And wouldn't you know it, the game went down on the record books as a square off.

Canada took first blood in the second quarter when they shot in what proved to be their only goal of the game.

The game then settled down into a nip and tuck defensive battle between these two soccer giants. Finally, the Rams cracked the Canada shield with a goal by Frank Alcaraz which threw the game into a tie that lasted till the final gun.

The mainstays behind an otherwise overpowering offense and adequate defense are Al Qunico, Ed Huebert, Bill Fielder, and Frank Alcaraz.

49ers Get Last Laugh on Rash LA Sportswriters

By Mike Chan

One week ago, two Los Angeles sportswriters tauled with degrading remarks the moral fiber of the Bay Area's professional and college football teams. In short, these writers had the audacity to call them "losers."

True, these writers admitted that the personnel of these teams were of an above average or higher quality, but they stressed somehwat extremely that their mental outlook needed a butcher knife wielding plastic surgeon. A few of their suggested victims were, in the order of the degree of scorn given, the City's own 49er's, our brethren across the Bay the Oakland Raiders, Purdue's victim the Stanford Indians, and the topsy turvy California Bears.

However, the Los Angelenos though knocking all of the Bay Area's teams concentrated their below the belt blows on San Francisco's own 49er's. Primarily, because the 49er's were scheduled to meet their godlike Rams.

To these writers, the Rams' Fearsome Foursome were going to tear, rip, and rout 49er quarterback John Brodie, whom these writers dubiously nicknamed "Mr. Loser." In fact they and probably many of their readers ate up those quotes by former 49er cornerback Kermit Alexander who reportedly said that with the Rams he knows that somehow no matter what occurs, the Rams will win. He also slighted the 49ers by saying that when they played, they played not to win but to just keep up with their opponents.

Well, the times are changing and the Rams know it, for those same 49ers humiliated those godlike Rams. It wasn't Brodie who was ripped at like those soothsaying writers had envisioned, and it wasn't Gabriel either, it was that whole Ram team.

City College of San Francisco

Volume 71 Number 3

Published by the Journalism students

the Guardsman

October 29

SF Anti-War March Saturday

Chairwoman of the City College Student Mobilization Committee, Sally Moore
Photo by Gary Delucchi

'Bring Troops Home'-- 'Yes on J' Stressed

By Virginia Elliott

A gathering of the Bay Area's anti-war tribes is planned for Saturday, October 31, beginning at 11 a.m. at 18th Street and Dolores.

From that point, a march through downtown to civic center will take place leading to a rally featuring guest speakers and entertainers who have not yet been announced.

"Bring all the troops home now" and "Yes on Proposition J" are the banner cries.

Sally Moore, spokeswoman for the campus Student Mobilization Committee (SMC) said that President Nixon's statement that he will be recalling troops is just "old wine in a new bottle" and doesn't change the basic principle of the demonstration. Nixon, SMC feels, is going to get G.I's home for Christmas time, but nothing more substantial.

Sally pointed out that the movement has gone through "the system's legal red tape" and has obtained a permit to assemble and to use certain streets in the city. The mood of the rally and march is strictly one of peace.

Hopefully, the under eighteen who have felt apathetic without the vote, took advantage of the Campus referendum on Oct. 26 and 27 asking for an end to the war and the vote for "minors." The importance of this vote, said Sally, is that "We believe we are an important segment of this community and San Francisco should know how we feel."

Everyone is invited to join the ranks of peace on the 31st and to join SMC which is for the self-determination of the Vietnams, Black liberation, Chicano Liberation, and the worker.

SMC meets each Thursday at 11 a.m. in the Arts Building, 315. Literature and conversation can be found at their table by the flagpole.

Screw Worm Brings U.S.-Mexico Together

By Joe Konte

The United States and Mexico had only solved the problem of the "screw worm," but according to Fulton Freeman, the project was another example of the increasing good will between the United States and Mexico.

Freeman, former U.S. ambassador to Mexico, lectured on how the neighboring countries have worked together in his October 22 appearance at the Little Theater.

The worm, similar to the house fly, had infested cattle in Mexico and Texas. As a result, many of the livestock had to be destroyed. For example, in Texas, $90 million worth of cattle were lost because of the infectious worm. Scientists from both countries assembled and finally devised a solution to the problem. The result was the major elimination of the screw worm disease.

Another example Freeman listed as good relations between the U.S. and Mexico was in a dispute over the Rio Grande river, which borders the countries.

The Rio Grande, which Freeman described as the "capricious river," had caused great destruction and waste over the years. In 1861, periodic flooding of the river resulted in it being pushed into Mexico, thereby leaving Mexican territory on the U.S. side of the river. For the next 100 years, the countries argued about this boundary.

"I cannot be proud of our relations with Mexico at that time," said Freeman.

During the course of the discussions over land, American opportunists had seized the chance to construct schools, homes, and factories on the controversial land. But in 1962, the appearance of President Kennedy brought added light to the problem, and Freeman observed that the U.S. had finally decided to take it seriously.

The meetings between Kennedy and Mexico's President resulted in the U.S. giving back the property to Mexico. However, the U.S. first had to purchase the land where construction had taken place at a cost of $37 million. The river was moved back and lined with concrete. This land was only a "barren piece of property, but it was a symbol to the Mexicans."

The great part of the move, according to Mexico, was that the most powerful country in the world would return the land. "This," Freeman said, "had greater impact on Mexico than anything we could have done."

Freeman also mentioned the Walden-Mohawk affair, which involved land at the base of the plateau. Water could not pass through, which forced the farmers to leave the area. The U.S. Department of the Interior drilled a series of 100 wells to drench up the liquid from the bottom of the wells. The water was then passed back into the Colorado River at the same place where the Mexicans got their water.

"The result was predictable," Freeman stated. The water being sent to Mexico was poisonous, and it eventually entered into the cotton crops of nearly 120,000 people.

Finally, the situation was amended by letting the water flow through into the Gulf of Mexico. It was again the work of both countries that solved the problem, and Freeman remarked that these examples of the Rio Grande and the poisonous water accomplished miracles with Mexico.

AS Council Freezes Sports Teams' Funds

By Bruno Forner

In two separate and unprecedented moves, Student Council froze the budgets for football, cross country, and soccer teams.

On Monday, October 19, it was noted by AS Vice-President Mike Devine that several organizations had yet to turn in their budgets for Fall 1970. Among these were football, cross-country and soccer. A motion was made to freeze the budgets for all three sports. It passed by a tally of 12-1-0.

Ambassador Fulton Freeman

The subject of card-playing was brought up with much debate ensuing. Since the lounge in the Student Union Building was to be opened the next day, it was suggested that card playing be permitted there. Pat Horan made a motion to abolish gambling in Statler Wing, returning it to use as a snack bar, and using the student union lounge for a "casino." The motion passed, 11-1-1. Judy Kay said that the council will determine in the future the penalty for those who play cards in Statler Wing.

Judy Kay then noted that the case of history instructor Quinn Wilson who substituted for Henry Ingham when he was on sick leave, has been solved. Wilson will be retained as a full-time instructor, when Henry Ingham returns.

Tom Cleaver said that bungalow 7, currently used as an Art Center, was vandalized as early as September 28. AS Director Art Samuels mentioned that the vandalism ceased after a group of high school students were caught pilfering from the bike rack.

Cleaver then motioned that Student Council donate $100 to the Kent State Student Defense Fund and organize a table at the flagpole to solicit further funds from concerned students.

On October 21, they passed the motion by a 9-3-2 vote.

Freeman also pointed to the scientific cooperation existing between the countries, in the fields of weather observation, water plans, tracking stations of U.S. space flights, and in areas of agriculture.

In a brief question-answer period following the lecture, Freeman warned of the dangers of being caught in Mexico with drugs, noting that 170 Americans are in jail in Mexico now, many of whom are still awaiting trial.

Editorial:

Free Critic Article Needs Clarification

We were genuinely grieved to see Tom Cleaver's derogatory article in the October issue of "The Free Critic." We noticed that many of the demagogic and emotional charges made in the article were strictly false.

Cleaver supposedly learned last semester, after writing an erroneous article dealing with KCSF-KALW radio, that reporters do not accept the information from only one source. In this case, the source was Jim Browning, a frustrated journalist who just had to be editor this semester and would not function cooperatively as an assignments editor.

The real "Guardsman" staff was never asked for information by a "Free Critic" reporter.

We are sorry that Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta (not Coppolina), our adviser, was brought into the issue, but we realize that she is the target of Browning's aggression. Had it not been for her suggestions based upon years of experience, the Guardsman would have featured:

- A faded picture of a San Quentin jail cell which was clipped out of the "Chronicle." This technique not only yields a visually repulsive picture, but it is unlawful without permission.
- Several long, pointless editorials and a book review which has traditionally reviewed the reporter's outlook, not necessarily the author's.
- A story on an Arab speaker. Last semester, Jim Browning wrote a story on a speech by Flirahim Tauiasha, an Arab speaker who appeared on the campus.

On the week that the story appeared, math instructor Tom Walsh, a friend of Tauiasha's, told us that the speaker said he was badly misquoted and the facts were incorrect. Tauiasha told Walsh that he had offered the reporter his notes after the speech, but was refused by the reporter who answered, "I take my own notes."

The staff asserts that Mrs. Coppoletta is not censoring the paper. She is offering advice about editorial and typographical techniques.

Last semester, Tom Cleaver condemned Marc Kovacs after he physically attacked adviser Mary Blair. He said that he would never associate with him, and often expressed his violent intentions towards Kovacs. Now Cleaver seems to want him back in the class and on the staff. We cannot imagine why.

Cleaver has been asked several times this semester to submit articles to the "Guardsman." At no time did he contribute.

Finally, we feel that Cleaver could have written a biting criticism of our newspaper if he had adhered to the truth and other standards of journalism. He made some valid observations. However, the abundance of misinformation makes the criticism invalid and the article in "The Free Critic" a wasted effort.

—Paul Thiele

Turn On The Lights

It may be mere coincidence that the October 31 anti-war rally is on the same day as Halloween.

Those young people who participated in either of the festivities some may call unrelated should take another look.

As the anxiously awaiting children count the days and hours for their magical jaunt through the neighborhood, others who were addressed as "child" only a few years ago prepare in anticipation of their big day:

On the morn of the march, the young will leave their homes, toting their bag of tricks in the form of placards, banners, and buttons. All will be clad in his own costume of intentions and purposes for taking his place among the multitudes of the moratorium.

It is our hope that none will don a mask to cover up his real thoughts. The day is not for the follicle phonies who are not only to do their tricks, but for those sincere consciences who search for the prime treat of ending the killing and conquests in a foreign field.

But even such well-intentioned assemblies by the young who parade through the streets can be destroyed by a few pranksters, just as the children's romp for treats can be ruined by the insane actions of a few who throw eggs and disturb innocent people. We caution these fools to stay home for the benefit of those who have a purpose.

When these meritorious marchers ring the doorbells of that vast white house on 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, let us plead that the head of the household welcomes them in with true concern. As they open up their bags of zeal and expression, we hope the master can fill them with relevent thought and understanding.

And of course there are those who simply become disturbed at the sight of the young running through the streets. They turn off the lights in their shallow minds, and refuse to answer the knock on the door of human compassion.

The group may have to dodge the hatchet of the number two man in Washington and other promiscuous protractors of provocation, but if their real purpose is remembered, they cannot be faulted.

Their Halloween will be one of joy if the steps of peace can be climbed, and maybe that means it really is no coincidence after all.

—Joe Konte

Dark Heritage

Black, the culture of it
The sweet and bitter nature
Darkness, darkness of the past
. . . to the future
The inner depths of our surroundings
Brothers and sisters entwined
The deep feeling of mutuality
Slowly drift apart
Listen, listen, listen
. . . to the call
The call of our forefathers
Remember the color of our minds
It is as permanent as the earth stands
From the grassy jungles to the crowded ghettoes
The deep black
The hurt the pain
Anger and love
Our children
An unending struggle for the black identity
Yes, the black mind
The black body
Unite brothers and sisters
Unite as one Stand,
Hold your black head up
Stand for the color
The peace of mind
Rise for the power
Before, before
Your time to be a forefather.

—Linda Webb

Mailliard

Congressman William Mailliard

Congressman William S. Mailliard, who represents the congressional district encompassing City College, spoke in the college theater on Tuesday, October 27.

The sixth congressional district includes the western half of San Francisco and southern Marin county. Mailliard has represented his constituents in Washington since 1952 when he was first elected to the House of Representatives.

Congressman Mailliard is the ranking Republican on the Merchant Marines and Fisheries Committee, and also sits on the Foreign Affairs Committee. He was chosen to be a member of the House-Senate Conference Committee to iron out differences in the versions of the Cooper-Church amendment.

Unfortunately, the Guardsman could not include coverage of his lecture in this issue due to the earlier deadline date. However, his address and answers to the questions will be reported in the next issue.

Mailliard is currently running for election against Democrat Russell Miller.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography. Editorial office in S-304, phone 587-7272, ext. 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
PAUL THIELE
SPORTS EDITOR
MIKE CHAN
ASSIGNMENTS
JOE KONTE
STAFF
BRUNO FORNER, VIRGINIA ELLIOTT, SHIRLEY FOGARINO, MATT NELSON, BILL COLLINS, NORMA FONG, AND DENNIS McGHEE
PHOTOGRAPHERS
GARY DELUCCHI, MARTIN DENMARK, TED LYAU
ADVISER
MRS. DORRY COPPOLETTA

Morgenthau Appearance

Hans Morgenthau, noted author and expert on foreign policy, spoke at City College last Thursday.

Morgenthau said that the Truman Doctrine is one of the main causes of the United States' foreign policy difficulties. He explained that the nation is still operating under the 1947 policy which is obsolete in this day and age.

Communism, he said, was a serious threat to the country twenty years ago, but today communism comes in many varieties. People who express fear of the old idea of communism are "using rhetoric to campaign against an institution which is a figment of the imagination," Morgenthau said.

Domestic problems are more important to Morgenthau than the threat of communism, however, he does not think that "law and order" is the answer.

"By trying to solve our problems with law and order, we will satisfy ourselves for two weeks," he said.

Morgenthau mentioned the pointlessness of the nuclear arms race, saying that there is no point in building to destroy a nation ten times over because it is able to destroy yours five times over.

Another American shortcoming, Morgenthau said, is its presidents, quoting Presidents Nixon and Johnson who said, "I will not be the first President to lose a war."

When asked how America's foreign policy was ever to be changed, Morgenthau opened his eyes in astonishment.

"I've talked and written my head off," he said, "and nothing has happened except my biography is longer than it should be."

Promises Can Be Forgotten

—Mike Mitroff, Draft Counselor

By Matt Nelson and Paul Thiele

There is a draft counselor on the City college campus. His name is Mike Mitroff and he is a student.

Mitroff's office is in B-5, the Experimental College, where he talks to students and offers important information concerning draft laws and methods of dealing with the Selective Service board.

Something that Mitroff emphasizes is that all correspondence with the draft board should be sent by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested. By keeping the mail receipts, it can be proved that the board received correspondence which they may have lost afterwards.

It is also advisable to mail forms and letters rather than presenting them personally at the local board, Mitroff says, even if it is nearby. In a court case, mail receipts can be evidence that a certain form was returned or an appeal was made to the board. According to Mitroff, records are not kept of oral transactions and promises can often be forgotten.

Mitroff urges that all correspondence with the board be typed in at least triplicate to avoid confusion, to use in future dealings with Selective Service, or to replace information lost from files or in the mail.

People applying for an II-S deferment must be full time students carrying no less than 12½ units per semester and completing no less than 30 units in one year.

To officially obtain a II-S deferment, a student should have signed a yellow selective service card on the day of registration (form 109). Then he must mail a letter to the board requesting a 104 form which he will complete and return to the board.

Mitroff reminds possible conscientious objectors that they must be against all wars and killing.

"In June of this year," Mitroff said, "they decided that if a person has deep feelings which are moral feelings, they are really religious feelings inside the person. Now a person can sign for a CO deferment as religiously or morally opposed to fighting or killing in any war."

Mitroff believes that men of the past were more susceptible to the draft because they were not informed about the laws.

"A man who sees a draft counselor," Mitroff said, "is more informed and is stating the laws to the draft board. Therefore, he's being treated as a different person."

Mitroff is available in B-5 from 12-1 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday and from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. He invites people to phone him at home on Tuesday or Wednesday nights from 7 to 10 p.m. at 668-9036.

Mike Mitroff explains the complexities of the draft in B-5
Photo by Gary Delucchi

Engineering Awards

Carl Proiette, D. C. Reid of Standard Oil, Robert Actis and James Holman

Carl Proiette, Robert Actis and James Holman are the recipients of $100 scholarships awarded by Standard Oil of California.

Proiette received his scholarship for being an outstanding mechanical engineering student; Actis was considered outstanding in electronic technology, and Holman was the top student in the pre-technical program at Washington High School.

Engineering department chairmen James Schon said that offering scholarships to the best pre technical students at either Galileo or Washington high schools could build student enthusiasm for the engineering curriculums in those high schools and at City College.

D. C. Reid, coordinator of professional employment for Standard Oil, presented the awards at a City College engineering department orientation luncheon.

Accommodating Bank

By Shirley Fogarino

"The Student Accounting Office, otherwise known as the Student Bank, should not be confused with Kenneth Castellino's Financial Aid Office," stated Carl Anderson, accounting and office manager for the college's bank.

The bank, located in E-207, handles accounts for all City College clubs and organizations. These are called 'accommodation accounts." Whenever a club holds a money-making activity, the finances are deposited into an accommodation account, Anderson said.

Another account that belongs to the Associated Students comprises proceeds from the college's vending machines, bookstore, drama productions and other student activities.

CHECK CASHING

Student body card holders may have checks cashed in any amount up to the $10 limit. Check cashing privileges are limited because of the amount of funds which are set borth by the Associated Students. Presently, the Student Council appropriates $200 consisting of funds from AS card sales to be used by students wishing to cash checks. No two-party checks may be cashed.

"Students may cash their checks between the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. daily while faculty members may cash theirs between 9 and 11:45 a.m. and between 12:15 and 3:30 p.m. each day, according to Theresa Lowther, a cashier at the bank.

SMALL LOANS

If a student needs to borrow money for lunch or if he loses a book and has to buy a new one, he may see Dean of Women Edna Pope, Dean of Men, Willis Kirk, both in E-106, or if he is a veteran, Robin Dunn of veteran affairs in E-202. From them he can obtain a note saying that he needs to borrow the money. The bank will then appropriate the funds to the student.

'In Days of Old When Knights Were Bold . . .'

By Matt Nelson

Sword duels reminiscent of the days of chivalry are still alive today. Fencing, one of the world's most exuberant sports, is taught on campus by an expert.

"Movies and television often show one man against fifty in a duel," said City College fencing instructor, Ferenc Marki. "This fencing is not played by the rules. The actor is trying to emphasize the idea of killing."

"The main rule of fencing," Marki continued, "is to be well disciplined, not to hurt the partner, and to imagine a target to aim at or to touch if the sword is sharp.

Ferenc Marki is from Budapest, Hungary and is one of the finest instructors of fencing to be found. The combination of his rich accent and versatility create an aura of debonairness. He graduated from Fencing Master Academy College in 1935.

Fencing became an international sport in the thirties, according to Marki. The uniform worn by its participants is white and bulky. A mask is worn for facial protection.

Marki said that fencing is a very healthy sport.

"Fencing can help the heart concentration, the lung time concentration, and it can build alertness and confidence."

Fencing instructor Ferenc Marki
Photo by Gary Delucchi

Important!

Next Monday and Tuesday, November 2 and 3, are holidays for City College students.

The Academic Senate of the college agreed several weeks ago to devote two days to political purposes such as campaigning for a candidate, influencing people, and voting in the November 3 general election.

We hope that City College students will use the two days for their intended purposes—and may the best men and women win.

—The Staff

Piano Music

Robert Sheldon, City College piano accompanist, will play works of Chopin and Schumann on Thursday, October 29 at 11 a.m. The concert will take place in room 133 of the Arts building.

New Seal For College

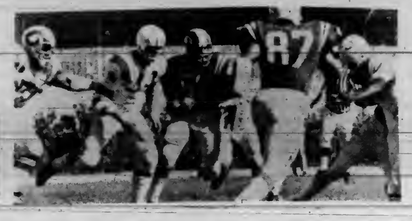
The present seal of City College may be replaced by a new one. Student Council member Martin Poon is looking into the matter.

In keeping with the spirit of the new community college district, there is interest on campus in creating a new seal that would be representative of this spirit.

Poon said that a committee will be formed to see that a new seal is designed. A contest may be held in association with the Arts department on this. Any student can submit designs for the seal. Also, an award may be offered. Details have yet to be confirmed.

The current seal was designed in 1954 under the supervision of then student activities director, Ralph Hillsman. It is the only seal that has been used in the history of this college.

Hillel Club Meets



Hillel Club, a Jewish organization on campus, meets every Tuesday at 11 a.m. in room 311 of the Arts building.

the Guardsman

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 4
Published by the Journalism students

the Guardsman

November 20, 1970

Rams Win And Lose

After coming off a smashing 30-21 come-from-behind victory over the Laney Eagles, the Rams were shot down 21-7 by the College of San Mateo Bulldogs.

Two weeks ago, the Rams were stunned early by the visiting Laney Eagles. On their first series of downs the Eagles drove 75 yards in 14 plays. Going in for the first Eagle score was Laney quarterback Bruce Bergstrom who sneaked over from the one.

The Rams finally tied up the game when they capped an 81-yard drive with a 4-yard jaunt by running back Floyd Coleman. The Ram score took 15 plays and left 3:47 to go before the half.

But within just :29 of the half, Eagle passer Bruce Bergstrom scored again. Bergstrom starting from his own 41 began whizzing passes to his receivers like a Johnny Unitas. After throwing a couple of 10 yarders to his ends, he lofted a 13-yard pass to Laney end Rich Baker for the score.

Going into the second half the Ram offense just couldn't get onto the right track. After being continuously stymied and stalled by a tough Eagle line, the Rams were repeatedly forced to punt.

Still down 14-7 in the third quarter, things began to look even worse when Eagle halfback Fred Elston returned a Larry Haren punt 63 yards. Taking the ball on the Ram 16, Bergstrom, in four plays, scored from five yards out. Now, with 6:33 left in the third quarter, the Eagles were leading the Rams 21-7, and in the Ram bleachers morale was reaching an all-time low of 0.0.

All of a sudden, though, the defense which had been grudgingly giving up yards to Laney throughout the afternoon, stiffened and started throwing back the Eagles for losses.

After an Eagle punt, the Ram offense took to the field and an explosion began to brew.

Ram quarterback Frank Oross came out slinging for three back-to-back first downs. The highlight of his drive was when he had to scramble out of the pocket. Running to the right, a Laney tackler caught him, but Oross spun around and broke the tackle and headed toward daylight. Running in a swerving way, Oross stutter-stepped by one Eagle, cut up field to his left and broke the grasp of a tackler's outstretched arm, and was finally brought down on the Laney 8.

Two plays later, Oross himself carried the pigskin over from 11 yards out. The score now read 21-14 Laney, but the momentum of the game had now switched toward the Rams.

The Ram defense took control and just demolished the Laney offense, sendling them back reeling with losses.

With the quick turnover in possession, the Ram offense hit the Eagles head-on with the pass. Oross hit three straight passes, but the curtains began to drop as he was intercepted by defensive back Anthony Limbrick on the Eagle 11.

Undaunted by the turnover the Ram defense crushed Bergstrom into the end zone for a safety.

On the ensuing kick, Floyd Coleman returned it 24 yards to the Laney 41. Through the air the Rams worked their way down to the 30, when on a first down play, Oross dropped back for the pass and sprinted down the sideline to elude the rush.

Losing his blockers, Oross was hit head-on by the safety whom Oross dragged forward for 4 more yards before being downed on the one.

On the next play halfback Darrel Mitchell plunged over to set the score at 23-21 Rams.

Again, the defense stopped the Eagles cold. On the Ram's first play from scrimmage, Darrel Mitchell took a handoff and burned the Laney defense for a 72-yard touchdown, and with that score the Rams wrapped up their fourth grid victory of the season.

The Ram defense shut off Laney's ground attack so well that Laney had only 69 yards in rushes.

VERSUS CSM

Here comes the bad news now, you heard about the win, now hear about the loss.

The Rams, if they were to have a really solid shot at the Conference title, had to win against the Bulldogs of San Mateo, but the fortunes of war were against the Rams last Saturday at CSM Stadium.

The Rams scored first blood as they marched 86 yards with Floyd Coleman plunging in from the three for the score.

After that the closest the Rams ever came to paydirt was on the one, but even there they were slapped with a 15-yard holding penalty.

After holding CSM scoreless in the first quarter, the Rams gave up a touchdown in each of the other quarters. This time the Rams just couldn't sustain any threatening drives after the first quarter.

With 9:39 in the second quarter, CSM passer Wayne Willis hit Frank Anderson on a 22-yard touchdown pass.

CSM running back Tom Cozart went 2-yards on a sweep for another score.

The game was finally busted wide open when CSM flanker-halfback Tom Scott returned a punt 76 yards for a touchdown.

The game, up into the fourth quarter, was a tough defensive battle. Highlighting the Ram defensive unit was cornerback Vern Thomas' 4 intercepts against CSM.

A key factor in the game was the tough CSM rush which permitted only 58 yards in the air on 5 passes.

Ram Soccer Team Must Win All or Else Out as Contenders

What was billed as a very promising soccer season is now on a taut tightrope. If the Ram soccer team is to cross this tightrope, they must win every one of their remaining 10 games, and if they don't the Rams will be definitely out of contention.

According to Soccer Coach Roy Diederichsen, the Rams were thrown into this position by the loss of two league games. Diederichsen said the only game the team should have really lost was the Skyline game. The score was 6-1 Skyline.

However the coach said the team should never have lost to doormat Diablo Valley, who won by a score of 2-1.

The Rams, if they are to stay in contention, must therefore win every one of their games since both Canada and Skyline are undefeated.

Even though the Rams are solid in talent, the team's general enthusiasm and aggressiveness has dropped.

If the team doesn't bounce back the whole season will have gone down the drain. However Coach Diederichsen thinks they will.

Friday	October 30	3:00	Away	Marin College
Saturday	October 31	11:00	Away	Pacific (Stockton)
Tuesday	November 3	3:00	Balboa	West Valley
Friday	November 6	3:00	Away	Canada College
Friday	November 13	3:00	Away	Skyline
Tuesday	November 17	3:00	Balboa	Ohlone
Thursday	November 19	3:00	Balboa	Diablo Valley

Cross-Country Team

Photo by Ted Lyau

Top: George Ricker, Ernie Jeong, Paul Brickley, Darrel Bottom: Gil Rocha, Bob Narvel, Larry Shields, Rodolfo Narvaez, Jeong, Camassou Phillips, Harry Fong, Coach Lou Vasquez. Dwayne Hammond, Fred Bratcher, Terry Mislen.

Oriental Counselor Chosen Found Not Qualified by Campus Asian Groups

By Paul Thiele

An available counseling job at City College this semester has caused a heated dispute between student groups on campus and the chairman of the counseling department, Don Marcus.

The situation began just before the beginning of the Fall 1970 semester when student groups such as the Asian Association for Unity, (AAU) Chinese Cultural Club and Chinese Students Association learned that a counseling position was open.

These groups suggested to the administration that an oriental counselor be hired due to the high ratio of Asian students to Asian counselors, approximately 1:3570, a figure which represents one oriental counselor, Mrs. Margaret Lum, to some 3570 Asian students, the largest minority group on campus composing 28 per cent of the total enrollment.

The college administration agreed that an oriental counselor was necessary and ordered the counseling department's interviewing committee to interview applicants. At the same time, the Chinese students had already interviewed Dr. Wai-Yin Syn, a man with a Ph.D in Educational Administration and a minor in Psychology, whom they found to be extremely understanding and easy to talk to. He is also fluent in Cantonese, his native language, enabling him to communicate with immigrant students. He was an immigrant student himself.

Dr. Dudley Yasuda, sponsor of the AAU, submitted Syn's name to the interview committee for consideration. From this point, differences of opinion branched off.

According to Don Marcus, several members of the AAU were invited to a meeting of the interview committee to offer their opinions of Syn. However, the letter Marcus sent to Yasuda inviting him to the meeting was never answered and in a telephone conversation with AAU official, Dennis Fong, Marcus said that Fong felt "it probably would not be wise to arrange a meeting because, in the long run, it might prove disadvantageous to Dr. Syn."

Herb Gunther of Experimental College and the AAU complained that Marcus did indeed send a written invitation to Yasuda, but never to the students themselves.

Don Marcus

Fong said that he never said anything like that, rather it was another member of the AAU who did not have the right to speak for the entire club. He added that the AAU had been waiting for Marcus to send a letter to the AAU giving the specific date and time of the meeting, information which was not included in the letter sent to Yasuda.

On September 10 and 11, the counseling department interviewed twenty applicants and the first four choices were, in order, Steven Wong, Mrs. Sarah Wong, Wellington Chu, and Dr. Syn.

The traditional policy followed by the counseling department is to recommend only the top two applicants to the administration for employment so that the person that the department really wants has a better chance of being employed.

Therefore, either Steven Wong or Sarah Wong would have been hired.

Upon learning the department's choices, the Asian students interviwed the top three. Their conclusions were that Steven Wong was really not qualified because he related poorly to them and had a poor command of Cantonese. Sarah Wong was considered satisfactory, but not excellent, and Wellington Chu did not appear for the interview.

Disagreements arose when the Asian students asked Marcus to break tradition and follow the Academic Senate's rule requiring a minimum of two recommendations for each open position. This would have brought Syn back into the picture.

On October 28, Student Council sent a letter to Marcus asking him to break the department's tradition and recommend Dr. Syn.

"We are caught in a time when obstinance and tradition have little, if any, place," the letter said.

"If a certain group wants us to change our decision after we turn in the two names to the administration," Marcus said, "there's not a darn reason why we should. Maybe another group wants us to go to number six on the list. There's an important matter of principle here."

Steve Nakajo, a member of AAU, believes that Marcus is not interested in who relates better to Asian students.

"The only reason we're not getting anywhere is because Marcus is afraid to let the students say who they want as a counselor," Nakajo said.

Fong had a similar opinion of the counseling department.

"We've been working for four months and the man who is best qualified is not being hired because the dinosaur counseling department is afraid of being shaken out of its status as a retirement farm for former teachers," Fong said.

Presently the situation is deadlocked with Dean of Students John Brady freezing the job until students and administration can reach an agreeable settlement.

According to Marcus, a re-interview is inevitable because a counselor is desperately needed. He also said that two or three Asian student representatives will be allowed to sit in during the next interviews to listen and ask questions, but not to vote on applicants.

Herb Gunther

This is an offer made voluntarily by the counseling department and is not a rule governing college hiring committees.

Marcus feels that Steven Wong is an extremely competent counselor. He has a Ph.D in psychology and is an excellent one-to-one counselor.

"It's not like we're talking about someone who's a complete misfit," Marcus said.

Dennis Fong said that Asian groups on the campus think that Dr. Syn is by far the best candidate and that every group prefers him to Steven Wong.

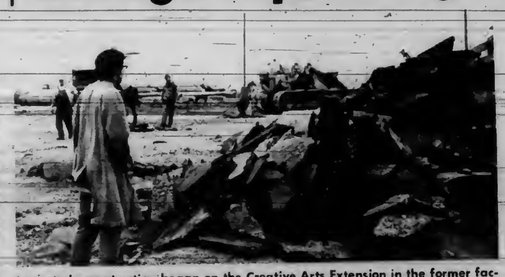
"We've always wanted quality and will not settle for less," Fong said, adding, "There is nothing personal against Steven Wong."

(Photos by Gary Delucchi)

Poor Grades May Be Raised—Less Penalty

In an effort to ease the severity of the penalties caused by poor grades, City College has adopted new policies on repeated courses and exclusion of D, F, and I grades, according to Donald Marcus, chairman of the Counseling Department.

The new policy on repeated courses, which applies to courses repeated after July 1, 1970, allows students to repeat any courses at City College up to a maximum of 15 units and to count only the last grades earned for units attempted, units completed, cumulative grade points, and grade-point average.



The new policy on exclusion of grades allows a student under certain circumstances to exclude up to a maximum of 15 units in computing units attempted, units completed, cumulative grade points, and grade-point average.

For such an exclusion to be granted, a student must have completed a minimum of 15 units with at least a 2.50 g.p.a. or a minimum of 30 units with at least a 2.00 g.p.a. after receiving the D, F, or I grades to be excluded.

Marcus emphasized that the application of these new policies is not automatic. He stated that students who wish to take advantage of these procedures must file a petition in the Registrar's office to line out the first attempt after a course has been repeated or to exclude courses after the required g.p.a. has been achieved.

Because these policies have not been adopted by all colleges, Marcus warned that students who are planning to transfer to other colleges should check with the transfer college to determine whether it will count the first attempt or the excluded courses in computing g.p.a.

College Expanding

Last week, construction began on the Creative Arts Extension in the former faculty parking lot. The building will comprise brand new television and radio studios, music practice rooms, and 20 classrooms. The estimated cost of the building is $1,511,000 and the completion date is approximately two years away. The faculty now has exclusive parking rights in the former student lot on Judson Avenue.

editorial

The infantile display of "political concern" that recently appeared on many of the buildings on campus is an insult to the students of City College of San Francisco.

If the vandals who so carelessly scribbled their thoughts on the college walls had used positive methods of communication, such as leaflets, correspondence to the Guardsman or a local newspaper, or a rally, they would have undoubtedly gained more sympathy and exposure in the community.

There is nothing positive about painting slogans on walls. People who sympathize with Angela Davis will probably maintain the same attitude, but people who reject the cause will reject it more, and those in the middle will more than likely turn against it completely. This, of course is polarization.

Many people feel that the nation is polarized. The vandals who operated on City College are, in no way showing intelligent political thought and are contributing to the existing communication breakdown. We are not necessarily pinning the blame upon City College students, however.

It might be wise to consider the possibility of non-City College students as the perpetrators or anti-Angela Davis people attempting to divert the blame upon her sympathizers. If this is the case, the vandals are horrible perverted creatures.

What motive could people have for spraying slogans on college buildings? It is so easy to make opinions felt through the various printed media at City College that we doubt if the perpetrators cared as much about Angela Davis' freedom as they did about defacing City College buildings.

Joe Konte

Calloused Group Plays God

The blood stains on the cement are no longer visible, but the stains on the memories of many Americans are indelible, unable to forget that tragic day at Kent State. The four deaths occurred over seventeen months ago, but in this case, time will not heal the wounds.

A grand jury from Portage County, Ohio, has played God and miraculously found National Guardsmen completely innocent of the shootings of ten people. The divine wisdom expressed by this calloused group has ignored a 7500 page report from the FBI, which contained severe criticism of the Ohio guard, and a 100-plus page report study by the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, which found fault with the guard.

This same jury, however, was able to indict 25 people for 43 offenses ranging from disorderly conduct to burning an ROTC building.

I won't defend these people, if indeed they were responsible for the violence which preceded the shootings. The nights prior to the killings were plagued with rampaging hoodlums who threw bottles at police cars, shattered store windows, set bonfires, and damaged autos, climaxing their reign of terror by destroying the campus ROTC building.

These are criminal acts, and the perpetrators should serve time behind bars. But, as acts of violence by students are not to be condoned, neither are the unwarranted shootings by the Ohio guardsmen.

When the 107th armored cavalry regiment and the 145th infantry battalion, armed with M-1 rifles, .45 caliber machine guns, and .45 pistols, set out under orders from Ohio Governor James Rhode, they were not in the mood to play games.

Their objective was, of course, to stop this senseless violence. So what did they do? . . .

When the smoke from the deadly volley cleared, four students lay dead, and six others were wounded, one being paralyzed from the waist down.

Immediately, the excuses flowed forth faster than the blood of the gunned-down students:

* Authorities explained that these Guardsmen had been on duty for five days in the Cleveland area prior to coming to Kent, so that they were fatigued; at fault here is the lack of judgment by the Governor for calling in such a sluggish group of men to perform such a tedious task as controlling the violence.

* The guardsmen claimed that their lives were in danger; yet the closest of these "dangerous" victims was 75 feet away.

* And again, if the guardsmen were under such a dangerous attack, why wasn't at least one of them injured seriously enough to require hospitalization?

There are two sides to every story, but in this case, the Ohio grand jury has refused to flip over the page. This entire grievous, unbelievable matter of exonerating the guard while condemning the students is summed up best by the feelings of Seabury H. Ford, a 68 year old special council for the state attorney general, who was quoted as saying:

"I've heard a lot of crap about listening to the young. Hell, I've listened till I'm sick of them. They've got nothing to offer."

I've heard talk about a sick society, and now I'm beginning to understand what they mean.

—Joe Konte

Countess Liberte

You men sitting in the cafeteria slurping pasta with your dirty bell-bottoms on, leering at the passing legs — how can you think that any women would care to look back at you?

You are all trying to imitate Peter Fonda and John Lennon, but you forget that they have the clean hair and a finesse you lack. Will you be caught in your beer-stained teeshirt watching the ball game or smoking the hookah when the revolution comes? You had better shape up mes garcons. The women will dump you quick — and you need them.

Without women you cower in your egoless. You need women to make you feel you are the big man. But you had better start earning it. I suggest these things for men.

Dress yourself and groom yourself like sleek lions for the lovely lionesses and panthers.

Do not droop the eyes like Robert Mitchum or give the "Omar Sharif" to women. They see through that.

Do not think that when a woman is friendly to you she has always the same "idee" on her mind as you. You flatter yourselves in this.

Also, your conversation and manners are often crude and boring. The woman asks, "Do you have a match?" and you roll them down the table. A woman with children hangs onto a pole on the bus and you sit smug in your seat staring at her chest.

You talk about fixing the car, sports, and the free love you don't deserve. You men cannot think the greater thoughts of women. Get some books of poetry and throw away your "Playboy." If you do not do these things, women will stop supporting your idleness with their office jobs. Women will throw you in the washing machine along with your filthy socks.

Remember: It is not true any more that you are physically stronger. Most of you could not bat a tether ball with your flaccid arms while the women are learning karate.

If you get out of line, you may find yourself watching all the stars go by on that corner.

Next week I will tell you how you can avoid the syndrome of the sloppy cad before you all wind up toothless old men sitting in hotels with nothing but your girlie magazines for company.

Scansion Corner

Amidst all of its tintinabulations, feedback, reverberation effects, and distortion, the world of rock and roll music is shifting on the sands of itself as a great tidal wave of newer sounds floods it.

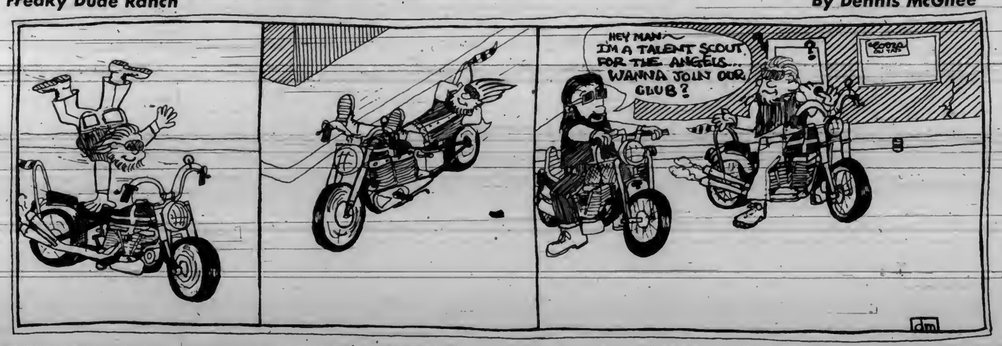
The once popular heavy sounds faded themselves out of existence. Cream, possibly the best group ever, split after creating four great LP's. The results of the breakup ("splinter groups") were not overwhelming.

The Iron Butterfly (In-A-Gadda-Da-Vida was a 17 minute orgy for them) dropped their lead guitarist and added two new ones. Their sound has de-escalated very much in quality.

Blue Cheer became a quartet playing country and western music.

Folk-rock enjoyed a brief existence, although the results of the experiment were favorable. New trends are in acoustic rock bands (Fairport Convention, Pentangle, Incredible String Band). Some groups are de-emphasizing the rock portion like Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young.

Country and Western introduced such stars as Johnny Cash, Buck Owens, Glen Campbell, and Tammy Wynette. The results: "Hee Haw," rock groups recording in Nashville incorporating steel guitars into the act, and even plugs for a harmonicompany treading on Country and Western waters.



What are the new trends? Incomprehensible. A recent Jefferson Airplane live LP has touches of folk, jazz, blues, and the heavy sounds. The Byrds (one of the better groups) fiddle around with raga sounds, "C&W," folk, jazz and gospel.

Simon and Garfunkel used (on the "Bridge Over Troubled Waters" LP) samba, jazz, gospel, early rock, and of course, folk. Poco blends "C&W" with jazz and rock. Even Tiny Tim (who has become a euphemism) mixes ragtime with early rock.

But we must not taunt these tintinnabulations with themes of musical thuggery. Instead, we should hold and roll, set ourselves upon a whaithe, hope for another Woodstock, and dole out the earplugs. The usufructs may just astound you — or at least make you notice!

Bruno Fortier

Freaky Dude Ranch — By Dennis McGhee

Bill Mailliard Speaks Here Prior to Victory

By Joe Konte and Bill Collins

Congressman William Mailliard, who was reelected to his sixth district seat on November 3, appeared at City College for a lecture-discussion on October 27 in the Little Theater.

Mailliard, a member of Congress for 18 years, wasted no time in defending himself against the onslaught of criticism from his opponent, Russ Miller, who spoke here several weeks ago. Mailliard expressed that it is impossible to represent all the people the way Miller said he would.

"I want to make it perfectly clear that he can't represent the views of all the people in the congressional district," Mailliard said.

The 53 year old incumbent, clad in dark suit and white shirt, stood fixed against the stage, with arms folded, during his ten minute speech before opening up for questions. As soon as he made the invitation to the audience, one student referred to charges by Miller contained in his campaign literature charging that Mailliard voted against draft reform.

"That's not true," Mailliard responded. "Six years ago I sponsored a book with other congressmen called How to End the Draft. The draft system bothers me — the entire burden is borne by a few. We can maintain an adequate defense posture with a volunteer army," he added.

Fred Johnson, a student, asked, "What do you think about this new fad, ecology?"

"Well, I'm glad it has received a higher priority in government," he answered.

"Population pressures and the misuse of resources have no equals in priority. I have serious doubts we can survive if we continue at the present pace," he added.

"Yet you're still for the SST?" Johnson challenged, referring to the sonic boom jets.

The congressman said that the SST is "economical" because the free world depends on U.S. exports in U.S. planes. He added that the planes would probably be flying over water as much as possible.

Mailliard called to "limit deployment of the Anti Ballistic Missiles," although he previously voted for them indirectly as part of a larger military procreations bill. Nevertheless, he still favors building ABM's, saying, "It's highly dangerous not to do it."

Southeast Asia policy was tackled with Mailliard deploring the U.S. for having "no clear military objective." He spoke on the military activity of the early Kennedy years, commenting, "We were trying to build up indigenous military strength."

The Congressman called his first visit to Vietnam "disappointing."

"I thought we'd utilize our strength," he said. "I could not see why we didn't use it in effective military power."

Mailliard concluded the topic of the war and the military by observing, "The purpose is to be strong enough so that you don't have to use military power. Its deterrent deters."

Speaking about lawlessness, he pointed out that he voted for all the law and order bills, including the "D.C. preventive detention bill." His vote in favor of the "no knock" law, part of that bill, was defended by calling it an improvement over the old law, explaining that this bill will afford the citizen greater protection against illegal entrance by police.

Congressman William Mailliard

Under fire of questions concerning Vice President Agnew, Mailliard commented, "To have people polarized without the understandng of their views is a dangerous situation."

"The Agnew rhetoric is not my style," he said, although he feels that the Vice President is entitled to say whatever he likes.

Happenings

Alpha Gamma Sigma, City College's honor society, will sponsor a ten-event program on December 17 at the new Student Union Building.

The program, entitled "Holiday's Season Festival," will consist of dramatics, choirs, bands, modern dance, poetry, and song.

Festivities begin at 8:30 p.m. and will last for two and a half hours. Admission consists of a donation which will be requested at the door.

Alph Gamma Sigma plans to have strolling minstrels on campus to herald this event.

★★★

The City College Recreation Association is offering extracurricular physical education classes this semester.

Many of the classes are coeducational. Others are teams which will compete against other colleges. The teams are not varsity but people must try out to be on them. They include men's soccer and handball, women's basketball, volleyball, softball, field hockey, and gymnastics. Members must have AS cards.

Other sports offered are swimming, tennis, badminton, bowling, ice skating, fencing, and archery. The latter two are competitive sports for men and women. Sign ups are in the women's gym.

In addition, the association offers make up nights this semester on November 18, December 9, and January 6 from 7-9 p.m. in the women's gym. Two absences from a PE class can be negated by attending the make up night. It is coeducational and sports offered are volleyball, basketball, badminton, and dancing.

★★★

The Ram Ski Club meets every Tuesday at 11:00 a.m., College Hour, in Room C-260.

Night meetings are every other Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in Room C-222.

It is for the advanced or beginning skier — everyone is welcome to join. Activities take place every weekend until the ski season opens. If you're tired of staying home, join the Ram Ski Club and meet new friends and go places.

The Club promotes cheapter rates for the college skier. If you're tired of paying high prices for your skiing weekends, join the Ram Ski Club.

For more information call Jim Merle (474-8219) or Patricia Gonzalez (648-1119).

Students interested in beginning City College's dental technology program may take an aptitude test on December 1 or 3.

Frank Szehner, director of the dental program, suggests that students contact him before December 1 so that he can estimate the size of next semester's class.

The screening test is basically hand-eye coordination. No previous dental experience is required before taking the test. The time of the tests will be from 8 to 9 a.m. and the place is C-267.

People who are not currently attending the college may take the test and take a class next semester if they send a transcript of scholarship to the registrar's office, take the college entrance test, and have all necessary papers turned in by December 15.

★★★

A karate class for women is being held by the Recreation Association as an extracurricular course on Wednesdays from 4-5 p.m. and Fridays from 12-2 p.m.

Daisey Chin, a brown belt, is teaching the course which is free to all women at City College.

★★★

The 5th Dimension, one of the nation's top vocal groups, will appear in concert for one night only at the San Francisco Civic Auditorium on Friday, December 4, at 8:30 p.m. Appearing as guest stars on the same bill will be The Carpenters, whose "We've Only Just Begun" is currently a hit.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography. Editorial office in S-304, phone 587-7272, ext. 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
PAUL THIELE
SPORTS EDITOR
MIKE CHAN
ASSIGNMENTS
JOE KONTE
STAFF
DENNIS McGHEE, VIRGINIA ELLIOTT, SHIRLEY FOGARINO, MATT NELSON, BILL COLLINS, NORMA FONG, NICK SHUBIN, JUDY KAY.
PHOTOGRAPHERS
GARY DELUCCHI, MARTIN DENMARK, TED LYAU
ADVISER
MRS. DORRY COPPOLETTA

Live Pen Pals Brighten Campus

Remember pen pals? Now you don't have to bridge the cultural gap via the post. On the City College campus there are students from all over the globe . . . Greece, Persia, South America, and Africa. "Guardsman" talked to two charming and exotic looking men this week; one from Persia and the other from tropical Ecuador.

Reza Shams, from Persia, lends an Eastern beauty to the facial fare in the cafeteria. He has been here only 16 months but has a sophisticated grasp of the language. Certain idiomatic expressions and usages still confound him. Since he is taking such complex courses as trigonometry and geology, he does have a rough row to hoe.

Hip-looking in an American sense, his attitudes reflect the civilization he says is 2000 years old.

The family relationship in America is not warm, said Reza. As for women's liberation, a girl could not do the same thing as a boy because she "does not feel herself strong."

Government? "America is against whoever is against it, whether inside the country or outside of it." But on his own government, Reza commented with just an enigmatic smile and a flash of his dark eyes.

Jaime Espinoza

He came here because there are not as many schools in Persia and they are harder to get into. He hopes to go into Chemical Engineering and return to his country. In the meantime, Persian students may have bread-woes because they can't work while over here, and what their families send them may amount to $2,400 a month in Persian money which works out to $300 in the U.S.

There are 40 to 50 Persians on campus, most of whom are of the Moslem religion and speak a language called Parsee.

Jaime Espinosa, warm and delightful, was far more verbal about his country's government and culture. South American revolutions have happened, he said, because "the presidents just make money for themselves, and the people have to find a way to live."

"In Ecuador," said Jaime, "we have anything you have . . . big cities, museums and parks; but what we do not have is opportunity." A factory worker in Ecuador can only make a subsistence wage and office jobs require a college education, he said.

"The people who are treated like minorities are the uneducated." Women? "They do not work in Ecuador," Jaime remarked. That's one of the reasons why Jaime's mother moved the family to America.

Sex and drugs?

"You don't see much of that down there. A girl would not go to a boy's apartment. A girl can't get pregnant because she could not get money from the welfare." And, in Ecuador, "Mama" is heavy with discipline. When asked if he is involved with Third World peoples or feels like a minority person here, Jaime said he didn't concern himself with that.

"I just want to live, to work, and to make something out of myself."

Virginia Elliott

the Guardsman

SPORTS

FOES EDGE OUT RAMS

Costly mistakes against both the City College of San Jose Jaguars and the Diablo Valley Vikings dashed any Ram hopes for a second, let alone first, place finish in the Golden Gate Conference. Presently City Colleg's 1970 grid record is 4 wins and 4 losses.

Against the San Jose Jaguars last October 30, the Rams played tough head to head football until the fourth quarter, when the Jaguars finally managed to break a three quarter scoreless tie, and go on to win 15-0.

After having intercepted Ram quarterback Frank Oross deep in Ram territory, the Jaguars took over posession at the Ram 31. San Jose quarterback Bob Parker ran off three straight running plays, but was still a yard short of a first down.

Going for the touchdown on a fourth down play, Parker handed off to halfback Greg Sexauer who cracked the Ram center for nine tough yards.

With the momentum from that play the Jaguars just two plays later scored on a four yard jaunt by Carl Liddsay. Having scored with 13:51 still left in the fourth SJ kicker Steve Woods had his attempt for a point after blocked by Ram defensive tackle Jerry Grays.

Not until there was 8:27 left in the game did San Jose manage to run up some more points. What set up the Jaguars was a Larry Haren punt from the Ram one, that was returned 12 yards by Jaguar runner Mark DiSalvo, who also picked up 13 additional yards from a Ram personal foul.

Taking over at the Ram 13, it looked as if the final curtain was about to be dropped onto the Rams. However the Rams themselves weren't about to say die as they threw back and stifled San Jose into a 33 yard field goal by Steve Woods.

Now with just 6:53 left in the game, the Rams on the ensuing kick-off moved the ball out to their own 30. Playing for the pass the Jaguar defense started blowing into the Ram backfield, and consequently forced punter Larry Haren to send one flying from the Ram 28.

Taking the Ram punt on his own 45, Jaguar Don Paul sprinted up the middle for 21 yards before being downed on the Ram 34.

Three plays later, Ram cornerback Vern Thomas intercepted a Parker pass in the end zone.

However the Ram fortunes instead of rising were sinking ever so deeply, for Oross on the series' first play was intercepted by middle-linebacker Bob Latendresse on the Ram 26.

Again the Jaguars were thrown back, but the Rams taking the ball on their own 25 just couldn't punch their way past the Ram 40.

Taking possession on the Ram 34 the Jaguars delivered the coup de grace as Parker passed to Billy Wilson for a touchdown with 0:00 left.

Final score San Jose 15, City College nothing.

The Diablo Valley College Vikings took, and I mean took, the Rams 15 to 14 at City College's last home game of the season last Friday, the 6th.

Early in the first quarter it seemed that the Rams were out to avenge last season's 45-14 wipe out at DVC. The second time the Ram offense got the ball they marched downfield, and when faced with a couple of tough situations, they suckered the Vikings with the draw play.

Culminating a Ram drive downfield quarterback Frank Oross handed off to halfback Cordell Hawkins who cracked his way into the end zone from 3 yards out.

The game now essentially settled down into an old fashioned hard-hitting defensive struggle as both teams strove to protect or to overcome the points on the board.

It wasn't until the second quarter that any of the teams were able again to score. DVC quarterback Rod Christensen dropped back to pass, and while under a hard pass rush flung a pass into the flat. Leaping up to snag the pigskin was Ram linebacker Pat Grimesey who upon alighting rambled 33 yards into the end zone.

Previously on Hawkins' touchdown Oross had successfully converted a 2 point conversion by flipping a pass to flanker Frank Johnson. Employing the same strategy again a fake PAT was attempted, but the snap from center was a little low and Oross while scrambling about shot off a pass that was intercepted a yard deep into the end zone by Viking defensive back Frank Fejerang.

The Vikings were now behind by 14 points so Christensen had to start flingin' the pigskin if the Vikes were to have any chance of a victory.

Behind Christensen's arm the Vikings worked their way downfield behind Viking receptions by Steve Dodge and Mark Ersnt. Ploughing in from the six, Pat Riley gave DVC its first points of the game. The PAT was good and the score read 14-7 at the half.

The Vikings and Rams dragged their feet in the second half. Until Christensen hit end Jared Butler who broke one tackle and raced 41 yards untouched into the end zone. The Vikes took the lead when Christensen hit end Gunther Gutierrez for a two pointer. The clock had :43 left in the game.

The Rams fumbled and lost the ball on their opening play, and the game was over.

Star Ram halfback Darrel Mitchell breaks for daylight on this carry.

The First Annual Co-ed Gymnastics Night at City College Men's Gym, December 9

On December 9, the first annual Gymnastics Night will be held here at the City College Men's Gym. The entire program will consist of co-ed performances in gymnastics. A time for the performances has not yet been set for the 9th, but admission is free.

Sponsors for this gymnastic exhibition are Miss Susan Conrad and Mr. Norm Travis, both are heads of their respective gymnastic departments. The participants featured in the exhibition are members of their day and night classes.

Thirty-five to forty gymnasts are expected to perform in an individual capacity. All the performers will demonstrate a certain routine.

According to sponsor, Norm Travis, the program's purpose is twinfold. The primary purpose of the program is to permit City College gymnasts a chance to demonstrate their skills before the public. Secondly it gives the gymnastics department a chance to educate the public in understanding what's going on in gymnastics today.

Underlying the above purposes will be the gymnasts' own thrill of participating in public. It takes a degree of dedication to perform in gymnastics, and so when they perform, on the ninth, it will assuredly be an excellent show.

A few of the many participating gymnasts to look for are City College students Patty Young and Ova Schiender, both of them placed high in the Women's Gymnastic Nationals last year at Salt Lake City.

Also Patrick Avera, a former City College student and a transferee to San Francisco State, will perform. He is regarded by Travis to be an outstanding gymnast.

A tentative schedule of the events on the program include exercises on the parallel and uneven bars. Although the uneven bars are vaguely similar in appearance to the parallel bars, the exercises one can perform on them range from the most simplistic to the most complex gymnastic maneuvers.

One of the sure highlights of the evenings program will be the men's and women's free X-exercises. The exercises are performed to music.

A sharp eye should be kept on the women's free X-exercise group. While executing different floor patterns their performance will consist of ballet movements with some gymnastic movements attuned to music. A sneak tip says they'll provide an outstanding performance.

The men's free X performance will entirely consist of gymnastic movements.

If free X isn't your bag try vaulting. In vaulting, a device similar to a springboard propels a gymnast over a side horse. In effect, the gymnast performs a certain routine, per se, a swan dive or a flip while going over the side horse.

Reminders of past experiences are bound to be unearthed when the regulation ground tumbling is presented. They will perform the usual simple rolls and then move up to the more complex flip-flops.

Another probable highlight, may be a probable trampoline exhibition by George Smith, whom Norm Travis refers to as an outstanding gymnast.

Rams Still in the Race

The Ram soccer team can still finish in first place this season but the mathe-possibilities make the road back look rocky.

Losing to the Golden Gate Conference's doormat, Diablo Valley College, and to second-place Skyline College, which was an understandable and forgiveable loss, the Rams mustn't lose again.

In order to come back, the Rams must defeat Canada and Skyline who are in first and second place, and then Ohlone College and derelict Diablo Valley. In addition, when Canada and Skyline face each other for the final time this season, the result cannot be a tie or the Rams will still be solidly fastened in third.

The booters looked their best in the game against West Valley in which they won, 3-1. Similar feats will be needed so that the Rams do not end the season tied. A tie would necessitate playoffs. Pitting the Rams up against Skyline and Canada all over again is like escorting the league championship out the back door.

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 5
Published by the Journalism students

the Guardsman

November 25, 1970

Peter Buch raps with students

Peter Buch Speaks On Mideast Crisis

By Matt Nelson

Peter Buch, dignified speaker for the Socialist Workers Party, gave a talk on dealing with major issues in the Middle East crisis.

Buch, a former member of Hashomer Hatzair, a Zionist organization, and leading spokesman and author on the Middle East uprising, strongly defends and supports the Palestine revolution.

In the course of his lecture, Buch said that the United States supports Israel because it is an imperialistic country that wants to profit from Israel's one and a half billion dollar petroleum industry.

He added that the Arab nations have even more wealth at stake, but they are trying to keep control of it themselves.

"If the United States sends troops to the Middle East," Buch said, "there will probably be another Vietnam."

Buch referred to an article in the New York Times in which Senator William Fullbright said that the U.S. supports Israel because of "bonds of sentiment and culture" with that country.

"That is not a sober assessment that the senator disclosed," Buch said.

The goal of Palestinians, he said, is to create a socialistic state in the Middle East countries under the philosophies of Marx and Lenin.

Muckraker Bennett Tells of Gas Fight

William Bennett, famous muckraking attorney, told of the corruption he encountered in government while battling for the consumers of California in speaking to a capacity crowd Tuesday, November 17 in the college theater.

He explained the complicated and lingering case against the El Paso Natural Gas Company monopoly, which led to several important United States Supreme Court decisions.

"El Paso Gas," Bennett explained, "had a monopoly on natural gas sold to California. There was no alternative pipeline from which PG&E could acquire natural gas. PG&E and the consumers were forced to accept the rates demanded by El Paso."

The Pacific Northwest Pipeline Co. had natural gas pipelines in the Washington-Oregon area. Bennett maintained that Pacific could extend its existing pipeline to California, thus offering competition to the El Paso monopoly.

Learning of Bennett's plan, El Paso bought 99 per cent of Pacific Co., giving it a virtual monopoly in the West, and making it a $3 billion corporation.

"This was clearly in violation of the Clayton anti-monopoly act," claimed the crusading attorney.

The Attorney General of the United States, Herbert Brownell, ruled that El Paso's acquisition of Pacific was in violation of the anti-monopoly sections of the Clayton Act.

This ruling was to keep the case alive for years, giving Bennett an excuse to appeal to higher courts when all seemed lost.

In the meantime, Bennett had left his duties in California to become an advance man for the campaigning

See Page 3

AS Council Discusses New No Credit Grading System

The Student Council meetings of November 16 and 18 did not see much accomplished in the way of voting, but a lot was done by means of discussion.

On Monday, November 16, the topic of having an "A-B-C-D-No Credit" grading system was discussed by Student Council. Bonnie Solomon wanted a letter written to the governing board of the community colleges to support this.

Since this type of system is currently against the law, it was decided to let it stand until Dean Billwiller could be consulted on this matter.

Dean Samuels brought out the topic of the forthcoming elections. Petitions for office will be accepted beginning December 1 and close on December 18, allowing for the Christmas vacation to prepare for the campaign. The campaigns will start on January 4. Elections will be held January 13 and 14.

See page 3

CCSF Hosts ICBC Meet

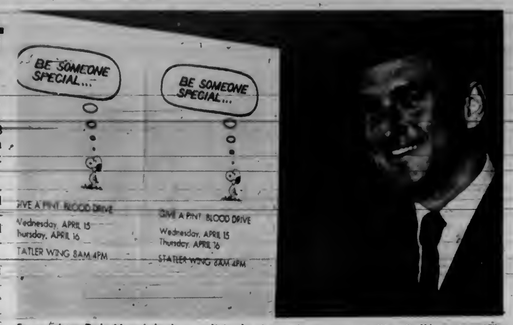
Five out of twelve Bay Area colleges met on Wednesday, November 4, for the first meeting of the Intercollegiate Blood Council (ICBC).

Hosting the forum which included San Francisco State College, Heald Engineering School, the University of San Francisco and the University of California Medical Center, were City College Blood Drive chairmen Arthur Samuels and Edmond Lew.

The meeting was called to order by Marshall Kuhn, manager of donor recruitment at San Francisco's Irwin Memorial Blood Bank, who stated the reason for the gathering as being to "stimulate participation of college students in blood-drives and to interchange ideas as to how students can be encouraged to participate on their respective college campuses."

Ralph Hillsman, Dean of Students at City College, commented on the initial successes of the Campus blood drives during past years. "The responsibility of the College blood-drives had evolved from the hands of the fraternities and the sororities until finally, it reached the Associated Students last year," said Hillsman. "The initial successes of our blood-drives is due in part to our student participation and also, in part, to the tremendous publicity that the blood drive gets in advance."

City College has been a community leader in its campaigns for the past two years. In 1969 students donated a total of 708 pints of blood and this year, the College again capped all Bay area college totals with approximately 870 pints of blood. City College was chosen to host the ICBC because of its past successes.



"We often donate the pints of blood just before we have the annual blood drive, to community service organizations who may have need of it," said Samuels. "Student Activities co-ordinator, Claire Wray, public relations director for the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank, Lew manages to indoctrinate the help of numerous community organizations each year. Through news media, posters, and sponsoring business organizations, the College blood drive gets well publicized.

"When a student donates a pint of blood, he and the members of his immediate family and friends become eligible for the services of the blood-bank. A donor may claim for himself an unlimited amount of blood and up to eight pints for any member of his family or friends for any one time. That is, a donor may use his claiming privilege only once. After it has been used, the donor must give another pint of blood in order for the privilege to be renewed. A unit or pint of blood usually costs its recipient $25.

A representative from the University of San Francisco posed a question regarding public relations techniques. Edmond Lew, student information co-ordinator for the City College blood drive, posed some solutions to the problems of publicity. Working with twelve Bay Area colleges in the planning of campus blood drives will orient prospective donors to the merits of giving blood.

"We even post bulletins in the rest rooms," mused Lew.

City College will continue to host ICBC gatherings in the future because, according to a Blood Bank spokesman, "It has a storehouse of ideas." It is hoped that the eventual unity of the Supervisor Bob Mendelsohn, political science instructor at City College, lends a hand to the City College blood drive.

Students Association Office) and can leave messages for the Associated Students Blood Drive Commission."

Barbra Streisand and George Segal in "The Owl and the Pussycat" come clean.

'The Owl and the Pussycat'

The sneak preview of "The Owl and The Pussycat" at the Metro 1 was another smash for that great All-American girl, Barbra Streisand, proving that women really are liberated today. She accomplishes this without her vibrato voice, but uses four letter words that can really do wonders.

Streisand's role as Doris, a prostitute, leaves you wanting more, but Felix (played by George Segal) has the uncanny ability to stop the lust before it goes too far.

Felix is a library clerk who tries to keep the victorian era alive in this Pepsi generation, while performing in the role of the innocent bystander.

Felix saw the beauty, Doris, from his small closet queen apartment window through a spyglass. He felt uncomfortable with this scene going on in his surroundings, so he had her evicted from her flop house. It was here that she came into his apartment for shelter, and for the purpose of telling him off.

The two people meet and try to upset the world, but soon become closely acquainted and united.

Her sharp and flashy lingerie will start you laughing and staring.

It is a picture that demands attention with a deep meaning regarding the values and opinions of the age of aquarius. The satire encompasses a picture of false fronts, but points out the changes, as well as the foibles of these times.

By Matthew J. Nelson

Countess Liberté

Ah, the Countess loves the smiling campus boys who open doors and lounge about looking luscious. Even the most beautiful are far from being perfect apollos. And many of you are — they have a wonderful American expression— clobs.

One of the reasons that women heave you overboard, is your appearance. Here is the hardest evaluation: face yourself in the mirror. You may see an incredible vision "only a mother could love." Then take stock of your wardrobe, your hair and your physiques.

Some will have to forfeit the right to wear tight bell-bottoms. Those with sagging derrieres, and beer bellies, must make a change in diet or style. Yet there are sexy young things who insist on that dreadful ensemble of the vest; the pendleton, the workboots and baggy levis.

Please wear army jackets that fit. And please keep the tye-dyed sheet on the bed not on your back. And be imaginative my simple darlings, tye dye the tee-shirts!

Why, why do you budding Simon and Garfunkels have hair that Liberte would use to sand furniture? A little cream rinse, some conditioners, perhaps some coloring for the drab straw I see.

Nothing appeals more to women, excites them, provokes them than long, healthy, flowing hair and a sensuous body poured into beautiful fabrics.

Some excel in this department but when they open their mouths – c'est fini for them, and it just proves that a striking face is not enough these days.

Scansion Corner

I'd like to take the chance to review two records against each other. Warning: Both albums are good, so please use my comments as a guideline.

The newer of the albums is "Abraxas" by Santana (Columbia KC 30130).

On this LP, Santana tries to emulate that to some extent.

"Black Magic Women — Gypsy Queen" is a massive attempt at intertwining two songs, one by Peter Green and the other by Gabor Szabo. It's a good attempt and the results are great.

After that, the rest of the LP falls on its face. It's a good album, but everything sounds the same. After fifteen minutes of it, a headache ensued from the overpowering drumwork (three percussionists no doubt!).

The guitar and bass lines have come tighter together. But the way Carlos Santana makes his "geetar" sound like a tenor sax is out of this world. It's a good album.

The other LP came out last spring almost simultaneously.

The first is "Bridge Over Troubled Water" by Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel (Columbia KCS 9914). Six of the 11 songs have been released from this great LP, leaving five more unturned.

At times, the LP is sad, at times humorous, at times mournful, at times frivolous. Get it anyway. It is a cinch to win a Grammy award as LP of the year.

Let us not forget that title song. It's overwhelming in stereo. Song of the year, and no less.

By Bruno R. Forner

editorial

Thanks A Lot

Once again Thanksgiving time is upon us. As usual everyone will find something for which to be thankful. Most people will be thankful they are not a turkey!

Consider the situation of Private First Class Al Slade who will be celebrating Thanksgiving near Chu Luai in Vietnam. He has been wounded twice since his tour of duty began almost a year ago in that Asian country. Yet, he must remain there. What does he have to be thankful for . . . the scars on his arms, or his slight limp?

Maybe Al Slade is thankful that he is not confined in the psycho ward of a veterans' hospital like his buddy, Phil Jonas.

Will Arnold Williams have a nice Thanksgiving? He is a widower, the father of six children. He was let go from his job last week because, as the foreman of the plant told him, "Production is slow this time of the year, Arnold; I'm sorry." It will shatter Arnold to go on the welfare rolls because he is a proud man who likes to work. His children must eat, and there aren't many jobs open for a warehouseman during the winter months.

Many of the hippies will be thankful for Thanksgiving. They will be standing on Market Street begging money so they can eat. They won't have turkey; they'll just try to scrape up 35 cents to buy a bowl of bean soup at one of the downtown coffee shops . . . and be thankful that there is a coffee house open on Thanksgiving.

By Jim Tolland

Joe Konte
Cops Are The Losers

A jury of twelve removed the shackles from the hands of the Los Siete defendants November 7, and immediately clamped them on the police officers of San Francisco.

The six Latinos, on trial for the murder of police officer Joseph Brodnik, were acquitted of the crime.

That fatal day's actions are still covered with a haze of confusion, but the accepted story is that officer Brodnik and his partner, Paul McGoran, stopped the youths for a routine investigation concerning reports of burglaries in that vicinity. While the pair talked to the six youths, a scuffle occurred, and the tragic results found Brodnik shot dead and McGoran stretched out with a broken jaw and missing teeth.

And, of course, while this went on, the six defendants watched. Of course.

But even with the evidence stacked against Los Siete, the jury accepted the tales of conniving Charles Garry and company, who shuffled the deck, and dealt the six aces their freedom.

And this verdict comes about after the jury heard the following evidence:

- Eye witnesses who testified seeing a youth emerge from the fracas waving a gun.
- McGoran's broken jaw, proving that he was assaulted, which is a crime.
- The deadly weapon, which the defendants tossed into the shrubs when they frantically fled the scene.
- The panicky exit of the six, as if they felt guilty of a crime; coupled with their allegedly stealing a car.

The verdict of the tragedy, however, is final. But it is a tragedy of greater dimensions than one dead officer, as grievous as it may be. The deadly venom lashed out by the poisonous minds of the Los Siete supporters is a tragedy. Six people accused of murdering a man were booked as heroes in the slanted texts of these shallow figures.

And these same backward minds who condemned the injustice of the system and insisted the six could not get a fair trial should be choking on the stupidity of their hate filled words.

Los Siete were not the losers in this case. The loser is the community.

The policemen of San Francisco have seen one comrade slain, and another lynched on a rope of hate.

It will be a policeman with a short memory who runs aimlessly into a dangerous situation which has a violent odor around it. The police won't respond with the same speed and fearlessness that the people have come to expect, and who could blame them if they get discouraged.

But on second thought, the cops probably will respond to just as quickly to that next frantic plea for help.

They remember Brodnik and McGoran, two cops who had to do a job, and in the tradition of the city's policemen, they too will not be discouraged.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography. Editorial office is in S-304. Phone 587-7272, ext. 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue 94112.

EDITORS

COPY
PAUL THIELE

SPORTS
MIKE CHAN

FEATURES
JIM TOLAND

NEWS
JOE KONTE

HEADLINES
BRUNO FORNER

REPORTERS

John Contu, Bill Collins, Steve Colter, Gary Delucchi, Catherine Dempsey, Virginia Elliott, Shirley Fagarino, Norma Fong, Robert Formon, Robert Guichard, Pauline Guillermo, Edward Hartzler, Mike Li, Ted Lyou, John MacDonald, Dennis McGhee, Mike Millard, Marilyn Murphy, Matt Nelson, Ronald Patrick, Charles Prongos, Tim Thompson, James Lolland, Dorothy Shinder.

ADVISER

MRS. DORRY COPPOLETTA

Tutorial Center History Divulged

Editor's note: The following is in response to an article which appeared in the October 19 issue of the Guardsman stating that the Tutorial Center was founded in Spring, 1969.

By Judy Kay, AS President

The On-Campus Tutorial Program was begun in October of 1968. At that time it was a completely student-run organization, consisting of a student director and an all-student staff. There was, of course, a faculty advisor who helped out whenever needed.

A major emphasis of the program then was to create an informal atmosphere and take that closed-in classroom feeling away from tutoring sessions. Conversations between tutor and pupil were encouraged.

In those days, Tutorial Center coffee was five cents a cup. The center had longer hours then, from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., in order to give all students a chance to use its services. Many times, special arrangements were made for students and tutors to get together off campus and after hours.

The program offered tutoring in almost every subject taught at City College. There were about 100 tutors, half of them volunteers, the other half paid. Tutors who were not U. S. citizens were paid through a special fund from the Associated Students.

Although most of the students receiving help were from City College, arrangements were sometimes made to tutor people of the community. These people were referred to the center by the Board of Education.

The staff of the center tried to find a tutor for every student who asked for one, in any subject, sometimes with the help of instructors. When there was a large demand for help in one subject, clinics were organized and taught by volunteer faculty members or outside instructors. These classes were later continued as seminars, with the students helping each other. Informal classes were held for tutors on effective tutoring methods and problems encountered in tutoring. One of the most enjoyable and informative of these was conducted by Mr. John Mass of the English Department.

In those days, from its founding until the summer of 1969, the home of the Tutorial Center was B-7, the old Bookstore, which was torn down in order to build the new Student Center.

The facilities, used by more than 500 students a semester, were moved to one desk in the already crowded COH office in Cloud Hall. There were promises that a bungalow would soon be provided for the center. We never received that bungalow or room of our own until just last semester when a faculty member, Dr. Lance Rogers, became director.

These glimpses of On-Campus Tutorial Center history and philosophy were unfortunately not brought out in the October 19 issue of the Guardsman.

These things should be known to the students of City College so that they will realize the services their Tutorial Center can provide, if they will but ask for them. After all, we offered them before, when I was executive secretary and, later, director of the program.

AS Council (continued)

Continued from Page 1

Sally Moore then said that the referendum was a success. A protest will be staged for the arrival of Nguyen Ky on December 1. Council voted to endorse such a thing 5-1-2.

After that, a slew of minor issues were discussed by Bonnie Solomon. They were: Committee for vandalism; the Executive Council; the rummage sale; the letter to the Municipal Railway; the hiring committee; noise in the Student Union; and a note that the hiring committee will meet on November 19.

On Wednesday, November 18, only two issues were discussed. Guests were Dean Hillsman and Dean Pope.

Dean Samuels brought out the question of the possibility of the "ABCD—No Credit" grading system. According to Dean Billwiller, it is illegal under Title Five of California State Law.

Council wanted the rule to be relaxed for CCSF's case. Charles Borden dissented saying that it would cause overpopulation in many colleges since gpa's would climb higher without an F grade on a student's record.

Dean Hillsman said that the system merely erases the threat of an F. He predicted that this system may become a standard in most state junior colleges.

The motion for sending a letter to the JC chancellor was unanimous.

Tom Cleaver lodged the complaint that a couple of students were passing out leaflets in the cafeteria.

All were non-students.

Dean Samuels noted that such an action is illegal under college rules.

Hillsman said that similar regulations exist at the state level.

Chris Davis, one of the two student activity aides stationed in the cafeteria (to replace campus cops), gave his side to the incident.

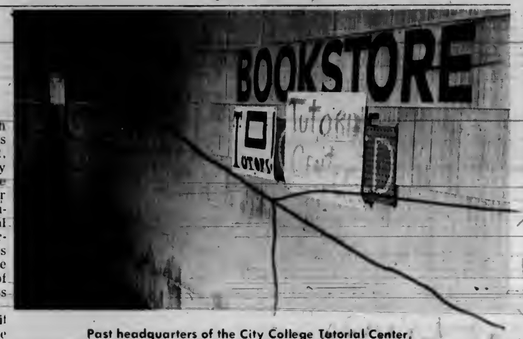
Samuels said that he felt the rules liberal in passing out leaflets as he has not turned any away since he has been director of student activities.

Judy Kay concluded the meeting by announcing that there will be no council meetings the following week.

ADDENDUM:

Student Council sent Judy Kay, Martin Poon, Charles Borden, Bonnie Solomon, and John Goebal as City College's representatives to the State conference in Fresno.

Transcendental Meditation



Transcendental Meditation is a simple, scientific and natural technique which develops the full potential of the mind. This technique allows the mind to systematically transcend the subtle states of the thought process and consciously arrive at the source of thought, an inexhaustible reservoir of energy and creative intelligence.

The technique is taught individually so that each student may develop the full potential of his mind. Transcendental Meditation involves no concentration or contemplation. It simply uses the natural tendency of the mind to seek a field of greater happiness and fulfillment.

City College will give anyone interested a chance to become involved in this fascinating process of the mind on Tuesday, Dec. 1 at 11 a.m. in VA-115 John Lyons, from the Students International Meditation Society, will lecture on the subject, followed by a question-answer period.

Future plans for Transcendental Meditation here include monthly appearances of speakers on campus to discuss the technique. Further information can be obtained by phoning 584-1144 and by writing or visiting the Students International Meditation Society, 2728 Channing Way, Berkeley, California.

Editors Note: This is the man the Beatles and Mia Farrow turned to in times of trouble.

Past headquarters of the City College Tutorial Center.

More On Bennett . . .

Continued from Page 1

Senator John Kennedy. It was an opportunity for Bill Bennett to meet the man who would be influential in the new administration.

The new United States Attorney General, Robert Kennedy, declined to support Bennett's appeal for El Paso's divestiture of the Pacific Northwest Pipeline Co.

William Bennett's persistence finally brought him to the United States Supreme Court representing the State of California.

"The Federal Power Commission has no power to approve the merger if the attorney general (Brownell) ruled it violated the Clayton Act," the Supreme Court ruled.

The gas monopoly had its own divestiture plan, by which it would sell Pacific to the fourth biggest monopoly in the world. El Paso was the eighth biggest monopoly. William Bennet maintained this was still a monopoly.

Stanley Mosk, now a California Supreme Court Justice, was the attorney general of California at the time. He appointed Bennett special counsel to the case. By this time, Bennett had spent nearly a decade on the case.

An El Paso attorney phoned Bennett, asking if he intended to appeal this "divestiture" plan.

"I don't know," he replied.

Incredibly, the private attorney threatened to have the State's special counsel (Bennett) removed from the case if he persisted. Governor Brown phoned him minutes later, with concerns similar to those of the El Paso attorney.

William Bennett

Shortly after, Brown removed him from the case.

He phoned the Chronicle which, obliged him. Soon everyone wanted to know who was dumping the consumer-oriented special counsel from the case.

Don't get mad, get even. Robert Kennedy recommended.

El Paso then hired the most expensive attorney in Washington — Clark Clifford, a friend of Vice President Johnson and his future Secretary of Defense.

The attorney from San Francisco found himself representing the California consumers against Governor Brown, attorney general Lynch, El Paso's thirty lawyers, most western state governors and attorney generals, the Federal Power Commission, and the United States Government.

Kennedy's attorney general, Nicholas Katzenbach, also buckled under to California's persuasion, declining to help Bennett.

Associate Justice Hugo Black questioned if a district court judge could violate the Supreme Court's order to El Paso Co. to sell Pacific Northwest to a bigger monopoly.

This time, the high court even spelled out the specific price by which El Paso must sell the Pacific Northwest Natural Gas Co.

In the meantime, Governor Reagan declined to appoint the consumer-spokesman to the California Public Utilities Commission.

"The PUC was conceived during the progressive administration of Hiram Johnson," said Bennett. "He couldn't have imagined what is has become today."

Before he left governmental service, Bennett held press conferences, predicting Reagan's appointment of pro-utility commissioners, and the subsequent approval of new rate increases charged to California consumers.

Bennett's appeal against the new monopoly was still alive. As a private citizen, with his own funds, he sent telegrams to several Supreme Court Justices. His action was unprecedented, but the court did surprise everyone involved by agreeing to hear the private citizen, who claimed to represent the interests of the California consumers.

Richard Nixon and Attorney General Mitchell were members of a law firm hired by El Paso. Bennett questioned why the press didn't reveal that El Paso had paid the firm $771,000.

"How can you divide up your firm's receipts and not know who that money came from," said Bennett, questioning the new administration's objectivity in the case. Attorney General Mitchell refused to support Bennett.

Cesar Chavez and others endorsed him for the attorney general's race in California in 1970, but the big-money people didn't back him.

After Bennett's college hour lecture, he answered questions.

When asked about his friend Ralph Nader, Bennett said Nader lacks power.

"If you want to contribute and win, you must enter government and get its power on your side," Bennett said. "Nader helps publicize problems, though."

Bennett was elected to the State Board of Equalization November 3.

"I'd rather have Ed Reinecke lose," the governor was heard in comment, "than that guy Bennett win."

1970 Gridiron Pictures

Quarterback Frank Oross scrambles up the middle.

RAM FALL '70 GRID-IRON SQUAD TENACIOUS — AS THEY TAKE SIXTH SPOT

Quarterback Frank Oross barely gets a pass off.

Larry Haren receives a pass.

Tackle Jerry Greys pursues a play.

Jim Walsh puts a stopper on a Merritt gain.

Asian Students Achieve Major Progress

By Paul Thiele

Asian students at City College have achieved what they consider major progress in administration recognition of students' opinions through the controversial open position in the counseling department.

Members of the three Asian groups on campus, the Asian Association for Unity, Chinese Cuiturai Club, and Chinese Students Association, upon learning that an applicant for the job, Dr. Wai Yin Syn, was not recommended by the counseling department for hiring, decided that they could not watch their interests and needs be ignored by the counseling department and administration.

It was the feeling of the students that Syn, an immigrant student whose native language is Cantonese, and who has a Ph.D. in Educational Administration, was more qualiiied for the position than the counseling department's first choice, Steven Wong.

According to the students, Wong spoke Cantonese poorly and he would be a satisfactory counselor for Whites, but not for Asians who have trouble speaking English and who are unfamiliar with the education processes such as course preprequisites, requirements, and other possibly mystifying procedures.

At the November 19 meeting of the Community College Board of Governors, counseling chairman Don Marcus laid his cards on the table and said he "regretted that the administration has given veto power to the students" according to AAU official, Dennis Fong.

Fong said that veto power is not his desire, but rather "mutual consent" similar to the procedure at Oakland's Laney College where students, faculty, and administration have equal votes on the interviewing committee.

Fong believes that the existing ill will this semester would have been avoided if the counseling department had made a greater effort to get students involved.

"If the administration was looking for a legitimate method of absorbing the students, they would give them what they ask for once in awhile," Fong said.

"What has happened as a result of this is that people in the community, at other colleges, and even out of the state have been informed about it. If they had hired Syn, nothing would have happened.

"The entire episode has done a great deal to solidify our ranks," Fong said, adding that the college's Asian groups correspond with other Asian groups to offer help to prospective students, saving them the confusion of the registrar's office.

Fong looks ahead to flourishing communication with the community, Asian groups in local high schools, bay area colleges, and Asian news media to inform people about the intricacies of City College.

"This college is really bewildering at times," Fong said, "but it's coming together. More and more people are getting involved in active roles."

Editor's note: In the November 20 issue of the Guardsman it was reported the counseling candidate had a Ph.D. in Psychology. This was erroneous. Wong presently is close to receiving a master's degree and is a licensed psychologist. We regret the error.

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 6
Published by the Journalism students
December 10, 1970

the Guardsman

Hugh Trevor-Roper emphasizes a point with Dr. Louis Batmale (center) and Dr. Al Tapson of history department.
—Photo by Gordon MacDonald

Eminent Historian Honored by College

By Jim Toland and Joe Konte

Hugh Trevor-Roper, Regius Professor of modern history at Oxford was honored at a dinner and reception, in the Statler Wing of Smith Hall, Wednesday night, December 2.

Roper, who was once a British intelligence officer and achieved fame by writing "The Last Days of Hitler," was served dinner by the third semester Hotel and Restaurant students.

Dean Warren White, while introducing H. R. Trevor-Roper, referred to City College as "The Oxford of the Outer Mission District." Roper carried this idea further by saying "I do not understand student unrest at Oxford, let alone here in San Francisco."

Roper attributes much of the rebelliousness of today to what he calls "the Peter Pan syndrome." Roper said, "I am sure that they all, one day grow up."

Roper's special interest is Elizabethan history. He feels that the persecution of witches during this period was really the manifestation of a fear of social non-conformity. Roper finds only evil in religious orthodoxy. He feels that the capitalist development must have another cause.

Roper spoke to a standing room audience at the Little Theater the following day.

His topic was Adolf Hitler, who he called a "man of extremely powerful mind."

Roper commented on Hitler's Mein Kampf, remarking "all Germans had a copy but very few read it. They called it unreadable, and it is unreadable." The noted historian then dryly said, "I've read it."

Charley Chaplain's film "Great Dictator," gave a superficial view of Hitler, according to Roper. "He was more than an inventor, but a serious threat to the world."

Hitler had outlined his plans for his

(Continued on Page 3)

Council Disrupted with Threats

By Bruno R. Forner

One of the most violent and impetuous meetings of AS Council, a meeting marked by threats, disruptions of order, and the condemnation of an editorial published in the Guardsman, was held on November 30.

During the meeting, Carlton Thomas, who sponsored the abolishment of card-playing in Statler Wing, admitted that the Council had not been enforcing the playing in Statler Wing. Thomas attacked the Council by angrily stating it should not make rules and then be lax in enforcing them.

Thomas said that Council was, in effect, playing God, and that if nothing was to be done about the situation, then a group of Black students would take action.

Director of Student Activities, Art Samuels, said that the lounge in the lower level of the new Student Union Building will be open to card-players as soon "as the furniture arrives."

Thomas proposed that certain hours

(Continued on Page 3)

Ornamental Horticulture Students Improve Scene

There are some green thumbs at work on campus. Responsible for the planter box and bench in front of the Student Union are students in the landscape design division of CCSF's Ornamental Horticulture program.

Sidney Lewin, who teaches students to beautify with flora, praised Harry Nelson, campus planner and chairman of O.H., for building up the department from ten students to over 200.

"This is now one of the best facilities in California," Lewin said.

Landscape construction, nursery work, flower arranging, and plant propagation are all offered in the department. Lewin explained that students "learn how to deal with clients, identify plants, grow them, and they find out how to use them."

Lewin pointed out that the rise in the field of horticulture is rapid and that it is much more of a profession now. After school, interested high school students get acquainted with the field under Mr. Hilton. The program welcomes the curious and there are introductory courses.

Now that this is a community college, O.H. has more to do with campus maintenance; but at this point, said Lewin, "materials are scrounged or donated and it is hoped more money will come through." This flexible program trains people in work from caretaking and gardening to an introduction in landscape architecture, a profession requiring five or six years of study that could result in earning $15 an hour.

Clifford Edison and David Barbaria, students in landscape construction class are removing a dead olive tree prior to replanting new trees.

editorial

Comments have been directed to the Guardsman concerning a column by Joe Konte in the November 25 issue questioning the acquittal of Los Siete.

We strongly disagree with the stand taken in the article, but we will "defend to the death the columnist's right to say it."

The column contained exactly what a column should—opinionated statements that are wide open to criticism and argument from the newspaper's readership. To deny a columnist's right to print his non-libelous opinion is a blatant violation of freedom of the press.

Demands for retraction of the column cannot be respected because mere disagreement with a columnist's opinions can never be the sole reason for retraction.

Readers must remember that columns and editorials are sounding boards for opinion and the reader's recourse is the letter to the editor.

—Paul Thiele

Joe Konte

How to Succeed

The book is called, "How to Succeed in War Without Really Trying," authored by Richard Nixon, with a foreward by Spiro T. Agnew.

This brilliant piece of literature covers the period from Inauguration Day, 1969 to the present. Agnew's introduction includes reasons for U.S. involvement in Indochina.

An excerpt from page 13 reveals Agnew's declaration on those who criticize U.S. policy:

"Any troglodytic leftists and hopeless hysterical hypochondriacs of history can plainly see that whimpering isolationism as opposed to mulish obstructionism is the basic reason for repudiation by the vicars of vacillitation."

Or, as Mr. Nixon so bluntly put it.

The remainder of the book is devoted to explaining the strategy of conducting war, which Mr. Nixon outlines with use of the 5 W's and the "H" . . .

When: The time must be when your country is busy with too many other problems so they will soon become apathetic.

Where: The war should be held in a foreign land, so the napalm and bombing won't hurt your home. Rice paddies and poverty-stricken villages are preferred sights.

Who: The enemy must be a rotten government. Communists and dictatorships are good to fight because nobody likes them. And it helps to call them "gooks" or any other name to dehumanize them into targets instead of people.

The Guardsman contingent, Virginia Elliot (center) and James Moses (right), meet Robert Mitchum, super-star, at press conference for "Ryan's Daughter" film.

By Virginia Elliott and James Moses

Robert Mitchum, in town to plug his new movie, "Ryan's Daughter," was nervously awaiting the upcoming press conference. Dressed in a mod suit and sipping scotch, Mitchum eulogized the fantastic view of San Francisco as seen from his hotel suite. "Beautiful . . . just beautiful."

When asked about political involvement Mitchum said, "Political groups are suspect. I always check their motive and their bank account. I find altruism refreshing, rewarding, and too far-fetched to believe."

Mitchum, who used to write, has given it up. "I was getting too abstract and too self-absorbed with it." Mitchum said that he now desires to do nothing.

Mitchum said that he got into acting because, "Poverty is a social crime. I got tired of being thrown in jail." Mitchum once escaped from a chain gang. "I ah just ah . . . walked away."

Mitchum describes his latest film as "just a quiet little love story set in Ireland." It had a budget of over thirteen million dollars. Mitchum, who looks for an absence of tedium in his scripts, says that winning an Oscar would only mean a new dress for his wife and an evening at the theatre for him.

Mitchum, who has proven his talent in both acting and writing, is not a joiner. he is indifferent to those things that he feels do not concern him. He is his own man and possibly one of the last of the rugged individualist.

Student Opinion

The Guardsman welcomes letters of opinion and reserves the right to condense them to meet the limitation of space.

Los Siete

Dear Editor:

The editorial concerning the verdict of the trial of Los Siete, written by Joe Konte, could not have been further from the truth of the matter. Had Mr. Konte attended one session of the trial this summer, he could never have written what he did. There are at least eleven points of misinformation in the editorial. They are:

(1) Eye witnesses.
(2) McGoran's broken jaw.
(3) The deadly weapon.
(4) The panicky exit of the six.
(5) The verdict being a tragedy.
(6) The Los Siete's lawyers and supporters were unqualified.
(7) The loser is the community.
(8) The policemen of San Francisco have seen one comrade slain and another lynched on a rope of hate.
(9) Police should not go off half cocked.
(10) Police will act as they always do, anyway.
(11) God help you if you are not white and you have a run-in with a cop.

—Tom Cleaver

Thanksgiving

Dear Editor:

More power to Jim Toland. His "Thanks a Lot" editorial was food for thought during this "joyous" holiday season. Too often we who have so much to be thankful for, forget about those who are less fortunate. Many unfortunate people throughout the world end up saying thank you with a cynical tone to their voice. Whatever it means for others, they know that it means nothing for them.

Edward Hartzler

Faculty Lounge

Dear Editor:

Mature women who are students on the campus feel it is a hardship to cross campus, having to go up and down all of those stairs just to get to the student lounge.

This policy should be changed so as to allow us more mature students the use of the faculty lounge or else the setting aside of special provisions for us.

Dorothy Shinder

Scansion Corner

By Bruno Forner

We have been witness to a musical phenomenon that has been taking place for the past year or so. The phenomenon is the oft-fustian art of the live album.

We take it under our wing to review for you two live albums.

The first LP is the impudently naughty "Bless Its Pointed Little Head" by the Jefferson Airplane (RCA Victor LSP 4133), which came out last fall.

During the performance, recorded at the Fillmore East-West, they do for past hits, "It's No Secret," "Three-fifths of a Mile in Ten Seconds," "Plastic Fantastic Lover" are done—and done well. All are much better than the originals.

The group does two folk numbers. Fred Neil's "The Other Side of This Life" is done in an energetic version that lasts 6½ minutes. "Fat Angel" is the other. Listen as lead guitarist Jorma Kaukonen builds the song into a delightful frenzy. They do both songs justice.

A showcase of blues virtuosity is in the classic "Rock Me Baby." Paul Kantner's singing and Kaukonen's magnificent guitar are highlights.

Two of the tracks are spontaneous. One is "Turn Out the Lights," a crazy 58-second long thing that pokes fun at the lighting system.

The other is the slowly-moving "Bear Melt." This is 666 seconds of ad lib music. Grace Slick handles the vocals (all free form) in her best style.

The second LP is "Live at Leeds" by The Who (Decca DL-79175), released over the summer.

Side one is 14½ minutes long. Three of the tracks (out of four) are probably old standards with the group. They've done 'em to perfection. They are "Young Man's Blues," "Summertime Blues," and "Shaking All Over." Also on this side is "Substitute," composed by flamboyant lead guitarist Pete Townshend. They do it well.

Side two has 22 minutes and two tracks. They do a 7½-minute version of "Magic Bus." The shouting blues between lead singer Roger Daltrey and

Countess Liberté

Now for the trial by tape recorder. Those of you who have tortured women with your droning monologues, are now sentenced to playing them back. You may experience great pain at the witless commentary on your dull job, your sexual hangups and your childhood.

The intelligent man listens and profits. I sympathize with my chattering apollos. It is difficult to keep up with the facile feminine mind.

Examine some of the more corny and classic bits of your "cruising dialogue. No one is impressed by "I eat organic food," "I am a poet" "I want to get closer to you."

Be obscure. Learn lovemaking from the Kara Sutra. Drink absinthe from ancient recipes. Speak Gaelic or sanskrit.

Above all do not be boring. Hell no fury as a woman bored. Let flapping orifice spout esoteric rather than mundane bravado.

the Guardsman

The Guardsman is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography. Editorial office is in S-304, phone 587-7272, ext. 446. Mailing address is 50 Phelon Avenue, San Francisco, Calif. 94112.

Editor-in-Chief ..... Paul Thiele
Feature Editor ..... Jim Toland
News Editor ..... Joe Konte
Sports Editor ..... Mike Chan

REPORTERS
John Cantu, Bill Collins, Steve Colter, Gary Delucchi, Catherine Dempsey, Virginia Elliott, Shirley Fagorino, Norma Fong, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Pauline Guillermo, Jack Hansen, Mike Li, Ted Lyau, John MacDonald, Dennis McGhee, Max Millard, Marilyn Murphy, Matt Nelson, Ron Patrick, Charlie Prongos, Tim Thompson.

ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

College Nurses To Aid H.E.L.P. Drive

H.E.L.P. needs help and City College's nursing department is undertaking a Christmas canned food and linen drive to aid the organization. There will be a special presentation of the collection to Katy Blair, founder of H.E.L.P., in the Student Union Building on December 18. Meanwhile, students may help by bringing donations, material or monetary, to the Student Union.

H.E.L.P., an acronym for Help Every Lost Person, was founded last March. Its headquarters is a small shop located at 3364-26th Street, between Mission Street and South Van Ness Avenue.

Blair organized it on the precept that its sole purpose would be to help people without the conventionalities of "red tape" procedure. Welfare and social organizations in fact do refer some of their "desperate" cases to H.E.L.P. Generally, however, prospective recipients seek out the organization on their own.

Although the phone at H.E.L.P. is usually always manned, there is a need for extra assistance. Anyone wishing to obtain further information about the job may call 648-7772.

There is also a need for monetary and food contributions, and there is a dire need NOW.

"This is the kind of an organization where you've got to sit down, RIGHT NOW, and write me a check, if you say you're going to do it. People usually forget their pledges. It's like a news story—yesterday's news is old news. The same rule applies to unkept pledges."

Katie Blair is willing to help every lost person, but who is willing to help Katie Blair carry out her plan?

H.E.L.P. office is located on 26th Street. Rosemary Blake is vice-president of H.E.L.P.

Camejo Speaks At City College

In a witty and forceful lecture, Peter Camejo gave his case on "Why America Will Go Socialist?"

Camejo, a former senatorial opponent of Edward Kennedy, made an appearance at City College, November 25 in room 217 of the Visual Arts Building. The lecture was sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance.

Camejo stated that the basic reason why America will go socialist is the gap between the potentiality and the reality within the capitalist system. Quoting Business Week, Camejo said that the economy will produce $100 billion less than what it could have achieved in 1970. He stressed that with $100 billion, America would have the means to wipe out every slum and could solve the problem of pollution.

However, Camejo said they won't be accomplished because it's not profitable to them. To Camejo, "them" represent 30,000 capitalists who control this country.

Continuing, Camejo singled out the key to their power. He said that they make the mass of the people believe that they run the country. Elaborating further, Camejo maintained that they are able to do this through the use of illusions. One big illusion, according to Camejo, are the elections.

The proof to their control of the elections, according to Camejo, is within the election booths. When an individual enters a booth to vote, "you vote for them or you vote for them."

He says there are no democratic institutions in the country. Where in the country, he says, are there really democratic institutions? Where do the people actually vote for what they want? They can't use the election, they can't control their own universities, and they can't control corporations. For instance how, as Camejo pointed out allegorically about the two political parties, can a person chose between two brands of outboard motors when both were made in the same factory.

The only way the masses, says Camejo, can alleviate their problems (i.e. unemployment, inflation, recession) is through mass action. That's the only thing the capitalists fear. Camejo cites the existence of La Raza Unida as an example of how an independent group of people can be mobilized into their own political base, which can sufficiently satisfy their community's needs. The ultimate step, said Camejo, is the unification of various groups with purposes like La Raza Unida.

Only through mass action can the masses solve their problems. Camejo added that if the nation's problems were all solved in earnest by the existing system he would not be advocating its overthrow.

Roper . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

regime long before he came to power.

Hitler was an opportunist in his methods, but consistent in his aims.

In the 1920's, Hitler talked of putting German-Jews into the gas chamber saying that heads would roll — and finally calling for the extermination of all Jews. But Roper pointed out that most people regarded this as simply rhetoric.

Roper showed the relationship of Hitler with Mussolini, whom Hitler considered as "the only man possibly equal to me." Hitler learned from Mussolini that the tide of Communism could be reversed. Hitler laid the blame for his failure on Musssolini, using an example of "the failure of Italian alliances as why he lost."

The German revolution bore the signs of other revolutions in all stages, except that the same man who began it stayed in charge. Roper noted that the French and Russian Revolutions had different men in charge.

Roper described Hitler's planned treatment of those inhabitants of conquered German lands, pointing out the brute force used, the deprivation of education and the neglect of the sick. "The natives," Roper casually reported, "were let to count to ten, but no more."

Although Roper conceded there could be no final judgment of Hitler, but he cited one "brief" judgment from a secretary of Hitler who said that he lacked human spirit.

Roper concluded with a dramatic look at Hitler, stating that it was the utter meanness of Hitler which was the ultimate epitaph of a man who really changed history.

HIS LORDSHIP

At the Sir Francis Drake Hotel press conference, Trevor-Roper did some explaining.

"When you speak about Youth's Revolt at City College," a reporter began, "But I'm not talking about revolt," the historian interrupted. "I'm talking about Hitler."

"Should we address you as, Lord?" someone else asked. "No, because I'm not a lord." The confusion resulted when City College publicists assumed the accuracy of the College Association for Public Events & Services bulletin labeling Trevor-Roper as "lord."

"Professor," a reporter wanted to know, "what's the purpose of this press conference?"

"I don't know," he replied, "I didn't call it."

Council Disrupted . . .

(Continued from Page 1)

be set aside for card-playing in Statler Wing. Martin Poon countered by asking Thomas if he really wanted to abandon card-playing altogether. Poon said that it would be utterly impossible to limit card-playing because of individual scheduling and also, it would be limiting of a privilege.

After much more discussion about the situation, Joe Chan attempted proposing a motion. Thomas consistently interrupted Chan by yelling, "I object! I object! I object!" Chan did not have an opportunity to fully state the motion, so, after some persiflage, withdrew it.

Mike Devine, AS Vice-president, requested that a committee be drawn up to look into the matter. It passed 12-0-2.

Later on in the meeting, the topic was brought up during the course of a discussion on the Student Union Lounge. Thomas persisted in dominating the discussion to the point that Dean Samuels had to raise his voice to him.

Bonnie Solomon moved for a resolution that would prohibit students from dictating to other students. No action was taken on this.

Judy Kay finally brought things under control—tentatively.

A group from Women's Liberation then paraded to the front, passing out copies of the November 25 edition of the Guardsman. They pointed specifically to an editorial on page 3, which was written by News Editor Joe Konte. They charged that the editorial was "racist" and filled with "lies and half-truths."

Tom Cleaver charged, "I've attended several court sessions and not once did I see Konte there!"

At this point, Martin Poon walked out of the meeting, saying that the time had run out and that the meeting should be adjourned.

Afterward, a motion was made to condemn the editorial and demand that a refutation be printed. It passed 7-4-1.

Other subjects were brought up at the meeting, the Nursing program, holding a canned food drive; the Hiring Committee; and the meeting of the Academic Senate.

State Conservation Official Livermore Supports Canal

Norman Livermore, the California Resources Director, predicted that Governor Reagan would establish a recycling commission.

Livermore, California's top conservation official, spoke to about fifty students during college hour. He endorsed the concept of recycling, or collecting glass, paper, and metals for processing and re-use.

Most of his comments were about the controversial California Water Project and the Peripheral Canal, however Livermore tends to favor the complicated systems of pipes, canals, and dams, which would bring water from North California to the more arid southern part of the State.

He played a key role in persuading Governor Reagan to block Dos Rios Dam in Mendocino County.

Livermore cautioned his audience that they should look at themselves before criticizing the conservation practices of others. He specifically referred to the practice of the City of San Francisco flooding beautiful Hetch Hetchy Valley to contain a reservoir of water for the city's municipal water needs. Livermore recalled his father saying that the beautiful valley, not far from the Yosemite, was as beautiful as the more famous National Park.

San Francisco also removes three parts of water out of four from the delta, he reminded. "So how can we criticize Los Angeles for taking water from the rivers and delta of the north?"

The State Water Project began during the depression with the construction of Shasta Dam in 1934. "By 1980, Norman Livermore predicted, the California Water Project will be in full flow." His audience of young conservationists shuddered at the prospect.

Anti-Ky Rally Shows S.F. Voters Oppose Vietnam War

City College had a representative group at the Ky protest rally that covered Nob Hill, December 1.

Sally Moore, chairwoman of the campus branch of the Student Mobilization Committee, told the Guardsman that of the 29 people arrested at the rally, none were from City College. Nor were any students injured in the fracas.

"We had people working on it, but had there been more monitors, the clash with police could have been avoided."

"It showed that the majority of the people are against the Vietnam War," Moore said about the rally. "Ky didn't have the right to represent the people of San Francisco since the majority voted against it," she said, concerning the passage of Proposition J at the polls last November.

"We wanted to have a peaceful, legal demonstration. I think we did it successfully."

Sally could not give an estimate of the size of the crowd, since she was in a sound truck at the time, but said that the police estimate (of 5,000) was probably the most accurate.

Sally said that the "police were very calm and very good" toward the crowd.

The melee didn't break out until a later group arrived.

the Guardsman

SPORTS

Rams Beaten By Owls 44-19

The City College Rams finished their 1970 gridiron season with a 44-19 loss to the Foothill College Owls. The loss at Foothill Stadium on November set the Ram record at four wins and five losses. In Golden Gate Conference league play the Rams racked up two of their wins and all five of their losses.

The only real highlights for the Rams in the Foothill game were the huge chunks of yardage that halfback Darrel Mitchell churned up against the Owls. All in all, Mitchell in only 21 carries racked up 262 yards. In fact, Mitchell accounted for all three of the Ram touchdowns against Foothill.

Nonetheless though, the Rams even with Mitchell's running just couldn't withstand the aerial assault that Foothill quarterback Todd Starks threw against the Rams. Starks put the ball in the air 23 times and connected on 12 of his attempts for 260 yards.

One big factor in the success of the Foothill passing attack was the rollout passing technique that Starks employed in the game. Starks on the rollout would for the most part move out toward his strong side, the right side of the field. Through this maneuver Starks had a twin option of either carrying or passing for yardage.

The game was deadlocked with no score throughout the first quarter. However late in the second quarter, Starks hit with a short pass receiver Wayne Dismukes who raced through the Ram secondary, broke two tackles, and scored standing up for Foothill.

On Foothill's next series of downs, Starks again on a short pass hit running back Casey Griffin who twisted and sidestepped his way 73 yards for the touchdown.

The half ended with Foothill in a comfortable 14-0 lead.

Opening strong and fast in the third quarter, Foothill methodically worked their way downfield with Casey Griffin plowing over from the three for the third Foothill touchdown.

Behind by three touchdowns, Ram quarterback Frank Oross had to start putting the ball in the air. The Foothill defense read Oross' intentions and started blowing in at full blast. On a crucial play, Oross was forced to scramble out of his pocket, and while still scrambling he hit Darrel Mitchell at the line of scrimmage, the Foothill 42, among a host of Ram blockers.

Following his blockers for yardage, Mitchell broke away from them and changed his field. After literally running through the Foothill defenders, Mitchell tore through the grasps of two would-be tacklers for the score. His crunching run covered 58 yards.

Foothill surged right back behind the hard running of workhorse Casey Griffin. With Griffin's successive carries the Owls were able to march down to the Ram four. Starks finished the job with a 4-yard pass to Wayne Dismukes.

Following possession, the Rams chose to let Mitchell run roughshod over the Owls. Carry after carry, Mitchell ate up the yardage. He was on sweeps and off-tackle plays, and when the holes weren't there he would still sneak through for yardage.

On one carry, Mitchell took the handoff found his hole clogged with Owls, so he spun around and swept the right end on the line for good yardage. Mitchell culminated that drive with a 3-yard touchdown run.

Stars and company were just too hot that day, for he continued to pass for two more scores. A 32-yard pass to Victor Juarez and a 17-yarder to Wayne Dismukes capped off Foothill's scoring.

Mitchell scored one more touchdown for the Rams as he struck right up the middle for 62 yards and a score.

Basketball

1969 Golden Gate Conference Coach of the Year, Sid Phelan

Basketball season is upon us again here at City College. This fact should be of some significance, since the team has taken the Golden Gate Conference Championship ten out of eleven years.

City College basketball coach and last year's GGC coach of the year, Sid Phelan presently expects half of last year's squad to return. Among those not returning is the GGC's Player of the year, forward Darrell Johnson. Last year he led the team in both scoring and rebounding.

To make up for Johnson's departure, coach Phelan has indicated that good teamwork can more than compensate for the absence of a player like Johnson.

Among those returning from last year's squad are: guards Billy Metcalf, and Harold Byrd, forwards Larry Haren, Terry Bradley, and centers Malcolm Kirkwood and Jerry LeBlance.

Some of the many rookies trying out for berths on the squad are Robert Taylor, Willie Daigle, Wayne Snelgro, James Sims, and Charles Goodwin.

On December 4, the Rams will meet in exhibition play Contra Costa, at Contra Costa at 8 p.m. On the following day, the fifth, the Rams will meet the USF Frosh at 6 p.m. at USF. The following Tuesday, the 8th, Hartnell College will come to City for a game, tipoff time is 8 p.m. Complete schedules will be presented in coming issues.

Ram Gridder's Schedule Set-Up For Ram Fall

The season is now finally over and done with as some would say. The record sets City College's fortunes at 4 and 5 which, let's face it, is a below-par record. In trying to evaluate this season one must find a pattern or tendency.

Remember when the Rams downed mighty Los Angeles Valley, and took apart San Joaquin College, and then Chabot dumped them good?

A little pattern seems to recur throughout the season.

Think back to the Laney and Merritt games and then to the following games, and now maybe that little pattern is becoming a bit more evident.

In the first five games, the biggest among the five to the Rams was Chabot. The last four games of the schedule featured the entire upper division of the GGC. As you may or may not know the GGC champ is decided by the best win and lose record among league opponents.

In a sense the odds were stacked pretty high against the Rams, for the conference plays seven league games and in this conference if you lose two games your chances for a title are close to impossible. The Rams had already lost to Chabot and they were just about to hit the upper crust of the division.

It was possible, the Rams with their stingy defense and an unpredictable offense could've taken their latter part of the schedule. However the strength of the league was too much for the Rams as the record shows.

However one must remember last year's record of 2 and 7 to this season's 4 and 5 achievements. I hate to say it, but whatever happened to the good old days of bountiful wins.

The answer may lie in recruitments by four-year schools of potential players, the breaks of the game, or the great 49er jinx.

Phelan Machine Ruins Modesto

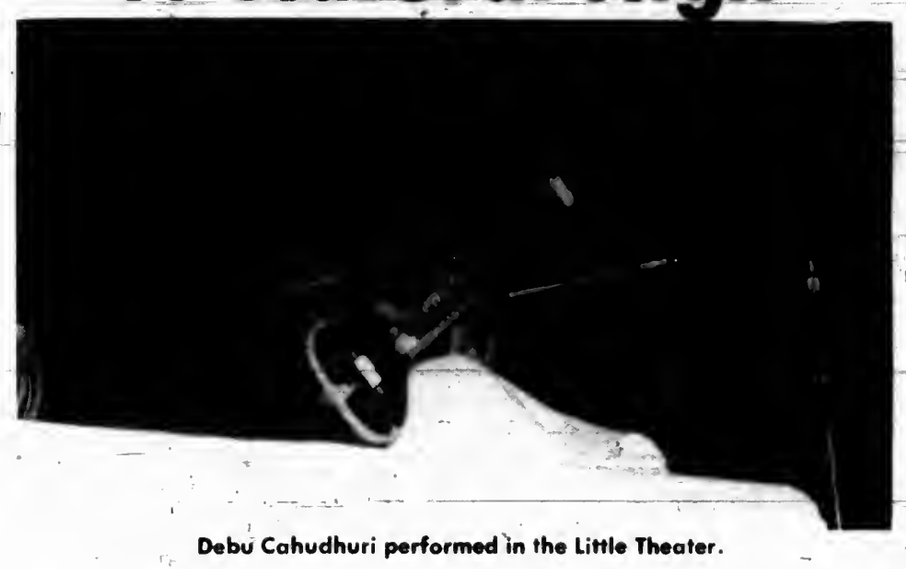
By Jack Hansen

The Phelan Machine, once again, proved discipline is the key to victory. Led by All Golden Gate Conference guard Wild Bill Metcalf, the Rams dumped the Modesto Pirates 63-45 on December 1 at City College Gym.

Bill Metcalf hit 9 of 11 shots from the floor for an incredible 82 per cent, tallying 21 points for the game. Larry Haren showed he could also play defense, he held Modesto's number one gunner Ivie Lea to 4 points before being ejected from the game by the referee. Wayne Snelgro, Bobby Taylor, and Jack Simms, and Jerry LeBlanc also played outstanding ball, but any fan would have to say, "They're all great!"

Modesto also played a good game. Led by Ivie Lea and Casey Rogers, the Pirates held City to only 25 points in the first half. Overpowered by an exceptional Rams' squad, Modesto just couldn't keep the pace. In the second half the Rams broke loose for 38 points for the final 63-45 win.

The most improved player on City's squad, is veteran center Jerry LeBlance. Coach Phelan has put a lot of work into Jerry and it has shown excellent results.



If championships are made to win, things are looking good once again for the Rams. An outstanding record is held by Coach Phelan: 9 of 12 championships, since his debut at City College. Any basketballer, who played under him has nothing but praise for their coach. To use a popular singer's words revised, "They're definite Winners in City's Folks!"

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 7
Published by the Journalism students
December 18, 1970

the Guardsman

REFERENCE DESK

Chudhari Provides A 'Natural High'

Debu Cahudhuri performed in the Little Theater.

By Bruno Forner

If anyone thought he needed grass, acid, speed or other organic or chemical stimulants to enjoy last Thursday's College Hour Concert, he was wrong. Debu Chaudhuri's December 10 sitar performance was vibrant enough to give one a natural high.

Chaudhuri, with the aid of his tabla-thwacking accomplice, was presented by the Music Department and the Associated Students.

Chaudhuri explained that the sitar is a nineteen stringed-string instrument used in Indian classical music. Twelve of the strings were used for resonance.

He said that he has been playing for 27 years, and still finds it very difficult. His comment on the music was, "There is no mysticism, no magic. Just practical. We try to elevate it."

The piece Chaudhuri chose was the fugal composition "The Morning Raga," played in three movements. It was played in a sixteen-beat cycle that shifted from slow to fast.

The concert itself was a joy to one's ears as Chaudhuri started out quite slowly and built it up to a frenzy.

The tabla and sitar combination flailed at one's earlobes, swirling and pounding until one could only give in and let the sounds usurp the brain.

To top it off, Chaudhuri oscillated in time to every beat and every pulse of the tabla-player (as did the audience).

Once the climax was achieved, a deathly silence took hold. The following ovation was overwhelming. All we can say is that Chaudhuri's performance deserved more.

Goebel Outlays Money For Chicago Trip—Card Playing Regulations Set

Any organization that has not submitted a budget to Student Council will be penalized with a 5 per cent cut of funds per day — at least that's what Council ruled December 7.

Mike Devine, AS Vice-president, brought the subject up at the start of the meeting. Martin Poon came up with the penalty proposal and after some discussion, council passed it 9-2-1.

Last Wednesday, it was voted to spend $280 to send a councilman to Chicago for an anti-war convention. At the Monday meeting, Dean Samuels reported that appropriating such money is illegal and that John Goebel, the delegate, had to outlay the money himself. Samuels said that Goebel will be reimbursed.

The Fresno Conference was discussed, with Martin Poon giving a special emphasis to a proposal that an ethnic studies program be taken as a graduation requirement.

Harry Littel, CCSF student, mentioned that there is a possibility of a course in American Indian History being cancelled.

Also mentioned: Judy Kay's request for $180 for the Music Department (passed 10-1-1); a mention of the Christmas Party for the Day Care Center; La Raza's festival December 10; new flags for the campus (Pat Horan's remark: "We could have a big flag-burning."); The counseling department setting up a Vocational Guidance Center; the Curriculum Committee; library hours; petitions for AS office (final date for petitions was December 16); and a report on vandalism.

The December 9 meeting had tougher card playing regulations voted in.

The program Council voted in was in two parts:

a) restriction of card-playing to Statler Wing between 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily.

b) if a person is caught gambling that person will be sent to the proper dean where that person will receive a warning. If that person is caught a second time, he will be suspended.

John Goebel gave a short report on the Chicago Anti-War Convention.

Mrs. Rosenthal's Journalism 26B (Public Relations) class presented a series of estimates for the Spring 1970 calendar. The low bid of $1522.50 was accepted unanimously.

A move to give the Bicycle Club money to buy equipment to protect campus bikes from being pilfered was tabled.

Experimental College!

City College's Experimental College, B5, is truly the best place for students to go for information on activities taking place on and off campus.

Experimental College is a thriving center where representatives of most campus organizations meet to exchange ideas and news about what the groups are doing. It is also the root of the child care center used book exchange, E.C. film series, and Free Critic newspaper.

Classes may be taken for no credit at Experimental College, but the value of the courses are felt by EC to be more than the value of grades or units. Some of the courses are peace science, hatha yoga, beginning guitar, astrology, and frisbee, along with many others. Interested students may register for the courses at B5.

The emphasis of EC is to make the learning experience more pleasurable and to have students participate in the classes without reluctancy.

Students with creative writing or art can submit it to the Free Critic in B5. The Critic is funded by the Associated Students and its goal is a totally free student press at City College of San Francisco.

Rabbi Roger Herst Speaks On Mideast at Hillel Club

By Matt Nelson

In e-261 a gathering of students from the International Club met to hear Rabbi Herst, of the Hillel Club, lecture on the Mid-East situation.

Herst spoke on the role of the Arabs and the Jews in the Mid-East.

He has been raised here in the U.S., and has his doctorate in History. He has done a lot of traveling to many countries, and particularly the Middle East Countries.

Herst stated that the Jews are striving hard with what they have, but the Arabs have more men and arms, and may wipe the Jews out.

Herst said that the U.S. has sent three million dollars to Israel. He added that the Jews have been persecuted too long, and this has to stop.

Herst said he met Arabs in the Mid-East this summer and was treated kindly.

"There is more friction with the Jews and Arabs in the free U.S.," he said.

The Arab students in the room agreed as did the Jews about that statement.

The Arab students also asked him where he got his information on the killing in the Mid-East.

"The British Mandate," Herst replied.

An Arab student said, "The New York times has a different number of killings in the so-called massacre in one of the Villages in the Mid-East."

Arab students said that they can't go back to certain places in the Mid-East occupied by the Jews, even though they are their homelands.

Jews seem to be able to go into most of the Mid-East because Rabbi Herst didn't have trouble in so-called "Arab controlled" countries.

Check Schedule

When planning your class schedule for next semester, remember to keep the Tuesday-Thursday 11-12 hour open. The CCSF College Hour lecture series plans to ask some of the following to speak on campus during college hour:

Earl Warren, David Brower of Friends of the Earth, Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, Pat Paulsen, Stephanie Mills, Fred Goerner (the search for Amelia Erhart), Congressman Pete McCloskey, State Senator George Moscone, as well as novelists and others prominent in their fields.

editorial

Stop the Canal

The Sierra Club recently reversed itself to categorically oppose the construction of the Peripheral Canal.

Opposition to the canal is probably one of the few issues on which all North Californians can unite.

The Peripheral Canal, an aspect of the California Water Project, would divert as much as 80 per cent of the Sacramento-San Joaquin River water from San Francisco Bay and direct it southward. Scientists and conservationists fear it will ruin the ecology of the delta and south bay.

The delta region, near Antioch and Concord, would face an influx of ocean salt water, and the south bay would be deprived of the water circulation from the rivers, which currently flushes the pollutants.

The State Director of Water Resources, William Gianelli, promises that more water will be released from the canal into the delta if the bay's ecology is harmed. But his promise is not binding on him or his successors.

If the Sierra Club and its allies are unsuceessful in preventing the Peripheral Canal's construction, a citizen's watchdog committee, as proposed by Supervisor Bob Mendelsohn, should be established. Composed of representative of industry, government, and conservation groups as well as the general community, it should have the sole power to regulate the flow of the Peripheral canal's water into San Francisco Bay.

Countess Liberte

I have advised the sloppy apollos, now I must take some women to task — for allowing the seedy Don Juans, the idle easy riders and the out and out clods to run the show by virtue of their mad mindlessness.

How can you sit back and smile demurely behind the mask of psuedo-femininity while these befuddled half-wits tramp on your emotions, your money and your sanity?

My dears, if some pitiful thing in a tattered fringe jacket with a mop of lice-filled hair — if this substitute for manhood is pumping lines and lies into your life and disturbing your equilibrium — HANG HIM UP. Or shape him up. I cannot do it alone. I am only one humble Countess battling a sea of clods.

If this creepy creature I am referring to — if he lives in your very house, lolling about with his beer and women — throw him, his tasteless clothes, and his aimless chatter about how you stifle his creativity — all the way to Haight Street. Let him panhandle. Let him find some patsy or depraved person like himself.

If you are worthwhile, beautiful and intelligent, then why should you scramble your marbles with ugliness, worthlessness and sheer mediocrity?

The clods deserve the clods and the women with finesse must get out. Besides, your house will be deloused.

JOE KONTE
Christmas as Seen Through the Crystal Ball

December 25 is close at hand. And we may do well to usher the special day in maybe a week earlier, and, perhaps, invite it to remain with us for a longer stay.

The date must be a magic one, for no other day can bring as much goodness and light to life.

The crystal ball is on the table, and what is seen must be related to you:

— The cold, cynical politician turns his harsh rhetoric into gentle words of world peace, and you think for a moment that he's serious.

— And the white man down the corner greets his fellow black neighbor, and both really mean it when they say, "How are you?"

— The young hippie couple give the patrolman in the black and white auto the peace sign, and the young cop smiles back.

— An old beggar stands helplessly against the condemned building, and a well-dressed man slips a dollar into his hand.

— And the automobiles are left locked in their sheds, the freeways are not crowded, and the air seems easier to breathe.

— The snarl of shoppers, businessmen, and delivery men are not visible downtown, and now all those tall buildings don't really look that bad.

— A hungry family which battles rats daily for a morsel of bread is given a free meal by a charitable organization, and no one accuses its members of cheating the government.

— Our soldiers have been given a day off from hell, and they think how great it would be to have tomorrow off . . . and the day after that . . . and . . .

The crystal ball is clouded now, but the short revelation should foree us to wonder if the day we set aside to celebrate peace on earth should be increased to include the whole year 'round.

Maybe one day could be set aside for the populace to have their war, hate their neighbor, pollute their air, and neglect their poor.

And the remaining 364 days could then be used for the task of building a society where peace and brotherhood would become more than a clouded image on anyone's crystal ball.

Letter to the Editor

FROM: The Membership of San Francisco City College Newman Center.

In recent weeks, City College has been confronted with a problem of major importance to the entire campus community. The main issue is whether or not Dr. Syn's name should be added to the two names presently submitted to the Administration for hiring by the Counselling Department.

The College Administration recognizes the need for an additional counselor. That this person be of Asian origin is likewise without contention. The difficulty arises over who will be appointed to the open position.

The continuing controversy between a significant number of students and the Counselling Department may very well result in no action at all in naming the appointee.

The members of Newman Center, as a concerned student group, have sought out representatives of both sides and have asked them to explain the issue. We find that both sides to the controversy have some valid facts to support their arguments concerning the submission of Dr. Syn's name. The problem, however, has become shrouded in complexities.

To assist in the resolution of this dilemma, Newman Center wishes to offer the following proposal as a possible solution:

1) The Counseling Department ought to hire not one, but two counselors of Asian extraction. The number of prospective candidates can thereby be expanded to four and include the name of Dr. Syn.

2) Student representation should be invited to future interviews of counselor candidates. Such representation should be involved in the interview itself and be given the right to voice a recommendation. Said participation would be in an advisory capacity only.

We feel this plan is workable and would be beneficial to both the students and the Administration. We hope our proposal will be given respectful consideration by all parties involved in this dispute, and that an early settlement can be reached.

$50 Award for New College Seal

Fifty dollars will be awarded to the creator of a new emblem for City College of San Francisco.

Student Council has established several regulations governing the design of the new school seal:

— It must be symbolic of the school.

— It must be drawn on 12 inch by 12 inch poster paper and the seal itself must be encompassed within a circle.

— The name, address, and phone number of the student, along with the title of the drawing should be written on the back of the poster, and — Only City College students may participate.

All drawings should be turned in to room 205 of the Student Union building no later than January 6. These posters will be displayed around the campus during the student body elections on Wednesday and Thursday, January 13 and 14, along with the current seal.

Students will then vote for the one that they like best. The original drawing will become the property of the college, and the official school seal. The designer will then receive his $50 award. All other drawings will be available to their designers at a later date.

Freaky Dude Ranch

By Dennis McGhee

John Billingham's Spatial Delivery

By Howard Nell

Doctor John Billingham, on his first day of lectures, introduced some of the sciences involved in the human living process.

The first leeture involved the synthetic manufaeturing of food starch. The NASA — Ames Research Center Biotechnology Division Chief, elaborately described the chemical processes which involve the creation of food material from some very common compounds of carbon dioxide and water.

Human bodies consume sugars and starches (carbohydrates) and chemically dissolve these molecules into CO-2 and H-2-O which are released as waste products. The by-products of this internal reaction gives the human body a source of energy.

The Ames Research Center, as Dr. Billingham described it, is experimenting with a reversal process to create more food to feed the ever-increasing population. The second leeture was on the human brain as compared to a computer. This presentation involved two separate, but related concepts.

The first concept told of the development of the size of the human brain. The second idea dealt with the functioning process of the complex human brain.

The modern human brain, Billingham said, is the result of evolution over several billions of years. The modern brain is able to record stimuli, analyze, make a decision, make a response, and remember the stimulation as a newly or reinforcing learned idea.

The third lecture was the "Adaptation to the Environment." This topic was an explanation of man's ability to be successful over some of the lower primates. One of these advantages is the characteristic of controlling internal thermal conditions; maintaining a constant body temperature. This ability allows man to be able to function under a varying degree of temperature. Cold blooded animals and insects cannot do this feat.

His final presentation of the first day was an evening lecture. The lecture rooms were completely filled for all of his lectures. The audience seemed very much concerned with the conditions of man and the information Dr. Billingham transmitted. The evening lecture was titled "Evolution of Intellegence." This topic covered the evolution of man from the early primates who lived in trees to the first "planesmen."

The series of lectures was arranged by Ed Duckworth as an adjunct to his universe, life, and mind course.

Xmas Drive For HELP In the City

The nursing classes at City College are contributing time to project HELP which stands for Help Every Lost Person.

The present Christmas drive is for needy people in San Francisco and is headed by Katy Blair at HELP headquarters, 3364 26th Street.

The nursing classes have placed barrels around the campus for the collection of canned goods, laundered linens, towels, and other useable domestic items from students, faculty, and staff.

Katy Blair reports that the project fed 302 families, found jobs for 55 people, clothed 109 persons, and has found houses for 37 people in only 100 days' time.

The Christmas barrels will be in the college corridors for the remainder of this week. Donations can also be made to HELP at its headquarters 24 hours a day.

New Bridge Hearings Set For Monday

Public hearings on the Southern Crossing bridge were held Monday, December 14, at 10 a.m. in the State Building, room 1194, San Francisco Civic Center.

Advocates of the proposed bridge promised it will alleviate traffic congestion on the bay bridge. Conservationists predict it will encourage more auto traffic and compete with the Bay Area Rapid Transit.

The Bay Conservation and Development Commission might amend its San Francisco Bay Plan to accommodate US Steel and Ferry Port Plaza. Currently, such projects are not permitted under the BCDC law, because they are not water-oriented. Communications to the BCDC should be sent to BCDC, 507 Polk St., SF 94102.

The CCSF Sierra Club group shows nature films and sponsors field trips. It meets in S335 every Thursday from 11-12 o'clock.

Symphony Ticket Record

The City College chapter of the San Francisco Symphony Forum has hit a new high in the sale of season tickets to the first season of concerts under the baton of Seiji Ozawa.

Mr. Merritt Beckerman, faculty sponsor for the Symphony Forum, announced that over 80 season tickets have been sold to individuals, and that additional tickets have been sold on a "share" basis. Beckerman attributed the increased sales to many factors:

Interest in Ozawa, the increased student population, a willingness to "invest" in music. Forum tickets, which are good for the Wednesday night concerts, are sold at reduced rates to Forum members at all Bay Area colleges.

Student representatives of the Symphony Forum are Bruce Elworth, Barbara Porter and Mary Ann Papadakis.

Job Scarcity

Jobs for City College students are getting harder to find this semester because employers are not calling in job opportunities as often as they have in the past according to student placement director Joseph Amori.

Amori attributes the job scarcity to college students who cannot find jobs in their majors and take general labor or office jobs to make a living, regardless of the fact that they may have a bachelor's degree in arts or science.

Amori expects the situation will improve in the near future and because the placement office is still helping many students to find jobs in the community.

Students looking for a job can see Joseph Amori for advice and help in room 132 of the Science Building.

International Relations Club Hosts Dinner-Dance

The International Relations Club of City College is sponsoring an unusual dinner-dance in the college cafeteria on Sunday, December 20.

The students of the club will prepare the foods of their native lands. Folk dances of Tahiti, Latin America, Japan, and other nations, accompanied by the music of the "King Tikis" will follow the buffet style dinner. A dance in which everyone can join will follow this entertainment.

The dinner will be served in the college cafeteria from 7-9 p.m. Tickets may be bought for $2 from Dr. Jacobson's office in E205K, at the Student Finance Office, or from Mrs. Nell McCutchen in C331B, near the library. All proceeds will be given to the survivors of the Pakistan flood.

The International Relations Club meets every other Thursday from 11-12 o'clock in C-261. The club presents speakers from foreign nations, and hopes that native and foreign students will use the club's functions to meet each other. To join the I.R.C., contact one of the ticket sources listed above.

Stirring up the stock for the International Relations Club banquet and dance, Sunday, December 20, are Anita Astete and Auguste Lean.

Student Tagged Unjustly— Will Take Case to Court

To the Editor:

On December 10 at 7:30 p.m. I parked my Fiat between the south part of the Science building and Cloud Hall to attend a Ram Ski Club meeting in C223.

Brian Chinn parked his VW in the same area between 7:45 and 8 p.m. He and a friend were also going to attend the meeting in the view of two campus policemen. They said nothing to Brian about the area being illegal.

After the meeting when Brian opened his car door to leave, he said that two campus police ordered him to stop. He was then tagged for parking in an unmarked area. While Brian was being tagged, I arrived on the scene to find my Fiat being tagged by Stuart Nakamura who said I parked illegally.

There are no signs in the immediate area saying that parking is illegal. One sign in the driveway entrance to the area says "No Parking" but the red curb does not extend to where our cars were parked.

According to campus police, students can park in faculty areas legally after 6 p.m. A green Chevy, lic. no. XGT 316, faculty permit no. 0444, parks in this area every day. Other faculty cars are seen there occasionally and none are tagged.

According to campus police, when a car is parked illegally and the driver is "approaching his car, he should not be tagged.

If cars are tagged for parking illegally, there should be signs in the area saying that parking is illegal.

The "violation" on my ticket is the following: T 58c — parked within unmarked area (Med. lot). Surely this area is not a medical lot.

Both Brian and I have protested our tickets and our court hearings will be in February.

—Ron Bowerman E7144

Editor's Note: The area Bowerman mentions, according to campus police, is a delivery area. They add that the general rule at City College is to park within a designated area or else you are liable to be tagged. Some cars are not tagged due to lack of manpower. Confirming that if the ticket does say "Med. lot," they feel Bowerman has a good beef.

A.S. Election

Director of Student Activities Art Samuels announces that student government petitions are available for those who are interested in being candidates for the January 13 and 14 elections.

Petitions for candidacy in the student body elections may be picked up in room 205 of the Student Union building and must be turned in by Friday, December 13.

Celebration

A celebration of New Year's Eve will be held at Poor Richard's (660 Great Highway) featuring Naked Lunch, Windjammers, Marcels, Love Experience, and the Ambassadors. Tickets are $3 advance and $3.75 at the door. Purchase tickets from Roland Soul City, Melrose Records, Tower Records, Reid Records, Discount Records, or Psychedelic Records.

Next Free Critic

The Free Critic is scheduled to appear on January 6, the first Wednesday after the vacation, according to coordinator Herb Gunther.

the Guardsman

The Guardsman is published weekly by the Journalism students as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography and photography. Editorial office is in S-304, phone 587-7272, ext. 440. Mailing address is 50 Phelan Avenue, San Francisco, Calif. 94112.

Editor-in-Chief ..... Paul Thiele
Feature Editor ..... Jim Toland
News Editor ..... Joe Konte
Sports Editor ..... Mike Chan

STAFF

BRUNO FORNER, VIRGINIA ELLIOT, SHIRLEY FOGARINO, MATT NELSON, BILL COLLINS, DENNIS McGHEE

CONTRIBUTORS

NORMA FONG, JACK HANSEN

PHOTOGRAPHERS

GAT[illegible] MASIS DENMAN [illegible]

the Guardsman

SPORTS

3 Gridders Are All-GGC

The 1970 All-Golden Gate Conference Football Team selections are now officially out of the bag. Those chosen for All-GGC really earned their laurels since the Conference's coaches choose the representatives.

Enough of the background, representing City College on the first-team are flanker-back Robert Red, who also was named 1970's Back-of-the-Year for the defense; and tight end Larry Haren. The lone CCSF representative on the second team is guard Charles Lewis.

Defensively, Robert Red has now made the first team All-GGC two years in a row. In his two year career at City, Red has been widely known for his smearing blocks and tackles. Opposing quarterbacks this past year have continuously avoided throwing against his coverage.

A few of the many outstanding highlights of Red's career occurred in the past season in a non-league game against Los Angeles Valley. Red returned a punt 83 yards for a touchdown versus San Mateo. Red limited All-GGC Tom Scott to only one reception and on one play Red intercepted a bomb intended for Scott.

Making a successful transition from second team All-GGC linebacker to a All-GGC first team tight end was the story behind grabber Larry Haren. Haren is also noted for his tough blocking and versatility as a punter, reserve quarterback, linebacker, and wild end.

Rounding out the City College representatives is guard Charles Lewis. A 3 year man, who successfully switched from defense to offense.

Cager Ron Dale going up for the shot against Contra Costa.

Photo by Red Lyou

Rams Knock Off Comets

By Mike Chan

The City College Ram cagers made it two in a row for their 1970 exhibition season. Their latest victim was powerful Contra Costa College at Contra Costa, Friday the 4th. The Phelan Machine did in the Comets with a final 75-67 score.

The key to this Ram victory was the fact that the Rams denied the Comets their type of game.

The Comets employ a running and gambling offense, but they couldn't get it going against a tough Ram zone defense and ball control offense. Thus the Comets were intimidated by the letdown of the pace and thus committed mistakes.

The Rams quickly capitalized on Comet turnovers and shoddy Contra Costa shooting averages, by building up a sizeable 16 point lead.

Instrumental in the Ram scoring were veteran guard Billy Metcalf and first year guard Robert Taylor. Both men drove the Rams into the lead with their slick drives and twenty foot jumpers. The half-time score read the Rams 45 and the Comets 29.

The Comets though at the beginning of the second half, came out clawing and scratching. The Rams on the other hand were walking about and not playing good basketball.

For instance, an example of how flat and done out the Rams were occurred early in the second half, when the Rams committed nine turnovers before the Comets had committed their first second half turnover.

Trending away at the Ram lead, the Comet efforts were spearheaded by Comet forward Ollie Ellison and the shooting hand of Comet guard Wayne Kemp. With Ellison's rebounding and inside shots plus Kemp's turn-around jumpers, the Comets pulled to within four points with 7:40 still to go into the game.

The momentum then seemed to shift toward the Comets, as their guard Dwight Mitchell stole a pass and raced in for an easy layup, and the Ram lead was a bare two points.

The Rams displaying great poise and character now began in earnest to assert themselves over their opponents.

Before the Rams had been giving up crucial rebounds now only Ram hands snatched the boards clean. With forward Ron Dale and center Jerry LeBlance sweeping the boards, the Ram offense churned up a small rally and just buried the Comets for the win.

The Rams' shooting percentage was a high 53.49 per cent, with 31 out of 58 shots finding the mark.

The Comets made only 26 out of 75 shots for a 34.66 per cent shooting average.

Surprisingly the Rams out-rebounded the Comets by only two, 37-35.

The top scorers for the Rams were guards Billy Metcalf and Robert Taylor, they scored respectively 18 and 20 points apiece.

Rams Sneak Past Panthers For Win

By Jack Hansen

The Hartnell Panthers jumped to an early lead against the Rams last Tuesday, Dec. 8. Four minutes into the game, Hartnell led 11 to 4 over City. Hartnell led by Jim Huff gave the Rams a short scare, but City led by Metcalf, Haren, and Dale playing superb games, out-lasted Hartnell for a 60 to 47 victory.

At the half the Rams led 28-19 but they just weren't putting it together. It wasn't City's best game, but nevertheless, it was an impressive one. Hartnell's Jim Huff and Tex Ryan gave City a go; hitting 31 points between them. But the fast break, or pass break, broke things loose for the Rams in the fourth quarter. It was very impressive, indeed.

Ron Dale, alias Rubber Band, played an outstanding game grabbing 14 rebounds and 14 points while playing only half the game. Haren put both his shooting and defensive skills together against Hartnell; shooting 55 per cent from the floor in the first half and totaling 11 points for the game. Wild Bill Metcalf held City's renegades in place though with his dominant ball handling and passing.

Coach Phelan, however, is still looking for that Big Five combination, and this is being disputed heavily by the players. The Big Five, City's best, remains open for the best! Contention is not easy, as anyone watching the Stacked Bench must agree. With veterans Kirkwood, Le Blance and Byrd having to fight off the talented new comers: Taylor, Snelgro, and Daigle. It remains to be seen, though, if City will win the Golden Gate Conference and head for the ultimate: State Champs!

Dons Wipe Out Rams

By Bruno Farner

The City College Rams suffered their first loss of the year at the hands of the USF Frosh in an exhibition game. Final score was 64 to 41.

The Rams defense looked miserable against the ball handling of the Dons. This was due to the fact that the previous night, the Rams had won a big game against Contra Costa College.

The Rams exhibited a lack of hustle and spirit as they were trounced. They were affected busily throughout the game (at half-time, the scoreboard reflect Dons 34, Rams 17).

When the final bell sounded, the Rams had compiled a poor 26.2 per cent field goal percentage and 58.3 per cent in free throws. High scorer on the team was Robert Taylor with a pathetic 10 points. Taylor played for only twenty minutes.

In comparison the Don's field goal percentage walked home with a hefty 47.9 per cent average as they averaged 71 per cent in free throws. High scorer on the team was Dons forward Kevin Bastani with 20 points.

Other City scorers were Phil [illegible] with 14 points, Jim Smith with 11 points, and Bill Metcalf. Rams [illegible]

Construction Never Ends

By Matt Nelson

The college is getting bigger all the time. It won't be long that it might get as big as San Francisco State College, with all these high rise buildings going up on campus.

The new construction at City College is going to be an extension of the Creative Arts building, and it will be 106 by 126 feet," is what Terry Simpson, job superintendent of this million dollar project stated.

The money is coming from the City and County of San Francisco, and other funds by the federal government.

1970 Basketball Sked

Modesto Tourn.	Modesto	Dec. 16-19
Am. River	CCSF	Dec. 22 1 p.m.
Delta Tourn.	S.J. Delta	Dec. 28-30
Merritt Col.	CCSF	Jan. 5 8 p.m.
College S.M.	San Mateo	Jan. 8 8 p.m.
S.J.C.C.	CCSF	Jan. 12 8 p.m.
Laney Coll.	CCSF	Jan. 15 8 p.m.
Stanford Fr.	Stanford	Jan. 16 5:30
Chabot Coll.	Chabot	Jan. 22 8 p.m.
Foothill	CCSF	Jan. 29 8 p.m.
Diablo Vall.	Diablo Vall.	Feb. 2 8 p.m.
Merritt	Merritt	Feb. 5 8 p.m.
College S.M.	CCSF	Feb. 9 8 p.m.
S.J.C.C.	San Jose	Feb. 12 8 p.m.
Laney	Laney	Feb. 16 8 p.m.
Chabot	Chabot	Feb. 19 8 p.m.
Foothill	Foothill	Feb. 23 8 p.m.
Diablo Vall.	CCSF	Feb. 26 8 p.m.

Modesto Tour. Modesto Dec. 16-19
Am. River CCSF Dec. 22 1 p.m.
Delta Tourn. S.J. Delta Dec. 28-30

SCHOOL YEAR

1970 — 1971

MISSING
ISSUE (S)

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 8
Published by the Journalism students
CUB EDITION
January 11, 1971

the Guardsman

I Left My Heart in San Francisco

The words of this familiar song don't necessarily ring true. There's more to the City than "little cable cars" climbing "halfway to the stars" . . . an ailing heartbeat lies beneath the facade.

Is it just a matter of time until the life-blood components which form the human elements of the City are drowned in the velocity of change? Will this basic dysrythmia climax in the death of San Francisco? Remember — in heart disorders, the End comes swiftly.

The Guardsman feels it is time to investigate some of these social problems for students at City College. (*The campus is a peaceful little realm, but you won't be here forever.) With their stethoscopic pens in hand, Editors Jim Toland and Ron Patrick probe this colossal heartbeat, diagnose a few of the ailments, interview a "social surgeon", and offer a prognosis of future recovery . . .

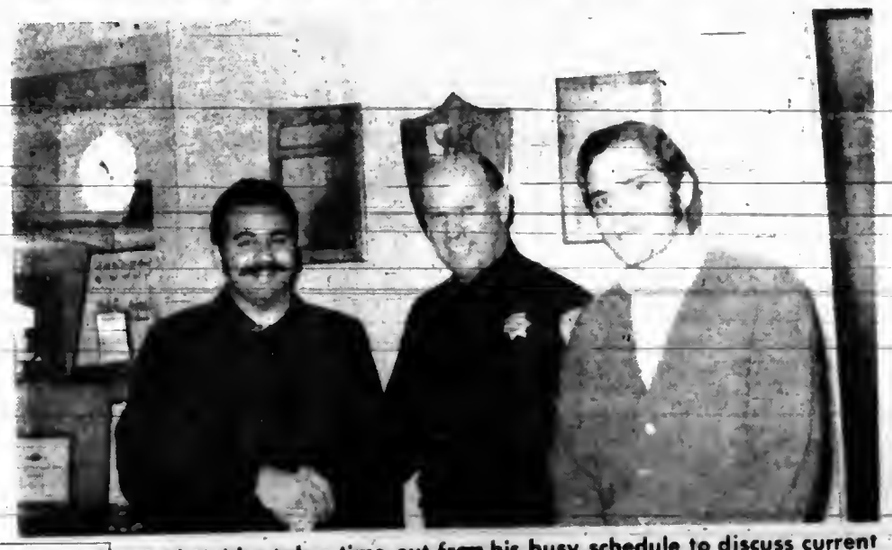
By Ron Patrick

Besides leaving their hearts in San Francisco, many unfortunates also leave their minds, their self respect, their dignity and sometimes their lives too.

By Jim Toland

Pornography does not harm the individual. This is the basic finding of the President's Commission on Obscenity, and the platform for one of the hottest social controversies since prohibition.

From the modest but tasteful surroundings of his fifth floor office at the San Francisco Hall of Justice, Chief of Police Alfred Nelder offers a different perspective.



Nelder disputes the findings of various surveys and studies which claim that no relationship exists between sex-oriented crimes and pornography. "There is a definite connection," says Nelder. "On the basis of the arrests we have made, and investigations of the offenders' backgrounds, we have found that pornography of one sort or another is usually involved." One such survey, by the Legal and Behavioral Institute of Los Angeles, reported that "pornography has not been shown to trigger any identifiable or specific form of sexual activity," while a panel of experts attending a day-long conference at the U.C. Medical Center in San Francisco recently, said that in some instances "pornography could be helpful." Nelder directs no criticism to the report by the President's Commission on Obscenity because "I haven't read it fully."

Nelder disputes the allegation that San Francisco is the "smut capital" of the nation. "Although it is a serious problem in San Francisco," says Nelder, "this is nothing more than a cliche. I think Los Angeles is a better candidate for the title."

The paramount factor in controlling pornography is the strength or weakness of the laws and the way in which the police department can enforce them. "Let me illustrate the difficulty involved in making an arrest and conviction under the existing laws:

- First, you have to suspect a particular establishment of a violation.
- Then, a special agent must go to that establishment and obtain evidence of obscenity — (this is done by using a camera which photographs in the dark).
- The photos taken and submitted as evidence, must conclusively prove that obscenity is being shown.
- Next, the evidence must be submitted to the District Attorney's office. If he determines that there is a possibility of prosecution and conviction, the

(Continued on Page 3)

Police Chief Al Nelder takes time out from his busy schedule to discuss current social problems with Guardsman reporters Jim Toland and Ron Patrick.

Marquees such as this one are an example of a current trend in Pornographic movies. These theatres dominate the downtown area. Below: Chief Nelder.

There are many social problems in San Francisco today. Taking all of them into consideration, a decision to investigate the world of the wino, and a cure for the junkie was made.

To get to the heart of the matter, an interview with San Francisco Police Chief Al Nelder was arranged.

When asked what new problems or situations have arisen in drug use, Nelder replied, "One major crisis that faces San Francisco now is the upsurge in heroin usage."

Nelder said, "In 1963 only nine people under 18 years of age were arrested for using heroin, however among the same age group in 1969 there were 700 arrests." Nelder went on to say, "We (the San Francisco Police Department) are trying to curb this epidemic by instituting drug education programs in the San Francisco schools."

Nelder feels that the methadone treatment for drug addiction is an aid for the suffering addict. He feels that methadone is a preventive medication that substitutes for the physical craves of heroin.

Recently the members of the Supervisors Finance Committee recommended appropriation of $121,629.00 which was requested by Dr. Berry Ramer, director of the Center for Special Problems. Ramer's group has proven the overwhelming success of methadone in curing heroin addicts.

Ramer, who claims an 85 per cent cure rate among what the police department considered hard core addicts, feels that the methadone program will save the taxpayers a lot of money and the law enforcement agencies a lot of time. Dr. Ramer said that it costs the city about $20,000 to finally send one addict to jail for one year, for a crime that the addict committed while trying to finance his habit. An average addict may steal over four hundred dollars worth of merchandise a day to finance his $50-$100-a-day hit. The fence that they usually deal through gives them a very small percentage of what the stolen goods are actually worth.

In comparison to these seemingly outrageous figures, it only costs the city $1000 to treat an addict during the first year of cure where methadone is substituted for heroin.

Terry Francois, a Supervisor, and a member of the faculty here at City College, said, "no program has higher priority than this one," and went along

(Continued on Page 3)

CCSF Student Stars in Porno-Movies

San Francisco, a city of wide contrasts and varied interests, has long possessed the avant garde status as the mother of invention. From the windy expanse of her Golden Gate has emerged a suicide rate second to none. She is also number one in drugs and alcoholism, with casualties so extensive, as to require one of the largest staffed, most diligent coroner's offices in the nation.

With this line of precedence, it is only natural that she is now considered the pornography capital of the world. Estimates disclose that more than $150,000 per week is landing in the cash registers of the "blue movie" houses — and the rate is steadily increasing. Oddly enough, these expenditures seem to come from a regular group of porno-dieters, with the smallest percentage being tourists and young adults.

Large movie houses such as this one draw crowds of interested spectators to what has become known as the blue films.

Smaller theatres in the downtown and Tenderloin areas offer a quieter, almost stag-party atmosphere to the customer.

In the midst of this controversy is a City College student with the dubious distinction of blue-movie star. John estimates that he has played in nearly fifteen of these movies, earning an average salary of $25-50 per session. In other areas (such as Los Angeles) where the work force is scarce, rates sometimes exceed $500 per session. "My straight jobs," says John, "included clerk, furniture mover and factory worker." How did he first gain interest in porno-movies?

"I don't know — it just developed somehow. In the service (Vietnam) I bought a Super 8 camera and got the idea to shoot some films, but it didn't work out because much of the necessary equipment was lacking." Such as? "Lighting, mainly." Were there any doubts or guilt feelings in the beginning? "No. I was just nervous. I was afraid that I couldn't perform in front of the camera." Apparently, his fears were needless.

"When I got out of the service and came to California, I was surprised to find that porno-movies were semi-legal. I got a job on Broadway as a doorman and made out OK for awhile. And then I met this nude dancer. I guess you could say that she was the one that got me into my first movie here in the City." Soon afterwards, John placed an ad in the Barb as an available blue-movie actor.

John has never had any lasting relationships with the girls he co-stars with. "Most of them are street freaks — girls who take hard drugs and don't want to work; although, I have met a few college girls and secretaries. I wouldn't call them prostitutes though."

Getting back to his first encounter with these movies, John said his parents were aware of what he was doing. "They live back in Michigan. I wrote them a letter about it, but they haven't answered yet. My mother is probably a little uptight about it, but they're fairly liberal anyway." John says that he plans to write them again in the near future.

Many people assume that hard drugs play a decisive and innovative role in the filming of blue-movies. John is of a different opinion. "I usually drink alcohol, because it helps me to perform for longer periods of time." He estimates that shooting usually takes from one to four hours, depending upon the film footage. "I get stoned on grass occasionally, but find that I'm unable to concentrate on my work." John seldom, if ever, uses hard drugs while filming.

Perhaps the most ominous factor contributing to the huge public outcry against pornographic films, is that "bad pornography" is gaining momentum. It's no longer the simple, heterosexual acts between attractive men and women that the experts are worried about; it's the beastiality, the crude and indescribeable fetishes, cruelty and overall perversions. This trend doesn't worry John. "Although it is contrary to my personal taste, I did an S and M (sado-masochistic) film just last Saturday. It was kind of weird at first, but I fell into it after awhile."

The paramount consideration in any job is whether you like what you're doing. "I like porno because it's sexually aroussing. It's just a matter of how you get your kicks."

—By Ron Patrick

Student Lounge a Mess

In this day and age, it is refreshing to know that there is a place where the students of City College can go to relax. This place is the City College Lounge, and it is located in the new Student Union building.

Upon entering, there are four noticeable things about the student lounge: Lack of chairs, a lousy radio broadcast, gambling, and the messiness.

When a student wants a chair, he politely clubs another student on the head and takes the chair away from him. Then stuffs him under the table so no one will trip over him. The students are very careful not to hit him hard enough to bleed. Since such conditions exist, eight students once tried to share a chair. Unfortunately, the guy on the bottom had to be carried to the nurse. He didn't move anymore.

Another thing wrong with the lounge is the City College radio broadcast. No one wants to hear it. The trouble with KCSF, is that they play the wrong kind of music, and their variation is limited.

Gambling is the City College sport. There is an appalling amount of it going on in the lounge. Hundreds of honest, clean-cut students go in there everyday to cheat their fellow students. Fisk, Old Maid, and Hearts seem to be the games most often played.

The most noticeable thing about the lounge is the mess. It may consist of newspapers, crushed soda cups, stepped-on apple pie, pieces of chewed-up fingernails, burnt tables, broken bottles, cigarette butts, and dissected frogs. All of which are on the floor instead of the waste basket.

It is refreshing to know that there will always be a place to go to for you to forget your worries and problems. Just be sure to wear your old clothes.

By Catherine Dempsey

Mayor Alioto and General Larson, Commanding General of the Sith U.S. Army, discuss the policies of the new Memorandum of Understanding.

People are Talking About revolution (of a different nature) unrest (student and otherwise) prejudice (repression) repression (prejudice) aggression (imperialism)

isolationism (tending your own backyard) communism (hiding in every closet) americanism (eating apple pie) idealism (the face of youth) realism (ideals of our time) liberalism (outgrowth of ideals) conservatism (age-gone-sour) consumerism (capitalism) god (the face of a dollar) dollar ("almighty" as god) cliches (refer to this column)

Stock Analyst

A San Francisco City College Student Stock Analyst predicted next week's forecast for the New York Stock Exchange. He said, "We have every reason to believe that if there is no decline, the market will rise."

Election Apathy

What percentage of the college student-body will vote on January 13 and 14? Will only 8 per cent of the students bother to vote? That was the "high" that voted in last semesters leaders.

Sparrow

A tiny sparrow flew into a classroom in the Arts Building and left his calling card on a recently corrected stack of tests. The culprit was not apprehended.

Memo of Understanding

The "Memorandum of Understanding" is a new policy to foster a harmonious relationship between the City of San Francisco and the Presidio of San Francisco, then both the City and the Presidio will have information regarding master planning, construction, and real estate utilization in those areas of common concern.

Over the years there has been misunderstandings between both city and army officials, because there was no direct way for them to communicate. The city officials would get lost in the army's red tape, and Presidio officials would have the same trouble with the city. Therefore, the idea of the "Memorandum" developed after years of talk between city and army officials trying to solve this problem.

The agreement was signed for the city by Mayor Alioto and it was signed for the army by Lt. Stanley R. Larsen.

The agreement will benefit both the city and the army equally.

Agreement in Action

The city is gradually taking over Fort Mason. A portion of it has already been leased to the city and will be used for educational pruposes. The City is leasing the land from the Government at $25 a year, so that a grammar school can be built.

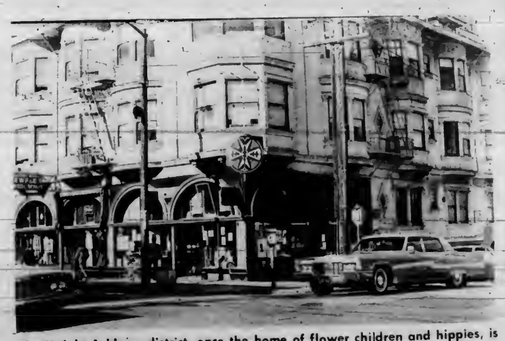
Money for the school would be appropriated by the HEW (Health, Education, and Welfare), but the city will build it.

The issue of building a bike path through the Presidio is now before the Board of Supervisors.

Transfers Probed By Chancellor

Chancellor Sidney W. Brossman of the California Community Colleges vowed in Fresno today that any attempt to hamper Community Colleges student transfers to four-year institutions would be "fought every step of the way."

Brossman was responding to a published report that California State Colleges Chancellor Glenn S. Dumke today would seek support from the State Colleges Board of Trustees for a plan to permit State Colleges to turn away some students transferring from Community Colleges.



"These students have been promised they could transfer to State College after two years in a Community College," Brossman declared. "If that promise is not kept then there could well be a move in the Legislature to put into law admissions standards for transfer students."

Brossman, speaking at noon to the Student Government Association of the California Community Colleges, said his office has not suggessed such legislation and, in fact, "it would be too bad if these things have to be legislated."

"But," he said, "with all the trouble over admissions during the last year or so it would be no surprise if there is legislation introduced next session in the area of admissions. There has been a constant line of comment and threats for months now about Community College transfer students, and it's talk such as this that inspires legislators to act."

Brossman said Community College transfer students are entitled to treatment by the four-year institutions equal to that given their own juniors moving up from division classes and that "there can be no such thing as a second-class student."

"The State Colleges particularly are on notice that no qualified Community College transfer student can be turned away. We want equal treatment into the upper division along with the State Colleges own lower division students going into upper division — and that doesn't mean putting you at the end of the registration line, either."

The Haight-Ashbury district, once the home of flower children and hippies, is now frequented by hard core heroin addicts.

Nelder on Drugs

(Continued from Page 1)

with several other Supervisors to urge Dr. Ramer to submit to them a 1000 patient program so that they can get it to the mayor in time for him to consider it for his 1971-72 budget.

Police Chief Nelder agrees with Dr. Ramer and Supervisor Francois in the seriousness of heroin addiction. Nelder said that in 1969 7000 adults were arrested for heroin offenses.

When asked what progress had been made in the treatment and cure of winos Nelder replied, "I firmly believe that alcoholism is a disease and that it should be treated as such."

Nelder continued by saying, "Winos are very sick people. We can't help them by arresting them. What we need more of is modern detoxification centers such as the one we have at San Francisco General Hospital." When asked if the winos were a big problem to San Francisco, Nelder replied, "We arrested 17,000 of them last year."

Chief Nelder seemed optimistic about San Francisco's social problems and is counting largely on community support to aid him and The Department.

Ondine Is Smash Hit

A colorful production of Ondine opened at the College Theater December 9, for a run of four days. A fantasy in three acts, Ondine was written by Jean Giraudoux. This production was directed by Walter Krumm with costumes by Mary Francis Barre. The scenery was designed by James Orin and responsible for makeup was Deborah Quilter.

The title role of Ondine was played by Mary Tringali, whose performance was one noted and vastly underplayed. Ritter Hans, leading man was played by Douglass Harley. His performance, although one noted and shallow, is to be admired. His vitality was definitely an asset to his performance. The two supporting roles of Aguste and Eugenie, respectively Steven Ramos and Mary LoPorto, were strongly played and a pleasure to watch. Sherry Zahn, as Berta, stole the show, when on stage her presence was dominating and powerful. Not to be forgotten was Harry Groener as Lord Chamberlain. Simon Levy as Superintendent of Theaters and Ronald Denny as King.

The lighting and sound effects were fantastic. The costumes for the most part were good, and outstanding were the ladies court costumes in the second act. The makeup was perfect. The scenery for Act I and Act III was great.

Guardsman News Editor, Charlie Prongos, reveals details of "Mickey Mouse" publications meeting.

Open Meeting Closed

On Monday, December 7, a tri-partite board of review meeting was called to determine some unanswered questions in regard to the publication of the Guardsman. The meeting was held in the Gang Room of the Student Union Building.

A hostile atmosphere existed when Chairman Joseph A. Amori called the meeting to order. He was continuously interrupted by the loudly vocal Mrs. S. Leff, a speech teacher, who was also a member of the board. Mrs. Leff insisted upon electing a new chairman, which is a job given by appointment, from the President of the College.

A dispute arose over the position of one of the members of the board. Jim Toland, originally named to the Guardsman Review Board by Mr. Amori, was denied a seat on the board.

The conspiracy became more evident when the board voted to oust Amori, and to replace him with another faculty member. Mr. Beckerman who is a Humanities instructor. Mr. Amori left, and Beckerman called the meeting to order once again.

Jim Toland, who is the features editor of the Guardsman, once again requested his seat on the board. "No . . . no . . . no, you are not a member of the board, you shouldn't even be at this meeting", mooed Paul Thiele, the Guardsman Editor. "You are not the features editor either."

"I am features editor and I am a member of this board and I will be seated," Toland stated. With that, Mrs. Leff, Mr. Beckerman and the four student members of the Board that were seated, began a verbal attack on Mr. Toland. The six board members seemed to have similar, if not exactly the same points of view.

"All that's missing here is a kangaroo," Toland commented, and then addressed a question to the chairman. "Exactly, what is your background in journalism?" The other members of the board, overpowered the question with such statements as "It doesn't matter", "what's the difference anyway?" and "that's irrelevant."

Mr. Toland then brought forth the motion that the meeting be adjourned until such time as it was totally clear whether he or Joe Konte, the Guardsman news editor was to be seated on the board. Toland said, "Having Thiele and Konte on the same board is like listening to a record in stereo, you get the same sound out of two speakers." Jim later said that he feels diversity of opinions should definitely be part of any constructive conversation.

One of the board members moved that the meeting be held in executive session which would result in the removal of all non-board members. The motion was seconded and the chairman told Mr. Toland to leave. "NO", said Toland.

"Don't force me to have you forcibly evicted," Beckerman threatened. "I belong here and I will stay." Toland stated. Beckerman sent out for assistance.

Assistance arrived and Jim Toland was given the choice of leaving or receiving a citation. He was also told that the meeting would remain open if he left. Jim said that he felt it would be unfair for the other students present to be deprived of the right to attend the meeting so he chose to leave peacefully.

Soon after the removal of Toland, the Board acted on their previous motion to hold the meeting in executive session. Everyone but the board members were required to leave.

There were no minutes taken at the secret meeting.

Nelder on Porno

(Continued from Page 1)

matter is taken before a judge, who may issue a warrant.

Providing the warrant is issued, the police department can make the arrest . . .

The problem here lies in the fact that the film in question may have been destroyed or sold to another movie house. When this happens (as it frequently does), the evidence necessary for conviction is lacking." To indicate just how severely the police department's hands are tied, Nelder cites the fact that out of 190 arrests made during this year, only a few convictions have been won.

The alternatives are presently being considered by the Board of Supervisors. Nelder feels that these movie houses should be licensed in the same manner as "any pin-ball machine operator or apple-peddler in this city" — thus enabling the police department to regulate their operations. "Why should they be exempt from the licensing requirements that all other businesses must adhere to?" asserts Nelder. By way of example, the city of Oakland has a licensing requirement similar to Nelder's proposal; and consequently, has only two of these movie houses to contend with.

Nelder heartily endorses the Examiner's recent decision to ban all pornographic advertising. "I think it's a big step in the right direction. If you can eliminate the profit from all angles, the problem will cease to exist."

Is there any hope for stronger legislation in the near future? Nelder seems doubtful. "What we need is more explicit laws — clear cut legislation. Until then, our hands will be tied."

Nelder offers a bit of advice to City College students. "College students, especially, shouldn't support pornography, in any form. It's degrading to them, and harmful to their future, as well as the rest of the community. It's really a disgrace — I mean: how low can you get??"

EDITORIAL

Pornography Pragmatic

In the fast-moving, progressive society that we live in today, certain diversions are necessary to smooth the normal pressures and anxieties we suffer. These diversions can usually be found in the many avenues of entertainment available to all of us.

Pornographic movies have been acclaimed as another "diversion", just another form of healthy "entertainment", by their many advocates. We dissent from this viewpoint.

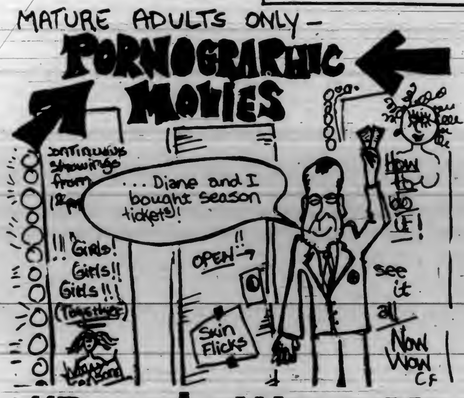
It would be archaic and naive to refer to the same old arguments (the fall of the Roman and Grecian empires) which are based on social demoralization. If history has taught us anything, it's that mankind does not heed the lessons of his mistakes. Let's simply condense the issue into our own sphere of thinking.

Would you feel a sense of pride in escorting your mother to a "blue-movie" on her birthday? Would you treat your future bride to one of these "social redeemers" as a guide to marital relations on the night before the wedding? Would you take your child to a "skin-flick" as his first introduction to the facts of life? Do you cringe at these suggestions?

Face it — there's a bit of decency left in all of us.

—Ron Patrick

Child Care Started



A child-care program has been initiated at City College. The pilot program will hopefully accomodate up to fifty children. Those interested in more information or registering their child(ren) may contact Mr. Horan, Mr. Dunlap or Mr. Petersen at B-5, Experimental College.

A program of this nature has long been needed to accommodate the many parents attending college with lack of child-care facilities. With ever-increasing competition in the employment market, a college education is essential. The cost of home care has soared in accordance with inflation and prevented many brilliant students from obtaining a valuable career. This loss of talent and ability is detrimental to all of the community and the national welfare at large.

Ostensibly, there will be no fees. Funds are being sought from grants, and the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, but volunteers are desperately needed. Hypothetically, volunteers may receive academic credit toward certain majors.

Interested parties are urged to contact the Experimental College.

"The Commission on Obscenity was not assigned by this administration!"
—Richard Nixon

Don't Call CCSF "Junior"

A bill recently passed by the State Legislature has resulted in the abolishment of the term "junior colleges" in the California school system. This is being replaced by "community college" — a term which does greater justice to the thousands of undergraduate students who are not eligible for University work at the four year level for any variety of legitimate reasons.

Most students realize that there is a certain stigma attached to a junior college — "It's just an extension of high school," or "It's a place for the intellectually poor to bide their time" etc. etc. It was high time that something be done about this problem.

In keeping with this legislation, City College of San Francisco is now San Francisco Community College.

We salute this progressive idea for all its worth and our representatives in Sacramento for their insight into this dilemma.

Revolution 70's

The tragedy of revolution has struck the very heart of at least one hundred American cities during the past year. In their wake these outbreaks leave death, bodily injury, total destruction, shattered city blocks, and even greater frustrations than before.

A well-organized and brutal movement under the direction of self-styled militants from the Black Panther Party and the S.D.S. have openly declared war upon all Americans who seek to uphold traditional American values. This coalition of radicals is not interested in mere protest or dissent. Their aim is overthrow of our government and our free society.

There is no justification for revolutionary action or thinking in America. No society has ever been as free as ours. No economic system provides so much opportunity and so many real rewards for so many people as the free enterprise system of the United States. But the abundance of individual liberty and opportunity here is proving no barrier to insurrectionists. These ominous developments from within, present a serious problem. It is more than crime, worse than disregard for law and order. It is anarchy and revolution aimed at overthrowing the government which has preserved individual freedom.

—Robert Guichard

Apathy Evident

There are approximately seven hundred City College students who are eligible for the State Junior Honor Society. Out of seven hundred eligible students, there are only one hundred members. Mr. Wallace Wells, who sponsors the Honor Society, concludes that the deficiency of membership is due to students' lack of interest, counselors not informing those who are eligible and students just not aware of the fact there is an honor society.

Eligibility requires that a student have a "B" average and carry twelve units or more. A fee of $1.25 is collected each semester, half of which goes to the State Scholarship fund, and the other half towards the purchase of gold pins and certificates of merit.

Interested students are urged to contact the Honor Society which meets every Tuesday during the College Hour, in C 222.

—Charlie Prongos

the Guardsman

This issue of The GUARDSMAN is published by the cub-staff journalism students of 21-A as an alternate to the regular edition of The GUARDSMAN. Editorial office is S-304, phone 587-7272, ext. 446. Mailing address 50 Phelan Avenue 94112

EDITOR-IN-chief
Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR
Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR
Charlie Prongos
FEATURE EDITOR
Catherine Dempsey
ART EDITOR
Stephanie Pierobella
REPORTERS
Steve Cotler, Bob Forman, Bob Guichard, Pauline Guillermo, Ed Hartzler, Gerald Lagomarsino, Marilyn Murphy, Dennis McGhee, Matt Nelson, John Macdonald, Dorothy Shinder.
PHOTOGRAPHERS
Matt Nelson
Jim Heisterkemp
Charlie Prongos
ADVISER
Mrs. Darry Coppoletta

"People Were Meant to Be Strangers"

In the shadow of towering skyscrapers, god-like corporations, and multi-million dollar businesses lurks a spectre more frightening, more terrifying, than even the awesome power held by those financial dieties.

Who is this spectre? What is it? Can there be something more powerful than the corporate giants? Yes, there can be and there is. It is called defeat or sometimes hopelessness. Hopelessness knows no racism, nor is it bigoted. Defeat, or social hopelessness really happens to only a few people. These crushed people are socially cast into a group known as "bum," "tramp," or, more commonly, "wino."

Willy the Wino awakens to the cold morning mist, having spent the night in a doorway on Howard Street. He notices that his shoes have disappeared. He curses and instinctively rummages through the nearest garbage can to find the pair of shoes that his assailant has left behind. Putting them on, Willy turns the corner and walks up Sixth St. to see if he can scrounge up something to eat. Bumming a quarter from an executive gives Willy new hope. he buys a package of two chocolate cupcakes and breakfast is quickly over.

There is no one to help Willy. He has been on the skids for fourteen years. He has been around the United States more than a half dozen times. He has been everywhere twice and nowhere always. He can't find himself, he doesn't even bother to try anymore.

Willy has made the rounds of all the missions and soup kitchens. When he has fifty cents Willy finds a bed in the flop house on Third St.

Willy can't collect unemployment insurance. he hasn't had a steady job in years. Willy, although suffering an emotional disease, can not collect disability benefits because he is not physically or (legally) mentally ill. Willy can't even collect welfare because to file an application for welfare one must have a permanent address.

Willy is convinced that society is a vicious circle. He feels that once you are down, people will go out of their way to keep you down. "I guess people feel stronger after they've kicked someone who's helpless."

Willy has no hopes! no desires and no future. Willy doesn't even think about anyone caring for him. He is secure in the knowledge that there is no one, no one at all.

Is Willy right? Is society really structured this way? You would like to believe that it isn't. You may even get down on your knees and pray that it isn't. But it is. And if you do find yourself on your knees, pray that the shadow of despair doesn't cross your path. Pray that you don't wake up one morning, screaming, as you look up from the bottom of the pit, knowing that there will be no help and knowing that you gave none when you could have.

Jim Toland

Left Eye

By Ron Patrick

OUTLOOK

Right Eye

By Ed Hartzler

"His Fraudulency", Richard Nixon is the author of a concise yet bewildering statement on the alleged foreign policy of our democratic society. As quoted from his address in November of 1969: "The American people cannot be asked to support a policy unless they know the truth about that policy." This is an outright sham. Among those who claim to be informed about international affairs, it would be hard to find anyone who takes this pledge of presidential candor seriously.

The president's statements are primarily designed for domestic consumption. Both citizens and statesmen alike, must look elsewhere for true insight into foreign affairs. The media appraise most White House pronouncements as having only vague relationship to what is actually going on. In the words of George Orwell, "Political speech and writing are largely the defense of the indefensable."

Such presidential messages are rich with insight and uncertainty, ambiguities and promise, and outright evasions or lies. They say a little something for everyone and confuse the rational analyst who searches for a passage which explains the president's purpose and-or direction. The critic can find phrases that stimulate his prejudices, and the "patriotic" supporter can dredge up sentiments that serve his own bias. In such a way, Mr. Nixon has managed to give an optimistic gloss to his Vietnam policy, and has succeeded in bringing the domestic turmoil to a relative stand-still.

Various terms designed and promoted for the sake of public sentiment have been flaunted mercilessly. The "hawks" with their political fortunes committed to indefinite Vietnam obscenity, surmise that foreign policy is still with them. After all, we're still in Vietnam. The "doves" (who are paradoxically categorized as "unpatriotic", or "communist liberals"), have been partially gagged by the terms of Vietnamiation. Likewise, token troop withdrawals serve as disguise for our continued intervention. "Pacification" has provided an effective camoflage for the horrendous murdering and pillaging of the North and South Vietnamese peoples. Sadly, the American flag has proven to be an effective shield against indefensable arguments and a "banner of support" for foreign policy. Invariably, such political harangue has severed our nation, waging a bitter war between every segment of the population. Liberals and conservatives alike, are displaying savage rhetoric detrimental to their own cause.

It has been argued that many of those who challenge the facts as presented by the government do not have benefit of information procurable through "official channels". This is one of the oldest of political dodges. A saving aspect of this faraway war is that is is the first in which global communicationss allow every citizen a personal and instantaneous look behind the scenes. The media have effectively undercut the government's claim to a monopoly on the facts.

Those who make a case against withdrawal from Vietnam generally admit that our involvement was an error and admit the necessity of our departure, but apply terms like "unilateral" and "precipitous" to the solution. The arguments most commonly heard are for maintaining our commitments, protecting the South Vietnamese peoples from mass annihilation following our departure, supporting "our boys", sustaining a cause for the thousands of lives already lost, and demonstrating that America is not a "great pitiful giant". In short, the rationalizations are those of saving face. The most ominous statement on Vietnam thus far may have been expressed by the president himself: "I do not intend to go down in history as the first American president to lose a war." How disgusting.

Observing the arguments defending our position in Southeast Asia, one gets the feeling of hearing the same old thing over and over again. Face it, people are tired of "defending our allies", or "stopping Communist aggression", or "escalating the war to bring about lasting peace." These statements are too impersonal; they just don't turn on the majority of the people (Orange County and the hard hats excepted). Therefore, here are arguments in favor of the war: conclusive evidence of how much the war has really helped us.

Overpopulation: Folks, one of these days we are just going to run out of space to live on this planet. Experts from every country tell us this and yet, with exception of Vietnam, nobody has made any real progress in controlling the population. Why Vietnam? The main reason is our good friend, the Pentagon. This great humanitarian agency, using a generous supply of Doctor Dow's Napalm flavored birth control pills, has succeed in reducing Vietnam's population by several million people. Just to show their gratitude, North Vietnam (the place most helped by our population control experts), has helped reduce our population by a meager 50,000. Granted, this is poor in comparison to our "kill ratio", but they still have time to catch up. And, knowing what we do about the Inquisition, the Witchcraft Trials, and the "Holy" Wars, our method of population control won't meet serious objections from any religion. It's only a crime to kill an unborn person; after birth, it's open season on all life.

Unemployment: A large part of the San Jose crowd that mobbed Mr. Nixon consisted of unemployed engineers and scientists: many who had previously worked in defense industries. These people were mad, and for a good reason. It used to be (when the war was in full swing) that everyone was working. This included the scientists, engineers, soldiers, and undertakers. But Ever since those radicals, like the pacifists, convinced the government to try for peace, things have started to fail. Do you know what will happen if the war ends? All the soldiers will come back; there won't be any jobs for them, so they'll just be sitting around with nothing to do. Their present job, with three cold meals and a foxhole to crawl into, is better than being on relief. So what if a few of them are killed or crippled. What's life without some exciting risks? And, what about the defense workers? If we discontinue making bombs, bullets, napalm, B-52's, guns etc., they will be on relief as well. Finally, think of the hardships peace would cause our businessmen. Think of the stockbroker that has to use the window instead of the elevator to get down to his limousine, of the manufacturer who can't afford to go to Europe this summer, or the society matron who is forced to wear last year's dress to this year's party. Some of the millionaires would even have to work for a living. All good Americans will unite and demand a strong economy through war. It's either the Vietnam War abroad or poor business at home. And, in the words of Calvin Coolidge, "What's good for business is good for America."

Youth: Before the Vietnam War, American youth were hanging around on street corners, drinking, smoking, making love and all those other awful things. Now, thanks to Uncle Sam, these immoral pleasures no longer tempt our youngsters. They are no longer in the U.S.; they are in Vietnam. What a relief for parents with teenage daughters. After all, what can their boyfriends do ten thousand miles away?

Now is the time to act. Write the President and demand that he continue this useful state of affairs.

Guardsman: Pro-Con

"The Guardsman could stand some more interesting articles, such as some controversial issues on campus."
Cher Willis

"The Guardsman should be more aware of what students want. The editors should get the students' opinions."
Janet Barr

"The paper is better than last year, but it could still stand some improving!"
Greg Burne

"I like the paper, but because I don't go here full-time, some of the articles don't mean much to me."
Lynn Anderson

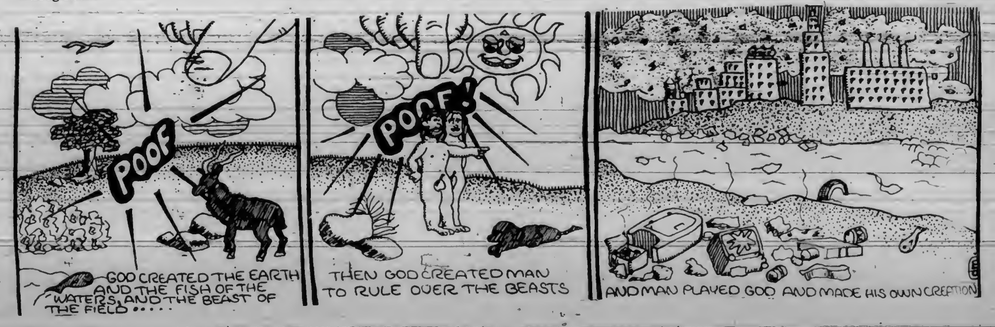
"I like the Guardsman better than the "Free Critic," because some of the articles in the Free Critic are so weird you can't understand them, but to satisfy the radicals I think a few articles of that kind should be printed in the Guardsman."
John McCann

★ Shinder Sounds Off ★

SO YOU REALLY WANT THE WAR TO END!

YOU DUM DUMS! First get the HAWKS on your side. Sock 'em with the facts.

Ask them, "Do you want your daughter to marry?" Sure they do. Who they gonna marry? Ghosts? Or those poor disabled devils who are no longer human beings? Or—



"Do you want your daughter to be permissive?" A conservative NO.

Facts: There are 45,000 GIs killed in Vietnam and 2,000 Vietnamese War Brides. That leaves us with 47,000 War Widows minus husbands, not to mention POW wives, and future War Singles.

Oh, so you never heard about War Singles? Start thinking and fast! They're college girls whose chances of marriage or remarriage are spoiled by wars. Maybe not right now — but you wait, 30 or 40 years from now they'll be alone. All the liberation in the world won't replace a mate of their own.

What's the ballgame score this week? 46 dead — 46 War Widows or War Singles. Hit Hawks hard! They'll demand the boys come home, but fast!

—Dorothy Shinder

Mel Brooks, Ron Moody and Frank Langella portray a classic comedy scene from the Mel Brooks film, "The Twelve Chairs," which also starred Dom DeLuise.

★★★★★★★★★★

At Last—A Good Movie That's Funny

On Monday night, December 21, a sneak preview of the new Mell Brooks film, "The Twelve Chairs" was held at the Stagedoor Theatre on Mason St. Appearing in person at the preview was one of the picture's stars, Comedian Dom DeLuise.

DeLuise, who plays the part of an overly greedy Russian Orthodox priest in the movie, was as personable off stage as on. He said, "I've gotten the best reception here in San Francisco than anywhere else on my promotional tour." He humorously remarked, "I guess it's the drugs."

DeLuise, as Father Fyodor, abandons the cloth to embark on a zany traps-Russia quest for a fortune in jewels that has been sewn into the seat of one of twelve matching chairs. The chairs belonged to a pre-revolution by the incoming Marxist government.

Also joining Father Fyodor in the search for the missing chairs, but as competitors for the loot, are Ippolit Vorobyanivov, an heir to the jewels, played by Ron Moody and Ostap Bender, a charming opportunist, played by Frank Langella.

The search for the chairs and the frustration of the three heroes as they tear apart each and every one of them on screen, hoping in vain to find the missing treasure, was extremely funny. The humor was well timed and consistent. As was expected, DeLuise stole many of the scenes. The movie was totally enjoyable, and produced a lot of laughs.

ACLU Services Offered Free

By Dorothy Shinder

"If your constitutional rights are violated, feel free to contact the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU)," says Ernest Besig, the Executive Director. "We are the only non-profit, national, non-partisan organization that defends the civil liberties of citizens and aliens alike. Our main concern is with the principle at stake, public isssues, and basic rights of the individual under the 14th Amendment."

The San Francisco staff consists of two counselors, Paul Halvonik and Charles Larson. These lawyers funnel the complaints to the proper agency or a group of volunteer attorneys who are (generally speaking) between the ages of twenty and thirty. They first attempt to resolve the problem amicably. "Sometimes, however," says Bessig, "we can't always take on an issue because the various lawyers aren't willing to accept the validity of the case."

What about the fees? "All services, including the expenses, are free to the client," asserts Bessig rather proudly. Yearly memberships are $10 and there are some 8,000 members in the Northern California division alone. Aside from the tax-exempt status of their contributions, these members display a high regard for the cause of the ACLU. The national fund is somewhere in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

The ACLU became national in 1920. The Southern California division was activated in 1923; but it was not until 1934 that the Northern California division came into being. The Board of Directors for California consists of thirty members, varying from a professor at San Francisco State College to a prominent newspaper reporter. Other chapters are in Sacramento, Monterey, Santa Clara, Marin, Santa Cruz, Berkeley, Albany, Oakland and the mid-Peninsula.

"One of our more famous cases — a landmark," says Besig, "was the People vs. Korematsu." The ACLU challenged the U.S. government when 120,000 Japanese-Americans were removed from the West Coast and placed in detention camps. The Supreme Court ruled that this was legal and necessary during wartime. "Another (which we won, incidentally), was the Edwards case." It challenged the anti-"Okie" law, which prohibited indigents from entering the State of California. "This was not, as some people might believe, a matter of the Interstate Commerce Commission," said Besig. "The decision was based on the English counterpart. Freedom of movement had a bearing on this decision."

The ACLU publishes a monthly newspaper which all members receive. It follows new cases before the courts in which the ACLU is involved, other public issues of interest, and the basic rights and freedoms of every American citizen. The San Francisco chapter is located at 593 Market Street.

Free Critic Ad Nauseam

As we recuperate from the latest ills imposed upon us by the Experimental College's answer to "kindergarden color book," we wonder about the circumstances that surround Herb Gunther and his sandbox playmates.

When one reaches college age it is generally supposed that enough maturity has set in to enable the student to see that in reality all situations and all stories have at least two sides.

The Free Critic supposedly opposes hatred, bigotry and racism, however these poisons appear, along with some good stories and articles, in every edition. Hatred and negative emotions dominate the format of the Critic.

Maybe the Critic is basing its thinking on that old philosophy, "Fight fire with fire." Anyone who has tried to perform this task knows that its outcome is rarely successful.

Many students at City College are resentful about having the Free Critic published with funds that they have forked over for Associated Student Body Cards. They feel that in most cases, the Critic rarely represents the attitudes and opinions of the majority of students.

Another thing that makes one wonder why stomach upset doesn't set in with epidemic proportions among their staff is this question: How can a paper that is an anti-establishment, and continuously supports its complete overthrow, actually accept funds from the same monster that they supposedly despise? The hypocracy implied by this realization is enough to make one lose his lunch. At least you can respect an underground paper that has the guts to support itself and its printing bill by having its staff and supporters sell it on the street. But then again that is CAPITALISM.

Art Major Sketches Ky

Nguyen Kao Ky, the premier of South Viet Nam, was the subject of much attention recently in San Francisco. His speech at the Commonwealth Club brought strong reaction from student demonstrators and other anti-war factions. Even with all the confusion surrounding his visit, Stephanie Pierobello, a C.C.S.F. Art student, had an opportunity to sketch him.

$30,000 Reward

In his recent press conference with Guardsman reporters, Police Chief Al Nelder discounted the recent rumors that have been circulating about the capture of the Park Police Station bombers. Nelder said, "Let me re-emphasize the fact that there is still in excess of $30,000 reward money offered for the arrest and conviction of the bombers."

the house in which i came had no fence to walk along and fall off laughing it had no tree to climb and fall from crying.
its lawn was dust and never cluttered with bicycles and guns and horses and trucks that i might wish to trip over and skin my knees - it was the world's edge that i might never wish to fall from and so i never did.
and then,
yesterday when a stranger came to investigate at the door,
he offered me a thing called life (though the sign there said we don't want any) and i shook out my thin, white hands to accept it and it was strange and warm and i wanted to hold it but i opened my hands and let it fall:
and there
upon the untrod floor, the instant it was from my grasp, i broke.

stephanie pierobello

just a small old man standing in the leaf littered friday fall a four o'clock sun not evening not afternoon jaw hinged body frozen.
aimed forward
draped in journey brown watching
two boys on tricycles

ethan

green sheep pastured against sparked blue ocean sky foam rimmed coast rock pure joy and then here (once more because its here)
the spider cables trunk to trunk shimmering in filtered dust more sun, more words bury me in the earth and i plant a tree for me so the road swept quickly to reveal the four lane concrete for us to dive in to live in but never die in.

ethan

he falls, and watches as part of him gushes out of him.
as, by some man's whim,
his body deposits
among the twigs and bits of cooling grass
a swelling scarlet mass of the hot, rising blood, that once separated him from the dead.

before, he marched, with star-spangled excitement and mirth, as flowers sprayed down and bands played to quicken the step of those already beyond help
who pranced forward because they were told to guard the weak at home who mostly didn't give a damn about the wads of blood that spurted to the ground to warm their houses.

michael north

VIETNAM IS A DRAG

City College of San Francisco
Volume 71 Number 9
Published by the Journalism students
January 13, 1971

the Guardsman

AS Elections Today

TOM LAI

HARRY LITTEL

MARTIN POON

JACK HANSEN

Sixteen AS Offices In Hands Of Voters

By Bruno Forner

As has been the custom, the AS elections are upon us and this semester's slate is deemed an interesting lot.

The voting will be on January 13 and 14 and will be done by hand ballots.

Of the 21 students running for Student Council, only four will be incumbent. They are Franklin Fung, Dora Liang, Bonnie Solomon, and Raymond Tsang.

Three celebrities are also in the ring. Sports figures Billy Metcalf and Jerry Grays are candidates.

Of the two major offices (vice-president and president), two candidates have seen action.

Martin Poon and Jack Hansen, both vice-presidential candidates, have served on council at one time or another. Hansen's former experience in AS politics saw him in a bid for president. He was elected for Spring '69, but resigned before he took office. Poon is a current member of council.

There are two candidates for president, Tom Lai and Harry Littell.

Tom is running because he feels he "has a need to run . . . I feel that I can play an important role as president." Although Tom has not run for AS office previously, he is active in Asian student affairs, Experimental College, and the Tutorial Center.

Harry Littell has attended council meetings this semester to know the workings of government. "I felt that I was lead in that direction (of running for president)." Harry has been active in history and religious organizations.

Both candidates indicated what they would like to change most on this campus:

Tom Lai — "The food for 'H & R', better parking facilities, and cheaper prices in books."

Harry Littell — "To affect the Administration more through Student Council."

There will be various tables placed at strategic locales for voting.

Last semester, approximately 8 per cent of the available student body voted, while the figure hit about 4 per cent the two prior elections.

College Health Center Gains Possible $75,000 Boost

The Student Health Service at City College received a giant boost toward a long-range improvement program with the approval of a $75,000 grant by the Council for Higher Education.

The plan, which was recommended January 4 for financing by the US Office of Education, will now be mulled over in Washington, D.C., before becoming eligible for final consideration by the Board of Education.

San Francisco City College was the lone California college to gain a chance for the grant, because, as department head Judy Carey, a public health nurse, pointed out, there is an overwhelming health need of the urban community college student.

Miss Carey sees a "100 per cent chance" of the grant being accepted in Washington, and now awaits the outcome of the local board. Noting that the money for the plan was "earmarked," she foresaw no problem in the availability of the funds, but that it was a matter of waiting for the final decision.

Interim plans for the program includes the addition of a dental service, and the enlarging of the current staff.

The health service is now composed of 12 psychotherapists, 2 public health nurses (who also serve as pregnancy counselors), 1 part-time psychiatrist, 3 psychiatric social workers, 1 clinical

(Continued on Page 3)

Final Word From Council Candidates

Harry Littell, AS Presidential candidate:

I approve of and support with vigor: grade reform, the day care center, longer library hours, better study facilities, course evaluation, American studies (Indian), brotherhood, Art, Music, Photography, and trust.

I detest: ego, hate, division, contentions, meaningless destruction, high book and food prices, and poor and inaccurate newspapers.

Tom Lai, AS Presidential candidate:

There are many problems on campus that need attention. I have seen a lot of frustration and heard many grievances.

My main concern is campus unity among all students. By a united student body we can have an effective voice in all matters which concern students.

I invite any student with grievances to voice his opinion to student council.

I'd like to see more brotherly love among all students on the CCSF campus. Harmony being the strength of all mankind should especially be here at City College.

Jack Hansen

Support is a form of pride. Supporting and backing your school brings up its status in every way possible.

To many, elections are a drag. But it is through this process that our democracy and voting rights are sustained. Voting in elections helps to get capable people who are willing to do a job, and do it well. It's your duty to vote but whatever your beliefs, stick to them.

As a Vice President, which I am running for, I will do my best to better the school. I will help all groups and organizations; initiate desired changes. For these changes mean betterment of the school as a whole. But my main objective is to cut out the impersonality of the counseling. Counseling, presently, and this doesn't just apply to City College, is too formal. It is a computer type operation, a latent effect of industrialization and technical advancements. I feel the student should be given the time needed to keep him or her in school.

Believe it or not, school is what's happening. I realize change will not occur overnight, though many believe this, and therefore, all I can say is, that I'll get the ball rolling, from there it's all up to you as students and future leaders of this country to keep it going.

Martin Poon

I do not hunger for the vice presidency because of its position, and the prestige it may possibly give me, but rather because I hunger for a better and more effective student government.

I refrain from elaborating on my qualifications, — for I believe a person should be judged not by what he says, but by what he does. However, while I was in charge of the updating of our A.S. constitution, I recognized the necessity for changes in our present form of student government.

Secondly I intend to continue to work fervently on the Student Review Board, as I recognize the importance of this committee in extending its functions to its maximum efficiency for guaranteeing students' rights.

Thirdly to continue to work as a representative to the California Junior College Association (CJCA) and the California Community College Student for government Association (CCCSGA) is also important. As both of them are state wide governing boards of community colleges, and serve as one of its most important functions, a state wide lobbyist and legislator for bills directly affects policies that govern our community colleges.

I therefore urge all of you to show concern, and come out and let your voice be heard by VOTING.

editorial

Another Saccharin 'Go Vote' Editorial

Associated Students elections are here again and candidates are probably telling friends how much they are going to do if elected.

The problem here is that individuals who run for student offices rarely accomplish a single thing that they set out to do. This is not to take anything away from student government. Student government is an important function of the college and, depending on the elected representatives, it may or may not be a rubber stamp.

What we are trying to say is that students at City College should vote for a body of candidates because of what they will do as a body and not for individual promises. They should not immediately write off student council as meaningless or as a rubber stamp. Student government is what the students make of it.

Participation in City College elections was anemic until last semester when our campus became the center of Bay Area college anti-war activities after the Cambodia and Kent State incidents. In this election, 973 votes were cast, 8½ per cent of the student day enrollment, which equalled the voter turnout in Spring 1969. The previous Fall '68 election drew 18 per cent of the enrollment, about 2,000 votes, which does not do 973 much justice.

This semester the council appropriated $1,500 to the day care center, $100 to the Kent State student defense fund, and $200 to the Angela Davis defense fund. We strongly doubt that any of these measures rubber stamp the feelings of the administration. These were the actions of a body of people elected by 973 students who cared about the college.

Undoubtedly there were hundreds, if not thousands, of students who heard of these actions and said, "Right on," but never voted last semester. Many others probably said, "What do they think they're doing? They can't do that!" They never voted either. Then there are those who come to school and quickly leave for home or work, not earing much about what happens.

In any event, out of 11,500 students, we hope that there are more than 2,000 people who take some kind of interest in student affairs. We ask these people to vote in this election. We feel that nobody on the campus has a right to complain about student government here unless he votes.

—Paul Thiele

Angela Davis Saps Non-Liberal Students

Unless you're extremely liberal, you have every right to kick yourself and say, "What a sap I am for buying an AS card."

Do you know that $200 of your money is being used to fund Angela Davis' defense? Does this make you ashamed of your student council?

Without a doubt, the members of AS council who perpetrated this hoax didn't want the money simply to insure "a fair trial." They also wanted it because Miss Davis expresses radical means with radical aims!

In case you didn't already know it, the council also voted to give $100 for the Kent State Defense Committee, $280 to send a student to an Anti-War Conference, and coupled with this $200, makes a total of $580.

$580 are now in the hands of the radical-left causes! Isn't that enough to make you wonder why you bought an AS card?

If the Council had wanted to give that money away, why couldn't it have been used to fund special scholarships, buy new athletic equipment, feed needy families, or gone to some poor defendant like Charles Manson (remember — he only made $300 for his defense)? I'm sure the council could have been more original than the causes they ended up choosing.

If this kind of student council, voted in by only 973 students, represents 14,000 people, then it is time to make reparations.

A new election is being held, so this time — vote in a better council to avoid such finagling follies.

—By Bruno Forner

Scansion Corner Beads At High Class Vibrations

Well, we're back!

For our first article of this new year, we'd like to take a bead at the famed victim of one of our cohorts in crime — Countess Liberte. We'd like to attack you clods.

Yes — you. The weak willed imbecile who lolls around with the cheapie transistor tuned to such illicit stations as KDIA or KFRC. The moron who plays James Brown or Creedence Clearwater LPs way too loud.

We'd like you to reform.

Start tuning your transistor to the good stuff — stations like K-101 or KKHI. Buy a better radio (one with AM-FM stereo, perhaps?) and don't be afraid to splurge.

Toss James Brown and Creedence Clearwater out the window and begin playing the original heavies — the classics.

One we highly recommend is "Symphony No. 9" by Ludwig Van Beethoven (give it a listen — you'll agree that it is the greatest piece of music written).

So start taking heed musically, you clods, or your 'Women's Libber' frump girlfriend may get the message and toss you out the window. Or will you?

JOE KONTE

Darn it, Free Critic!

(The "Free Critic" offered three letters concerning my November 25 column in their December issue. The following are excerpts from these letters, which I have taken the time to answer.)

"We the students and faculty of Latino background at CCSF and supporters of Law and Order with Justice demand that you, Joe Konte, apologize for the following remarks made in your editorial . . .

"The students and members of the Latin-American community demand that you refrain from writing these 'racist articles' and apologize or submit your resignation in the name of justice."

LA RAZA UNIDA
SF CITY COLLEGE

Apologizing to you would be like Truman apologizing to the inhabitants of Hiroshima after the bomb hit. When you decide to favor censorship and put the first amendment to death, please invite me to the funeral. I'll bring flowers and my walking papers.

"We demand an apology to Los Siete and to La Raza — the brown community — for the irresponsibility of the editorial and especially for its racist tone. The racism is evident in the contemptuous way Konte refers to the six men as "aces" and in his ignorance of the needs and interests of third world people . . ."

CITY COLLEGE
WOMEN LIBERATION

Ah, my dear young ladies, there you go getting all excited and distorting the facts. Conniving-shuffled the deck-dealt aces . . . The words simply connect the thought of the sentence. Sorry gals, if you want to search for the ugliness of racism, you'll have to go somewhere else besides this column.

"You refer to me and my people as "backward minds . . . hate filled words. Joe Konte, F--- you.

"The hate you so easily attribute to other persons is mostly fear that is inside you, Joe."

CARLOS MELENDREZ

Reverting to the four-letter word syndrome in expressing one's opinion is like digging a hole with a pitchfork. Your letter seems sensible, and then you mutter that. Perhaps, it was a slip of the tongue. Okay, Carlos, I apologize to all Los Siete supporters who don't have backward minds or hate filled words.

"Hey, Konte, Are You F---ing Serious Man?" (Used as the headline for the letters.)

FREE CRITIC
DEC. '70

Darn it, Free Critic, I just explained to Mr. Melendrez that using that word only defeats one's purpose, and there you go putting it in bold print.

Our Own Dr. Ego Supremist

"Behind every great man, there is a woman" or so the old quote goes. If I would have made the original statement, it would have continued: ". . . reaching for his wallet." I have found that in America finance and romance are synonomous.

My New Year's resolutions for 1971 are geared towards the treatment of the once fairer sex. I feel compelled to share them with my brothers who have also become the victims of the monstrous Amazons in their bloody quest for women's liberation.

In 1971 I will not allow a woman who is not supporting me, or at least paying my rent, to beat me at arm wrestling or at any other sport.

In 1971 I refuse to buy any new clothes or to invest in any strange gimmicks, automobiles or disguises to impress or enamor any of the candidates that I may have in mind to scrub the floors of my future kitchen or bathroom.

In the coming year I will let off at the nearest bus stop any rude female passenger that is riding with me in my car. Being chivalrous I would of course give them the 20 cents necessary to continue their journey.

During 1971 I will not allow women to get on my nerves with their petty complaints, their menial problems or their boring chatter.

In 1971 I will not go to movies or plays that I know I won't enjoy just to impress or to satisfy a current flame.

Finally, I will have more sympathy for those men who have chosen celibacy or homosexuality over domination.

SIERRA CLUB

Bruce Keegan, the chairman of the Sierra Club Wildlife Subcommittee, will speak at City College Thursday, January 14 during college hour (11-12) in room S-335.

Keegan will talk about wildlife in California, particularly with reference to the government's controversial predator control program. Conservationists have criticized the poisoning of predators such as wolves and mountain lions.

Bruce Keegan will also show color slides he took of moose, elk, mountain lions in wild places of the west.

The lecture is open to all interested in learning more about California's wildlife.

BAHA'I FILMS

The Baha'i Campus Club is sponsoring a film "It's Just the Beginning," to be shown in Cloud Hall 247, 11 a.m. next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The film depicts Baha'i youth at a 1970 summer conference in Willamette, Illinois, at the United States Baha'i Temple in the Chicago area.

Baha'is are followers of Baha'u'llah, whose teachings they believe will provide the spiritual prerequisites for the oneness of mankind in a new world order. Baha'is can be contacted at 824-4095 or 386-3755 or the Student Union mailbox.

Countess Liberte'

It is one of the sadder facets of life that women are . . . fickle! Restless eyed, ever in quest of the perfect apollo; they love Bill one moment and Gerard or Domingo the next.

What women need is constant change of scenery and cast — a veritable movable feast! Be that feast.

Start the New Year with a complete motor overhaul. Throw chaos and revolution into tired thoughts — work down to the feet and don grecian sandals in place of shabby combats. Decorate your early Sears atelier with Morrocan tapestries. Better yet — move to Tanganika.

Prepare for the competition. Surprise, amaze and shock the wandering woman. Be a little insane; be fer-wheeee! Be new, my fading lotharios, or spend '71 with a case of ripple and affairs that only live in your memory.

A Closeup View Of Two Blind Students

There are six blind students at City College. To find how they take exams, study, and get to and from school, I talked to two of them, Gene Lozano and Bonnie Reyff.

Gene Lozano is 20. He doesn't use a guide dog; he feels more independent without one. "Besides," he adds, "theater and apartment owners often don't want people with dogs."

Gene is taking twelve units in his fourth semester at the college. A cell and molecular biology major, he hopes eventually to teach anatomy or physiology to college students. Gene now has courses in speech, conservation (Biology 20), Psychology, and astronomy. A lover of music and movies, he also enjoys the drama department's plays.

He studies with the help of a casette tape recorder. Comprehension is no better with tapes than books, Gene finds. When unable to rent the tapes, friends read the assignments to him.

Although the location of teacher's offices in Cloud Hall confuses him, Lozano usually knows his way around City College fairly well. He lives not far from the campus, near the '280' freeway. When younger, he played at the campus and was able to see it until two years ago, when he lost his sight.

He now walks to and from school. Of course, he experiences difficulty at times. On one occasion, a dog, possibly excited by Gene's cane, attacked him. He tripped backwards over a flower bed, and the dog left him unhurt.

Gene Lozano is annoyed when walking on a sidewalk, and he confronts a car parked in a driveway, forcing him to go around. He takes a chance walking in the street around the car, because other cars move fast down Judson Avenue. Many drivers, he claims, make the turn without regard for pedestrians. "Even sighted people complain," says Lozano.

Gene revealed several other problems of the blind. "The blind face as much prejudice as blacks," he explained. "There are special housing and voting laws. Until several years ago, a California law restricted the voting rights of the blind. And until recently, Utah Mormons were ashamed of their blind people, keeping them from school."

Bonnie Reyff, 21, is a music major. Like Gene, she is blind but prefers to use a cane rather than a dog to guide her around the campus. "Besides," she says, "I've already got a large dog at home, and listen for cars more with a cane."

She is oriented to music rather than science, though. In her fifth semester, she takes 12 units — health, harmony, music, history, and chamber choir. She also enjoys Paul Hewitt's Physics 10 course.

Bonnie intends to become professionally involved in opera singing, concert work, teaching music or choral direction.

She takes notes in braille, rather than using a tape recorder. Bonnie uses a slate and stylus. Paper is inserted into the slate, which opens like a book. The stylus is used to punch the paper into brailled letters. Holes in the slate act as guides for the letters.

Braille books can be reviewed from the braille Book Review, then borrowed by mail from a Sacramento library, although, says Bonnie, "It's hard to get new books in braille."

Two readers help her prepare for tests, which she takes with a helper, or personally from the teacher.

Bonnie entered the California School for the Blind for junior high school studies. She also spent a summer at Enchanted Hills, where she swam, rode horses, and studied nature.

She will enter the Orientation Center in Albany to learn basic chores — cooking, house cleaning, sewing, etc.

Bonnie Reyff is now involved in the SF Opera Player's group, which performs annual concerts to raise money for itself and charity. In its production of La Boheme, Bonnie acted and sang the part of Mimi.

When spending a summer at the Russian River, Bonnie likes to collect and feel shiny rocks from the river bed.

She gets a ride to and from school, but would someday like to take the bus to school, as "an adventure, to meet interesting people."

Bill Bennett Sworn Into Board of Equalization

By Bill Collins

William Bennett, who spoke on his battle for the California consumers at City College in November, was sworn into office as a member of the State Board of Equalization.

Bennett, a prominent consumer spokesman and lawyer, acknowledged the honor, recalling that he had watched Earl Warren also swear John Kennedy into office in 1960. Warren was California's attorney general, three-term governor and Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court for over 15 years.

Following the brief ceremony, Bill Bennett noted he hadn't fully realized he was elected until the Christmas cards came. "Last year," he recalled, "I received only one card — from my wife. This year, I got five from utilities, three from banks, five from oil companies . . ." As a member of the Public Utilities Commission and a private citizen Bennett has antagonized monopolistic utility mergers and rate increases. He praised his predecessor, retiring Paul Leake, who was also present at the ceremony. Leake, 80, was a Warren appointee nearly 20 years ago. The conservative Democrat criticized Governor Reagan, saying the Governor hates Democrats with a passion.

Bennett Swears In

Bennett also had kind words for Earl Warren and the Warren court, which "advanced the cause of Blacks, Browns, and students. It cared about people over property, individuals over institutions."

He recalled the greatest moment in a lawyer's career, when he was privileged to address the Supreme Court. "Mr. Justice, may it please the court . . ."

William Bennett plans to change the "inequitable tax structure which taxes the middle class out of existence."

He was elected to the bax board in November. Its purpose is to collect and equalize state taxes.

Bill Bennett chose his finance chairman, because "he knew single entry bookkeeping." Bennett personally financed half of the funds used in his winning $6,000 campaign. His opponent reported expenditures in excess of $100,000.

City College Book Exchange Eliminates 'the Middle Man'

By Sally Yee

As the semester comes to a close, City College students are faced with finals and the prospect of standing in long lines to sell their books to either the Associated Students' Book Store or Cal Book Store. At both of these places, the students will sell back their used books to receive, at most, one-half the purchase price. No consideration will be given for whether the students kept their books in "like new" condition or whether they underlined them heavily with pencil or felt-tipped markers or otherwise abused them. The price they receive will be the same.

As an alternate method to this unfair, depersonalized way of doing business, Janey Killebrew, a third semester student at CCSF, has come up with the idea of a book exchange, a student-oriented switchboard-like operation, which started at the end of the Spring, 1970, semester. We interviewed her and decided to let you have it in her own words about what the Book Exchange is all about.

Sally: What is the Book Exchange?

Janey: The Book Exchange is a method by which students can exchange books among themselves that they no longer need for books needed in new courses.

S: How does it work?

J: The student registers books at the Book Exchange that he would like to buy or sell; he also looks at the books already listed by their owners and then copies the name and phone number of each person who has a book he would like to buy or to whom he would like to sell a book. He contacts each person and then bargains with him.

S: How was the response last semester?

J: The response could have been better; lack of exposure to and knowledge about the Book Exchange Program prevented many students from participating. Few students had kept used texts over the summer. Manpower for making posters, distributing leaflets, and manning the Book Exchange Information Booth was lacking.

S: Why do you think the Book Exchange will succeed this semester?

J: Well, for one thing there won't be the long break over the summer. We hope to have more publicity, such as more instructors informing their students about it; We'll have leaflets to pass out and posters put up and maybe some spot announcements on KCSF. I also think the students are ready for something new like the Book Exchange.

S: This all sounds like an awful lot of work. Do you need any help?

J: We really do. We need interested students who will be here next Fall to carry on this idea. We need people to man the booth in the lobby of the Educational Services Building. We need people to hand out leaflets. Most of all we need a majority of students who will participate by selling and buying their books through us.

S: How does someone who wants to help get in contact with you?

J: They can phone me directly at 585-9747 or Olga Renoff at 564-3645, or they can drop by Experimental College to sign up on our bulletin board. If they leave their name and number, we'll call them back.

S: When will the Book Exchange take place?

J: We'll have the booth in the Educational Services Building open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. during finals (Jan. 20 to Jan. 29) and during the first week of the Spring semester (Feb. 10 to Feb. 17). After that time the clipboards and the other Book Exchange materials will be kept in Experimental College (B-5) for reference.

HELP Drive

The studentry of City College, along with the surrounding community, collected 10 full barrels of food, clothing, and linen for the project H.E.L.P. Christmas drive.

The City College Student Nurses Association sponsored the drive under the leadership of nurses Lorna Lipes and Debi Paul. During the entire week of December 14 through 18, donations were left in barrels around the vast CCSF campus. "The response was just terrific," told Debi Paul. "The usually apathetic student body, and faculty, was bitten by the Christmas-spirit bug and donated very generously."

Miss Paul stressed that the community response was exceptionally good. "One man drove all the way from Belmont to deliver things to us," she said.

Project H.E.L.P. (Help Every Lost Person) is a community relief organization headed by Katy Blair. At the Mission District headquarters "Katy" gives assistance to anyone that is looking for help. The charity is totally funded by community donations.

Several CCSF organizations volunteered assistance to the nurses organization, including KCSF (campus radio), the campus public relations team, and the campus police. Miss Paul said of the police, "They were great! During their off-hours they carried barrels to the storage center, and on the last day of the drive loaded all the things onto the truck for us. They were just great! I just can't imagine us carrying all those barrles around campus."

A small rock concert was held on Dec. 17 for the drive. All persons were asked to donate a can of food as admission. The proceeds were less than the nurses expected. Itzak's Folly entertained all that arrived at the concert. After the City College nurses delivered the proceeds to H.E.L.P. headquarters, at 3318 26th St., Katy Blair had appropriately only one thing to say, "Thank You."

AS Candidates

The Guardsman lists the complete ballot for the various offices in Associated Student government

PRESIDENT
Tom Lai (CCC-CSA)
Harry Littel

VICE-PRESIDENT
Jack Hansen
Martin Poon (CCC-CSA)

STUDENT COUNCIL
Dan Atzinger
Florence Chan (CCC-CSA)
Dennis Cox
Charla Duke
Dennis Fong
Frankling Fung (CCC-CSA) (Incum.)
Jerry Grays
Margaret Gunnell
Tat Ming Ko (CCC-CSA)
Patricia Lane
Henry Lau (CCC-CSA)
Dora Liang (CCC-CSA) (Incumb.)
Steve Marigan
Danny Martinez
Billy Metcalf
Gloria Nova
Roland Quan
Bonnie Solomon (Incumbent)
Paul Thiele
Raymond Tsang (CCC-CSA) (Incumb.)
Paul Yee (CCC-CSA)

Health Center

(Continued from Page One)

psychologist, 7 graduate school trainees in psychotherapy, and 2 psychiatric residents from Mt. Zion hospital.

The goal is to encourage the people who assist in keeping the center open 70 hours a week for student use, to be recruited as full-time workers.

Other long-range goals call for the establishing of food stamps, legal aid, and welfare programs, plus the addition of para-medical students to serve in the nursing program, as nurses assistants, x-ray technicians, and medical librarians.

—Joe Konte

RAM DYNASTY BACK AGAIN

Photos by Ted Lyau

Tony Escobar (24) looks on as Willie Daigle (13) makes another rebound.

Billy Metcalf (52) lays one up against CCC, as he proves that the Rams have the ability to take the GGC title again.

Rams Are 9-5 In Exhibitions

The City College cagers wrapped up their pre-season play with a 9 and 5 record. Ah, friends, the cause is certainly not lost though, for last season's pre-season record was an exact 9 and 5, and yet the Rams plundered the Golden Gate Conference with a 13 and 1 championship record.

During the Christmas break, the Rams participated in both the Modesto Junior College Invitational Tournament and the San Joaquin Delta Holiday Classic.

Playing in the 33rd Modesto tourney first, the Rams dismembered Alan Hancock College, their first round opponent, 73 to 63. After breaking an early 10-10 tie the Rams never looked back. Guards Billy Metcalf poured in 20, and Larry Haren canned 17 to lead the team in scoring.

In the quarter finals, GGC title contender Laney College fell to the Rams, 72-65. With a minute left, and the score at 65-63 forward Ron Dale iced the victory with a pair of free throws. Top scorers for the Rams were center Jerry LeBlance (15), Wayne Snelgro (14), and Bill Metcalf (13).

Behind Larry Haren's clutch performances, the Rams gained entry into the finals by beating San Joaquin Delta 76-65. Haren led the Rams with 21 points, and both Jerry LeBlance and Bill Metcalf had 14 apiece.

A defensive lapse cost the Rams 14 straight points and the championship trophy as well. Final score was Long Beach City College 72 and CCSF 69. Bill Metcalf led the Rams 22 points, Wayne Snelgro rolled in 15 and Jerry LeBlance hit for 13.

The Modesto Tourney honored Bill Metcalf by selecting him for the first All-Tournament Team. Selected for the second team was guard Larry Haren.

Taking time off from tourney play the Rams trounced American River College 61-55 on the 22 at City. Hitting the points for the Rams were Ron Dale (23), Metcalf (15), and Haren (14).

Starting off the San Joaquin Classic against Chaffey College, coach Sid Phelan started his second team since they had beaten his first team in a number of scrimmages. The second team rode roughshod over Chaffey and enabled the first team to mop in the second half. Rams 63 and Chaffey 52. Again leading the Ram scorers was Bill Metcalf with 15, next behind him were Cary Dunne and Charles Goodwin who both scored 10 apiece.

The Rams' road to the top was stopped short by a ball hawking San Joaquin Delta team that blew the Rams off with an 83 to 67 victory. Delta stole the ball 24 times in the second half. The consistent Metcalf led the field with a 22-point performance.

Before the consolation game against West Valley, cager Larry Haren was involved in an accident and has still been declared out for the time being.

Against West Valley, the Rams led 56-53 with a minute and sixteen seconds left, when West Valley's Joe Gallagher hit 4 straight free throws, one with just four seconds left to beat the Rams 57-56.

Bill Metcalf was again selected for an All-tourney team, that of the San Joaquin Delta Holiday Classic.

Merritt Falls To Ram Cagers

The Rams' "big five" proved too much for the title conscious Merritt Thunderbirds, as they rolled up their first win of the 1971 Golden Gate Conference season. Led by Ron Dale and Wild Bill Metcalf, between themselves they scored 41 points against Merritt, and superb performances by Willie Daigle, Wayne Snelgro, and Jerry LeBlance, City's cagers impressively skunked Merritt 63-48.

Minutes into the first half the score was deadlocked at 4 and 4. It was an extremely tight battle with neither team dominating. The see-saw battle swayed back and forth all the way through the first half. When the halftime whistle blew, the scoreboard showed a 27-27 tie.

Art Williams, Merritt's number one gunner, was held to a low 9 points by center Jerry LeBlance who himself coped 9 points through the hoop. Once the Thunderbirds fell behind, Williams, an outstanding ball player, along with his teammates were unable to break into double figures due to the tenacious Ram defense.

Assuredly defense was the name of the game in the second half. The Rams showed pity is never displayed while on the court. A stolen ball with 10:43 left in the game by Metcalf set up a lay-up to Dale. From then on it was City dominating all the way.

Metcalf's running mate Larry Haren was unable to play due to an injury he sustained at the San Joaquin Tournament. He will be out of action for a while, but when he's all right aces will be paired.

AMS Night

It's that time again for the Associated Students' Sportsnight to appear on the City College Scene. Sportsnight scheduled for tonight the 13th, at 6 p.m. at the Men's Gym.

Sportsnight will encompass a variety of events including boxing, basketball, judo, and gymnastics.

Admission is free with an Associated Student's card, seventy-five cents if one has a CCSF identification card, and a dollar fifty for the general public.

But don't let the price of admission stop you, for the show is well worth the small change.

Headlining the show is a special boxing match between local Golden Gloves champ Sam Helmer and Jessie Byrd the present National AAU Golden Gloves heavyweight champ. Both fighters are undefeated. Five boxing matches in all are planned.

The championships of the Basketball intramural league will be at stake, when the Young Lions take on the Wheelbarrows.

Numerous gymnastic and judo demonstrations are also on the agenda.

Director of AMS night is Chris Davies.

Sam Helmer

Ram Cagers '71 Roster

PLAYER NUMBER	NAME	POSITION	AGE	HT	WT	YR	HIGH SCHOOL
10	Taylor, Bob	G	18	5'9	155	FR	WASHINGTON
13	Daigle, Willie	G	18	5'10	163	FR	WILSON
15	Bradley, Terry	F	19	6'3	173	SO	POLY
22	Sims, James	F	22	6'2	170	FR	WASHINGTON
23	Snelgro, Wayne	C	18	6'5	185	FR	WILSON
24	Escobar, Tony	G	18	5'8	135	FR	MISSION
33	Flaherty, Steve	F	18	6'2	184	SO	WILSON
34	Haren, Larry	F	19	6'2	184	FR	RIORDAN
40	Dunne, Cary	F	18	6'2	182	FR	LOWELL
42	Kirkwood, Malcolm	C	19	6'5	200	SO	GALILEO
44	Dale, Ron	F	18	6'2	165	FR	WILSON
45	Leblance, Jerry	C	19	6'8	205	SO	GALILEO
52	Metcalf, Billy	G	23	5'11	160	SO	MISSION
54	Byrd, Harold	G	19	6'2	180	SO	MISSION
55	Starks, Jim	F	20	6'3	170	FR	MISSION
32	Goodwin, Charles	G	18	6'1	175	FR	WASHINGTON

The Guardsman

REFERENCE DESK

San Francisco
Community College
Volume 72 Number 1
February 25, 1971

First Round Draw Leaves Open Counseling Position

By Joe Konte

Round two of the attempt to select an oriental counselor at City College has begun. But unlike the controversy and heated debate which marked round one, this semester's phase is expected to be held in more moderate discussion.

Counseling Department Chairman, Don Marcus, summed up the Spring's new activities by saying that the "football is now in the hands of administration." The Counseling Department Personnel Interviewing Committee is to recommend counseling prospects for employment. Deadline for candidates for the position is March 8.

The credential requirements for each candidate, according to a department release, is to have a masters degree in counseling, guidance, student personnel, psychology, a behavioral science or social welfare or a Pupil Personnel Service Credential issued before January 1, 1971, authorizing Guidance

Continued on Page 8

Tom Lai

Tom Lai Wins Top Council Post

The Associated Students elections of January 13 and 14 give hope to anyone who thinks that apathy is beginning to diminish on this campus.

The final tabulation showed that 1160 people cast ballots during the election, which is 10.. of the spring semester student body. This shows an improvement over the 8½.. of the last (Fall 1970) election.

Elected to the council were: Tom Lai, AS president; Martin Poon, in a supporting role as AS vice-president; and the following were elected to the general council: Florence Chan, Charla Duke, Franklin Fung, Tat Ko, Patricia Lane, Henry Lau, Dora Liang, Steve Marigan, Danny Martinez, Billy Metcalf, Roland Quan, Bonnie Solomon, Raymond Tsang, and Paul Yee.

Of these elected, Fung, Liang, Solomon, and Tsang are all returning veterans. Martin Poon also served on council last term.

Martin Poon takes his place as the new AS VP.

Election Results

PRESIDENT
Tom Lai (CCC-CSA)..810
Harry Littell..288

VICE PRESIDENT
Martin Poon (CCC-CSA)..683
Jack Hansen..418

STUDENT COUNCIL
Florence Chan (CCC-CSA)..742
Dora Liang (CCC-CSA)

Martin Poon (CCC-CSA)	683
Jack Hansen	418
Student Council
Florence Chan (CCC-CSA)	741
Dora Liang (CCC-CSA)*	727
Paul Yee (CCC-CSA)	709
Roland Quan (CCC-CSA)	705
Franklin Fung (CCC-CSA)*	653
Henry Lau (CCC-CSA)	645
Raymond Tsang (CCC-CSA)*	636
Tat Ming Ko (CCC-CSA)	634
Billy Metcalf	422
Charla Duke	403
Bonnie Solomaon*	363
Danny Martinez	351
Patricia Lane	311
Steve Marigan	311
Margaret Cunnell	307
Gloria Novoa	300
Dan Atzinger	299
Dennix Cox	272
Paul Thiele	254
Jerry Grays	236

*incumbent

Suppose They Gave A War Rally And Nobody Came . . .

Goebel organizes the rally at the Rams Head

"Out Now from Viet Nam"

John Goebel, Chairman of the Student Mobilization Committee at City College stated, "73% of the American public is now against the Vietnam war." He refers to the findings of a recent Harris Poll. This overwhelming sentiment was not displayed at the "Ram Rally" against "escalation of the war", scheduled for Thursday, February 18. No one showed.

Goebel attributes the lack of attendance to a mix-up in auditory equipment requested for the morning rally and "widespread apathy" among most students on campus.

He cites the fact that membership in the SMC "fluctuates between 25 and 30" throughout the semester. "Our real purpose in organizing this rally," says Goebel, "is to respond to the American invasion of Laos this past week and organize support for the big moratorium on April 24th." He estimates that the April moratorium will be "massive" in comparison to last year's demonstrations. "Anyone interested in joining SMC is welcome to see me at A-314, 11 am. on Tuesdays," says Goebel.

- Ron Patrick

GUARDSMAN EDITORIALS

Jim Complains About Complainers

School has been open for only two weeks and already the complaining has started.

It seems that everyone is unhappy about everything.

People have already started dropping out just because they couldn't get the exact classes that they wanted. Some students feel that all of the bureaucracy and computerized run-around that they must suffer through isn't worth the education that they will eventually receive as their reward. They may be right, but their attitude is pretty poor.

Part of life's education is accepting the fact that you can't have everything that you want. Those dissatisfied people who have not found this to be a truth, might do well to drop out of school for awhile so that they can get a taste of the real world and the complexities that compose it.

The majority of those enrolled in classes at San Francisco Community College, as we are now called, will probably stay on and at least finish out the semester. Perseverence is the first step to accomplishment and perhaps the only step to survival.

Complaints, however, are a sign of unhappiness, and it is unhappiness that causes the downfall of most college students. On a national average, at least 50 percent of all students who enter college never complete their education. You don't need a college degree to lead a rich, full life, but in some instances it may come in pretty handy, depending on what you want to do with your life.

Solving the problem of unhappiness may be the greatest challenge of your life let alone your college career. If you want to succeed in life, according to your own standards, you must be happy.

I don't pretend to be an expert on happiness, but I can reveal to you some of the secrets that I have picked up on my travels.

The first steps to happiness are self-acceptance and self-understanding. You must learn to live with, and love yourself, in a non-egotistical sense, before anyone can accept or love you. You should learn to understand yourself before you become annoyed at those who cannot understand you. You must accept yourself for what you are before you can expect others to accept you. You should have an objective appreciation of your inner self.

If you want the world, or society or anyone, to tolerate you or your beliefs, you should try to tolerate theirs.

You must be generous, be forgiving, and give love before you expect these gifts yourself.

When you give, you should enjoy the pleasure that giving is, rather than wanting the selfish pleasure of thankfulness from the recipient.

Many of you will emerge from college with an attitude of superiority. You will feel self important. To be happy you will have to learn tolerance for the unlearned and the ignorant.

Finally, to achieve happiness, you will have to learn to comprehend the meaning of freedom. You must understand that freedom has its limits and that they are relative to your entire environment. Volumes have been written on this subject, and I will not attempt to expand on this idea now. There are two facts relating to your freedom, however, that can not be argued with. Your body limits your freedom by confining your spirit to a physical plane. When you die, the matter that composes your physical being will be restricted to the "limitless" boundaries of that giant cage known as the universe.

Good luck this semester and may you all attain inner peace and happiness.

- Jim Tolland

Every semester at SFCC sees a great tide of apathy flood the campus, and members of the "Guardsman" editorial board are among the first to experience it.

If you are a student who doesn't want to be apathetic, then coming to S-304 is coming to the right place.

If you are a skilled reporter, creative writer, critic of any art form, photographer, sports buff, cartoonist, satirist, typist, newspaper vendor, or just want to be of help, we need you. We will also accept unskilled people and train you.

Come to S-304 (our editorial office) and talk to any of the editors about signing up for Journalism 24A, 25A, B, or C. If your journalism experience is nil but you feel you're headed in that direction, then the course to take is Journalism 21A.

We also need members of the Photography 93C class to help, and people to distribute the paper when it comes fresh off the presses.

-The Editors

Letters to the Editor

The Guardsman is more than glad to accept letters to the editors dealing with various topics. Just address your comment or gripe to The Guardsman, S-304, 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112 or bring them up to S-304.

Dear Editor:

While Professor Trevor-Roper's speaking appearance at City College is to be highly commended, his analysis of Hitler's takeover as a "revolution" was a great disappointment to some students. The real German revolution of this century, which broke out in November of 1918 at the end of World War I, ended in compromise which was later followed by the repression of the working class under Fascism. According to Leon Trotsky, Fascism in Germany left the social system undecided.

Mike Slattery

Dear Editor:

In December 10, 1970 issue of the GUARDSMAN Professor Hugh Trevor-Roper was quoted as saying, "I do not understand student unrest at Oxford, let alone here in San Francisco; I am sure that they all one day will grow up."

If Professor Trevor-Roper knew of, or rememberd from his own years in school, many of the frustrations resulting from what many students feel are unfair impairment of progress toward goal achievement, then he might understand why so many students, many of whom are tax paying ADULTS, are unrestful or in a condition of angry discontent verging on revolt.

Howard Kendler, in BASIC PSYCHOLOGY, writes that "aggression, by which we mean attack on a person or object, is one of the most common responses to frustration."

Would Professor Trevor-Roper prefer extreme apathetic reaction to problems and have students never "growup?" From HISTORY we learn that "American prisoners-of-war" (—many students consider themselves prisoners in an unjust society—) "suffered a high death rate presumably because of the frequency of extreme apathetic reactions. Death could be prevented if it were possible to get a prisoner to move around and get involved in a problem, no matter how trivial the problem."

Students are human beings like everyone else. Their reactions to problems runs from extreme apathy to extreme violence. Unrest is only one and not the worst of these reactions.

Understanding student unrest is simply remembering that all of us have problems, but who remembers their greatest problem of one year ago.

To decrease student unrest, the problems of students must be determined, and they MUST be solved, or their unrest may, and often does turn into actual rebellion.

- Darryl R. Pilcher

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco Community College as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland

MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick

NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte

EDITORIALS Bruno R. Forner

FEATURE EDITOR Charles Prongos

SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen

EXCHANGE Ed Hartzler

PHOTOGRAPHY Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS

Janet Alston, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

FACULTY ADVISER

Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

Dear Diary,

Lord, what a hectic day this has been! I'm so exhausted that I think I'll just call Ed and cancel our theater date tonight. Besides, publicity is scant on Sundays and Jackie and Ari always seem to steal the show. I suppose the Coxes are right when they say I take advantage of Ed, but it makes me sick when they accuse daddy of "playing politics" with their son. I just happen to know that daddy isn't like that at all.

Well, getting back to my day . . . It actually started last January when the University of Minnesota invited mom, Julie and I to a charity benefit for poor minority children. Oh, I should have known better, but mom always says "what's good for daddy is good for us" and she promised me a new dress to show-off at the affair. (I've certainly got a weakness for pretty clothes). Julie wanted to haul David along, but mom said it didn't look nice anymore — all those other boys off fighting in Vietnam, and him having such an easy time stateside. Daddy feels the same way. (He figures if David plays it "low key", maybe no one will ever notice that he spent four years as a PR-man for the Navy). Darn it, where was I? Oh, the benefit.

Well, before we left, Ron Ziegler told us it would be a skit of some kind — the drama department would put on a little show and we could make a brief publicity appearance and leave (Ron is pretty good at acting himself), but it didn't work out that way. When we got to the campus theater a group of those damned war protestors were yelling and screaming "Get out of Vietnam and Cambodia; stay out of Laos" and "Peace now." Julie just ignored them but mom always flubs it — when she puts on her plastic smile, you can easily tell when she's mad because her upper lip starts to quiver and her right eye twitches. I don't let those protestors bother me though, because daddy says they're all Communists anyway.

So, after we got past the Communists outside, the secret service motioned for us to come through the back door and be seated in a little office behind the theater. Julie started complaining about how she could be back in Washington reading that godawful book she's started, "The Sensuous Woman" and mom told her to shut-up because she shouldn't broadcast the kind of garbage she's reading to the whole world. Some administrator introduced himself and gave us instructions on what to do and mom tidied-up her hair and put on her smile.

At intermission the secret service led us onto the stage and propped us behind the podium. In filed a gang of ragged little children; all giggling and smarting-off. Ron Ziegler told us all to smile for the cameras when the curtains opened and he would see to it that we hit front page. Mom reminded us again that "what's good for daddy is good for us," but I was worried about close-ups because my roots are beginning to show. Julie suggested that I wear a hat and mom barked at her in harsher tones than she ordinarily uses on the servants at the White House.

The horrible thing was, when they opened the curtains, no photographers (or even reporters) were there — just a bunch of stupid college kids. After the show, Ron started to apologize, saying that he just couldn't understand why the press didn't show, and how daddy was going to "kill" him because he didn't arrange good publicity. But, mom just sort of stared over his head and twitched that funny twitch of hers, and Julie started in again on what a waste of time . . . and I started to cry. Goodnight.

— Tricia Nixon

TWO COMMUNIST PLOTS

- Bruno R. Forner

There are two Communists plots occurring in this country, one a few miles north of here, and the other in our own back yards.

The first is the overwhelming drug situation.

The drug scene, although it is old hat, is still important enough to be a problem.

We are at an impasse, as we can see. The same point of drug saturation the U. S. has now occurred in mainland China shortly before the reds took over.

If we don't get off our apathetic derrieres and start doing something - the United States won't be so united anymore.

The other hoax, even more important, is occurring in San Rafael - Angela Davis.

The commies are looking quite intently on the case to use the outcome as propaganda. Please do not look the other way.

What worries us is the fact that our seemingly unimportant AS Council tried to give $200 of our money to fund Miss Davis' defense. Thanks to the insight of Judy Kay, that attempt was thwarted.

If our council decides to pull off the same stunt again, they must give an equal amount to Edgar Smith, a teacher who has been on the New Jersey death row longer than any other prisoner in the history of this country. Just because Miss Davis is a black commie, does not mean we can avoid the white man.

What is also of note is the fact that the California Teachers Association will try to endorse Miss Davis. If this comes off, it will prove that they are both stupid and Communist. But, we guess everyone must know that by now in light of prior actions by this greedy group. There you have the two main enemies. Now that you know, form committees to combat drug use. Protest student council if they try the $200 stunt again. Sign petitions condemning the CTA.

Remember - if we don't thwart these Commie plots, they will try to thwart us. And then America won't be a free country any more.

Apathy at Six O'clock

By Joe Konte

The roast and potatoes were laid out on the table and three or four plates later, they were gone. I stumbled into the living room, flipped on the TV, and crawled into the easy chair, prepared for a restful evening. And then the six o'clock news began.

First the tube brought Indochina into the house with scenes of Laos, Vietnam, Thailand, and wherever else we are over there. All that shooting and killing! For what? But the story ends on a good note - only 27 American deaths this week.

And then there is that mass destruction in L.A. A crumpled hospital, broken dam, fallen power poles, and about 50 deaths are results of an earthquake.

Two yawns and three commercials later, I was rudely roused from a half-daze by some off-key singing, which turned out to be some young broad strumming a guitar to the tune of "Vietnamese Woman," during a UC Berkeley anti-war rally. Although not destined for a hit, the song was roundly applauded by the Viet Cong flag waving ninnies in attendance. Moments later, the same group of knotheads marched through the streets, shattering windows and a policeman's head. Gee, I wonder if that'll stop the war?

Then came that other institution of higher learning, Stanford, and its elite corps of misunderstood rock throwers. There are fiery speeches, violence, and confrontations with the law. It looks all too familiar.

I was just getting that Berkeley broad's shrill out of my ear when the somber newsman reveals Susan Atkins' confession of the gruesome slaying of Sharon Tate.

It was followed by films from the bedlam in Northern Ireland, where children were throwing bombs. Gosh, I was tossing baseballs at that age.

Things are bad enough, and then I hear about the four month old child who died after being refused admission to SF General Hospital due to "new law" medical regulations which forbid treatment unless the patient is dying.

Tonight's telecast looked all too much like yesterday's and probably will be rerun tomorrow. And I'll sit and stare on a full stomach, telling myself how bad the world is.

We're fed a steady diet of war, violence, and inhumanity, and too many of us fail to realize that. Many are content to simply scream about the problems, but they won't move their stuffed carcasses and do something about them.

I can't do a thing about an impatient nature which destroys lives and buildings down south, but I can act on impatient men who wage war or hurl rocks for peace.

Now if you'll excuse me, I know there's some pie in the icebox . . .

Paul Jenkins portrays Randle. Patrick McMurphy (Mac) in the current production of One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest.

Versatile actress Jo De Winters plays nurse ratched in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," now at the Little Fox.

Live Comedy Smash Success

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" is defininitely the best play San Francisco has seen for a long time. It's been playing for nearly ten months at the Little Fox Theater and it's run has been extended indefinitely.

Cuckoo's Nest is an adaptation by Dale Wasserman (Man of La Mancha) from the book by Ken Kesey; it equals its written counterpart.

The lighting and projected media, done by Michael Clivner, is outstanding. Projection works better in a small theater, such as the Little Fox, than the many larger theaters that use them.

Cuckoo's Nest is set in a state Mental Hospital. The action begins when a new patient, McMurphy is admitted. He is obviously from a different background and a conflict is immediately established between him and Nurse Ratched.

The cast was fantastic. Paul Jenkins is unsurpassable as McMurphy. Jo DeWinter as Nurse Ratched (although not physically qualified for the part) is terrific. The supporting actors deserve highest commendation.

There is a one dollar student discount or a half-off student rush, fifteen minutes before Curtain.

Scansion Corner

By Bruno Former

Piano Music of Erik Satie. Volume 1 Aldo Ciccolini (Angel S-36482)

Erik Satie was one of the first composers of piano music in the 20th century. In fact, he was composing 20th century. In fact, he was composing 20th century music before the 20th century began.

Satie's music was clear and simple with an occasional touch of humor and compounded by weird titles.

Although Ciccolini is not the best pianist around, he handles Satie brilliantly (enough to last him three later albums, and still going strong).

The two works I found to my liking were Trois Gymnopedies (Three Gym Shoes), Trois Nocturnes (Three Night Works), and (are you ready?) Croquis et agacieres d'un gros bonhommes en bois (Sketches and Exasperations of a Big Bobb Made of Wood). Each expresses three separate facets of Satie's style.

For kicks, the disc includes Heures Seculaires et Instantances (Age-Old and Instantaneous hours, with the piece "Granite-like panics at 10 o'clock"). Three Gnossiemes, Trois Avant Dernieres pensees (or Three Next to Last Thoughts), Trois Valses distinguees du precieux degoute (Three distinguished waltzes of the disabused affected man), and Trois Morceaux en forme de Poire (Three Pieces in the form of a Pear?). So help me God.

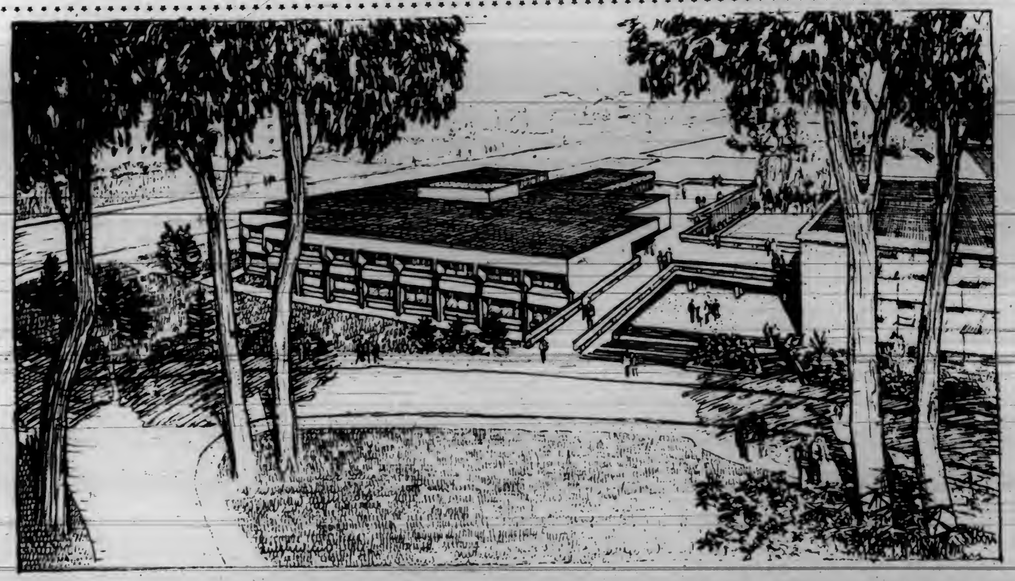
This album, coupled with its three cousins, gives us a good insight into the crazy world of Erik Satie. Hear them in good health.

lucky Announces New Program

Lucky Breweries has developed a program to recycle all its bottles and cans, President Peter N. T. Widdrington recently announced.

In a program targeted at "mounting litter and resources problems," Widdrington said the company will pay consumers 25 cents for every case of 24 Lucky bottles and 12 cents for every case of 24 Lucky cans.

The program will be operational immediately in the Bay Area. "We will expand it to other regions in the near future." The 40-year-old brewery president said his company's plan is "simply to buy back Lucky bottles and cans rather than have them end up along highways or in city dumps.



Further, we feel it is wasteful to discard 'empties' when they can be recycled."

Consumers will pay no more for Lucky beer as a result of the program, Widdrington said, either through increased prices or deposits.

The first of seven local recycling centers will open this weekend at Lucky's headquarters brewery, located at 2601 Newhall St., in southeast San Francisco. The center will operate from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays. Six Bay Area wholesale distributors will open recycling centers next week, Widdrington said. In addition, eight Bay Area ecology recycling centers are asking their patrons to donate Lucky bottles, which will be sold to the brewer.

Last September, Lucky was the country's first brewer to recycle "one-way" bottles in a pilot project in Seattle, Widdrington said.

New Arts Building Underway

Under construction is the new Creative Arts Extension Building.

It is located on the north side of the campus near the Arts building facing Phelan Avenue.

Two stories high, the extension will have 20 classrooms along the south and west side of the building. Near the center will be 10 practice rooms for a musician ensemble room, and a music shop for maintenance and repair.

There will be three studios, a radio-T.V. room, a graphic room, eight audio rooms, a master control room and a shop for radio and T.V. repair.

The CAE building was designed by Milton T. Pfluger and the construction company doing the work is Engstrum and Nourse.

The estimated cost is $1,511,000 and will be completed by December 1971 and will be ready for the spring semester in 1972.

San Francisco's most famous detective collects birds--t samples in Brewster McCloud.

Brewster McCloud Flies High

Brewer McCloud is a young man who seriously attempts what every individual sometimes feels like doing. His ambition is to construct a pair of wings - not for patent and manufacture - but, simply to carry himself away. A twentieth Century Icarus.

He is assisted by a motherly "bird woman", Louise, and her deadly crow. The bird earmarks for strangulation anyone threatening Brewster's success. The only requirement his protectress asks is that Brewster refrain from sexual activity and place full concentration on his flying.

It is quite possible that Brewster would, actually have donned his wings and flown off, had it not been for temptation. He, not unlike many young people, allowed sexual gratification to ground him. By taking a lover and denying, Louise, Brewster McCloud turned his course earthward.

Brewster McCloud is not only carried by a funny dialogue but is assisted by fine comedy performances.

Louise is played by Sally Kellerman who can be remembered -- as "hotlips" in MASH. This role rounds out her dramatic talents and serves tribute to her promising career. Brewster is portrayed by Bud Cort (The Strawberry Statement) who does a superb job. Most of the comedy is carried by supporting actors the most notable of which are: Michael Murphy as Frank Shaft (the bumbling ace-detective from San Francisco) Sharon Devaul as his mistress and Dean Goss as the Astrodome guard. Margaret Hamilton does a short turn singing the Star Spangled Banner and her singing is to be remembered. Robert Altman directed the Lou Alder-produced form, an original screenplay by Doran Cannon. It is another MGM triumph. See it.

Friend of College Dies

Mrs. Ruth M. Hoburg, administrative assistant to Dr. Harry Buttimer, City College President, and Dr. O.E. Anderson retired controller, died Saturday, February 20 following a lingering illness. She was employed by City College for more than two decades.

Dr. Anderson described Mrs. Hoburg as a good liaison between all departments of the college who was instrumental and "extremely helpful at all times in problems of fringe benefits for the faculty members and various teachers associations. In fact," said Dr. Anderson, "she helped the whole district in keeping track of any emergency that came up."

Mrs. Hoburg was a native of San Francisco and a graduate of St. Mary's Academy of Nursing. She was a registered nurse prior to her employment with the San Francisco Unified School District and a past president of St. Mary's Nursing Association.

She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Bessie Pisani of 29 Buckingham Way, San Francisco, and two sons, Russel and Frank Hoburg, both of Sausalito.

A requiem Mass was offered Tuesday, February 23 at St. Stephen's Catholic Church, followed by commital services at Holy Cross Cemetery in Colma.

Music Events

FEB. 25 LAMB – Barbara Mauritz, Vocal and Bob Swanson Acoustic Guitar – When this group appears at City College, they will bring with them an assortment of supporting musicians including keyboard, percussion, bass mandolin perhaps some strings.

Their new music seems to be in the direction of soul-gospel and country and western. They are under management of the Fillmore Corporation and their new album Cross Between will appear soon.

MAR. 2 – WILBERT BARANCO – A Piano Recital of Afro-American Music – Mr. Baranco is currently teaching at City College and playing at Newell House Restaurant Pianobar (after just completing an eleven and a half year run at the Claremont Hotel, Berkeley). He has degrees in music from U.C. Berkeley, where he has taught extension courses in jazz piano and surveys of jazz. Mr. Baranco's long and highly career has included many years of arranging and recording in Hollywood, as well as formal study under Adolph Baller at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music.

MAR. 4 HARPSICHORD BAPTISM: RENAISSANCE AND BAROQUE MUSIC FEATURING THE HARPSICHORD. PERFORMED BY MEMBERS OF CITY COLLEGE MUSIC FACULTY (Joanne Hickey, William Grothkopp Madeline Mueller and Richard Fenner – A dedication concert performed on a small single manual harpsichor.

New Disc Jockies at KCSF

Broadcasts from the City College closed-circuit radio station, KCSF can be heard daily in Statler Wing from 8-4 p.m.

KCSF also broadcasts over KALW 97 on your dial the College's FM station from 12-12:30 p.m.

Disc jockeys for this semester are Hank Gray, Steve Kushman, Milt Michael, Harry Osbin and Rose Tobin. One of the DJ's, Osbin, also serves as the afternoon program director.

Those just beginning their "careers" as student disc-jockeys may be heard from 8 a.m. until 12 noon. Milt Michael directs the morning program which features a top 40 record broadcast.

Organization Rumor a Lai

Tom Lai, president of Associated Students, denied rumors of changes that would replace voting of students with a process of voting by campus organizations in future campus elections. But he admitted the possibility of some reform which would "allow more student participation in campus elections." He also defended the Council against charges that it does not fairly represent the student body.

Lai branded the voting by organization rumor as "ridiculous" and could not understand how it got started. He did not, however, rule out the possibility of any reform, stating that, "Thus far, I can say that there may be some reforms in student elections this semester."

In answer to critics of the Council, Lai stated his belief that the present Council is the "true representative of the students," and feels that it will continue to be so. "The Chinese on the Council," said Lai, "have kept all personal feelings out of their work. We have even screened our own members to insure that they will be fair." - Ed Hartzler

Poetry in Motion

By Tina Brant

Do you have something short to say to your brothers and sisters at City College, or a poem you would like to share? Bring it to Tina Brant, THE GUARDSMAN office, S-304, and don't be surprised if we print it.

"Attempt"

You frowned,
like a bird frustrated,
weakened,
trying to leave the ground,

and i wanted to make you laugh,
because it's my job
as it is those who sight someone down.

You did laugh,
but not for long . . .

have you talked to the sky?
with verses of why?
Sometimes a laughing soul can
make you fly.
hiding behind clouds of cotton candy
or under oceans of Kool Aid sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly.

There's a colored rainbow
beyond what cannot be seen
it's a place to go where the ground is blue
and you can belong to the sky.

sometimes a laughing soul can
make you fly.
Pack up what occupies your troubled mind
glow it in a plastic balloon don't ask any questions of why
sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly.
Mail your balloon to yesterday
and jump aboard the train to life
. . . or never . . .
. . . or whatever

go for a ride on the sky;
hold the ultimate now hoping silently the numbered hour
of the named day
will never go away
and think about the sky

sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly.

tina brant

Campus Cleanup Now Overdue

Hey GOOD PEOPLE, can you imagine sitting amid 4,000 dirty cigarette filters, 200 empty packs, 500 gum wrappers with a styrofoam cup on each finger, toe and hair on your head? It can be easily achieved around City College.

And having a lecture bleeped out because of rolling cans is no excuse for failing an exam.

Keeping the campus clean is a task even a blind person could conquer: pick up that which trips your step; catch that which hits you in the face (usually a gift from Mother Wind); and throw away your own mess. WE DON'T TRASH YOUR HOME SO DON'T DISCOLOR OUR CAMPUS.

When you feel like letting go of this newspaper, either pass it on to a friend o deposit it in the nearest wast can, as you do with all your litter.

Paul Jenkins portrays Randle, Patrick McMurphy (Mac) in the current production of One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest.

Versatile actress Jo De Winters plays nurse ratched in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," now at the Little Fox.

Live Comedy Smash Success

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" is defininitely the best play San Francisco has seen for a long time. It's been playing for nearly ten months at the Little Fox Theater and it's run has been extended indefinitely.

Cuckoo's Nest is an adaptation by Dale Wasserman (Man of La Mancha) from the book by Ken Kesey; it equals its written counterpart.

The lighting and projected media, done by Michael Clivner, is outstanding. Projection works better in a small theater, such as the Little Fox, than the many larger theaters that use them.

Cuckoo's Nest is set in a state Mental Hospital. The action begins when a new patient, McMurphy is admitted. He is obviously from a different background and a conflict is immediately established between him and Nurse Ratched.

The cast was fantastic. Paul Jenkins is unsurpassable as McMurphy. Jo DeWinter as Nurse Ratched, (although not physically qualified for the part) is terrific. The supporting actors deserve highest commendation.

There is a one dollar student discount or a half-off student rush, fifteen minutes before Curtain.

Scansion Corner

By Bruno Former

Piano Music of Erik Satie, Volume 1 Aldo Ciccolini (Angel S-36482)

Erik Satie was one of the first composers of piano music in the 20th century. In fact, he was composing 20th century. In fact, he was composing 20th century music before the 20th century began.

Satie's music was clear and simple, with an occasional touch of humor and compounded by weird titles.

Although Ciccolini is not the best pianist around, he handles Satie brilliantly (enough to last him three later albums, and still going strong).

The two works I found to my liking were Trois Gymnopedies (Three Gym Shoes), Trois Nocturnes (Three Night Works), and tare you ready?) Croquis et agacieres d'un gros bonhommes en bois (Sketches and Exasperations of a Big Boob Made of Wood), Each expresses three separate facets of Satie's style.

For kicks, the disc includes Heures Seculaires et Instantanees (Age-Old and Instantaneous hours, with the piece "Granite-like panics at 13 o'clock"), Three Gnossiemes, Trois Avant Dernieres pensees (or Three Next to Last Thoughts), Trois Valses distinguees du precieux degoute (Three distinguished waltzes of the disabused affected man), and Trois Morceaux en forme de Poire (Three Pieces in the form of a Pear?). So help me God.

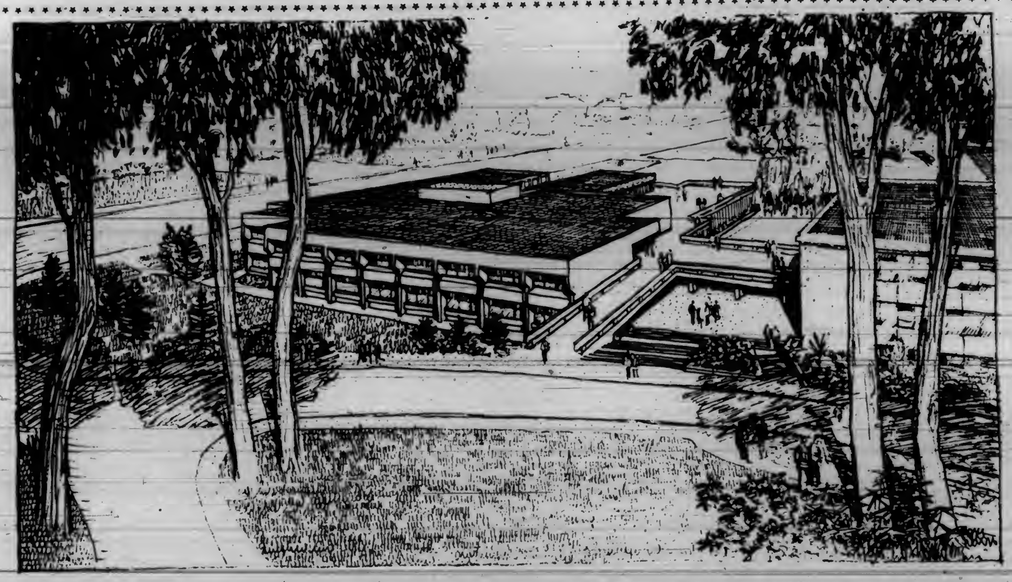
This album, coupled with its three cousins, gives us a good insight into the crazy world of Erik Satie. Hear them in good health.

lucky Announces New Program

Lucky Breweries has developed a program to recycle all its bottles and cans, President Peter N. T. Widdrington recently announced.

In a program targeted at "mounting litter and resources problems," Widdrington said the company will pay consumers 25 cents for every case of 24 Lucky bottles and 12 cents for every case of 24 Lucky cans.

The program will be operational immediately in the Bay Area. "We will expand it to other regions in the near future." The 40-year-old brewery president said his company's plan is "simply to buy back Lucky bottles and cans rather than have them end up along highways or in city dumps.



Further, we feel it is wasteful to discard 'empties' when they can be recycled."

Consumers will pay no more for Lucky beer as a result of the program, Widdrington said, either through increased prices or deposits.

The first of seven local recycling centers will open this weekend at Lucky's headquarters brewery, located at 2601 Newhall St., in southeast San Francisco. The center will operate from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays. Six Bay Area wholesale distributors will open recycling centers next week, Widdrington said. In addition, eight Bay Area ecology recycling centers are asking their patrons to donate Lucky bottles, which will be sold to the brewer.

Last September, Lucky was the country's first brewer to recycle "one-way" bottles in a pilot project in Seattle, Widdrington said.

New Arts Building Underway

Under construction is the new Creative Arts Extension Building.

It is located on the north side of the campus near the Arts building facing Phelan Avenue.

Two stories high, the extension will have 20 classrooms along the south and west side of the building. Near the center will be 10 practice rooms for a musician ensemble room, and a music shop for maintenance and repair.

There will be three studios, a radio-T.V. room, a graphic room, eight audio rooms, a master control room and a shop for radio and T.V. repair.

The CAE building was designed by Milton T. Pfluger and the construction company doing the work is Engstrum and Nourse.

The estimated cost is $1,511,000 and will be completed by December 1971 and will be ready for the spring semester in 1972.

San Francisco's most famous detective collects birds--t samples in Brewster McCloud.

Brewster McCloud Flies High

Brewser McCloud is a young man who seriously attempts what every individual sometimes feels like doing. His ambition is to construct a pair of wings - not for patent and manufacture - but, simply to carry himself away. A twentieth Century Icarus.

He is assisted by a motherly "bird woman", Louise, and her deadly crow. The bird earmarks for strangulation anyone threatening Brewster's success. The only requirement his protectress asks is that Brewster refrain from sexual activity and place full concentration on his flying.

It is quite possible that Brewster would, actually, have donned his wings and flown off, had it not been for temptation. He, not unlike many young people, allowed sexual gratification to ground him. By taking a lover and denying, Louise\ Brewster McCloud turned his course earthward.

Brewster McCloud is not only carried by a funny dialogue but is assisted by fine comedy performances.

Louise is played by Sally Kellerman, who can be remembered – as "hotlips" in MASH. This role rounds out her dramatic talents and serves tribute to her promising career. Brewster is portrayed by Bud Cort (The Strawberry Statement) who does a superb job. Most of the comedy is carried by supporting actors the most notable of which are: Michael Murphy as Frank Shaft (the bumbling ace-detective from San Francisco). Sharon Devaul as his mistress and Dean Goss as the Astrodome guard. Margaret Hamilton does a short turn singing the Star Spangled Banner and her singing is to be remembered. Robert Altman directed the Lou Alder-produced form, an original screenplay by Doran Cannon. It is another MGM triumph. See it.

Friend of College Dies

Mrs. Ruth M. Hoburg, administrative assistant to Dr. Harry Buttimer, City College President and Dr. O.E. Anderson, retired controller, died Saturday, February 20 following a lingering illness. She was employed by City College for more than two decades.

Dr. Anderson described Mrs. Hoburg as a good liaison between all departments of the college who was instrumental and "extremely helpful at all times in problems of fringe benefits for the faculty members and various teachers associations. In fact," said Dr. Anderson, "she helped the whole district in keeping track of any emergency that came up."

Mrs. Hoburg was a native of San Francisco and a graduate of St. Mary's Academy of Nursing. She was a registered nurse prior to her employment with the San Francisco Unified School District and a past president of St. Mary's Nursing Association.

She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Bessie Pisani of 29 Buckingham Way, San Francisco, and two sons, Russel and Frank Hoburg, both of Sausalito.

A requiem Mass was offered Tuesday, February 23 at St. Stephen's Catholic Church, followed by commital services at Holy Cross Cementery in Colma.

Music Events

FEB. 25 LAMB – Barbara Mauritz, Vocal and Bob Swanson, Acoustic Guitar – When this group appears at City College they will bring with them an assortment of supporting musicians including keyboard, percussion, bass mandolin, perhaps some strings.

Their new music seems to be in the direction of soul-gospel and country and western. They are under management of the Fillmore Corporation and their new album Cross Between will appear soon.

MAR. 2 – WILBERT BARANCO – A Piano Recital of Afro-American Music – Mr. Baranco is currently teaching at City College and playing at Newell House Restaurant Pianobar (after just completing an eleven and a half year run at the Claremont Hotel, Berkeley). He has degrees in music from U.C. Berkeley where he has taught extension courses in jazz piano and surveys of jazz. Mr. Baranco's long and highly career has included many years of arranging and recording in Hollywood, as well as formal study under Adolph Baller at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music.

MAR. 4 HARPSICHORD BAPTISM: RENAISSANCE AND BAROQUE MUSIC FEATURING THE HARPSICHORD, PERFORMED BY MEMBERS OF CITY COLLEGE MUSIC FACULTY (Joanne Hickey, William Grothkopp, Madeline Mueller and Richard Fenner – A dedication concert performed on a small single manual harpsichor.

New Disc Jockies at KCSF

Broadcasts from the City College closed-circuit radio station, KCSF, can be heard daily in Statler Wing from 8-4 p.m.

KCSF also broadcasts over KALW 97 on your dial, the College's FM station, from 12-12:30 p.m.

Disc jockeys for this semester are Hank Gray, Steve Kushman, Milt Michael, Harry Osbin and Rose Tobin. One of the DJ's, Osbin, also serves as the afternoon program director.

Those just beginning their "careers" as student disc-jockeys may be heard from 8 a.m. until 12 noon. Milt Michael directs the morning program which features a top 40 record broadcast.

Organization Rumor a Lai

Tom Lai, president of Associated Students, denied rumors of changes that would replace voting of students with a process of voting by campus organizations in future campus elections. But he admitted the possibility of some reform which would "allow more student participation in campus elections." We also defended the Council against charges that it does not fairly represent the student body.

Lai branded the voting by organization rumor as "ridiculous" and could not understand how it got started. He did not, however, rule out the possibility of any reform, stating that, "Thus far, I can say that there may be some reforms in student elections this semester."

In answer to critics of the Council, Lai stated his belief that the present Council is the "true representative of the students," and feels that it will continue to be so. "The Chinese on the Council," said Lai, "have kept all personal feelings out of their work. We have even screened our own members to insure that they will be fair." - Ed Hartzler

Poetry in Motion

By Tina Brant

Do you have something short to say to your brothers and sisters at City College, or a poem you would like to share? Bring it to Tina Brant, THE GUARDSMAN office, S-304, and don't be surprised if we print it.

"Attempt"

You frowned,
like a bird frustrated,
weakened,
trying to leave the ground.

and i wanted to make you laugh;
because it's my job
as it is those who sight someone
down.

You did laugh,
but not for long . . .

have you talked to the sky?
with verses of why?
Sometimes a laughing soul can
make you fly.
hiding behind clouds of cotton candy
or under oceans of Kool-Aid sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly.

There's a colored rainbow
beyond what cannot be seen
it's a place to go
where the ground is blue
and you can belong to the sky.

sometimes a laughing soul can
make you fly.
Pack up what occupies your troubled mind
glow it in a plastic balloon
don't ask any questions of why
sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly
Mail your balloon to yesterday
and jump aboard the train to life
. . . or never . . .
. . . or whatever

go for a ride on the sky;
hold the ultimate now
hoping silently the numbered hour
of the named day
will never go away
and think about the sky

sometimes a laughing soul can make you fly.

tina brant

Campus Cleanup Now Overdue

Hey GOOD PEOPLE, can you imagine sitting amid 4,000 dirty cigarette filters, 200 empty packs, 500 gum wrappers with a styrofoam cup on each finger, toe and hair on your head? It can be easily achieved around City College.

And having a lecture bleeped out because of rolling cans is no excuse for failing an exam.

Keeping the campus clean is a task even a blind person could conquer: pick up that which trips your step; catch that which hits you in the face (usually a gift from Mother Wind); and throw away your own mess. WE DON'T TRASH YOUR HOME SO DON'T DISCOLOR OUR CAMPUS.

When you feel like letting go of this newspaper, either pass it on to a friend or deposit it in the nearest wast can, as you do with all your litter.

Faces

Photography by Gordy MacDonald
Poem by Tina Brant

It's got you:

Mother Earth's fresh air triggering the inspirational laugh;

It's got you:

Father Sun's serious, constructing looks that curiously wander before you;

It's got you:

The racial differenciation inspiring beauty of colors;

It's got you:

The expressionless stare toward the land of nowhere;

It's got you:

The studious face of the dressed-up mind;

It's got you:

The mellow mood of gaity to thank the vibrations;

It's got you:

The camera injects that natural high.

First Round Counseling Position

(Continued from Page 1)

and Counseling in the 13th and 14th grades.

Other requirements call for a counselor who speaks Cantonese and has a thorough and sympathetic understanding of the Asian culture.

It is hoped that the students, Academic Senate, counseling department, and administration can get together to name a counselor by "mutual consent." The four factions now must agree to the selection before any candidate can be accepted. This consent is intended to give more say to the students and to alleviate the problem which arose last semester.

Friction between students and the administration was initiated at the beginning of the Fall 1970 semester when the Chinese students suggested that an opening in the counseling department be filled by an Asian counselor. Though the interviewing committee agreed, their choice for the vacancy conflicted with that of the students, who favored Dr. Wai-Yin Syn.

The committee's choice of Steve Wong, who received the Counseling Department's support, led to a showdown between students and administrators. As a result, neither Wong or Syn were accepted, and the position was wide open again.

But Marcus and the students, including the Asian Association for Unity, Chinese Cultural Club, and Chinese Students Association, are optimistic over this semester's attempt to name the college's second Chinese counselor. Mrs. Margaret Lum presently serves as the lone oriental although there are over 3500 Asian students on campus.

CCC also announced future plans to balance this ratio with an addition of approximately seven Asian counselors or one for every 500 Asian students.

At the moment, Marcus is concerned with one open spot, and he made it clear that they (the counseling department) want a Chinese counselor who speaks Cantonese. "We're looking forward to cooperation from students and I see no reason why we can't cooperate with each other," he said, adding that "we want the best man we can find."

The students also looked forward to the solving of the current situation, noting that the problem before of students not being involved was over, and that no one would tell them who would be their counselor now. It was mentioned that Laney and Merritt College have students involved in naming counselors and that "they are no more civilized than us." A general feeling among students was that no problems are anticipated.

Jocelyn Wong of AAU spoke confidently of the new plans, explaining that something will be done and that interviews will start all over again. "The new outline of procedure is a step forward," she said.

The Chinese will search for their own candidate, who hopefully also speaks Mandarin. The possibility of Dr. Syn becoming their selection seems slight, although discussion of his name is met with close-mouthed reaction. Newly elected CSA President, Florence Chan, offered that the case with Syn was now a "dead issue."

However, Dennis Fone, another AAU member, still seemingly concerned over Syn's rejection, cited the reasons why he was not accepted. Fong said that Syn was over-qualified, with the administration feeling that he could not relate to the students. But Fong contended that all Asian groups could relate to him, and that his backing by the CSA, CCC, and AAU gave him support from much of the student body.

Marcus couldn't deny the vast support of Syn, admitting, "Chinese students had much support in backing the candidate in the way they felt. The Chinese students were thinking alike in this area."

He conceded that the Chinese have a good point, since many don't speak English well. However, Marcus warned that it might not be a good idea for each student to have a counselor of his own race.

"I'd hate to see where the Asian student's have only Asian counselors, Caucasian students have Caucasian counselors, and Black students have Black counselors," Marcus stated. "That would be segregating the school, and that is not good at all."

Dr. Auraham Biran pointing to Yehohanan on the ossuary where the nail was found indicating crucifixion.

Israeli Archaeologist Advances New Theory

By Shirley Fogarino

Dr. Avraham Biran, department chairman of antiquities and museums in Israel, lectured here last week on some of the significant discoveries in Israeli archeology.

The lecture-slide series gave a panoramic view of the historical periods which greatly affected the old city of Jerusalem and its surrounding areas.

Biran cited one of the most eventful finds as being the methods by which criminals who were sentenced to death were crucified.

Contradicting the age-old belief that the sentenced were crucified by the driving of nails through the palms of the hands and the foreparts of the feet, was the excavated proof of a skeletal portion with one nail driven through his ankles.

"This is the first archeological evidence of the execution methods used in crucifixion," said the former Israeli Consul General, "the victim, 'yehohanan', had probably been a rebel against the Roman occupation of Israel."

He went on to say that the Romans had used this method in the persecution of rebels and slaves. The victim would be nailed to the cross and nails would be driven through each of the forearms through to the cross, while the victim's legs would be nailed to it sideways through the ankles.

"The common belief, up to this point," added Biran, "was derived from paintings or sculptures whose earliest forms can be traced back to the sixth century. The artists could only reason as to how the crucifixions must have been carried out."

Another, recently made and somewhat unbelievable discovery was the excavation of five jars full of silver which were found in a long-destroyed synagogue in Canaan.

"It's really hard to believe that such a find could have remained intact for such a long while," said Biran.

Other finds included a twenty-eight foot-thick wall, which was believed to have extended and protected the ancient city of Jerusalem at one time. In addition to this, a square block, bearing a royal inscription dedicated to the Roman emporer Tiberius and the name of Pontius Pilate was found, proving that the legendary governor of Judea did, indeed, exist.

Finally, evidence of a lost civilization, believed to have lived from 500,000 to 1,000,000 years ago was discovered outside of the "old city".

"We do not know anything about them except from the evidence we find on their artifacts . . . They must have been a highly advanced civilization, however, because already, in their art, they depicted painting and sculpture as we know it today," said Biran.

Dr. Brian Captivates Crowd

Council Members Consider Budget

By Bruno Forner

The first AS council meeting of Spring 1970 was held on February 10.

After the introduction of the new council and a general welcome of new president Tom Lai, things settled into a discussion of the Bicycle Club.

Richard Jesse, a representative for the club, said that there were 45 members who wanted some form of protection for the bikes. (Jesse pointed out that stealing bikes had become a big business on campus).

Danny Martinez motioned that the bike rack be moved to the lower level of the still vacant Student Lounge. That vote was unanimous.

Also mentioned were the openings at the following committees: Curriculum (Four), Bookstore (one), and Student Review (two). Any student can petition to be on any of these committees by March 1.

The meeting of the following Wednesday settled into a debate for $956 to send four students to an anti-war convention.

Former Councilman John Goebel asked for the money on an emergency basis. His request was met by much discussion until a motion to end debate was called (and failed to pass). More debate ensued until another motion to end debate passed unanimously.

A vote was taken to rescind the rule stating that a budget motion must be voted on at the meeting AFTER it is first presented. It passed 8-5-0. The original proposal failed though, 1-9-3.

Patricia Lane asked that money be appropriated for two students to attend the anti-war convention, but because the meeting was running late, the motion was defeated.

The Guardsman

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 2
March 4, 1971

State College Educational Opportunities Program Slashed

By Mike Slattery

In the recent California Budget drawn up by the governor's office, only $1,600,000 was allotted to the State College Educational Opportunities Program, as opposed to the State College Board of Trustee's requested minimun of $4,100,000.

According to the San Francisco State College E.O.P. NEWSLETTER, February 16, this means that whereas E.O.P. grants at S.F. State College this year totalled $110,000 for new students and $46,585 for continuing students next year, Fall 1971 - Spring 1972 E.O.P. grants for new students will total only $28,000, and there will be no funds for continuing students. This reduction of financial aid to third world students at S.F. State College will have a direct effect on the financial aid situation here at City College. Students turned away from obtaining aid at State College will have to rely on City College's already inadequate funds.

Most financial aid to students at City College operates under Federal programs. Mr. Joseph Amori, Director of the Placement Office distributes Federal aid money to all school departments on a yearly basis where it can be used for tutorial programs for instance. Financial aid officer Kenneth Castellino and the financial aid office analyze and direct the loans and grants, and verify the jobs that are awarded to students under government programs. These include Federally Insured and National Defense Student Loans, jobs under the College Work-Study Program, intended for students of low or low-middle income families, and Educational Opportunity Grants (E.O.G.), for which students must prove they are from a low income family. Students are usually awarded a combination of two of these aids, though it is possible to receive only one, or to receive three.

Castellino explains that the allowance for the programs for 1970-71 did not prove adequate, since the number of students applying for financial aid increased 50%, though enrollment increased 10%. As a result, less than half of the yearly allowance is left for the spring. For next year, a Department of Health, Education, and Welfare panel in Washington has already approved the City College application for the programs nearly 100%, which is exceptional. However, it is still up to Congress to approve how much of the total money allotted for all colleges in the program can actually go to the colleges, and the strength of the programs next year will depend on this Congressional funding.

The Financial aid office participates in a State of California fund program of State Educational Opportunity Grants; City College was invited to apply again for next year. No cuthack of this program was mentioned, hut it remains to be seen whether next year's allotment will equal that of the previous year.

(Continued on page 4)

Fred Morales — Hank Gray

Campus Radio Hits Sour Note With AS Council

By Ed Hartzler

The Associated Student Council voted down a budget request of $500 for KCSF, the college radio station thereby leaving the station without funds for the semester. Spokesmen for the station were unsure of how long they would be able to broadcast without the necessary money.

On Monday, Feh. 22, KCSF presented the Council with a request for $2000 which they said was the minimum amount it needed to stay In operation. Because Milt Michaels, KCSF's morhing program director, was unable to attend and because questions presented to his replacement, Nick Shubin, were unanswered, the motion was tabled for future consideration. Tom Lai, A.S. President, later told the GUARDSMAN that the $2000 asked for was "quite high," hut he hoped some compromise could be reached.

At the Feb. 24 meeting Milt Michaels opened discussion by stating that the $500 offered by the Council was "not enough".."Since repairs cannot be estimated, there is no way of knowing how long the $500 would last if any major repairs on the equipment had to be made." He further stated that KCSF was "as much a part of this campus as any other organization," that it "has done more for the students than the Free Critic or the Guardsman." (EDITORS NOTE: Free Critic is funded hy AS hut The Guardsman receives no student funds). He also said that many of the student disc jockeys were able to get jobs on the outside because of the experience they received while working at KCSF.

In answer to Bonnie Soloman's question of whether the station was a club or a class, Harry Osbin replied:

"It is a class and a club that can be heard by any student on campus. KALW, which is subsidized by the Unified School District, broadcasts only 25 hours per week and is a joke. KCSF has the freer flow of information on the campus and is here to serve the student body. If you take away student support, it will be hard for us to support the students."

The ensuing discussion centered around the possibility of other sources of subsidation and the type of service being provided by the station. Vice-president Martin Poon said that attempts were being made to have the station subsidized by the Unified School District and offered an amendment to the proposal exempting the Council from any future obligation of funding KCSF.

The question of ads was dismissed as "illegal" by Dean Samuels. Michaels announced that the Administration had already refused to fund the station. To questions of why the station no longer played in Smith Hall and whether the music played was popular among the students, the spokesman for the station replied that in order to play in Statler Wing they had to give up rights to Smith Hall and that a poll taken among the students showed that the music being played, Rock and Soul, was what they enjoyed.

A motion was then made, and seconded, to vote on Poon's amendment and on the budget request. The amendment was passed by a vote of 10-1-2 but the Council defeated the proposal by a vote of 5-6-2, thereby leaving KCSF without funds for the upcoming semester.

Harry Osbin reacted bitterly to the decision by accusing the Council of slashing the funds of "what could be the most effective media of communication on this campus. Much of the

(Continued on page 4)

Big Wheels Evict Bikes From Student Lounge

By Bruno Forner

As a direct result of the Associated Students Council meeting of February 22, the Bike Club will be soon evicted from the Student lounge while KCSF may receive a budget of only $500.

The first thing on the agenda was a budgetrequest of $2680 by Nick Shubin, KCSF representative. He admitted that the station could exist on a barebones budget of $2000.

Bonnie Solomon asked Shubin if the station could be hudgeted out of the supplementary budget of tne administration. Shubin said it was a possibility if the council turned down the money request. It was even suggested that the station take in advertising, but since the station is in the situation of being both a club and a class simultaneously, that possihllity was nil.

Dora Liang motioned that $500 be given temporarily to the station until more was necessary. Martin asked that the station could try to "barter" with the administration. That motion was tabled (by a unanimous vote) until Wednesday.

The next speaker was Richard Jessé of the Bicycle Club. He said that because of the allowance of the use of the still vacant lounge, the Bike Club membership is booming at a rapid rate.

It was noted since the ping pong tables are due to arrive any day now, the possibility of the bikes getting in the way of the tahles was humorous. To compensate, Jesse asked that the stay he extended to when it gets "crowded".

Jesse also noted more cases of bicycle thievery during his speech.

The term "crowded" became a cause celebre. The question arose as to exactly when the lower level lounge will become crowded. Dora Liang motioned that the bikes will be removed from the lower level when the ping pong tables arrive. Judy Kay, the parliamentarian, noted that to rescind the old motion (the one that allowed them to stay until it became crowded), it was necessary for it to pass with a two-thlrd majority. Steve Marigan made the proposal and it was rescinded by the necessary margin.

Martin Poon then motioned to end debate, which passed 8-1-5.

Dora's proposal was voted on, passing 7-3-4.

Martin Poon read a letter of invitation to the Academic Senate. Paul Fisher, chairman of the Academic Senate, was in attendance at the meeting and extended the same invitation to the council.

Nite School Left In Dark By Budget

A budget cut has meant less course offerings for the approximately 4,500 students who attend City College Evening Division classes. Twenty sections had to be eliminated from the Evening curriculum this Spring.

"The Fall, 1970 offerings took a larger slice of the Evening budget;" said Warren White, Dean of Evening Instruction, "thus, the Spring offerings had to suffer."

This year, in order to balance the Spring and Fall course offerings, an Evening Division budget will be submitted separately, ahead of other College budget requests.

"This does not mean that we'll be receiving what we ask for," said Dean White, "but, if a budget is approved in advance, we'll know what we have to work with."

Further information pertaining to the registration procedures for the Fall, 1971 Evening curriculum, will be printed in a later edition of The Guardsman.

GUARDSMAN EDITORIALS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

Humpty-Dumpty Also Leaks

By Jim Toland

San Francisco Bay recently went through a tragic experience that nearly brought about her extinction.

Two Standard Oil tankers collided in the bay fog. This act of "unfortunate timing" turned the Bay Area into a mucky hell for birds and other creatures of the coastal environment.

Standard Oil, although I'm sure that they were the most upset; (especially over the capital that they lost), was unquestionably responsible for the disaster. They sent many workers, scientists and public relations experts to the various emergency points connected with the oil spill.

"Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall . . .
All the king's horses and all the King's men, couldn't put Humpty together again.

The crews from Standard, along with thousands of enthusiastic and unselfish volunteer workers, did a fantastic job cleaning the beaches and organizing efforts to save the birds. But Standard Oil has Humpty Dumpty's egg yolk in its face, the scars of the oil spill will remain forever. We should all be charitable enough to forgive Standard Oil for its gross negligence, but we should not be naive or stupid enough to forget it.

If stricter regulations are not brought about, we the people of San Francisco, will be doomed to a fate of recurring petroleum and oil disasters. Right now, as you read this, there is off-shore drill..g taking place near the coast.

This is exactly the same type of oil drilling that caused the horrible Santa Barbara oil slick two years ago. Another "unfortunate mistake" is all that is needed to bring about the same type of oil slick here.

It is disgusting to see what the oil industry's products have done to our air when they are burned up. But to add the greasy lubricants to our water is beyond all forms of murderous sin.

Directly or indirectly the oil industry, along with the other big businesses, have ruined our environment. The Environmental Protection Agency has reported that water pollution killed an estimated 41 million fish in forty-five states in 1969, this is an increase of 170 per cent from 1968 when about 15 million fish turned belly-up in forty-two states. A total of 144.6 million fish have been reported killed in more than 4200 separate incidents since the annual fish kill tally was begun in June 1960.

If the citizens of the Bay Area and of California don't begin to organize and to vote down measures and bills that increase the power of these companies, someone like Standard Oil may become the Adolf Hitler of our environment.

NIXON CHOSEN BEST ACTOR

By Joe Konte

I just received the list of nominees for this year's Academy Awards of politics and noted personalities, released last week by Academy President, Hubert Humphrey:

Best Picture: "The Kent Massacre" - tale of a slaughter on a midwest campus; "The Odd Couple" - traces lives of Ronnie and Jess, culminating in wild confrontations in sunny California; "How the War Was (almost) Won" - details strategic military maneuvers in Cambodia; "Diary of a Mad Women" - day in the life of a women's libber; "From Here To Eternity and Back" - flight of Apollo 13.

Best Actor: Richard Nixon as lawyer who finally makes it big in "Man on the Hill"; Billy Graham as powerful preacher and parable teller in "The Greatest Stories Ever Told"; Mario Savio as former student who returns to his alma mater in "The Graduate"; Ramsey Clark s former attorney general gone soft in "Jellyfish"; Ed Muskie as small town boy who is hit of party in "Maine Street".

Best Actress: Angela Davis as Black woman allegedly involved in prison break in "The Great Escape"; Martha Mitchell as crazed, eccentric lady who gets thrills making phone calls in "Dialing M For Martha"; Joan Baez as young bride with child who awaits parole of draft-dodging hubbie in "Where's Poppa"; Liz Taylor as movie star who awakes every morning feeling like a new man in "Divorce, Any Style"; Jane Fonda as swanky, kooky little broad in ' Funny Girl."

Best Supporting Actor: Charlie Goodell as confused man in big city torn between Jimmy Buckley and Dick Ottinger in "Three's a Crowd"; Bill Fulbright as fence-jumping cowboy in "Band-Wagon Train"; Tim Leary as daffy high priest in "The Ultimate Trip"; Hugh Hefner as playboy who finds women in the strangest places in "There's a Girl in My Soup"; Wally Hickel as biggie who upsets the boss in "Scandal In the Cabinet".

Best Supporting Actress: Jackie Onassis as wealthier by foreign lover in "Zounds, its the Greek"; "J" as nosy lady who explores personal lives in the "Census Woman"; Phyllis George as Miss America who makes everyone hot in "Fahrenheit 36-23-36"; Golda Meir as woman who dreams of Arabs in "Arabian Nites"; Mrs. LBJ as a socialite in the suspense thriller, "The Birds".

Best Director: Cassius Clay for the "Boxer's Rebellion"; Father Phil Berrigan for the "Hoodlum Priest"; Chirstine Jorgenson for "You Only Live Twice"; Jack La Lane for the "Battle of the Bulge"; Howard Hughes for "Goldfinger".

Best Songs: "Moon River" by Houston Control Harmonic; Impossible Dream by George McGovern; "Born to be Wild" by the Manson Family; "Napalm Keeps Falling On My Head" by the Vietnamese Youth Choir; "LOOK of Love" by Joe Alioto.

The Academy was shocked by best actor nominee Richard Nixon's refusal to accept the nomination, citing the politics involved in the selection as his reasons. Nixon frankly stated, "I really don't believe in politics anyway."

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

Dear Diary,

I hardly know where to begin. As I sit here this evening, it brings to mind some of that old wisdom dear mother used to share with me when I was a little girl. I remember how she told me once that it was going to be hard being a society-belle — "It's not all cocktails, fashion and romance" she used to say. No, even our kind was due for suffering. But, most of all, I remember her telling me of the "joy" I would have, when someday, my own little girl was presented at the debutante ball. Oh God! If momma only knew what my own little girl has done to me this day. My heart aches with grief, my very soul shudders with anger and disgrace. Allison has ruined me!

Well, I sensed that something was wrong last month when Allison was still undecided on her escort for the ball. Every time I asked her about an escort, she would dodge me with that "Well, I don't know yet" routine or quickly change the subject to something silly or unimportant. I suggested that she ask that nice young man, Drentice Lobb Cale (the banker's son), or Kindred Guggenheimer III, but she insisted that they were "square." Imagine — the bluest bloods around and she calls them "square." Roth and I even sacrificed our vacation in the Bahamas to buy her a custom diamond from Spiffany's; which leads me to this dread evening.

The Country Club was fashioned superbly . . . exotic flowers, choice imported hors d'ovres, a french catering service . . . all the things lovely young girls deserve. And how can I begin to describe the parents-in-waiting. All around, there was an air of quiet anticipation. It wasn't like the cocktail parties or other social gatherings. This was real dignity; an assemblage of the best. The normal chatter, the gossip, the fierce competition seemed to be missing. The real competition was up there — on that platform, where our own sons and daughters would carry our affluence, our status (our very souls) to the height of social grandeur. I just knew that Allison would out-do them all.

The presentation moved swiftly. Oh, how those little girls have changed. Chauncey, with a stunning jeweled necklace, came with Drentice Lobb Cale, and Lenora was escorted by the oil-tycoon's son (whose name escapes me at the moment), even Sarah Bee (who shouldn't rightfully have been there considering her father's financial woes) looked divine. Some of the of the escorts were inported — New York, Philly, even Europe, for the affair.

Then, to our horror, came Allison. Our little girl, with her Spiffany's diamond and a $500 gown, came down the platform, arm-in-arm with a virtual beast. Yes, a beast. Everyone knew what his father was — a laborer. A simple, common machinist's son was escorting our daughter to the biggest event of our lives.

The whole room grew silent, and everyone started to whisper and send those cruel glances that I was so used to giving instead of receiving. That wicked Marion started to laugh, and Priscilla asked Roth if our "auto repairman didn't get lost" and the bartender offered us a "screwdriver" and I ran out . . .
and started to cry.

Elvira

Run Up the White Flag

By Bruno Former

Look! Up In the sky! Is it a Women's libber? No. Is it a clod? No. Its . . its Aardvark Liberation!

For centuries on end, the aardvark has been treated as an animal - sometimes an animal of the second class. Now they are demanding that they be treated on the same plane as us humans are.

A few aardvarks came into this office telling us of the problems they have been having. They cited the fact that there are no aardvarks in show business. In fact, they pointed out that there is only one aardvark that is enjoying any fame - Aarnie the Aardvark of the comic strip "Boner's Ark". The trouble is that most aardvarks don't want an image as a comic strip character. They feel that an aardvark could have played the role of Arnold (the pig on "Green Acres") better than the pig could. They feel it is degrading to note that there are no aardvarks among the menagerie of "Beverly Hillbillies".

Another area that the aardvarks feel they have been discriminated against is in the area of names. You don't see any military company, rock group, radical-lib organization, sports team, or newspapers with the name "Aardvark" in their titles, do you?

And most aardvarks would like to attend college, but they feel it is a hardship on the question of where to put their owners. So, they have come up with the solution of having an Owner Day Care Center where they can deposit their owners and keep them busy while the aardvarks attend classes.

A lot of aardvarks also told us that they can build better homes, bridges, hotels, dams etc. than humans ever could. They like to work on construction jobs as well. Aardvarks can also help on narcotics squadrons by utilizing their large proboscis to sniff out hard drugs such as marijuana, LSD, alcohol, tobacco, sterno, etc.

We hope that the aardvarks movement can pave the way for other animal groups to make their own mark on the equality issue.

All we can say is: Good luck and right on!

CCSF CLINCHES TIE FOR GGC CROWN

SIXTH STRAIGHT TITLE FOR RAM NETTERS

By Jack Hansen

In the most hard fought contest encountered by the Ram's squad this season City College edged out a well disciplined Chabot team 54-48. Playing his best game of the season Larry Haren gave the team the added lift needed to overcome the Golden Gate Conference number 1 and 3 scoring leaders Larry Hosteiter and Bob Keller. City's Billy Metcalf maintains the number two scoring spot.

Chabot's Hosteiter and Keller accounted for 33 points. Hosteiter popped in 20 to take scoring honors with Haren right behind with 19. Both Hosteiter and Haren shot 75/ from the floor.

At the outset of the game, City maintained the lead up until 7:31 seconds remaining in the first half. A twenty-foot jumper by Hosteiter put Chabot in the lead 15-14. Chabot kept the lead all the way until half time and walked off the court with a 23-20 lead.

With 7:51 remaining in the second half, Ron (Rubberband) Dale tied the score with a jumper. Chabot's Larry Hosteiter was fouled and sank a free throw to put Chabot back into the lead. But the Ram's Wayne Snelgro hit for two and City was up 42-41.

Billy Metcalf, having an off night, was pulled from the line up by Coach Phelan. Robert (Sweet T) Taylor was sent into the game. Taylor hit 6 straight points to put the Ram's up 48-43 with 4:43 remaining in the game. Ron Dale received an assist when he hit Snelgro under the basket for 2 points to make the score 50-43. With only 1:35 remaining in the game All-Conference Billy Metcalf was back in the line up and made a quick bucket to put City up 52-46. Willie Daigle, an excellent ball handler, iced the game by hitting two free throws with :06 left making the score 58-48 at the final whistle.

Coach Phelan smiles over his 13th Championship season at City College.

Things were heated in the Ram's locker room as Coach Phelan explained, that City's Big Five could well throw away what they had worked so hard to be; Champions. "Guts" stated Coach Phelan. "That's what will win it for you." Guts was the word but pride, good team work, and many hours of sacrifice in a lonely gymnasium is what made the Ram's capable and willing to overcome their opponents.

Track Preview

By Jim Parsons

Coach Louis Vasquez debuts his 1971 track and field team in their first home appearance when the Red and White thinclads toe the line Friday afternoon against Chabot's spikesters.

Eighteen 1970 monogram winners head a Rams squad that has been gleaned from 60 aspirants who answered Coach Vasquez's first outdoor call of several weeks ago.

Coach Basquez prepares for track season.

Vasquez shies from speculating on the strength of the Chabot challengers. "They're an unknown quantity at this early stage of the outdoor campaign," says the CCSF mentor. Anything could happen."

Asked for comment on his team's individual strengths, Vasquez ventured that "most points should come in the high jump, mile and two mile runs, shot and discus and the relay competitions."

Heading the list of expectant point gainers is Bill Metcalf, last year's conference champion in the high jump with an impressive leap of 6-8½. Remaining CCSF 1970 conference meet point gatherers who should make their presence felt on Friday are: Roldolfo Narvaez, mile and two mile (4th - two mile) and Frank Corss, shot put and discus (5th - shot and discus).

The 440 and mile relay quartet of Larry Shields, Steve O'Neal, Mike Salem and Eldridge Joe have returned intact and improvement in both events is anticipated. Last year these four sprinters whirled to a third place finish in the 440 relay, and took down fourth place honors in the mile relay while competing in the annual conference meet.

Creditable first year performances are expected from pole vaulters Conrad Bowman and Vaughn Rhodes. Both athletes are products of San Francisco's Balboa high school.

The following lettermen are looked to by Coach Vasquez as contributors toward team point totals: Bill Askey (120 high hurdles and 440 intermediate hurdles); Paul Brickley (two mile); Mario Busalacci (shot and discus); Ron Caldwell (high jump); Adrin Coleman (long jump); Bob Del Toree (dicuus); Darrell Jeong (two mile); Robert Mathews (440); Rodolfo Narvaez (two mile); Vaughn Rhodes (pole vault); and Derrick Williams (long jump and triple jump).

Asked for comment on his team's individual strengths, Vasquez ventured that "most points should come in the high jump, mile and two mile runs, shot and discus and the relay competitions."

On Saturday, March 13, the Rams travel to San Jose for a dual meet with the San Jose Jaguars.

Friday's encounter with Chabot gets under way at 2 p.m. with the start of field events. Track events are scheduled to commence at 3:00 p.m.

Rams Lash Laney

Lead by Larry Haren and Wild Bill Metcalf the Rams sustain their number one spot in the Golden Gate Conference by beating Laney 61-52 on February 16th.

It was not an easy victory though, as Laney's Larry Jones and Norman Knowles combined for 30 points to keep the game close. The half time score was 31-26 City.

At the out-break of the second half Metcalf stole the ball twice for two quick buckets, making the score 35-26 City. This was the largest lead of the game again held by the Ram's who kept the game under excellent control.

Another brilliant display was shown in City's own Jerry LeBlance, who played an outstanding defensive game and dominated the boards in the second half.

Laney's Larry Jones took scoring honors with 18. City's Larry Haren had 16 while Metcalf hit for 15 points.

- Jack Hansen

Rams Torment SJ Netters

All-Conference candidate for the second year in a row, Billy Metcalf, put out his best showing of the season hitting a spectacular 66.7% from the floor for 27 points in a run away victory over San Jose City College. The Ram's tormented SJCC 79-56.

All Star candidates Billy Metcalf and Larry Haren.

The Ram's, who are known to be a second half team, were held to 30 points at half while SJCC had 21. In the second half City scored 49 points to SJCC's 35. City cagers displayed their versatility, aside from shooting a defense, in ball control and fast breaks. As a team City hit an unbelievable 64.6% from the floor compared to SJCC's 30%. I might add that any team shooting 45% from the floor should win but I must admit I have seen the contrary.

With 1:56 remaining in the game Coach Phelan put in Tony Escobar who hit 5 points. Tony, an all-city candidate while playing for Mission High School last year displayed a portion of the talent he possesses. While Willie Daigle, a starter, held Keegan, on of SJCC's number one gunners, to nine points. Daigle played an excellent defensive game while hitting nine points himself.

Things are looking good for the Ram cagers but this still remains to be seen. Merritt Junior College, which was responsible for one of City's two losses is still a tough contender. Merritt downed City in a heartbreaker with a bucket by Art Williams with only 23 seconds remaining in the game.

Girls In Locker Room

The Recreational Association is a co-ed program created so that City College men and women could share common sporting interests.

The Association or the "R.A." as it is usually known, meets at various times during the week to provide an opportunity for students to participate together in such varied activities as folk dancing, badminton, and tennis. For the girls in the program, competitive basketball, track, soccer and softball are offered with a chance to compete against other schools. In addition, student participants meet weekly, after school and weekends to bowl and iceskate.

The Association is open as an elective to any student at City College. The current enrollment is approximately 150, with the girls predominating 2-1. Mrs. Tansko Dawkins, in charge of the program, invites all interested men to enroll. For further questions, contact Mrs. Dawkins Lela Jew, student group President the Girls Gym, ext. 419.

Scansion Corner

By Bruno Former

You've probably been living in a cave for the last year if you have not heard that the famed Beatles combo have broken up.

And adding to the confusion is the fact that each member has recorded at least one album on his own. Here are my reviews:

John Lennon

Who is John Lennon trying to fool? As rhythm guitarist, he wanted to be the brains of the band. But his latest LP, "John Lennon/Plastic Ono Band" is so bad, that (priced at $5.98) you're paying $5.97 too much.

Paul McCartney

Instead of playing bass, Paul really wanted to play guitar or piano, but hardly got any such chances. On his first solo album, he plays every instrument, sings every line, and writes every tune. Sorry Paul. It seems you blew it. Use a backup band, like Badfinger, next time around.

Ringo Starr

I have one gripe about Ringo Starr: Stick to the drums, Ringo baby. You can't sing, can't sing, can't sing. CAN'T SING!

George Harrison

Iconoclast George breaks loose. His first solo attempt after being lead guitarist for the Beatles is to record a three-record set. Not a bad one, either.

You pay twelve clams to hear such people as Eric Clapton, Dave Mason, Ringo Starr, and Carl Radle back up George.

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

"And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat." - Genesis 1:29.

As a service to the readers of The Guardsman, a series of articles will be printed throughout the semester on the importance of a healthy body with natural foods.

I am a vegetarian and have spent many hours of recipe testing and research to bring this feature to you. Various definitions, recipes and articles on the good and evil of foods will benefit your physical and mental abilities in everyday living. Next week "Pill Madness".

Poetry in Motion

By Tina Brant

Do you have something [illegible] say to your brothers and sisters at City College, or a poem you would like to share? Bring it to Tina Brant, THE GUARDSMAN office, S-304, and don't be surprised if we print it.

"Mary Jane"
Marijuana is free,
all it takes is a seed,
so why must we pay and be jailed?
God gave it to all,
but the law won't play ball or we could all have a plant ten feet tall.

– Romero Mabutas

Business Executive Has Weekend Transformation

Roz Kelly portrays a sweet, demure girl who leads Bill Thornberry

Filmed in and around New York City and State, Okay Bill is the story of a young successful business executive, who begins to question his life style in the establishment after meeting an old college friend. He spends a weekend away from home, and is chased by a hip chick, Roz. Roz never achieves the satisfaction of getting Bill.

Okay Bill was directed by John Avildsen and makes use of many technical tricks. There is no synchronized sound in the film and the dialogue was improvised by the cast. During the film the soundtrack carries the television and radio voices of major politicians. Army and commercial advertisements are heard continuously.

Bob Brady plays the title role of Bill with much credibility – he is physically THE PART. His wife, as played by Nancy Salmon, is rather unconvincing, but this is due to the unsynchronized sound in the film. The real star of the film is Roz Kelly, who is a sweet demure girl from the Bronx. Roz plays the girl tat tries to lead Bill on.

Okay Bill is an indictment of complacency and sheer cowardly apathy. Avildsen is saying that we had better start exercising the right of free speech, to speak out against the forces threatening our society or we may lose all our rights as a free people. Our institutions are only going to last as long as we keep them alive, through constructive criticism; the film declares as its ultimate message.

By Forman and Prongos

KSCF Nearly Silenced (Continued from page 1)

budget," he said "was to be used to buy new equipment and records; keep in mind that some of the members who voted against funding us also complained about the music we were playing at present."

"As long as the equipment holds up and there is no shortage of repair parts," said Mr. Phillip Brown KCSF's faculty adviser "We will be able to survive. We will, however encounter problems if there is a major piece of equipment out, if there is a shortage of available repair parts, or if we attempt to buy new records or tapes."

After the vote was taken and the measure defeated, the Council unanimously voted to send a letter to the Administration telling it of the station's plight.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco Community College as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Jim Toland

MANAGING EDITOR
Ron Patrick

NEWS EDITOR
Joe Konte

EDITORIALS
Bruno R. Forner

FEATURE EDITOR
Charles Prongos

SPORTS EDITOR
Jack Hansen

EXCHANGE
Ed Hartzler

PHOTOGRAPHY
Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Neil Seippel, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Wider Reduction Of Funding Hinted

The Educational Opportunity Program for minority students at S.F. State College, which is losing the greater part of its funding, has served since 1968 to allow third-world students who are otherwise ineligible for admission to enter the school, and usually to provide them with financial assistance, especially during their first semester. A quota has been set up for 110 students to transfer to State College from City College under the E.O.P. One of the requirements for qualification is that the student have completed not less than 25 and not more than 59 units at City College. The quota must be divided as follows: 30 Black, 30 Latin, 28 Oriental, 17 Filipino and five American Indians. There are no substitutions; if only three American Indians apply, the other two positions cannot be filled by members of a different ethnic group. If there are too many applicants in certain groups, random selection will determine who is chosen.

When the reduction of E.O.P. funding at S. F. State College takes place next fall, not only will less students be able to transfer there from City College, but most of the students who are unable to get into S. F. State will most likely come to City, and most of them will need financial aid. In the words of Assistant Dean of Students, Willis Kirk, "The economic situation is right at our door." He suggests that if they can, students should offer occasional helping hands, such as a loan of a dollar, to fellow students who are trying to make it through the financial crises that some students have to face.

According to Associate Director of the S. F. State E.O.P., Anita Martinez, the reduction of the E.O.P. budget may be only a part of a wider reduction of funding to education and colleges. Approximately 80 teachers are being dropped from the faculty at S. F. State College because of statewide budget cuts. Further, while more Community Colleges are needed because those at present, like City College, are becoming overcrowded, no funds are being allocated to build new ones.

Mellow Lamb Sings Soul

In the packed College Theater on the 25th day of February, the mellow Lamb produced soul-gospel in a musical form of their own.

The mood was gentle and beautiful while the group exchanged instruments to display the versatility of imagination.

Changing to screaming country and western caused the crowds to silently wonder what the message could be. While kissing the microphone vocalist Barbara Mauritz kept the prophetic words on the stage – muffled to listeners.

Barbara Moritz

News Analysis:

Reagan and Universities Tighten Their Money Belts

By Ron Patrick

Another can of worms has been opened in California and a bitter struggle between the educational community and the "austerity" budget lies at the bottom. Noting that "Public and private universities and colleges across the nation are tightening their belts," Governor Ronald Reagan has decided to do the same. From a $375.1 million request for the coming fiscal year, the University of California has been slashed to its current $337 million allocation. The State College system will suffer accordingly, loosing $53.4 million from its proposed 369.3 million. Students may expect grave repercussions.

It is not hard to reconcile the widespread adverse reaction. From the offices of Wilson Riles, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; to U.C. President Charles Hitch; to State College Chancellor Glenn Dumke comes the same resounding conclusion: Disastrous. They maintain that, coupled with an expected ten percent enrollment increase and ever-worsening inflation, the quality of higher education will be going the way of the plains buffalo. This is to say nothing of salary increases curtailed for the second consecutive year, nor mandatory construction and improvements on campuses which Wilson Riles asserts are "falling apart".

Governor Reagan is thus attempting to hold the line at $6.7 billion in his "balanced" budget for the coming fiscal year, provided the legislature "has the guts" to meet fiscal problems in his proposed manner. "Even in my family there are years in which it is simply not possible to do all that might be desired" Reagan said. This is a questionable assertion.

The consistency displayed in the cutback program is also questionable. While urging college and university professors to "work more hours" (under last year's pay scale), Reagan proposed generous increases in his own backyard. Namely, a salary increase of seven percent for employees of his office and comparable increases for other top eschelon.

Perhaps the most imminent strategy (insofar as students are concerned) is Reagan's recommendation that student fees be increased by a whopping 35 percent over current requirements. This increase would ostensibly cover all aspects of higher education: tuition, books, student services and other innumerable fees and expenses.

Just how effective would this increase be? For one thing, the expense would be greatly curbed through incoming revenues. But, there is more than meets the eye. Many of California's "undesirables" would be effectively blocked from an education traditionally enjoyed by the wealthy or culturally elite until recent times. This could be a renaissance of "the good old days" – when "white trash" or the "son-of-a-blue-collar-worker" or a "nigger" knew his place.

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 3
March 11, 1971

Council Turns Back Another Radio Bid

By Bruno Forner

In a performance guaranteed not to earn them Oscars, Martin Poon and Frank Fung quietly turned back another bid from KCSF for funding.

Robert Summers, news director for City College radio (which covers KCSF and KALW-FM), read a letter he drafted to Council that told of the station's present status. It asked that the Administration sit down with the council and draw up boundaries on what they can and can't fund.

Martin Poon then motioned that $500 be given to KCSF, with the council assuming no more responsibility for the station. It was tabled, but Fung did drop the reason for Council's refusal to fund them.

Fung asked if the station does contribute rumors. Summers explained that during last semester's election, KCSF did a story which, admittedly incorrect, asked if the Chinese students wanted to take over this campus. A retraction was made, as well as a public apology, but, according to Summers, some of the foreign born Chinese members of Council will not forget.

John Goebel took the floor, saying that, somehow, he made it to the Anti-

(Continued on page 8)

Creative Arts extension will accommodate classrooms, TV, and Radio

Ten Year Plan Set To Enlarge College

By Shirley Fogarino

A long-range construction program which will enlarge City College facilities to accommodate 17,000 students is now underway.

The ten-year plan, revised annually, includes tentative outlines for the construction of several new buildings as well as the remodeling of the older structures.

Pre-construction plans include the developing of additional utility bases which will enable the College to facilitate the extra electrical load which the new structures will bring.

One of the buildings now under construction is the creative arts extension. When finished, it will accommodate a closed-circuit television center, the radio stations, KCSF and KALW (FM), and twenty classrooms.

The Science building and Smith Hall are two of the present targets for remodeling.

"We want to remodel the Science building so that it will literally live up to its name," said Dr. Harry Buttimer, assistant superintendent of the Community College School District.

"Structurally, the building is very sound. Instead of moving the science classes to other locations, it would be far better to convert the structure into a complete science facility," added Buttimer.

The proposal to remodel Smith Hall would involve the expansion of the Alice Statler library. Hotel and restaurant laboratories and kitchens would also be expanded and remodeled.

"There is a very strong possibility that partial financing for the remodeling of the Smith Hall facilities will come from outside industry," explained Buttimer, "the City College hotel and restaurant department trains a good number of students who are later employed by those in the hotel and restaurant industry."

Plans to construct two additional buildings on campus are now in the "shadow stages" of development. Cloud Hall East and "building X," the latter as yet unnamed will if constructed [illegible] immediate more office space, class space and student lounge

(Continued on Page 8)

SMC Maps Battle Plans For Anti-War Movement

By Mike Slattery

City College Student Mobilization Committee met last Thursday to discuss the spring antiwar calendar of peaceful mass demonstrations as the most immediately effective response that can be made to the recent escalations of the war.

The meeting was attended by less than twenty students. John Goebel reported on the February 19-20 National Student Antiwar Conference in Washington, D.C. which he attended. The conference included 2500 people, representing many different organizations and campuses. The spring calendar now stands as follows: March 15, End the Draft Day; April 2-4, commemorating the assasination of Martin Luther King, April 24, mass march on Washington, D.C. and San Francisco in support of the demand for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia; May 5 to mark the anniversary of the massacre of students at Kent and Jackson State and the outcry against the Cambodia invasion; and May 15 (Armed Forces Day), for participating in peace actions at military bases with antiwar C.I.'s.

Goebel reported that Student Council had approved a budget request for $100 to the SMC for leaflets and posters to conduct antiwar work on campus. Also, at a meeting of the Executive Board of the Academic Senate, the possibility of holding a poll of the faculty on support for the actions met with good response.

The meeting then opened to discussion. It was reported that President Nixon in his State of the World address had mentioned the late date of January of 1973 as the only possible withdrawal date, and that he had also greatly increased the military aid budget for Southeast Asia. Bonnie Shepard announced that the California United Auto Workers have recently endorsed the April 24 march.

SMC plans to contact campus groups at the earliest opportunity to invite them to support and participate in antiwar actions.

GUARDSMAN EDITORIALS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

The First Amendment Is Alive And Kicking

By Jim Toland

This last week, the issue of free speech has been put to the test on campus. In the February 25 edition of The Guardsman, there appeared an editorial written by a staff member, Bruno Forner, entitled "Two Communist Plots."

In his editorial, Bruno Forner gave his opinion of what he believes to be a serious situation facing the American people today.

A policy of The Guardsman is to allow students the opportunity of expressing themselves through the printed media without censorship from fellow students, faculty, or administration.

The staff of The Guardsman encourages the diversity of opinion expressed by each staff member. We are united by our intense belief in the right of free speech.

The majority of the staff members did not agree with the ideas expressed in Mr. Forner's editorial. Some felt that he should have researched his facts a little deeper while others thought that his accusations bordered on hysterical paranoia. All of the staff, however, agreed that he had a right to publicly state his beliefs.

Since Forner's "Two Communist Plots" appeared in The Guardsman, we have been stormed with demands for retractions, apologies and even for the removal of Forner from our staff. Bruno Forner has received threats of physical violence.

We feel that anyone who believes in the principles of democracy, or who chooses to use the right of free speech, must allow others to do the same.

One of the drawbacks to the right of free speech is that people must often hear things that they do not like to hear and put up with beliefs and opinions that challenge or contradict their own.

We want to give you, our readers, the chance to exercise your right of free speech. If you would like to comment on an editorial or a news or feature story appearing in The Guardsman, or if you have any constructive suggestions to offer, please feel free to drop in on us any afternoon, after 1:30 pm. Our office is in the Science Building, Room 304.

A Good Will Investment

By Joel Cartwright

The present invasion of Laos by South Vietnamese troops, supported "officially" by American air and artillary power is just another exercise in military gamemanship.

The odds now stand at something like 50-50 that nuclear confrontation is imminent, and this figure increases so rapidly that by 1975 the odds will have climbed to 75-25.

Our current "good will investment" involves a nation that shares a 263 mile common border with China - something not to be taken lightly; although President Nixon has referred to this military campaign as a non-threat to Red China. While at the same time "intelligence reports" and U.S. officials tend to regard the Chinese reaction as mild.

It is a long time overdue that American involvement in Indochina come to a halt. We have spent too much time, money and lives on an ideological dogma some 3500 miles across the Pacific, when we cannot even keep it together here at home. Let us refrain from speaking of hypocrisy at this time . . .

Our present involvement in Indochina is now so heavy that the economical structure of this society practically depends on the war to keep it going. War is big business and big business is politics all the way; economics is just one name of the game. For me, and for most of us, the name of the game is survival.

There have been wars between man since time began, and there will continue to be wars until we either destroy each other or somehow, miraculously come together and agree on some basic steps for preservation of the human race.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco Community College as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Jim Toland

MANAGING EDITOR
Ron Patrick

NEWS EDITOR
Joe Konte

EDITORIALS
Bruno R. Forner

FEATURE EDITOR
Charles Prongos

SPORTS EDITOR
Jack Hansen

EXCHANGE
Ed Hartzler

PHOTOGRAPHY
Thomas Wilkins
Wythe Bowe

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel. Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Neil Seippel, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Letter to the Editor
"The Guardsman"
50 Phelan Avenue
San Francisco

Dear Editor:

Thank you for an editorial on a subject long overdue (The Complainers Feb. 25th)! I would, however, like to elaborate further on the question of "dropping out."

You will find that students who do so are not merely those who aren't able to get the exact classes of their choice. Quite a number of them are dissatisfied with their teachers. It seems that within the first week of the semester there are those who are able to make an analysis of their teachers and discard them on such futile grounds as: "He looked too severe, too dull, or too young to know much about the subject"; and other grounds such as "He gives too much homework" or "He doesn't relate to current issues."

In any event, one week is too short a period to assess the capabilities or character of a person and his method of teaching. I think it would do us good to practice our preaching about tolerance, love and sexual discrimination. If these qualities are said to come with maturity, I'm afraid we have a long way to go.

I suppose our education system doesn't call for much tolerance on the part of students toward teachers. We are permitted to 'drop in and out' of courses without much ado.

Catalogues should contain a breakdown of each course giving the student an account of what the course offers and what is expected of the student. After the student decides to enroll in the course, he should be permitted to 'drop out' for valid reasons only.

The personality conflicts a student faces with his teacher is just another aspect of life he is going to have to learn to contend with - unless, of course, one intends to be a professional student who goes through life in search of the likeable face.

Russ Cramer

Dear Editor,

In the last issue of the Guardsman, I was quoted as saying that the case with Dr. Syn was a "dead issue."

The point which was brought out was that students were not included in the selection and interviewing processes of candidates for counseling positions. In a way, this issue served its purpose as a principle. This issue is "dead," at least in my mind, only in the feelings of the Counseling Department.

Florence Chan, CSA

Dear Editor,

The article published under the title of "Two Communist Plots" shows that Mr. Forner should be reminded that his writings are not being read by a bunch of babbling fools, but by reasonably intelligent students. Mr. Forner should pay a little attention to his fellow rihgtwinger, Spiro Agnew, who oftentimes speaks of the need for responsible journalism. Although the Vice-President and I don't agree on many things, I must find him correct on this stand.

Forner's irresponsibility is clearly shown throughout his piece of jibberish. Specifically, I'd like to see some evidence of the drug culture being directly related to the Communist Party, or how he considers that Angela Davis is a hoax. She is on trial for her life, which seems to be the ultimate stake in any card game. Anything said toward a case before it's brought to trial should be backed with cold, hard facts. Otherwise, it's not worth saying.

I'm sure you'll agree our job as journalists is to inform people of the truth. Journalism has no place for the irresponsible.

Bob Summers

Two Sterling Examples of Two Red Herrings

By Ed Hartzler

The recent editorial, appearing in The Guardsman, condemning the drug problem and the controversy surrounding Angela Davis is an example of the anti-Communist fervor that deals in misconceptions and completely ignores the facts.

Moreover, it is an attempt to apply simplistic notions to two of the more pressing social and legal questions of the day.

The writer looks at the drug problem as if it were a new phenomenon when in reality it is quite old.

Military doctors in the American Civil War, using the newly developed hypodermic needle, injected the wounded with pain-killing drugs that they knew little about; as a result, many of the patients became addicted.

The "magic potions" sold by hucksters in old-time medicine shows often contained enough drugs to cause addiction or even death. The Harrison Act, passed in 1916, attempted to deal with the problem but failed due to its criminalization of the addict and because it denied him the medical help he so desperately needed.

Our current drug problem, therefore, is the result of ignorance, insensitivity, and lack of concern rather than through some insidious "Communist plot."

In the theory that drugs played an important role in the Chines : Revolution, the writer completely ignores the causes presented by experts on the subject: corruption, poverty, oppression, land reform etc. These were what led to the overthrow of Chaing-Kai-shek, not the use of drugs by the Chinese people.

In discussing the Angela Davis case, the writer attempts to prove that all people connected in any way with her defense are Communists or, he specifically cites the California Federation of Teachers as "Communist and stupid." If he had taken the time to check, he would have found that CFT's only involvement was to pass a resolution demanding that Miss Davis be given a fair trial: they voted down a resolution calling for her release.

This hardly justifies smearing the organization as Communistic and stupid. It has merely shown a concern for the rights of the defendant as well as a concern for due process of law. Many Americans share the same belief; to ridicule them as Communists, is libelous and a sterling example of the guilt-by-association theory that has plagued our country's legal system for so long.

Issues such as the two which are discussed in this article must be judged on their merits, not dismissed as subversive and therefore Communist-inspired.

The issues which confront our society will be solved through intelligence, justice, and necessary reform; red-baiting is not the way "to keep America a free country."

A Revealing Conversation About Almost Everything

By Joe Konte

I had quite an interesting conversation the other day with a very candid fellow: me.

Question: Lets talk about the war — Is the Laos invasion a way to shorten the conflict?

Answer: I remember last April when Nixon told us he was shortening the war by moving into Cambodia. I also recall LBJ's promise to speed up the end by bombing the bejeebers out of Vietnam. Its frightening to think of how much longer the war might last if not for all these methods to shorten it.

Question: How about US troop morale in Southeast Asia?

Answer: I've read of fraggings (enlisted men bombing those in authority); excessive marijuana smoking; hard drugs; and racial animosities between Whites and Blacks. It sounds just like home.

Question: And what about morale at home?

Answer: War took a back seat to ecology, pollution, and population for a time, but the "movement" is being revived. I suspect the anniversaries of Martin Luther King's death, Kent and Jackson State, and Cambodia will light the torch for more anti-war activities.

Question: Will the Spring "movement" reach the climax it did in 1969?

Answer: No chance. A few token groups are trying to get it goin' again, but its an impossible task. Anyway, I can't believe that these groups are so stupid as to think they really could stop the war.

Question: You mentioned moments ago of the problems between Blacks and Whites. How does the racial situation look at the present?

Answer: We've got to realize that even such a serious problem as the racial conflict can be blown out of proportion. Ethnic groups are becoming so paranoid that they're suspicious of anyone who may hold a contrary opinion. Those who disagree at all with Whites, Blacks, Chicanos, Chinese or any other race are called names or branded a racist.

Question: How much an adverse effect does this paranoia have in bringing "all the people together?"

Answer: Everyone is trying to establish their identity, such as the terms "Black Power" and "Brown Power" indicate. What I fear is that with everyone looking out for himself or his own race, we'll become a segregated society with mistrust between all ethnic groups.

Question: Some people would probably be upset if they overheard this conversation. Is that part of the paranoia?

Answer: Exactly. The basic step in finding one's identity is to identify with one person. This is a crucial problem today. Many heroes of certain races are self-styled martyrs who are as phony as their clenched fists and "right-ons."

Question: Could you name a few?

Answer: Yes, but why should I expose my "racist nature", because that is what everyone would shout when they heard the names.

Question: Suppose you comment on other various issues of the times. How about the moon program?

Answer: It's be a shame to scrub the project with so many students interested in the moon missions, or isn't that what they mean by the many college kids who are taking up "space" in school today?

Question: The SST?

Answer: What we really need is a faster way to get to the airport. Anyhow, they already have super-speedy planes. I heard about one plane that was so fast it took off from Los Angeles with two rabbits and landed in New York with two rabbits.

Question: Welfare?

Answer: If we gave as much attention to the poor family living with the rats as we did to the poor family living in a major hotel, there'd be no poverty.

Question: Courts?

Answer: Those who make circuses out of courtrooms should be made into human cannonballs, and vaulted back into jail.

Question: Draft?

Answer: War isn't for amateurs, so let the pro army fight it. If there aren't enough volunteers, then call off the war.

Question: One more thing . . . Do you talk to yourself often?

Answer: No. Only when the deadline is near and I'm stuck for a column.

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

Good heavens, what a dreadful day this has been! This is the first moment I've found for myself all day and I'm actually so tired that I think I'll have Jo-Jo cancel our scrabble game with Spiro and Judy Agnew.

Besides, ever since that conniving Dick put Spiro on a leash, he hasn't been practicing with his dictionary like he used to. He's really very upset by the whole embarrassing thing, you know.

Well, getting back to this awful day . . . It actually began this morning when Hank Kissinger called to find out if I would give him a hand at shutting-up that blasted Senator Fulbright again.

I told him that I would have to ask Jo-Jo about that because of all the ruckus it caused the last time (Jo-Jo says I made him look like an ass), but Hank wouldn't settle for that. He admitted that this was really Dick's suggestion and asked me not to hold the audacity of the matter against him.

So, anyway, when I mentioned the whole idea to Jo-Jo, well, he literally blew his top! He rushed all over the house and locked the telephone dials with that silly key of his and told me that he was going to ship me back to Arkansas in a six foot box if I dared to pull another stunt like the last one.

Well, diary, I'll have you know that no one orders me around like that.

As if that wasn't enough to ruin my day, I met little Trish Nixon this morning outside Jo-Jo's office. I said hello to her, but at first she didn't even hear me. Her attention seems to wander quite a bit for a 24-year-old. Jo-Jo says she's still upset over that little incident at the University of Minnesota, where they wasted the afternoon because the press never showed.

Anyway, after she finally noticed that I was talking to her, she said that her daddy was mad at me because I didn't make that call to Senator Fulbright this morning.

I said that Dick would have to speak with Jo-Jo about that, and told her about how all the phones were locked, but her mind was already starting to wander again. I don't even think she realized what she was doing there in the first place.

By the time Jo-Jo finally got away for lunch at two, I had already spoken with several reporters outside. They asked me about Vietnam and I told them about what Jo-Jo told me that Dick told him.

All we're doing over there is withdrawing from Vietnam, but there needn't be any worry about the Communists because we'll be fighting them over in Laos and Cambodia and Thailand instead.

Then I told them about what Dick said the other night about lining all those college bums up and shipping them off to Red China and how Jo-Jo is always saying that if Pat were any higher strung, she could get a job with General Electric as a power transformer.

Another reporter asked me about my opinion of the wire-tapping situation and I started to tell him about Hank Kissinger this morning. But then Jo-Jo came out and told them all to get lost or lose their security clearances. (Boy, those reporters sure jump when you threaten them like that). Jo-Jo says we use the same technique in Vietnam when they get too pushy and it saves the Administration from a lot of embarrassment.

The bad part about the whole thing is, Jo-Jo put me on restriction for another month when he found out about the little press conference.

What worries me the most though is what he'll do to me if he finds out what I really said to those reporters today. Maybe, if the phones are unlocked, I can make some calls tonight and see if I can't straighten this whole mess out. Goodnight.

Martha Mitchell

Things To See Things To Do

Joerg Demus will perform keyboard music of Johann Sebastian Bach at the Little Theatre on March 26.

The college hour concert by the 35 year-old Demus will be free of charge to the public.

Volunteers interested in working with Spanish speaking children or who wish to tutor in the Mission district are invited to attend a workshop on March 17.

Mrs. Leila Hebron of Le Conte Elementary School will be the session leader.

The session, free, will be held at the Mission Family Center, 3011 24th Street. For further information, call 885-6574.

The Alpha Gamma Sigma, the local honor society, invites all eligible students to join immediately. The Alpha Gamma Sigma offers a chance at meeting some of the "other" scholars, an opportunity of a group trip to meet other college clubs, presents opportunities of special scholarships, and a position of high recommendation in job offerings and in transferring to another college or university.

The requirements for acceptance into Alpha Gamma Sigma are a 3.0 GPA in 12 units or more in the last semester at City College, or life membership in the College Scholarship Federation in high school for those new students.

See Mr. Wells in room 205-H of the Educational Services Building. Opportunity exists to those who are willing to take the next step forward.

Tutors are needed for the CCSF Tutorial Center.

Those who tutor under the work-study program will earn $2.43 per hour. Most tutoring will be done on a one-to-one basis.

To apply to become a tutor, or for further information, contact Dr. E. Lance Rogers in S-347. It would be more convenient if interested students applied as soon as possible.

April 20 will be the date for the 14th Annual Open House of the Ornamental Horticulture Department.

The OH building will be open until 5 pm for high school and college students, and until 7 pm for florists. The open house is free of charge.

A dinner will follow the open house (prepared by the Hotel and Restaurant Students). Tickets for the banquet are $2 for students, $3 for alumni, and $5 for guests.

Tickets may be obtained by writing Maryhope Jacks at the Retail Floristry Department.

Drug Addiction

The methadone treatment is increasingly becoming the most widely used method in the fight against drug addiction.

Although, methadone is an addictive drug, it is less harmful than heroin and other harmful drugs. Since methadone is cheaper, the addict would not necessarily have to resort to crime in order to get it.

This step-by-step process enables the addict to withdraw slowly from the more harmful drugs.

This method is the only way that the addict can kick the habit without having severe withdrawal symptoms. Withdrawal symptoms are so severe that it may sometimes cause death.

Drug addiction occurs when the body chemicals adapt to the steady use of drugs. That is the reason this method of rehabilitation must be applied slowly, having a gradual change from a stronger to a less harmful drug. Then eventually the use of drugs will be stopped altogether.

Aardvarks Threatening to Take Over Campus

By Bruno Former

According to an aardvark spokesman, the aardvarks are going to need someone who speaks perfect aardvarkese and can relate to aardvarks if any of them are going to make it on this campus.

The trouble is, the counseling department hires only humans, so a counselor of their type will be hard to find. The aardvarks will be perfectly happy with a human as their counselor, but they prefer having one of their own kind.

At the latest meeting of the Aardvark Student Union, they voted to endorse acceptance of an aardvark counselor. It was amended that if a human one was qualified, they would go along with the gag.

When the aardvarks were asked to comment on their surging drive for equality, they replied that they were doing great. They even recommended an LP for "Liner Notes". It was called "Songs of the Humpbacked Aardvark" by The Electric Aardvark. It's available on Snout Records.

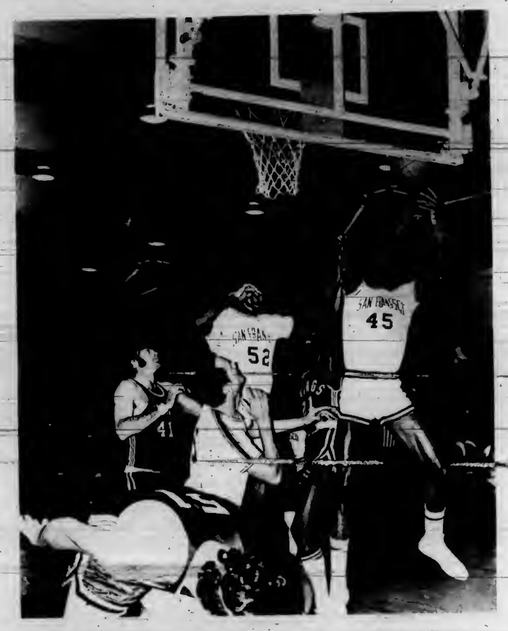
An interesting point came when one aardvark asked why other ethnic groups don't ask for a native counselor. They see nothing wrong with sharing the counseling offices with Polish, Alsatian, Greek, Italian, German, Aryan, Phoenician, English, Gaelic, Sanskrit, Philipino, Slavic, Romanian, Dutch, Hebrew, Austrian, Russian, Egyptian, Canadian, Scot, Cuban, Haitian, Communist, French, Spanish, Mauritanian, Tasmanian, Indian, Hindu, Mongolian, Samoan, Neanderthal, Mormon, New Jersey, Panomanian, Turkish, Tanzanian, South Africa, or Dog counselors.

But as another aardvark mused, the counseling department should move to the Little Theatre.

And then the drama department should hold their plays in F-205. Its big enough . . . .

Rams Take Undisputed GGC Crown

Phelan Machine takes Sixth Straight Title



by Jack Hansen

The Phelan Machine took its sixth straight Golden Gate Conference title Friday, Feb. 26th by tormenting the Diablo Valley Vikings 68-50.

Lead by Larry Haren, Willie Daigle, and Billy Metcalf City's Big Five did it again. Larry Haren took scoring honors with 18 points while both Daigle and Metcalf popped 14 points each. At half, the Rams were up 28-26. The second half lashing began with the Rams consistently enlarging the gap. The final score, and the championship, was 68-50.

In last Friday's 68-50 victory over Diablo Valley College, the Rams came within three points of setting a new GGC defensive record for the least amount of points allowed in a season. With 4:29 left the Vikings scored their 48th point to ruin the Rams chances to break the record but the Rams had tied it allowing 715 points at the moment. But three and a half minutes later the Vikings scored their 50th point and City was denied their pursuit for the record. The record of allowing 715 points, or 51.07 per game, was set in the 1967 basketball season by the Rams. This season the Rams gave up 717 points or a 51.2 per game average.

Coach Phelan, is a defense addict. It is instilled upon every member of his squad. If a player doesn't like to play defense, unless he has exceptional shooting or ball control skills, he may as well hang it up. Who is to doubt such a wizard in the art of basketball? It's a game his teams have dominated for 15 years.

Jerry LeBlanc, Billy Metcalf, and Larry Haun show board aggressiveness.

Robert Taylor goes high for two points.

CCSF Championship basketball team almost set a new GGC defensive record.

P.E. Make-Ups

Those students who wish to skip any of their physical education (P.E.) classes can have make-ups at the Women's gym at these dates and times.

DATE	TIME
March 10, 1971	7:00 to 9:00 P.M.
April 14, "	7:00 to 9:00 P.M.
May 12, "	7:00 to 9:00 P.M.
June 9, "	7:00 to 9:00 P.M.

Women only foil

By Kathy Aanestad

In preparation for 1971 Individual and Team Foil Championships at San Diego, the CCSF Women's fencing team has been vigorously training for that major event.

On February 20, 1971, the first inter-collegiate competition of the season was held at U.C. Berkeley. Both Men's and Women's teams competed for the Northern California Individual Foil Championship. The Women fenced quite well. Jean Michaelis took first, Connie Louie took second, and Kathy Aanestad took sixth. The Men's team didn't fair as well.

On February 27, 1971, the CCSF Men's and Women's Team competed in the Northern California Team Competition. The Women's Team took third and the men qualified for this weekend's Westerns. The Westerns is the largest competition of the year. All colleges from the Western United State and Canada will compete. The Westerns are also the most strenuous of any competition. The men fence with three weapons; women only foil. Men fence foil, sabre, and epee. The Men's Westerns will be held the 5th and 6th at San Jose State College. The Women's Westerns will be held April 16th and 17th at San Diego. The first day will be the Individual Competition, the second day will be the Team Competition.

The Women's Team consist of Jean Michaelis, Connie Louie, Barbara Scott, and Kathy Aanestad. The Men's Team consists of Raymond Chui, Chui Dea, Alan Fong, and Bob Quan.

It is no wonder that the CCSF fencers placed so well with the expertise instruction of their fencing master, Maestro Ference Marki. Jean Michaelis is a prime example of his instruction.

William's takes Long Jump Jump and Triple Jump

Track season 1971 got off to a fast start for City College last week with a pair of important track meets, Tuesday. CCSF traveled to Modesto for a triangular meet with Modesto and Santa Rosa. Modesto made the most of a home turf advantage, scoring 81 points to City's 58 and Santa Rosa's 32. Standout performers for City were Derrick Williams with a double victory in the Long Jump and Triple Jump, Larry Shields with a win in the 220 yard dash and Frank Oross with a first in the Discus.

Derek Williams one of City's leading point gainers.

Saturday, the squad traveled to Chabot for the Golden Gate Relays. There, City ran into a little stiffer competition and could manage no better than sixth out of a field of eight teams in the point totals. Once again, Shields, placing third in the 100 yard dash and Williams, with a second in the Long Jump provided bright spots in an otherwise dismal picture.

Louis Vasquez, CCSF's track coach, commented, "I am somewhat pessimistic at this point in the season. I find that some individuals who claimed experience from high school are actually just starting from scratch in form and technique." Coach Vasquez went on to say the team's prospects may improve with the addition of players from the Basketball squad.

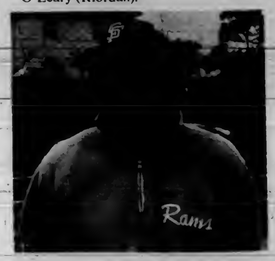
S.F. Rugby Capitol

By Russ Cramer

Among other things, San Francisco is also known as the most European city in the country. Therefore, it stands to reason, that the bay area is the center of rugby activity in the country. Not only is there more rugby played here but the quality of it is superior to that played elsewhere.

There are about fifteen rugby clubs in the bay area – one as good as the other. The sport is under the control of the Northern Californian Rugby Union, which is an affiliate of the International Rugby Union. As one would expect, most of its members have "hung up the boots" for one reason or another; usually to devote more of their time towards promoting the game here. They provide an invaluable service in getting the game across to the public.

What seems to be hurting the game most is the attitudes carried over from the other sports in the country.



The "Win At All Costs" attitude is one that wouldn't survive the rugby field.

It is said that only 40% rugby is what takes place on the playing field the other 60% is what goes on at the socials after the game. These socials are an integral part of the game, and amidst the beer drinking and sing-alongs the outcome of the game has little bearing.

But don't let me put you off – Despite these drawbacks, the area still produces the best brand of rugby in the country and improves with each season.

Baseball

As the Red and White squad face up to the serious challenge of conference battle, Coach Domecus points to three first-year athletes as outstanding additions. They are: Thirdbaseman John Trent (Lowell), Leftfielder Dan Ferrette (Lincoln) and Catcher Fran O'Leary (Riordan).

Coach Vasquez gives opportunity.

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

"Pill Madness"

Tranquilizers, psychedelics, pep pills, antibiotics, birth control pills, aspirins, vitamins . . . prescription or over-the-counter . . . wake up in the morning, pop a few, and never realize that you, as well as all of society, are one big pill.

"But the doctor prescribed it," you reason, and throw my article in the fire; I say "Ha, Ha, the doctor is your genius image." Did you ever stop to think that perhaps he is not aware of the potential danger or the first signs of adverse effects or not alert to what one prescription versus the other he prescribed last visit can do to you? Your body is not the same as any other patient's body. His knowledge and skill cannot possibly keep pace with the growth in the power of drugs.

There are an estimated one million cases of drug poisoning each year – one half of which are small children curiously tasting colors.

No drug can be guaranteed to be safe and effective because there is no such thing as absolutely safe, absolutely effective drugs.

No drug has a single, definite, limited, identical, beneficial effect on everyone who takes it, and that is what a drug would have to do to be guaranteed safe and effective.

Next time you put the pill to your mouth, substitute that pill by opening your window to remember Dino's prophetic words, "Have another hit of fresh air".

Next week - "The Synthetic Vitamin vs. The Natural Vitamin.

Poetry In Motion

"On Friendship"

My friend is one whom i can associate with my choicest thoughts.

. . . thoreau

The only way to have a friend is to be one.

. . . emerson

Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

. . . Mark 12:31

. . . Your friend is your needs answered . . . you come to him for hunger, and you seek him for peace . . . and when he is silent your heart ceases not to listen to his heart . . . when you part from your friend you grieve not; for that which you love most in him may be clearer in his absence . . . seek him always with hours to live.

For it is his to fill your need, but not your emptiness.

And in the sweetness of friendship let there be laughter, and sharing of pleasures.

For in the dew of little things the heart finds its morning and is refreshed.

. . . Kahlil Gibran

The Prophet

New Star on the Horizon

By Joe Davidson

Marcos Gutierrez is the host of KRON'S "ALMA De Bronce", which is seen every Sunday at noon on channel 4. Marcos is an extremely friendly, outgoing guy who feels equally at ease with everyone.

Marcos comes to San Francisco from El Paso's KELP, where he had a radio show and co-hosted their televised Saturday show for teenagers. Wishing to broaden his experience in broadcasting Marcos took off for the West Coast. Upon arriving in San Francisco he had to maintain himself by working at such jobs as laying tile, and selling subscriptions to magazines. After two months of this, he got word that KRON was looking for a host for their new Chicano program. He auditioned for the job and won over 15 other applicants.

In addition to "Alma De Bronce", Marcos also has the job of translating the news into Spanish on KRON's FM radio station, Mon., Wed., and Fri., at 6 PM.

After settling down over coffee I asked him if he thought "Alma De Bronce" was meeting the needs of the Chicano community. He answered swiftly, "Yes definitely! The ratings are good, and many viewers have expressed to me that the show has lifted their morale and made them more aware of themselves and their culture".

Lighting up a cigarette Marcos seemed eager for the next question. I was just as eager to know just how much freedom the station allows him, and if he and his guests are allowed to express themselves freely. "Yes, I am the producer of the show and I try to emphasize the fact that Chicano people are just that: PEOPLE, with the same wants, needs, and desires as everyone else. KRON has taken the lead as far as Bay Area stations go with my show, and by allowing both myself and my guest to express themselves openly". I thought for a second how easy it is to talk with Marcos. He certainly does not fit the stereo-typed TV personality who, I've heard, have ego problems.

Marcos Gutierrez is the genial host of KRON's "Alma De Bronce."

Getting back to my questions, I was interested in knowing in what other areas he feels Chicano's should involve themselves. He replied in a flash, "I'd have to place politics first. We are the largest minority in California, yet have the smallest amount of political representation. I also place education as a highly desired thing, but education that is relevant."

I asked what he meant by relevant. "I mean education that does not try to eliminate or erase our culture. We are now demanding Chicano studies as Black people have done with Black studies".

With this comment we were interrupted by a phone call for him. After hanging up he explained that he had to leave immediately to meet with a group he wants to appear on Alma De Bronce. He apologized and promised to meet with me again in the near future for another interview. Watch for his program.

Suicide Rate Now Number One In California

San Francisco is not the "Suicide Capital of the World" but, along with Los Angeles, Sacramento, Miami, Tampa, Seattle, and West Berlin, she has a very high rate. California has the highest rate in the nation, along with some western states and Florida.

Of all deaths of high school and college students, about 6% are by suicide, being about the fourth cause of death for them.

Since 1965, San Francisco Suicide Prevention, Inc. has been listening to pleas for help 24 hours a day, seven days a week. This organization is staffed by three paid personnel and manned by 135 volunteers, most of whom are under 30 years of age.

Approximately 1500 calls per month are received, which number increases during holidays and decreases in the summer.

Calls are made by often depressed, isolated individuals in a moment of panic and despair, sometimes influenced by drugs or alcohol.

There is much ambivalence about living and dying up to the last minute among suicidal people. If the caller can verbalize his feelings with a trained, non-judgmental volunteer who will not make demands upon the sufferer, it can often prevent him from enacting a suicidal decision.

A person in crisis must find help immediately, at the moment of panic which can take place at any time of the day or night. That help is always available at Suicide Prevention, Inc. Their telephone number is 221-1424.

With regard to bad drug trips, Suicide Prevention will not contact the police, except as a last resort when a person becomes a threat to himself or to others.

By Barbara Ellett

• Student Suffer on Stolen Books •

(If you missed the library orientation at the beginning of the semester, perhaps the following might be of help.).

The campus library is in Cloud Hall. It is open Monday through Thursday from 7:30 am-9 pm, and Friday from 7:30 am-4:30 pm.

Mrs. Ethel S. Crockett, head librarian, is serving her third year. She heads a staff of 24, including an evening librarian, full and part-time workers, and students doing part of their library field work.

At a recent interview held in her spacious office with its green painted walls, and oriental objects d'art, Mrs. Crockett answered questions relating to the library and its functions.

She emphasized that she strongly believes it should be open on weekends, and added that this is the first time students have demonstrated a strong participation in such a project.

Mrs. Crockett also noted that more use of the library has been evidenced and quoted last October's circulation figure as double the previous year's.

"It will, however, take some months before a decision is made on weekend library use," she said.

Reviewing the fines system, Mrs. Crockett firstly outlined the theory behind the fines.

"If a long delay occurs, (books are due every other Wednesday), the student is mailed a first notice, if no results, a second notice is issued. If still no response, then the student is considered 'delinquent' and their name is entered under the delinquent list and a charge of $2, is made – a clerical cost.

Regarding mutilation of books, Mrs. Crockett answered, "Of course, there are always some books in this category. Generally, people are anxious to make amends. Students are charged the price quoted, to put the book back into the usable condition – and this is variable."

Either the books are able to be rebound, or else they must be replaced, which means the full price plus a replacement fee of $3. If the book was a gift a charge of $5 is made. For magazines, $3 is charged.

Mrs. Crockett stressed that mutilation is not a serious problem at CCSF adding, that since the installation of a Xerox copier the incidence of mutilation has lessened.

Concerning book losses, Mrs. Crockett said that this occurs in high numbers. "Last year, approx. 3% of the total collection, i.e. 1,300 books were lost. This represents $20,000.

All in the Family is Not a Family Show

Jean Stapleton, Rob Reiner, Carroll O'Connor, Sally Struthers comprise regular cast of "All In The Family."

The year 1971 will not live on as the year of the bore - but as the year of the bigot.

To begin the year right, CBS pulled off a grand coup by airing the controversial "All In the Family", based upon the now defunct British series "Till Death Do Us Part".

The series is about a middle class cab driver named Archie Bunker (played by Carroll O'Connor) and his dumb-but-honest wife Edith (Jean Stapleton). It is focused primarily on his liberated daughter Gloria (Sally Struthers) and her hippie husband Mike (Rob Reiner). It is a strained relationship because Archie is a blind bigot, while Mike isn't.

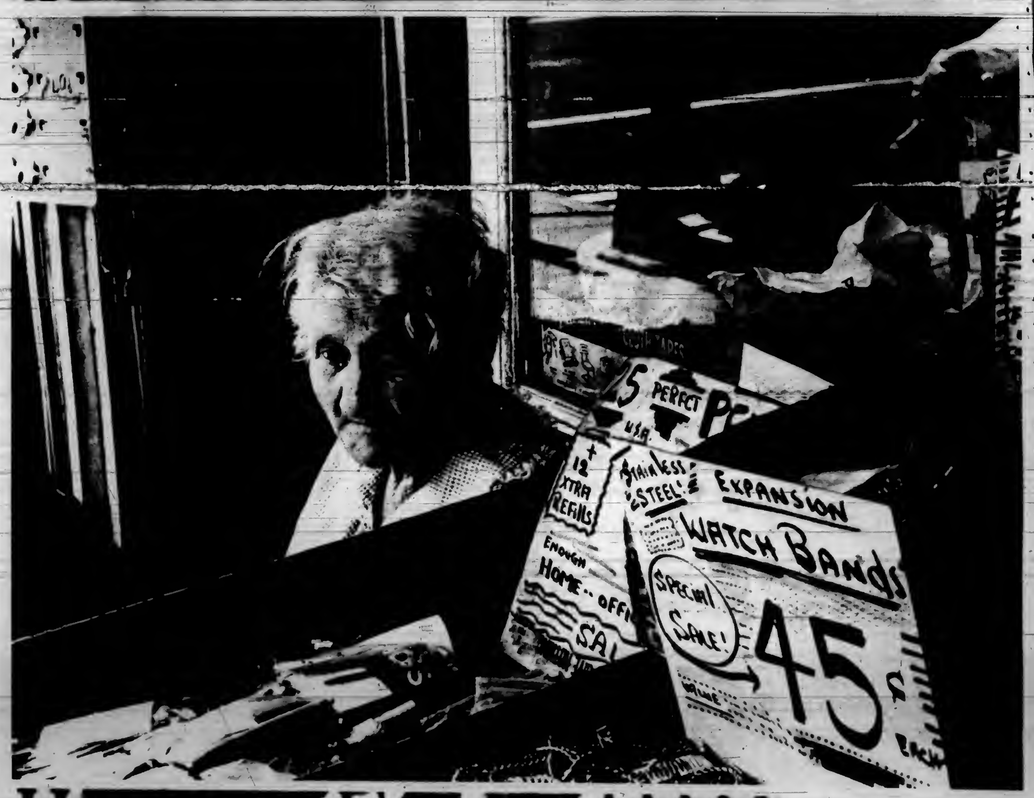
The roles are played to the hilt as gross caricatures, because there is some Archie Bunker in all of us.

"All-In The Family" is not afraid to deal with any social problems. Mike Evans, as Lionel the token Negro neighbor, provides some answers to the problems.

In one episode, Archie is apprehensive about going to the blood bank. After some convincing, he decides to go, only to meet Lionel there.

The show also tackles such diverse topics as: unwed mothers, free love, homosexuality, welfare, and Jewish lawyers.

"All In The Family" is not a family show, but it is mighty powerful stuff. Watch it at your own risk.



By Bruno R. Forner

2,000 Years Ago

Two thousand years ago, men wore long hair and beards, they believed in love and peace. They were called Christians and were thrown to the lions.

Now, two thousand years later, men wear long hair and beards; they too believe in love and peace. They are called hippies and thrown to the Christians.

The test of friendship is its fidelity when every charm of fortune and environment has been swept away, and the bare, undraped character remains: if love still holds steadfast, and the joy of companionship still survives, in such an hour, the fellowship becomes a beautiful prophet of immorality.

... Mabie

Alone nowhere to go ...
"Hey Buddy . . . spare change?"

Bright noon at St. Mary's Square. Skyscrapers are sharpedged against the blue sky, and colorful secretaries plastic spoon yogart for lunch.

Executives sit watching the girls through dark shades, and a wino is peacefully passed out on the bench.

But wait . . . come nightfall, when the park is deserted and streetlamps cast dark shadows the police may come and the wino — the only person left — may be awakened by being clubbed.

Winos and little old ladies, the deserted, the uncared for, are in the process of dying, or being killed by neglect. Alcohol is burning winos out, yet they have no food many nights and nowhere to sleep but firetrap flop-houses. And the old ladies still sit in the hotels.

. . . By Richard Blair

Campus Evening Division Opens College Courses in Chinatown

By Shirley Fogarino

Six college courses are now being offered in Chinatown, thanks to a pilot extension program initiated by the City College evening division.

The Chinatown Branch of the San Francisco Public Library and the Commodore Stockton School auditorium are among the four locations where courses ranging from Chinese 10 (conversational cantonese) to Business 135 (the ownership and operation of a small business) are being offered.

Plans for the pilot program began last year when Dr. Louis Batmale, Superintendent of the City College District, noted that the College's evening program had a notably lower Chinese student enrollment than that of the day school.

Out of the approximate 4,200 students who attended the City College evening division during the fall of 1970, only 7% were Chinese.

A proposal for the program came in October of 1970. It was decided by the Chinatown and City College district leaders involved in the planning sessions that the courses would begin during the spring, 1971 semester.

Though the funding of the courses was derived from a different budget than that of the evening division, the aforementioned department, under the supervision of Dean Warren White and a diligent coordinating staff, handled the tasks of publicity, of searching for and finding class locations and later, of helping to enroll some 300 students in the Chinatown area.

"This pilot program, if proven successful," said Dean White, "could possibly launch the expansion of City College extension courses to other areas of the city."

Students Whip Tax Groups in San Mateo

In an election of particular interest to students and educators, voters in San Mateo approved a tax increase which was needed in order to allow Skyline and Canada Colleges to continue operation. The measure, which had met opposition from taxpayer groups, was passed by a vote of 86,846 to 56,651 and will increase the tax rate to 77 cents per $100 assessed value as well adding $8.25 to taxes paid on a $30,000 home.

The measure, had the support of students, business and labor groups, and many educators, such as San Francisco State College President Dr. S. I. Hayakawa. Dr. Hayakawa stated in a recent T.V. interview that closure of the two schools would hurt "thousands of students who are trying to obtain a college education, and were not causing trouble on campus."

Throughout the campaign, students had worked with other supporters of the proposition and many spent election day canvassing neighborhoods attempting to encourage voting.

Officials at both colleges had feared a reduction of staff members and a drastic curtailment (over ten thousand students) in enrollment if the voters turned down the tax increase.

Buildings 'X' A Mystery

Continued from page 1

areas. A possible site for "building X" would be on the sloping hill between the physical education facilities and Cloud Hall. The constructing of Cloud Hall East would leave its present namesake free for college library and audio-visual expansion.

Students working with the ornamental horticulture department will play a large part in the campus' land development.

Financing for the overall project, which will come to approximately $24,000,000 will be derived from various sources. Two-thirds of the funding will probably be taken from a local bond-issue which will be put to San Francisco voters in about two years. Support will also be derived from federal, state and industrial sources.

SDS and Arab Students Plan March On Sacramento

Students for a Democratic Society are joining forces with the Arab students of City College in planning the National SDS rally and demonstration at Sacramento this month.

A committee was formed at an SDS meeting here on Tuesday, March 2, for a three fold purpose: (1) writing, printing, and distributing SDS leaflets; (2) finding and orientation of new members; (3) determining the function and goals of SDS on the national and local level; and (4) to coordinate City College SDS chapter with planning national and local demonstrations.

Meanwhile, the SDS and Arab students had planned to meet last weekend at Santa Cruz beach in a cooperative effort toward obtaining their goals on a local level. The trip to the State Capital also will be discussed.

Twenty buses have been chartered by SDS for the trip to Sacramento. The buses will depart from Mission and 23rd Streets in San Francisco on Monday, March 20, at 8 a.m.

SDS prepared for Sacramento trip

Ex-President Drops From Council Post

(Continued on Page 1)

war Conference. He presented a calendar, adopted at the conference and council endorsed it 8-1-3. A request for $100 for the Student Mobilization Committee was tabled.

An organization called Christians in San Francisco, applied for membership on Council, but pending the acceptance of their constitution, it was tabled.

Tom Lai announced that Judy Kay voluntarily dropped out as parlamentarian and as a member of the curriculum and student review committees.

On March 3, Margaret Gunnell was made the new member of the Associated Students Council, replacing Billy Metcalf.

Mr. Metcalf, due to a confliction in his class schedule, resigned.

The Student Mobilization Committee received $100 from the council. A motion was made by Danny Martinez to grant $150 to SMC, but it failed to pass.

Students who applied for a job in the Economic Opportunity Program will be selected by a lottery held in the Student Union Building on Monday March 8.

Corpse Deliveries On Schedule

Recent deliveries to the Biology department at City College include one male corpse.

According to Hugh McMonigle, Director of Contract Services at the College of Mortuary Science, City College receives "a couple every year" which usually alternate between one male and one female depending upon the supply.

"The remains are in good condition, with embalming done by our students under laboratory supervision" says McMonigle.

Advice Center Rated for Students Only

By Mike Slattery

The City College "Student Advice Center" is back on campus this semester to continue to provide help with any student's problems, whether physical or mental, personal or general.

This unique service first opened last August with a staff of four students, representing the main ethnic groups on campus, one white, black, Chinese, and Chicano. Ranato Larin, former AS president, founded the Center under the Work Study program with the approval of President Batmale and other administrators. Larin was joined by Jocelyn Won, active in Experimental College and the peace movement, James O'Donnell, who was active in preventing the splitting of the Mission district, and Charles Smith, an organizer of the peace movement at City College last Spring. This semester Cecelia Madrid, Jan Knutsen and Joe Navarro have been added to the staff.

Charles Smith

"We're interested in serving the student and showing him how the school works;" says Larin. Information is available on admissions, registration, school procedure, courses to take and how to add and drop them, directions around campus, and transfer to four-year institutions. The center also advises on financial problems, food stamps, legal and social services, medical problems, birth control, psychological problems, and jobs (the job situation, however, is poor). If the Student Advice Center cannot give you an answer they will try to direct you to departments or agencies that can, either on or off campus, such as free clinics, draft counseling, or the school psychiatrist.

Furthermore, the student advisors can help smooth your relationship with a teacher, by talking to him if you have been missing class.

When the Center first opened, the major problem expected was with Latino and Asian students unfamiliar with English, who need to get information from someone who speaks Spanish or Chinese. It was soon obvious, however, that there was a great need among all students for an all-purpose Advice Center that was free from bureaucracy and red-tape. While they must be familiar with school structure and administration, the student advisors are still on an equal level with other students, and can relate as friends or sympathizers to a student with any kind of personal problem. They can talk to a student on any level, and the student can "open up" and talk to the advisor about things that can't be discussed with counselors or professors.

Psychology Major Skip Flowers Talks With City Student

As the population of City College steadily increases, so does the need for this office, where old and new students can easily find answers to their questions and assistance with difficulties in attending college. Larin emphasizes that the office operates "in the interests of the students, because the students are the ones that need this office."

Larin and the other student advisors ask you to drop in to the Student Advice Center with your problems, whatever they may be. There is always someone there from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. It is located in E-109, in the back of the Educational Services building behind the bookstore. The room number of the Financial Aid Office is also E-109, but that is in the side door, which faces the cafeteria.

News Analysis: By Mike Slattery

FCC Takes Strong Stand on Drug Lyrics

The Federal Communications Commission, which licenses and regulates U.S. television and radio stations, issued a notice March 6 telling broadcasters that they will be held responsible for playing songs which "glamorize, encourage or advocate the use of illegal narcotics."

An executive in each station must be aware of the meaning of song lyrics. The station can lose its license if it plays songs that promote use of drugs. Nicholas Johnson, the only commission member to dissent from the notice, called it "unconstitutional" and a "brazen attack" upon civil liberties.

The move was not unexpected. On January 16th San Francisco radio station KSAN reported that President Nixon had held a conference with radio station owners and executives. They heard songs by Bob Dylan, the Beatles and Steppenwolf, and saw slides of Woodstock and hippies fighting with police, as well as a demonstration of marijuana-sniffing dogs. A survey by Earth Magazine revealed that many radio men expected further government action, such as a list of songs not to be played.

After the FCC notice was released, KSAN news contacted dissenting Commissioner Nicholas Johnson, who felt that "The administration has chosen to use the drug problem as a political weapon," to divert public attention from such problems as the growing Asian war, racial prejudice, inflation, unemployment, hunger, poverty, education, pollution and urban blight.

Johnson felt there were many flaws in the notice. It ignores the number-one drug problem in the U.S., alcoholism. Also, commercials which suggest that a chemical will solve "all of life's problems" are a prime cause of the drug problem. Then, who is to decide whether a song glorifies or warns against drug use? Finally, the presentation on drug use that the FCC received was put together by the Pentagon. Many of the songs "are not about drugs at all," are about our society, and are "anti-conspicuous consumption" or antiwar songs. Defending "the diversity of ideas," Johnson felt it was dangerous for the Government to get involved in "artistic content."

To find out more about the effect of the notice, I visited KSAN and asked News Director Dave McQueen how the FCC would enforce it.

"Evidently they're not going to," McQueen said. "What it amounts to is a pressure tactic." Most broadcasters won't protest, they'll just censor themselves vigorously. The Broadcasting Act of 1934 has never been adequately tested since stations capable of testing the FCC are unwilling to do so because of cost.

McQueen had received a memo from KSAN station manager Willis Duff which stated "The direct effect on the KSAN operation is negligible," since it is already policy that management is aware of lyrics. (KSAN has in fact aired warnings on certain "hard" drugs.) However, "If and when the Government attempts to take the judgement of what is and what isn't responsible broadcasting, Metromedia (Broadcasting Corporation that owns KSAN) will fight." It is not likely the FCC will confront them.

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 4
March 18, 1971

Vets for Peace Formed To Recruit 150 Members

Veterans for Peace, a nationwide organization of ex-servicemen opposed to American involvement in Indo-China, is opening a chapter on the City College campus.

Jack McCloskey of the Experimental College is currently conducting a recruiting drive that has already enlisted 150 veterans into the organization. Membership dues are $6 per year and McCloskey feels that this will be sufficient financial support for the campus chapter of V.F.P.

McCloskey is attempting to have the group recognized as an official campus organization which would form research committees to discuss changes in the war and develop ways to oppose American involvement there.

Future plans include participation in the April 24th anti-war parade in San Francisco. The organization would also like to debate any military recruiters who come on campus or if this isn't possible, set up a table of their own across from the recruiter's table.

Veterans for Peace is open to any City College student who is a veteran and who wishes to work toward ending American involvement in Indo-China and bringing American troops out of that troubled area. Interested people may contact Jack McCloskey at the Experimental College (Ext. 464) or call 282-5414 for further information.

"City College a Shopping Plaza For Thieves" - Says Bike Prexy

"City College of San Francisco is a shopping plaza for thieves" said Richard Jesse, president of the newly-formed campus Bike Club.

"Approximately 40 bikes were stolen last semester from the bicycle racks spread around the campus. The racks had no locks provided. Speed freaks, high school and other thieves are carrying on a thriving business stealing either entire bicycles or merely stripping parts. They only have to take four bicycles (estimated stealing time ranges from 15-30 seconds) and there's close to $200 in their pockets," he continued. "Four bikes have already been reported stolen this semester."

Instead of paying to ride the overcrowded and infrequent trolley cars which double or in some cases triple traveling time, or hindering ecologists by adding to air pollution and traffic jams driving to school, students could be enjoying environment and trimming down puffy waistlines, cycling to school free.

To do this, a reasonable guarantee that property will not be tampered with or stolen must be forthcoming. From a legal standpoint, if a culprit was caught and brought to court, the charge would be treated as a misdemeanor.

There are four bike racks on campus at present. A rack holds approximately 15 bikes which means there is only room for 60 bikes out of nearly 13,500 students.

The bike club has around 100 names on their roster. Admittedly all cyclists are not in school at the same time, but "... more people would ride bikes if they could be assured of bike security" stressed Jesse.

The bike club, which Jesse began forming last semester after having

(Continued on Page 4)

Bar Project Big Step Toward Establishing Justice

By Gilbert L. Francis

The O.R. or "Own Recognicance Project" was set up in June 1964 by the San Francisco Bar Association with the cooperation of the judges and sometimes the San Francisco Police Dept.

The O.R. Project operates on the idea that a person shouldn't be held while awaiting trial merely because he doesn't have bail money.

The program's function is to investigate cases and get background information on a person. Initially this comes from an interview with the person in City jail. The information covers jobs, family, length of time in the Bay Area etc.

With this information already compiled and checked out, jurists can expedite the O.R. process.

Many people erroneously believe

(Continued on Page 4)

Scholarship to William Leet

From Left: Harry Nelson, head of horticultural department at City College, CAN Chapter president William M. Leonard, and William Leet.

The California Association of Nurserymen has awarded a scholarship to William Leet, a City College horticulture student. The scholarship winner and his wife were guests of the CAN's Peninsula Chapter of its March 4 meeting where a $50 cash award and an engraved plaque were given to the winner by CAN Public Relations Director Harold R. Young.

Harry Nelson, chairman of the college's horticulture department, was presented the association's Education Award, highest recognition given by the nurserymen to an individual educator engaged in the teaching of horticulture in the state.

Stand on Drug Lyrics

...be one drug problem in the U.S., alcoholism. Also, commercials which suggest that a chemical will solve "all of life's problems" are a prime cause of the drug problem. Then, who is to decide whether a song glorifies or warns against drug use? Finally, the presentation on drug use that the FCC received was put together by the Pentagon. Many of the songs "are not about drugs at all... are about our society, and are "anti-conspicuous consumption" or anti-war songs. Defending "the diversity of ideas," Johnson felt it was dangerous for the Government to get involved in "artistic content."

To find out more about the effect of the notice, I visited KSAN and asked News Director Dave McQueen how the FCC would enforce it.

"Evidently they're not going to," McQueen said. "What it amounts to is a pressure tactic. Most broadcasters won't protest, they'll just censor themselves vigorously. The Broadcasting Act of 1934 has never been adequately tested since stations capable of testing the FCC are unwilling to do so because of cost."

McQueen had received a memo from KSAN station manager Willis Duff which stated: "The direct effect on the KSAN operation is negligible... since it is already policy that management is aware of lyrics. (KSAN has in fact aired warnings on certain "hard" drugs.) However, "If and when the Government attempts to take the judgement of what is and what isn't responsible broadcasting, Metromedia (Broadcasting Corporation that owns KSAN) will fight." It is not likely the FCC will confront them.

...sman

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 4
March 18, 1971

...l Bar Project Big Step ...rs Toward Establishing Justice

By Gilbert L. Francis

The O.R. or Own Recognicance Project" was set up in June 1961 by the San Francisco Bar Association with the cooperation of the judges and sometimes the San Francisco Police Dept.

The O.R. Project operates on the idea that a person shouldn't be held while awaiting trial merely because he doesn't have bail money.

The program's function is to investigate cases and get background information on a person. Initially this comes from an interview with the person in City jail. The information covers jobs, family, length of time in the Bay Area etc.

With this information already compiled and checked out, jurists can expedite the O.R. process.

Many people erroneously believe

(Continued on Page 4)

Scholarship to William Leet

From Left: Harry Nelson, head of horticultural department at City College, CAN Chapter president William M. Leonard, and William Leet.

The California Association of Nurserymen has awarded a scholarship to William Leet, a City College horticulture student. The scholarship winner and his wife were guests of the CAN's Peninsula Chapter of its March 4 meeting where a $50 cash award and an engraved plaque were given to the winner by CAN Public Relations Director Harold R. Young.

Harry Nelson, chairman of the college's horticulture department, was presented the association's Education Award, highest recognition given by the nurserymen to an individual educator engaged in the teaching of horticulture in the state.

GUARDSMAN EDITORIALS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

Searching for Alternatives

By Jim Toland

Two immediate and major problems effecting the United States today have an end in sight.

The dilemma of rising unemployment, along with the seeming hopelessness for our polluted environment, have both been a matter of concern in the last decade.

Committees have been formed to study the causes, effects, history of, and reasons for both unemployment and ecology.

Obviously none of these committees have been too successful.

Both of these problems have been discussed in the United States Senate, as well as in all of the state senates.

Congress also has lengthy transcripts and records of discussion covering both of these areas.

Mutterings on these vital subjects have even come from the mouth of our President. But still, nothing has been accomplished.

Millions of dollars have been spent studying all of the complexities surrounding these situations. I suspect that these serious problems have not been solved because a few people do not want to lose the money that they receive in grants and funds to do their "in depth studies". If their studies proved to be successful and they solved the problem of unemployment for instance, they would no longer be needed. They would soon be in a line at the unemployment office.

Being fortunate (or unfortunate) enough not he be touched by the long arm of financial graft and corruption, I have solved both of these problems.

The solution is not complex nor is it new. It is merely a renewal of the old concept used by The California Conservation Corps during depression years.

The new Conservation Corps would be subsidized by the federal government. It would have a Director and a small administrative staff.

The Conservation Corps would hire all unemployed men and women, who were actually capable of working at a decent wage, to keep our environment clean. Women and men would continuously clean beaches, parks and streets. Women would also pitch in and help to do clerical and other office work, leaving the heavier work to the men.

It's a simple idea, but if the government did put it into use, almost all unemployment would be wiped out.

People who really needed more welfare money would get it because the majority of the healthier recipients, who are now on the rolls, would be cleaning up our environment.

Needless to say, with thousands of paid workers keeping the country clean, our environmental pollution problems would be well on their way out.

Is it possible that the government might choose to take the simple and direct approach to solving this problem.?

I douht it, hut it's nice to dream.

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

A CROSS-SECTION IN REVIEW .

Dear Diary,

Among other interesting features today, several news reporters insinuated a definite link between Pentagon manipulations and recent FCC proposals that musical broadcasts be censored, but I maintained adequate refutation. I must admit, however, the possibilities of influencing other spheres of broadcast policy to the Pentagon's advantage if the measure succeeds. Things would be a lot easier.

— Jerry W. Friedheim

I reminded dad that all this garbage I'm into is great, publicity-wise, for me, and that he shouldn't worry about the funky Hollywood clan anyway.

— Jack Ewing

If there's one thing I've repeatedly impressed upon Joey, it's the fact that we must not push this Haight-Ashbury Redevelopment thing too far. If anyone knew who bought up all that property during the area's devaluation, he'd be politically ruined. But he keeps insisting that "what comes down, must go up." Next thing you know, we'll be importing hippies to Union Street.

— Joe's Wife

Furthermore, I'd like to make this perfectly clear. Trish is feeling pretty sore about what I said to her yesterday, but she must understand how magnificent and politically advantageous a wedding in the White House would be, I suppose I was a little harsh in calling her an old maid, though. Goodnight.

— Dick

In comparing these silly letters I get day after day after day with my own problems, I've come to realize a deeper significance in making "mountains out of mole hills." These free-loading bums get my advice dirt-cheap — I have to PAY for therapy.

— Ann Landers

Mrs. Harris reminded me that there are two sets of statistics for every issue, but failed to offer any credible examples of public enthusiasm for Mr. Nixon's latest proposal to defend American boys in Burma.

— George Gallup

. . . One last thought. This malarky [illegible] I'm not about to give up my job. Anyone that volunteers for anything "patriotic" these days has gone bananas.

— Curtis W. Tarr

Summarily, the meeting ended upon the realization that the funeral industry could no longer exist under the threat of cryonics. Walter Berrydem (President of International Morticians Affiliates) suggested that we launch a newer, bolder advertising program wherein we might convince the public that there is a virtuous "dignity in dying" and that attempting to prolong or immortalize living is un-Christian and un-American.

— Mort Demiseo

Weather Report
Spring Fever

MID-TERM TENSION IS BUILDING — Roving staff photographer Tom Wilkins captured this City College student in an intent mood as she hit the books.

All Power to the Police

By Joe Konte

In an era bombasted by rhetorical cries of "power to the people," it's refreshing and even soothing to discover a new shout: "power to the police."

Our long oppressed men in blue have found some companions in crime fighting according to Gallup Poll published in the March 8 Newsweek.

The survey question: If the crime rate continues to go up, would you favor giving the police any of the following powers?

• Require all adults to be fingerprinted — 73%.

This will make those criminals straighten out. What a thrill to have three-fourths of the nation on the side of law and order.

• Wiretap telephone lines of anyone they suspect — 44%.

We worry too much about the privacy of the criminal, er . . . suspect.

• Search a house without a warrant — 27%.

Can't be too careful with possible criminals. It's better to catch them by surprise.

• Stop and search anybody on suspicion — 50%.

With so many devious characters walking the streets, it's time to see what they're up to.

• Hold someone on suspicion for 24 hours without bail — 42%.

Suspicious looking people can't be trusted, and therefore, shouldn't receive bail.

If only these powers could be invested in our police, what a secure feeling I would have knowing that the misfits in our society were being closely watched . . . that is, until I had a dream in which is happened to me:

My fingerprints, already in the police files, were found by the theft squad on a parking meter, which I had leaned on while waiting for a bus. An hour earlier, a 1965 Chevy had been stolen from that same spot.

The wiretap squad then placed a secret receiver in my telephone. When the top cop operator overheard me talking with "Shifty Sam," the used car man, he put two and two together. After much deliberation, the math squad came up with four, and sent the search squad to my house.

Since the water was running, and "Adam 12" was turned full blast on the TV, I didn't hear the doorbell. As I walked toward the front of the house, a foot smashed through the door, and I immediately headed for the phone to call the police for help.

The door splintered open and I saw that they had arrived already. But, before I could move, one officer was frisking me while the other searched the living room for a 1965 Chevy.

I was hauled to headquarters where the arrest squad contemplated nearly half-a-minute what crime to charge me with. It was decided to keep me locked up for the safety of society for 24 hours, since the bail squad had already gone home for the night.

I guess those police powers are a good way to capture criminals, unless, of course, they decide you are the criminal.

Poetry in Motion

"FREE"

Born too young to be free;

But young as I was, falling in love was easy for me;

I am young, but so old;

Why can't they just let me be?;

I could die for all they care and yet they still would never see;

But the day is coming when age will meet age and all will live free.

..Jamie Lee

Cherry red is a funn color to paint the smiling sunshine to hang on the east wall but orange and yellow seemed trite when it has been behind grey clouds for a week now as the spring rains are washing sunburns off that took four hours to color that first weekend of spring.

perhaps the next time you come out of hiding
you'll have been painted a cherry red to explode this wavy bind

..tina brant

An Alternative to the Draft

As any young man over the age of eighteen knows (or should know), for several years of his life, he is eligible to be conscripted or "drafted" into the armed forces of the United States.

If he is eligible because of a low "lottery" number he will be drafted almost immediately unless he is deferred from military service. (A process by which induction is postponed by his local draft board.)

Draft deferments may be issued for a variety of reasons, such as hardship, or completion of education (student deferment). Obtaining these deferments is a process involving (on the part of the draftee) filling out numerous forms, writing letters to the local board and waiting for their reply. For many draftees, this process can become hopeless at best, and confusing at least. More often, a small amount of confusion on the part of a draftee may cause him to make a wrong decision, which might result in his losing his deferment.

In order to help such confused applicants, a draft counseling service is maintained at City College. It is located in B5, the building known as the "Experimental College." It is operated by Mike Mitroff, a second year social welfare major. Mitroff voluntarily counsels anyone who comes to see him with any problem related to their draft status. At an interview he talked about his counseling service and why it exists.

"The local boards are not telling the students anything about how to obtain a deferment, or if they are eligible for one. They leave it up to the student to find out for himself. My job is to advise students how to obtain a deferment legally from their local board, and to help them with any problems they have, concerning their draft status. Let me emphasize," he said, "that I counsel students in how to obtain their deferment legally rather than simply giving them ways to avoid military service."

When should a student come to see him concerning his deferment? "Preferably before he has a serious problem concerning his deferment. If I can see you before you are sent your induction notice, I can help you." "But, he emphasized, "if you come to me with your induction notice in your hand, there is a great handicap on what I can do for you. The important thing is to see me as soon as you can."

Much of Mitroff's work is concerned with helping students obtain the draft status of Conscientious Objector. "I have quite a few people come to me asking about whether they are eligible to become C.O.s, but the requirements to become a Conscientious Objector are not as complicated as most people think. If you have strong moral convictions against killing someone, or inflicting violence upon them, then you should take it upon yourself to consider whether or not you should receive C.O. status. C.O. status can be awarded on moral as well as religious objection to war."

Mitroff has been draft counseling for one year. "Since I have operated this office, I have counseled 331 students, of these 331, 310 have been successful in changing their draft status. The 21 people I wasn't able to help, came to me too late for me to do anything."

Asked why he counsels students with draft problems, Mitroff replied, "Our draft system is wrong, and I wish to reform it. I believe in working within the system and using its own short comings for its own demise. Through this job I can help students deal with a system which is in dire need of reform."

By D. Boitano

1971 Spring Film Scheduling

April 8 —
"Treasure of the Sierra Madre" (1948—USA)
April 15 —
"Hiroshima Mon Amour" (1959—France)
April 22 —
Canceled
April 29 —
"Cranes are Flying" (USSR)
May 6 —
"War of the Buttons" (1962—France)
May 13 —
"Deathwatch" (1956—USA)
May 29 —
"Women in the Dunes" (1964—Japan)
June —
"Blood of the Poet" (1931—France)
"Simon of the Desert" (1956—Mexico)

All films are shown at 8 p.m. on Thursdays in the College Theater, Room A-152.

Ethnics Drama

Drama 42, which is a black drama productions class, opened this semester at City College. This is the first attempt at forming an Ethnic Drama Department.

Mr. Crippen head of the Black Studies Department says: "Courses in the Ethnic Drama Department are designed for the self expression of a life style; it is a part of educational process for black people and is an extension of the cultural heritage of black society. It is also a therapeutic method of relieving the tensions and frustrations black students are confronted with in our society."

Areas covered in these courses would include: The complete study of the works of black authors, dramatization of black social expression, unfoldment of the aestheticism of black culture.

The students will also be trained in the technical area which deals with lighting schemes, set design, sound tracks, producing and directing.

If this new department is properly managed and afforded all the considerations that will be needed for its success, it will be a great aid in our cross-cultural understanding and, will hopefully be a contributory agent in the reduction of racial discord.

A large number of students agree that the American Black cannot be understood culturally unless he is seen as a member of a detached ethnic bloc. Only with this detachment will the black American be able to develop and uphold his culture, thus providing the means by which he can raise his cultural heritage to higher, fuller, more creative, more profound, more classical and more universal expression.

By Carolyn Stephens

Personality of the Week

Gene doing his "flounder"

Can an impoverished eighth grade dropout from Oregon City, Oregon rise to fame and fortune?

"You can bet your sweet bippie on it," says 33 year old CCSF student, Gene Wunderlin. "I'm going to make lots of money as a surveyor and realize my life's two ambitions: to walk up Mt. Kilimanjaro in Africa and to view Ayres Rock in Australia, the largest single rock formation in the world."

Fatherless at eleven, Gene thought that burglarizing homes and automobiles was "neat." He reconsidered the merits of this pastime in St. Mary's Home for Boys. A soft-hearted judge, moved by Gene's mother's tears, sentenced him to six months in St. Mary's as an alternative to reform school.

"I was a ball boy at fifteen in a joint during the winter season," Gene recalls. In other words, he reset fallen milk bottles in a carnival game booth. He quickly worked his way up to "caller," the carnival equivalent of circus barker.

Gene received his high school diploma by passing an equivalency test, much to the dismay of his jealous former classmates.

At 19 he married his poolroom sweetheart from Pongo Pongo, which union terminated two years later when she beat him in a pool game. To repair his injured psyche, he became a cook in the Coast Guard and spread his charm throughout Newfoundland, Bermuda and Cuba.

Upon discharge, Gene worked as a seaman on the Canadian vessel "Bluenose," one of the largest schooner rigs in North America.

Today Gene Wunderlin stalks the CCSF Science Building, laden with loaves of his secret formula French bread for favorite instructors. He implies that "Only Julia Child knows for sure" what the recipe is.

Still in rags but anticipating riches, Gene is building a 16 foot sailboat in the basement of his Bernal Heights residence. "Affluance will never corrupt me," he declares. To assure future humility, he now lives within his $175 monthly G.I. Bill allotment, preferring ground round and Red Mountain to Sirloin and Champagne.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco Community College as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte
EDITORIALS Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE Ed Hartzler
PHOTOGRAPHY Thomas Wilkins, Wythe Bowe

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Neil Seippel, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Tripping Out

Crystal or speed as it is sometimes referred to is a mind blower. Three years ago when I first started using the drug the flashes were tremendous. Sometimes a trip would last for two to nine days. Suddenly I found myself able to rap better and longer than anybody on the scene. The amount of weight one loses by staying up for that amount of time without benefit of food (it takes your appetite) and very little drink is just unbeljevable. You can start out on a trip and by the time it's over your pants are three sizes too small.

The worst part of the trip is coming down. It causes a nauseous headache, with of course, a very run down, empty feeling. Then there is the paranoia. Since sleep doesn't come when you want it, the best way to come down is by taking some downers like reds, yellows etc.

After two years of this, with the help of my friends, I was able to come down or slow down enough to look back and see the circles that I had been in for so long.

Having a chance to get involved in community work as a drug counselor really helped me get away from it also. Now, three years after, I can say I don't know if speed kills, but it sure helps!

By Gilbert Francis

Organic Plants Bloom

By Julia Jaurigui

— Organic Gardens, bonsai Trees, ecology and mellow vibrations are blooming this semester at CCSF.

The Ornamental Horticulture Department, with its highest enrollment to date, is the most intense and aware group donating their energies and talent to the beautification of our environment and campus. One of their first ventures is the Organic Garden now being grown on campus. The garden consists of organic vegetables and fruit. Great enthusiam and much work is being accomplished by both students and the Student Council for the success of the garden.

Campus Space

Randy Siebert, the Ornamental Horticulture representive to the Student Council, is highly pleased with the Council for allocating campus space and arrangements which will enable delivery of organic fertilizer and coffee grounds needed for the purpose of organic gardening. With much tender loving care the garden will eventually reap enough vegetables to turn on the campus to "beautiful organic vegetable soup".

Japanese Art

The newly established BonSai Club is another facet of the OH Department's energies. The club is devoted to the Japanese Art of dwarfing trees and shrubs. The first meeting was held last week with a successful turnout of 40 interested students who listened to Koto music and drank Moo Tea. A BonSai workshop is also included during the meeting with guest speakers each week on the Art of BonSai. Jay Josephson, creator of the club, urges individuals to come to a Tuesday nite meeting at 7:30 to get together, drink tea, listen to music and grow little trees. BonSai mateiial is available and on sale for those who feel the urge.

Ecology

With the need for Ecology and the plead for a finer looking campus, the OH boys have come up with yet another project. The Aluminum Drive is being sponsored to improve Ecology on campus and merely involves the recycling of aluminum, glass and newspapaers. All collected materials will then be sold to an unnamed "junk dealer" with the proceeds from the drive going to the Ornamental Horticulture Beautifying and Landscaping Program.

"Ryan's Daughter": A Very Long Love Story

Director David Lean and M.G.M. have once again combined their considerable resources to fill the screen with a visually impressive, unbelievably long love story.

Set in Ireland around the time of the 1916 Rebellion, Ryan's Daughter, deals with a young girl, Rosy, whose dreams of consuming love are stifled by the rigidly Catholic peasants of Kirrary. After an impulsive marriage to her staid former schoolteacher, Rosy falls in love with a handsome crippled British officer. The consequences for all are unfortunate when Rosy is suspected of aiding the British through her new lover.

Robert Mitchum, ad the loyal schoolteacher husband, turns in one of his best performances in a long time. Sarah Miles, nominated for an Academy Award for her portrayal as Rosy, is vibrant and passionate. Christopher Jones (T.V.'s Jesse James) is asked to look handsome and do little else. This he accomplishes with amazing ease and grace. In supporting roles, Trevor Howard as the village priest, and John Mills as the village idiot, conspire to steal every scene they are in.

Sarah Miles

Robert Mitchum

But the real star of Ryan's Daughter is the superb camera work. Not since Lean's Dr. Zhivago has the screen been filled with such breath-taking and magnificent photography. Ryan's Daughter is worth seeing if for this one aspect only.

Unfortunately, three and a half hours of beautiful photography does not make a great motion picture. This could have been a great film at half the length, though it is a movie well worth seeing.

By John Gose

Council uses Lottery To Select Applicants

The Associated Students meeting of March 8 saw the selection of 58 students for the Economic Opportunity Program and the selection of members for three major committees.

A lottery system was used to select the candidates. Cornelius McCarthy of the Counseling department told council that the openings for Filipino, American Indian, and Latin American quotas had been filled by the necessary numbers of students. What was to be determined were the openings for 28 Chinese and 30 Afro-American (50 Chinese students applied as did 66 Afro-Americans).

Florence Chan and Charla Duke selected the candidates, with Martin Poon doing the honors of keeping them tabulated (a numerical system was used to simplify the operation).

The three committees were then filled by having the council vote on a list of candidates for each committee. Elected were: Ecology - Randy Seibert, Steve Marigan; Bookstore- Harry Littell; Finance - Dora Liang (chairman).

The only opposition came from Darryl Pilcher, who asked that each committee candidate be given some time to tell council why heshe wants to be on that committee.

In other action, Pat Horan became parliamentarian, replacing Judy Kay. The course evaluation booklet will be discussed for next semester. Henry Lou motioned that a person can serve on one committee at a time, but was defeated (6-6-1, with Tom Lai casting the deciding ballot). A message read to council stated that the cafeteria should be used for eating and not for studying.

Steve Kushman, representing KCSF, read a statement to council asking that council consider the fact that the news director (who voiced some unkind comments about council at the March 3 meeting) did not reflect KCSF's views. Tom Lai read a letter of reply to the council.

Bike Thievery Rampant

(Continued from page 1)

personally suffered two bike losses, tries to offer a degree of protection. It has established a guard shift from its members throughout the day. Two bike racks have been temporarily placed in a small section of the lower level of the student union building and the club now has its own table and bulletin board in the same area. The bulletin board — a development from the original purpose of the club — carries announcements of bike trips and other club information.

Briefly referred to in the Associated Students Council meeting report of March 4, was the decision that the club's bikes could stay until the area become "too crowded." This decision was later rescinded and an understanding was reached that they could remain until ping-pong tables intended for the same area arrived.

The bikes could be placed in a compound fenced off immediately outside the lower level from where the shift can continue to maintain a guard. Although there is no fool-proof anti-theft device on the market, the club has a good chain lock system on the racks.

On the ping-pong tables in the lower level of the student union, Jesse challenges "Is it the function of the school for people to come and play ping-pong, or to be educated?"

Administration opinion appears to be that it is not their function to protect the bikes. Their attitude is: "If you ride a bike then you must also protect it," accuses Jesse.

In a telephone conversation with Dean Ralph Hillsman, the statement was denied. "Of course it is our concern, we have campus police on special patrol for this purpose," he said.

In a subsequent telephone call to the campus police headquarters, patrolman Dale Wong said that the special patrol was part of the regular patrol. "Campus police could only tour the campus, due to lack of men."

Asked what he thought of the bike club guard, he said: "It help us a lot, particularly with their having a central location for bikes."

Project

from page 1

that the personnel on the project are the ones holding the power to release them. The judges are the only ones able to do this. OR. has a staff of six full time people, the rest being Vista Volunteers, assistant or community workers.

Miss Cecelia Beirne, the court representative, and Miss Susan Pasley, assistant to the director have been on the project for over two years and work conscientiously in the interest of justice.

Body and Soul / The Synthetic Vitamin

By Tina Brant

The word "vitamin" was unknown fifty or sixty years ago. People ate their fruits, fresh vegetables and homemade breads and then snickered in later years when their grandchildren mentioned the strange word. And they were HEALTHY at their ripe old age.

There are few drugs that are as misunderstood and misused as vitamins, despite the fact that more is known about them than any other drug.

There is substantial evidence that vitamin tablets can actually harm. Excessive amounts can cause loss of hair, irritability, skin eruptions, bone swelling (ouch), enlarged liver, permanent kidney damage and numbers of other serious adverse effects.

James L. Goddard, a nutrition expert said, "...whatever his age and whatever his financial condition, he has an excellent chance of taking the recommended daily requirements of vitamins and minerals through the foods he eats, without resorting to any of the dietary multivitamin or mineral supplements."

If you choose to take the pills, remember to read the IMPORTANT label: "NATURAL: When the word Natural is applied to a Food Supplement it should mean that the ingredients in that Supplement are derived from Food Concentrates, such as Fish Liver Oil, Yeast, etc. CRYSTALLINE: ...has its source in a Natural Food, but by means of distillation, heat or solvents it has been isolated into a specific Vitamin or Amino Acid. SYNTHETIC: ... put together in the laboratory by duplicating the exact molecular structure of a Crystalline Vitamin the resulting product is a Synthetic form of Vitamin .... Remember, all Synthetic Vitamins are "Organic" when the most liberal interpretation of that word is applied: namely, that the substance has presnt in its molecular structure the clement Carbon. "Scientifically" speaking, that is all that is needed to qualify a substance as organic and it is that fact that makes possible the widespread misuse of the term." Gides, makers of Nu Life Vitamins, sent this to New Age Natural Foods Store and it was copied from their intelligent brochure. Why fight Mother Nature? She can do a lot for us these days.

Next week — "THE GROCERY STORE IS A RIP-OFF"

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 5
March 25, 1971

Chinese Head Quits Under Pressure

By Joe Konte

Gordon Lew, chairman of the Chinese department at City College, resigned recently under pressure from some Chinese students who felt he was not proficient enough in teaching Chinese.

Dr. Harry Buttimer, Assistant Superintendent of City, had not yet accepted the resignation as of March 17. Buttimer explained that more insight into the situation would be needed than he has at the present time. "I'm trying to get the background," he said, commenting that "as of now, it's in a "state of limbo."

Lew resigned after a list of accusations against him were made by the Chinese Cultural Club, basically claiming him to be incompetent in teaching Chinese.

The soft spoken instructor felt "caught in between" those who viewed themselves on the far right and far left of him. Lew, admitting that he doesn't claim to be an expert in Chinese, said the "upsetting rumors came as a complete surprise to me."

Lew answered an accusation that he was not availabie enough to the students. He pointed out that he was carrying a full load of courses, and that, although "I am not complaining, it is unlike many department chairmen who teach only one course. I'm not an administrator," he explained. "I'm hired primarily as an instructor, not an administrator."

Lew seemed more upset about the division among Chinese students here than his losing his post. He noted that he had to resign and that "a defensive move (to remain in the position) would have hurt."

Lew, 38, was born in Canton, and immigrated to the United States at 19 years of age. He received his education at Boston's Northeastern University, New England Conservatory of Music, and received his teaching credentials at the University of Pacific.

The former chairman, who teaches four Chinese courses here, admitted this was the first time he had these types of problems with students.

Gordon Lew quits as chairman

Psych Teacher Threatened With Ejection Over Classroom Conduct

By Janet Kramer

"Dudley Yasuda will not be dismissed from the Psychology department" Dr. Harry R. Buttimer, assistant superintendent of City College officially disclosed.

Rumors have been running riot around campus that Dudley Yasuda, tenured member of the Psychology faculty, had been accused of being non-professional and of using offensive language in his lectures. His ability to teach was being questioned, and attempts were being made to eject him from the teaching staff.

Dr. Sheldon, who recently submitted his resignation after nearly two years as the first chairman of the department of Behavioral Sciences, commented: "There have been a number of complaints received concerning Mr. Yasuda's methods of teaching."

Dr. Morton's secretary had received several telephoned complaints, and letters have also been sent to the college. Complaints began last year but action appears to have been spurred by those received during the current semester, especially from the evening division.

The majority of the students don't mind Mr. Yasuda's language but some are disturbed and drop his class — they don't like the way the concepts were being presented. Sometimes parents call," said Dr. Morton.

In a later interview with Yasuda, he claimed that there had been only three complaints, from women students, two this semester (Robert Messman also on the Psychology faculty corroborates this), who sent letters. The students were from the evening division.

Yasuda added that students never attempted to discuss his teaching methods with him personally. After dropping his class and transferring into another psychology class, he states, the letters were written.

(Continued on page 8

INSTRUCTOR IN HOT SEAT — Psych teacher Dudley Yasuda on trial for offensive language in the classroom.

Counseling Spot In First Stage Process

Prospects for filling an open counseling position with an Asian counselor are good, according to Dr. Harry Buttimer, Assistant Superintendent of City College.

Buttimer's comments came after a March 12 meeting delayed over thirty minutes by fiery arguments as to whether the meeting would be open or closed. In attendance were members of the administration, counseling department, students and academic senate.

Another meeting scheduled last Friday should complete the procedural process which sets up the methods for a selection of the counselor agreeable to the four groups.

"We're in the first stage of process," Buttimer explained.

The results of these meetings are to put a package together for establishing the process of selection. Buttimer pointed to early April as the target date for carrying out those procedures.

The pre-meeting squabble concerned the request by Dennis Fong, representing Asian Association for Unity, to permit his fellow students to sit in on the meeting. After a discussion marked by frequent outbursts, the students caucased outside. Twenty minutes later, Fong announced that only one representative from the Chinese Cultural Club and Chinese Students Association, besides himself, could stay.

John Brady, Coordinator of Student Welfare, and Paul Fisher, President of Academic Senate, expressed strong dispieasure at the students due to the delay.

Brady was dispieased that the students seemed to "think they have a right to teii us who to hire."

Fisher, angered at the pre-meeting dialogue, blared out at the students. "You asked us to come here to negotiate, but you have nothing to talk about."

"It's upsetting me personally," he shouted. "There's never going to be one (an Asian counselor) until we get together," Fisher said.

Judy 'Kayo's' Guardsman

By Jerry Cranor

Judy Kay, former Parliamentarian to student council angrily rose up in defense when interviewed by The Guardsman.

Asked why she had resigned her special post as a member of the Curriculum and Student Review Committees, she sharply retorted, "Why don't you people leave me aione. I have no comment. They don't print the four letter words in the Guardsman I want to use," Kay steamed. She did say, however, that Mr. Samuels, Dean of Student Activities, may have something to say.

He did, but not much about Kay. Samuels said that if Miss Kay had no comment, neither did he. He explained that there was no story involving Miss Kay and he added that the Guardsman should not "invade the privacy of an individual." He did say that she just wanted to devote more time to her studies.

Further, Samuels criticized a story that appeared in the March 11 issue of the Guardsman, that angered many students, especially members of the Student Council. The story, according to Mr. Samuels, was wrongly reported.

He explained that the story on the council meeting of March 3 and 5 had reported that the council had turned back the KCSF radio bid, but in the truth the bid was only rescheduled for a vote at the next meeting. He explained that the headline made it seem as if the council had rejected the bid.

GUARDSMAN EDITORIALS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

It's No "Strange" Religion

By Jim Toland

The recent upsurge in "strange" religious beliefs, has brought many students to the altars of new and conscious expanding philosophies.

Among the newer religions in our western civilization is one that follows the basic teachings of Buddha. It is called Zen.

Zen was once described by the philosopher Plotinus, as, "a flight of the alone to be alone."

There is also a Zen poem that roughly translated says, "If you do not get it from yourself, where will you go for it?"

Obviously, Zen is a highly self absorbing and mind awakening experience. Along with everything else, Zen has its contradictions and its weak points but even so some of its simple beliefs are inspiring. Zen teachings are:

"People who feel a profound need to justify themselves have difficulty in understanding the viewpoints of those who do not . . . Those who justify themselves, do not convince." (Laotzu)

"Those who would have good government without its correlative misrule and right without its correlative wrong, do not understand the principles of the universe." (Chuang-tsu)

"One cannot be right without being wrong, the two are as inseparable as front and back."

"A man who mistrusts himself cannot even trust his mistrust and therefore must remain hopelessly confused."

"If you want to get to the plain truth, be not concerned with right and wrong. The conflict between right and wrong is the sickness of the mind." (Hsin-hsin-Ming)

These along with many other simple concepts lead to the Satori, or the experience of awakening, as it is sometimes called.

Zen is above all the liberation of the mind of conventional thought . . . be free of the itch to justify yourself.

Question Man

Is Student Council Important?

Do you think the Student Council is important to the student body?

Lance Zakian – stated that there was a need for the student council because it co-ordinated extra-curricular activities.

Jody Walgren – felt that the student council was not essential because so few students participated.

Susan Johnson – was not aware that there was a student council at City College.

Bill Jeffries – stated that the student council was irrelevant because of the lack of interest among the student body.

Shirley Martin – did not realize that a student council existed.

Renee Orielle – did not feel that council was important because of apathy among the student body.

Compiled by Bob Guichard

America: I'm An Orphan

By Joe Konte

Open letter to my country:

I remember when you were like a father to me. It was that secure feeling I had when those fears of Communism were pounded into my innocent head. But I knew you'd protect me.

I remember your birthday on July 4, and those bombs were really bursting in air. My eyes moistened, and I bit my tongue so the tears wouldn't come as I listened to the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." God, I felt proud.

I remember John. That was eight years ago, and I was very young and unaware. But I knew he was something special. You raised a fine young lad America, and he became a great leader of your people.

I remember Martin. He had a dream. All of your children were in it and I think it was all about peace. My compliments for raising another fine son.

I remember Bobby too. That hair of his would flop in his eyes, and he'd brush it back with his left hand while he waved to your people with his right. He was everything that constitution of yours stood for, America.

I remember driving block after block on one of your national holidays, and seeing every house waving your banner from their front window. You know, there were a lot of people who really liked you.

I remember a country that could do no wrong.

I remember a country that I loved.

I remember a country that I would die for.

But you lied to me, America.

You said you stood for freedom, but now I must fight your war or go to jail.

You said you'd defend your sons, but 40,000 of my brothers are dead, and who was defending them?

You said you'd treat everyone as equals, so why is there all this racism and hate?

And then you watched them die. They were your sons, America. First there was John, and then Martin. A third bullet took Bobby away, but you still make guns readily available today.

I wish I could feel that lump in my throat again. I'd even settle for a few goose bumps. All I want is to feel proud of you once again.

Don't you give a damn about me anymore?

I feel like an orphan.

Letters to the Editor

The Guardsman is more than glad to accept letters to the editors dealing with various topics. Just address your comment or gripe to The Guardsman, S-304, 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112 or bring them up to S-304.

Dear Editor,

I read with interest the article titled "Aardvarks Threatening to Take Over Campus" in your last edition. Ha! So what is the panic? We are all aware that the aardvarks are a minority on this campus, and anyone who believes that there is any threat at all that they are taking over the campus must be out of his mind, after all, they are only aardvarks.

William Tam

As you know Bill, aardvarks survive by eating ants. The author of this particular article raises ants and is very paranoid about raids on his ant farm. Editor.

Dear Editor,

Enclosed is a copy of a speech I gave in Philadelphia a few days ago in which I outlined my views on U.S. policy in Southeast Asia.

I would deeply appreciate any comments or suggestions you might have regarding the speech and the subject generally.

Ed Muskie
(United States Senate)

Well Ed, its nice to see that you feel strongly about bringing all of the troops home, from Southeast Asia. Too bad it took everyone so long to realize that the United States made a boo-boo.

I feel that your speech should have been shorter and more to the point. If you have this problem in your upcoming campaign for president please let me know as I would be happy to become a paid speech writer on your staff. Editor.

Dear Editor,

I would like to know what the regulations say about advertising in the classrooms and hallways on campus.

The past month there have been three different companies doing so in Cloud-122.

These companies are: Franklin Square Agency, Teaneck, N.J., Youth Fare Center, Houston, Texas and The College Market, Houston, Texas.

I am hoping that the college administration is collecting a fee from these companies, for this effective way of advertising.

Robert Valer

It certainly seems sneaky to me. I feel that you should remove these advertisements, and bring them to the business office or to Dean Frustuck in the Educational Services Building. Unless these ads have been stamped "Approved For Posting CCSF" they are illegally taking up space valuable for other needs. Editor.

Editor:

The Fall 1970 semester at CCSF saw the campus police (actually criminology majors), give threats of ticketing any cars parked without a parking permit in the reservoir or college parking lot. Many students purchased $7.50 parking permits to avoid a $10.00 ticket that was sent through city hall. The same threats hold through this term.

Ticketing in this way is decent and lawful except for the fact that the police do not check for parking permits on car bumpers. The student who buys a parking permit is indirectly penalized $7.50.

The police on campus must in the future do one of two things. They must check for permits, or open the parking lot for no fee.

Al Levin

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco Community College as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte
EDITORIALS Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE Ed Hartzler
PHOTOGRAPHY Thomas Wilkins, Wythe Bowe

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Tina Brant, Rich Brongei, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, David Boitano, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Neil Seippei, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Veide, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

"Homosexuals Shuffled Off With Dirt and Debris"

In America, the land of the great white ethic, there is only one disease worse than being a communist, and that is to be a homosexual. It is amazing, how along with other minority groups who are finally being recognized by the government and the country that we live in, that the homosexual (being one of the most repressed minority groups that there is) has gotten shuffled off somewhere in the background with the dirt and debris.

In San Francisco alone, where the homosexual is more accepted and acknowledged than any other city in the world he is still harassed by the laws and their enforcers. Despite persistent denials from officials, it is very apparent that the San Francisco Police Department has lowered the boom on public homosexual activity.

Homosexual Arrests Rise

Arrests for homosexual activity rose sharply. While actual statistics are not available, it is estimated that about 50 or more arrests took place in the downtown Macy's department store, at Land's End, Golden Gate and other parks. There have reports of police harrassment, too, at some homosexual bars and steam baths – though no arrests have apparently been made.

Elliot Blackstone, who is the San Francisco police - community relations officer who has been acting as liaison between the police department and the homophile community, denies a change in policy and claims this is merely a series of coincidences that are not related.

California has sex laws which actually forbid homosexuality and other states' laws are even more rigid in regards to sex. The California sex laws:

Penalties

Penal Code Section 288a is unconstitutional on its face under the rationale of Griswold v. Connecticut. Penal Code, Section 288a, reads in relevant part: "Any person participating in an act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not exceeding 15 years, or by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed one year . . ." This statue, as its language clearly manifests, applies to all acts of oral copulation, irrespective of gender or situs. Its punitive reach embraces not only foreplay in public, private homosexual contact between consenting adults, and performance of the act with a child, but also prohibits oral copulation between married couples.

New Laws

Times are changing and so are peoples' viewpoints. Many laws are currently under consideration that would ease the tension of our now stringent sex laws. One of the most important of these is Willie Brown's bill, AB-701, to repeal laws proscribing sexual acts between consenting adults in private and indicated that this meant any sex act. The laws are not being rapidly changed and few of the bills are accepted, but with time and patience perhaps the homosexual will see a brighter future.

By Jamie Lee

Poetry in Motion

"Togetherness" for G. McCone

the unknown day
the unnumbered time
the unnoticed weather
in the unmarked season;
while floating atop the sky
i drowned and found it most delightful.

when reality sucked the water from my mouth and darkness left the green eyes, i found you waiting for excitement in the tree of life and passed your way a branch:

green in color to signify memories to forever retain;
a thousand leaves as alive as us to count off with laughs;
held by brownish-black stems to go with sighs of happiness; bound together by thick, black bark for experience of eachother.

. . .tina brant

C.O. Status Disputed

The Supreme Court in its latest decision, requires that in order to apply for conscientious objection, one must object to all wars; not just the Vietnam war.

The point the court refuses to see is that a large percentage of the men applying for CO status do not object to all wars.

With the Vietnam conflict not being a legal war the court has relieved itself from hearing the embarrassing case of whether Congress should or should not be required to make our occupation in Vietnam a legal war. Since they continue to ignore this point the court should not require one to partake in this conflict against his will.

The court did come around to realizing that one may object to military service although they do not belong to a particular religious sect. This makes sense, since many persons who do not belong to a traditional church or religion may oppose military service as vigorously as those who do belong to a religion that abhors military service.

The highest court in the land is starting to adopt more liberal views; slowly but surely, and with other cases pending we hope they continue to progress in this area.

Body and Soul

Tina Brant

"The Grocery Store is a Rip-Off"

Your weekly list is made up and the journey down the aisle causes you to trip – and it's good you did – over a misunderstood word written on the product's cover.

You quickly refer to your Federal Food and Drug Administration list of "Generally Recognized as Safe" non-food products.

Safe by whom? The one who makes it, of course. The FDA tests very few of their items adequately. Fred Rohe, a member of the Organic Merchants, comments, "The reason for that is that the entire system of approval is arranged backwards. Instead of proving conclusively that a product is safe before it is added to the list, it is added with scant evidence submitted by, of all parties, the company which wished to market the product. FDA spokesmen have weakly defended this system by stating that their resources allow for no other method. Manufacturers defend this system by saying that if they had to wait for conclusive proof of a product's safety, they would have to wait years for some products to receive approval for marketing."

WE ARE ALL GUINEA PIGS!!!

You meat eaters, what makes you meat so red? Do you think it has not been frozen before? Well, you are wrong. Some meats have to be shipped long distances before they reach the counter. Therefore, the only conclusion is that it has to be injected with "Generally Recognized as Safe" coloring. The only way to be sure, is to kill your own and if I'm bright in memory, I believe some One once said "Thou shalt not kill."

Nature can be the only honest food manufacturer because to nature: PEOPLE MATTER; to the grocer: PROFITS MATTER.

And God said Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat."

Genesis 1:29

Black Day is Coming

"A Black Day is Coming," April 16, in the New Student Union Building.

The Black Students Union presents "Expo 71," a black fashion show with African traditional dress, music, and poetry.

Last year's "Expo 70" black fashion show was successful with a complete sell out.

This year's captivating "Expo 71" will be even more promising with such talent as the Soul Sensation Band, Poetic Group Change, plus Three, African Dance Group, black arts displays and a one act play.

Under the diligent works and supervision of black director, Frank Stevens, Assistant director, and B.S.U. Ambassador of Ethnic groups, Charles Smith, "A Black Day is Coming," will come.

Campus Leather Boys Evicted

The second member of the trio repeatedly threw his Moroccan sewing awl dart-like fashion onto the ground. He insisted that there were only three noteworthy aspects to him: his name, "Seven," the fact that he was shoeless and that he wore nylon pantyhose for warmth.

Tad, formerly the technical director in a Reno, Nevada television studio was the spokesman for the trio. He said that they had chosen to sell their wares in a campus environment because they "dig being with people our own age and want to give the students a break on price. The same shoulder bags that we sell for $12.00 would go for $30 in a store."

But before the Emporium had a chance to worry about competition, John, Tad and "Seven" were given the shovel.

Dean of Students Ralph Hillsman appeared and politely requested their departure, on the grounds that they were in violation of a law prohibiting commercial enterprise on campus.

Recently, the concourse between Cloud Hall and the Science Building was brightened by the appearance of Tad Lindsey, John "Tumbleweed" Davis and "Seven," self-taught leather craftsmen who live and work on a 1600 sheep ranch in Bodega Bay.

They came to sell their belts, bags, sandals, headbands and watchbands, which were lovingly arranged upon the grass.

John, the youngest at 19, was wearing souvenirs of his travels; a rainbow striped pullover jacket from Guadalajara; grey and burgundy velvet vest and jeweled black shirt from Afghanistan; and blue and white pajama striped cotton pants from India.

A photographer's dream, John expressed a Moslem resistance to having his picture taken: "I don't want my spirit caught in a little box." He then illustrated his indignance by jumping behind a bush when a passing photography student focused in his direction.

To add insult to injury, an unidentified man, carrying a shovel, suddenly materialized and announced that he had to dig a hole on the very spot which the trio occupied! Bodega Bay, anyone?

By Barbara Ellett

People in the News

March Fong

VD Advice

Assembly-woman March K. Fong, Democrat from Oakland, introduced legislation making it easier for schools to offer instruction on the prevention and cure of venereal diseases.

Mrs. Fong's measure exempts venereal diseases from provisions of the sex education act of 1969. Under the law, parental permission is required before a student can receive sex instruction.

"VD is the biggest thing to hit the suburbs since crab grass," she said. "And yet we have done less to control the spread of VD than we have done to control common weeds."

Senator Strom Thurmond

Generation Gap?

Senator Strom Thurmond will soon be a father for the first time. The 68-year old senator from South Carolina and his wife Nancy, 24, are expecting a baby next month.

At a stork shower given by California's Senator Alan Cranston, the future father was asked about the population explosion. He says he is proving there's no generation gap.

Tricia Nixon and Ed Cox

Seven Year Itch

Perhaps the worst kept secret since the Cambodian invasion last year was revealed when Tricia Nixon and her seven year beau, Edward Cox announced they will marry in the White House on June 5th.

It is speculated that the wedding will be a small, family-like gathering of several thousand admirers. "We want to keep this as intimate as possible under the circumstances," adds Tricia. An "intimate" gathering at the White House remains to be seen.

Rep. Hale Boggs

Republicans Lose Again

Howard Cosell may be unaware of it, but he missed out on the shortest fight since the second Ali-Liston bout. Former Congressman Thomas Mitchell scored a one-punch-knockout victory over Rep. Hale Boggs at a recent Washington dinner party. The fracas was caused by Bogg's criticism of President Nixon and Attorney General John Mitchell.

Dr. Roberta Fenlon

Sex No Problem

For the first time a woman will hold the top spot in a state medical society. The tradition-breaker who overcame sexual discrimination is Dr. Roberta Fenlon, 59, an internal medicine specialist who is a member of the University of California faculty.

She take sover as president of California Medical Society which claims 25,000 members.

Her father, a physician, once said, "No daughter of mine is going to medical school."

Dr. Roberta Fenlon worked her way through school and says she has never encountered sexual discrimination by her male colleagues ... with the exception of her father who never heard of women's lib.

Whitney M. Young

IN MEMORIAM

Whitney Young, President of the Urban League, and a close friend of the late Martin Luther King, died while he was visiting Africa. Young was considered as a spokesman for the more moderate wing of the civil rights movement. His funeral, held in a cemetery outside of his hometown of Lexington, Kentucky was attended by many mourners, including President Nixon.

Thomas E. Dewey

Teen Vote

Following passage by the Senate the constitutional amendment by State Senator George Moscone, Democrat of San Francisco, was sent to the California Assembly for action to determine if the 18-year-old vote measure goes on the June, 1972 primary election ballot.

In addition to giving 18-year-olds the vote in all state and local elections, the proposal reduces residency requirements and wipes out literacy tests.

Goin' Down the Road is Smash Success

Want to see a movie about the international jet set? Done in the usual grandiose Hollywood style? Better skip "Goin' Down The Road." It is a sympathetic look at the problems many working people face today. Although made about Canadians, it is a universal theme.

It's about two hillbillies who take off for the big city to escape the dull low-paying jobs of the canneries. Instead, they find dull, low-paying jobs in a bottling factory.

The two men are contrasted. Joey (Paul Bradley) is a dull-witted slob whose idea of success is a color TV and a six-pack icing in the refrigerator. Pete (Doug McGrath) wants something better or more meaningful out of life than stacking soda bottles.

The end is foreshadowed when Joey's girl Betty (Jayne Eastwood) gets pregnant. He marries her against Pete's advice.

NEW MOVIE OPENS — "Goin' Down The Road" features (from left) Doug McGrath, Paul Bradley, and Jayne Eastman. The film is at the Vogue.

Although the couple briefly live in a hi-rise with expensive furniture, on time of course, they are soon back in a one and a half room dump with Pete. Both men had been laid off their jobs.

Instead of banding together with other unemployed people, they see their predicament as their personal failures. They attack each other, rather than the system; and finally resort to petty thievery to put food on the table.

Doug McGrath and Paul Bradley are convincing as the derelicts they portray. Director Shibib achieves their believability by making them ordinary people and by avoiding improbable situations. Shebib says, "I like to see a change in the audiences (attitude), as well as a change in my characters. This is done well too. The two hicks seem to be trapped in a time tunnel of the 1950's and because of their ignorance, it is difficult to identify with them. They appear to be too apathetic to be worthy of redemption, but as their characters are developed and they try to raise their social position, they fail miserably. Not succeeding in their aspirations, we see they are struggling against the greatest fear of all men: failure.

The film is playing at the Vogue theater. Although it offers no real solution to the problems of millions of working people, it is worth seeing.

by Brongel & Frankel

the Guardsman Sports

Warriors Hide Guard in Womens Gym

Could it be? Was it possible? Yes! It was. Here, right outside of CCSF women's gymnasium. Throwing and batting a ball just like a — well! — just like a man.

For Wanda Aitch, City College Womens PE instructor, such daily stunts of athletic excellence are commonplace.

One might say it all began twenty-five years ago for Wanda in Washington, Mo., her birthplace. At the early age of six, her baseball skills developed with the aid of a very natural source. Wanda's father, Clifford D. Aitch, had been a semi-pro baseball player for a number of years.

Wanda doesn't hesitate to add that "mother made a reasonable contribution toward my athletic career."

Ardent fans of womens softball in northern California know as much about Wanda's diamond history as do those San Franciscans who follow the day-to-day accomplishments of such names as Willie Mays, Juan Marichal, et al.

As catcher for the Redwood City Jets in the Golden State League, W[illegible] a last year swung a mace with such potency that she authored a season batting average of .532. Such stickwork — as well as superior all-around backstopping — earned Wanda the catcher's berth on the Northern California All Star Team of 1968-69-70.

If all of this isn't enough, then please take note that Wanda plays a very smart guard position on the San Francisco Warriors womens basketball team.

Wanda Aitch is a starting guard for the Warriors Womens Basketball team.

A graduate of Lincoln University, Jefferson, Mo., Wanda participated in softball, basketball and volleyball.

Wanda's very happy at CCSF — "a school with an excellent PE program." When asked about what lies ahead as an active softball player, Wanda said, "I'll play until either my arms or legs give out — or both."

That'll be the day.

Shields Defies the Wind

Competing under cold, blustery conditions, City College dropped a close track meet to San Jose C.C. March 19th on the winners field. The final score was 70½ to 65½ with the mile relay determining the thin margin of victory for San Jose.

Outstanding performers for City were Larry Shields with a double victory in the 100 and 220 yard dashes. Frank Oross with a double victory in the shot and discus and Derrick Williams with a win in the Long Jump, second in the Triple Jump and a third in both the 100 and 220.

Coach Louis Vasquez, CCSF track coach, was pleased with progress in the High Jump and noted the recent addition of Bill Metcalf and Ron Dale from the basketball squad will be a boost for City in that event. Coach Vasquez believes the advent of warmer weather will improve the teams performance.

Larry Shields winning the 100 yd. dash, displays the "Look of Love."

For weekday track meets: Field events begin at 2 P.M., running at 3 P.M.

Thursday	Mar. 25	2 P.M.	Away CSM
Saturday	Apr. 3		Away DVC
Saturday	Apr. 10	11 A.M.	Home Foothill
Friday	Apr. 16	2 P.M.	Away DVC
Tues.	Apr. 20	2 P.M.	Away Modesto
Saturday	Apr. 24	11 A.M.	Away San Jose
Wed.	Apr. 28	2 P.M.	Away San Jose
Friday	Apr. 30	2 P.M.	Away Fresno
Fri.-Sat.	May 7-8		Away Modesto
Fri.	May 14	2 P.M.	Away Modesto
Sat.	May 22

The Diamond Nine

By Jim Parson

The City College Spikers are on the move. Coach Ernie Domecus has high hopes this season.

In the 1970 race for the bunting, the Rams posted an 11-10 record that earned them a fourth place in first division finish.

Tentative starting lineup (by field position) for CCSF: Ray Spediacci, 1b (if not slated for slab duty); Dan Taylor, 2b; Craign Cohen (Galileo), ss; John Trent (Lowell), 3b; Dan Ferretti (Lincoln), lf; Frank Alcaraz (Balboa), rf; Red Ramos, cf; and Frank O'Leary (Riordan), c.

The services of outfielder Lloyd Robinson, second year latterman, are lost to the team indefinitely as the result of damaged right knee ligaments incurred during sliding drills. Robinson suffered the injury during the first week of practice and the cast he now wears on his right leg should come off in about another week.

First year outfielder Steve Arsenault (Riordan) also hobbles due to torn ligaments in his right knee. He injured himself in playground activities several months prior to the start of regular practice. Surgery was performed about a month and a half ago and just recently the cast was removed. His early return to active duty is not forseeable.

Intermural Boom

Director of AMS Intermural Sports Program, Chris Davis, anticipates an excellent showing in the intermural basketball program. Though time consuming, the final paper work has ended. All that remains is the actual competition which at times is heated but clean. There are 10 teams in the league. The variety in names is quite evident of the interested groups participating.

1. Hotel and Rest.
2. Young Rebels
3. Guess Who
4. New Generation
5. American Armadilloes
6. Young Lions
7. Six-Pac
8. The Lions
9. Drop-Outs
10. Show Stopper

Christ Davis is responsible and Director of AMS Intermural Sports.

The Executioner

By Jack Hansen

Coach Domecus was furious when Coach Vasquez's name appeared under his picture in the last issue of The Guardsman Sports page. "Coach Vasquez does give opportunity" was the caption. Rather ironic but still reassuring.

Recently elected to the All Golden Gate Conference Team Billy Metcalf and Larry Haren are to be four million dollar babies. Tax Bureau corrected us though; it will only be 250,000 after deductions.

Bill Metcalf worth 2 million?

Derrich Williams has been given a flying license by TWA. His next flight will be tomorrow when San Jose City College clears the runway.

Outfielder Lloyd Robinson, second year letterman, who recently incurred damage to his right knee was seen chasing 36-22-36. Jim Daly was not too far off his target.

Tom Lai was scouted for the new musical Fiddler on the Roof.

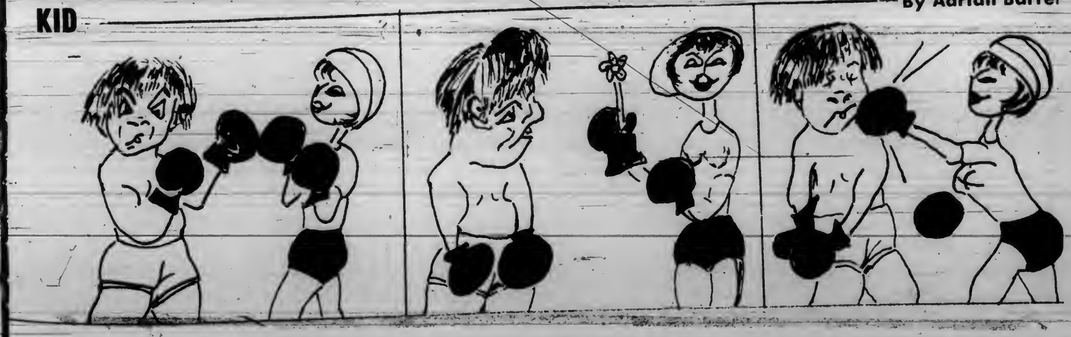
The Eighteenth Hole

By Jack Hansen

"Consistency is the challenge — ability is not the question," replied Coach Klemmer in reference to his golf team. "It's a freshman team with excellent potential."

Coach Klemmer was speaking about Berry Gevertz, the medalist and low scorer of the team. Mike Kerns, Joe Doyle, Dan Toomey, Kirk Naismith, and Steuard Diamond.

All the players are capable of shooting par at Sharp's Park, which is a 72 even par course. Recently in competition Mike Kerns shot even par at Sharp's Park. Dan Toomey and Steuard Diamond are also members of the elite group.



With the season progressing at a rapid pace the greens have been conquered by CCSF's golfer. Their present record is 8-2, including practice games, with 14 games remaining before the Golden Gate Conference Tournament.

Tomorrow the light-handed putters take on Merritt at Lake Chabot. Tee-off time is 1:00 pm. Everyone is welcome.

One must remember that the victory, title, and championship rest upon placing a 1" ball into a 3" cup on the eighteenth-green. Sounds easy doesn't it? Try it sometime using an iron or putter — believe me; it isn't easy.

By Adrian Barrel

KID

Photographic Impressions

by Bob Tully

Hands of time hold me for I have not the power to hold you.

It came from behind the clouds with orders not written or orally spoken but put in the mind of them all through vibrations of wind.

the colors of all humanity looked each other in the eyes shivered once or twice put their guns down disrobed of the green of military yesses to become naked to God's golden tresses and walked away from the war.

I need to want; I want a need; but life's fulfillments are staid.

Have you ever been under the skin of a leaf?
You didn't look the same
did you?

Verse by Tina Brant

Synanon Life Style America's Only Hope For The Future

By Dave Boitano

"Synanon and Education" was the topic of a lecture given in the little theater during College Hour last week by two members of the organization originally formed to combat drug addiction.

The two guest lecturers were Ted Hoffman and Charlotte Mort; both former addicts and now field workers for Synanon. The lecture was called, in words of its sponsor Mr. Raymond Early, "to inform students here at City College about Synanon and the new Synanon building now located here in San Francisco." (The building is an old paint factory formerly belonging to the Dutch Boy Paint Co.)

The lecture began with Hoffman talking about the Synanon organization, its present and future plans. "Synanon is an organization which began around five years ago to help drug addicts. Since then our program has expanded into helping people with many other problems, such as alcoholism.

"We now have five centers or houses where members of Synanon can live and play the Synanon game. (A type of group therapy session in which members expose and resolve personal problems through argument.) "These houses are located in places like Santa Monica, Oakland, San Francisco, and we even have a 1500 acre ranch in Marin County," Hoffman said.

Ted Hoffman

He continued to talk about how he had come to Synanon and how it had helped him. "I began using drugs when I was a freshman in college, and by the time I was a senior, I had become an addict. For a long time I fooled around and worked part time. Finally, when I had nearly destroyed myself on drugs, I met the people at Synanon. Through the program, I qas able to straighten myself out and get a chance for a substantial life."

Miss Mort told a similar story of how she and her husband, while both addicted to heroin, were arrested and how a judge suggested they try Synanon. "At first I balked at the idea of living at a Synanon house," she said. "I considered the idea to be de-humanizing. Yet, after I started living at Synanon, I found the atmosphere to be quite comfortable and positive."

Both she and Hoffman continued to refer to what they called "the Synanon life style." We like to think of our life style as reflecting the Synanon game," Hoffman said. "It is communal, just as our ranch in Marin County is a commune. In the Synanon game, we like to confront each other honestly, just as we like to confront life honestly."

He described the Synanon life style as being "America's only hope for the future." When asked by a member of the audience what he meant, he said, "People in this country today are taking a lot of drugs. All of you probably have friends that take drugs, and some may even be addicted. We cannot continue on this path as a country if we are to survive, and Synanon can help us survive."

Requirement Causes Row Over Phillipino Eligibility

By Kay Van

An English 1A requirement which was to be fulfilled before eligibility for ethnic study courses has caused a furor among Philipino Students who pre-registered for Philipino 1.

During the second week of school, primarily devoted to adding or dropping classes, the administration pulled eight of the twenty-two students out of the Philipino 1 class for failing to have the requirements. These eight students were informed of the ineligibility on the last day for adding classes.

Alex France, an outstanding as well as an important representative member of the Philipino Club, contended, "The requirement for eligibility was waived last semester. I don't know why they didn't do the same this time. But the administration waited until the last day to decide to pull the students out, which made it difficult to replace other classes in its place."

A puzzling question on the matter was whether poor counseling or some other reason was responsible for the mix-up. Unhappy students, backed by student and teacher representation, contested the administration on this problem further. A consisteney of meetings and further confrontations arose, but no significant equilibrium was established.

Alex France

"There was a misunderstanding among the students," says Dean Billwiller, head of the foreign language department. "I don't think the counselors were at fault for this mishap. But sometimes, we all make mistakes . . . We tried to help the students by setting up another section of Philippino languages such as Philippino 10, which is transferrable to Berkeley." Billwiller continued, "Anyway, most of the students are in their second semester, so they should have known they were ineligible."

"At this stage, it's a toss up," Alex France concludes. "Philippino 10 is only 2 units and isn't transferrable . . . it's worthless."

Future editorial comments and elaboartions on this problem will be in the next issue of the Philippino club newspaper, edited by Alex France.

Yasuda Dismissal Denied

(Continued from page 1

"There will always be people who will find fault in class" — a sentiment later expressed by Buttimer when he said: "No teacher gets a 100% favorable reaction, and you cannot qualify reaction."

On Friday, March 5, 1971, Morton called a meeting of the Hiring and Evaluation Committee of the Psychology department. Those present were: Dr. Morton, Mrs. Eleanor Fahle, Dr. Ralph Granneberg, Mr. Robert Messman and Dr. Lester Tarnopol. All are tenured faculty. (After a probationary appointment of three years, staff are granted tenure.) "It is a standard practice to evaluate before tenure. Once tenured, faculty are not evaluated unless there is negative feedback," said Buttimer.

"The only purpose I had in calling the committee together was to have Yasuda discuss with his peers his language and the effect it has on his students, to comment on it and give his rationale, said Morton.

Replying to whether he accepted Yasuda's rationale Morton said: "I accept it in part. Mr. Yasuda doesn't deny using the words. My own feeling is perhaps the same points can be gotten across without necessarily using these words. I don't feel it'smpossible or should be, for an instructor to be concerned about language in some degree, without him feeling that he is being censored.

I would be the last one to stifle innovations and approaches. Mr. Yasuda is a highly popular instructor and his classes are in great demand.

Dr. Buttimer's feelings on the use of Yasuda's language in the classroom is: "Some students have a negative reaction while others feel that it increases effectiveness of the presentation."

Since the complaints, no member of the Psychology faculty nor Buttimer has sat in on a Yasuda class to check out allegations and make their own judgements.

According to Morton, "This method and the language was not used "when he sat in during Yasuda's probationary period.

Yasuda claims: "I have not changed my teaching since the day I began in regard to usage of words."

Following the March 5 meeting, a second meeting took place, Monday, March 8, at which all but Dr. Tarnopol attended. At this meeting three faculty members: Fahle, Granneberg and Messman, recommended that Yasuda be dismissed and a statement be issued to this effect. Tarnopol subsequently indicated he would not sign such a statement and Morton said he could not and would not. On March 9, such a statement was sent to Dr. Buttimer.

The result is that Yasuda remains.

Yasuda declares: "I am not putting down the complaining students, they are not the problem, it is the staff. Can they sit and listen at one of my classes objectively? A lot of the problem is the differences in philosophies, techniques and interpretation. Must I do it your way to be your friend?"

He added, "My classes are open, visitors are welcome (with or without taperecorders)."

Accepting that it is an administrative issue and that faculty have no decision making power Messman feels: "The question is whether academic freedom is being infringed upon or whether Yasuda is infringing upon academic freedom."

A current Yasuda Psychology I student, Bob Kahn, said: "Most teachers tend to talk over students' heads using $85 words, beating about the bush and therefore they lose students' interest and finally the students themselves. Yasuda is a fantastic cat."

An interesting comment from Kahn, who is a member of the AS approved Catholic Newman Club: "They attempt to spread the word of Christ!"

Lew Students Vie With Cultural Club Accusations

The Chinese Cultural Club submitted a memo to Dr. Harry Buttimer on March 2, claiming that Gordon Lew, Chairman of the Chinese Department at City College, was unsatisfactory in that role.

Among the accusations made by the club, one of the three Chinese groups on campus, were:

- That he doesn't speak fluent Mandarin;
- he doesn't write Chinese fluently;
- his culture courses are not deep enough;
- he has too many outside interests;
- his credential in music is insufficient.

CCC noted that they had 650 members in two consecutive semesters representing 20% of the Chinese students here.

After Lew stepped down from the position due to the criticisms, many of his students have responded favorably toward him.

A letter presented to Buttimer on March 12 from the "Students of Gordon Lew," made clear their dissatisfaction with the accusations.

The students labeled the attack on Lew as one "with no sign of coherent thought, of logic, or of any sort of intellectual maturity."

They contended that all of CCC's statements are "easily disproved, not germane or both."

A two page report, entitled "Allegations Concerning Mr. Lew, and the Truth," listed each accusation and attempted to disprove each.

The student questioned the CCC claims about using their 20 percent membership as basis for speaking out as representatives. The report queried as to the feeling of the remaining 80 percent of Chinese at City.

War Rally Here April 2

The City College Student Mobilization Committee announced plans for a massive anti-war rally here Friday April 2, at 11 a.m., in commemoration of the assassination of Martin Luther King.

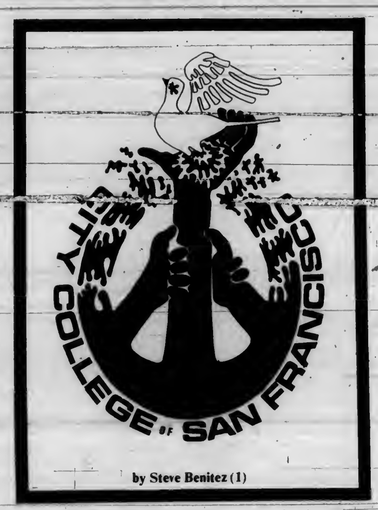
Guest speakers at the rally will include instructor Paul Hewitt, Student Body President Tom Lai, UC Riverside BSU member Madeline Reel, Third-World Task Force member Miguel Pendes, West Coast SMC member Howard Wallice, and City College SMC organizer John Goebels. A skit will be put on by students from the Drama Department.

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 6
April 1, 1971

Campus Seal Contest



College Votes In New Seal

by Roger Gee (2)

by Michael Yeung (4)

by Steve Benitez (1)

by Moses Thrasher (3)

by Don Campagnie (5)

A symbolistic design by Steve Benitez was voted in by students as the new official seal of City College of San Francisco.

The voting took place during Spring 1971 registration, with 1006 ballots cast.

Benitez's entry received 1052 points, overcoming Roger Gee (822), Moses Thrasher (713), Michael Yeung (607), and Don Campagna (563), among fifteen top-ranking entries.

Points were determined by giving each voter three choices. Their first choices were allotted three points, second choices two points, and third choices one point. Benitez is the recipient of a $50 award for his entry.

Other contestants with the number of votes listed were as follows: Jack Leo (494), unknown (385), the original seal (111), Timothy Thompson (108), Darryl Pilcher (102), Betty Franks (98), Judy Sharpe (77), Jack Hansen (60), Betty Franks (57), and M. Actamirano (22).

Course Evaluation Underway

The Constructive Program for Course Evaluation committee is planning to publish a supplement to the college catalogue, designed to match up teachers, students, and courses.

CPCE notes that the major problem students have is in signing up for a course or teacher that isn't suitable. Through the program teachers should receive a useful evaluation of their performance with constructive suggestions for improving their methods.

The CPCE is hoping to recruit one evaluation volunteer for each class and have three or four orientation meetings to provide methods for collecting the information needed.

Those interested are urged to come to B-5 before April 2.

Council Representatives to Meet in Sacramento Soon

First business at Student Council March 22 was President Tom Lai's veto on the parking of bikes downstairs in the student lounge. Lai listed eight reasons why the bikes shouldn't be allowed in the Student Lounge. Bike Club President Richard Jesse and others hassled over these reasons for some time, until a motion to override Lai's veto was made by Margie Gunnell. Lai's veto was upheld by a vote of seven for and six against, with two abstentions. The bikes will once again go outside on the patio.

The second issue was to choose two delegates for the 51st State Conference in Sacramento on April 19, 20, and 21. They will have a chance to meet assemblymen, state senators, and representatives. Chosen to attend were Bonnie Solomon and Tat Ming Ko, who will accompany Tom Lai and Martin Poon.

In other action, the council chose students Harry Little and Bob Kahn to serve on the Guardsman Review Board, which had been suggested by Bonnie Solomon. In addition, the Chinese Studies subcommittee's request for $250 was approved by a vote of nine for and one against, with no abstentions.

Kapiolani Seven Studies City College Government

A group of seven students from Kapiolani Community College visited the City College campus recently.

These Hawaiian students represented an interesting cross section of the people involved in their campus government.

The Kapiolani seven, received funds from their student government so that they could survey the various colleges and universities in the San Francisco and other West Coast areas.

They are trying to gather new methods and ideas to relate to their own student government when they get back to their Honolulu campus.

Steve Takahashi and Clifford Alika, both liberal arts majors, feel that colleges can be improved by the exchange of ideas.

Steve feels that racial problems in Hawaii are not as serious as those on the mainland. However, there are many distinctions between the various ethnic groups on the island state.

The group also felt that many students are making a definite move to recapture their individual ethnic identities.

Clifford said that he is turned off to the rustle and bustle of city living. "People don't seem to care in the city, it's different in Hawaii."

The group feels there is a serious need to look at whether or not student governments are important. They want to find out if student governments really get things done.

Takahashi said that in Hawaii students involved in government courses actually work in the legislature. He said "We feel that we can get real things done working within the present social framework, rather than making a lot of noise, like some people do.

He also said that although it was thought that the Students for a Democratic Society was dying on their campuses, they recently had two school buildings burned down in suspected SDS attacks.

The students, Elena Javinar, Puha Alohanani, Alika, Simeon Ramos, Takahashi, Mildred Villanueva and Nilton Yoshimoto stayed at a downtown hotel.

Tom Lai, Associated Student Body President, acted as a guide for the group on the campus. Tom hopes that members of the student government will soon be able to return the visit.

GUARDSMAN FREE SPEECH

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

Spring is Nature's Miracle -And So Is the Arboretum

Once again the refreshing essence of Spring surrounds us. The air is smogless and almost crisp.

Each new morning brings the rise of a life-giving sun. When its Spring, in San Francisco, the sun seems to shine more and its warmth is especially welcome.

The trees take on their new shapes and birds sing in them throughout most of the day. Life is abounding.

If you really want to enjoy this beautiful season a walk through golden Gate Park is true elation. The beautiful plants and flowers in the Arboretum take on a new meaning. Each one of them seems to be competing with another to captivate your attention. They are like a beautiful family posed together inviting you to join them.

If the confinement of this botanical garden is not for you, there are many beautiful meadows and forests to wander through and absorb. The park is an endless maze of life, it brings out "natural love" and makes you feel that you are part of life and love.

People wandering through the park seem to be happy and hold friendly smiles as they pass you by.

It is a good time to ride your bicycle, to take your family for a short hike, or to just stroll along one of the quiet little paths with someone that you love.

Spring has a radiance all its own, it has long been romaticized and idealized, yet its vibrance and rejuvenating aura seems to repeat itself with the same exuberance every year.

It is a time when the old feel young again, even the sick feel healthier. Everyone feels the need to shed his walls and to go out side again.

The spirit and vibrational effect of the season has been known to work wonders on the dispositions and attitudes of people.

Not only does Spring draw the recluse outside but it instills confidence in the shy and brings hope to the hopeless.

The inner feelings of peace that surround each waking moment are glorious to behold. Thank God for the miracle of Spring.

From A Birds-eye View

ARTIST DEPICTS OIL SPILL – Michael Nastari, a Guardsman staff artist, sketched this impression of a lonely bird facing the perilous oil spill at San Francisco's Ocean Beach.

The Selling of CBS

By Joe Konte

(The CBS documentary, "The Selling of the Pentagon," was met harshly by Agnew and the defense department. I wonder what would happen if the tables were turned?)

A book written by Melvin Laird, US Secretary of Defense, called "The Selling of CBS," has created an outrage from the national network.

CBS president Richard Salant denounced the literary work as "a subtle but vicious broadside against the nations TV watchers' establishment."

The book, published by Pentagon Incorporated, was about the publicity and public relations work carried out by CBS officials.

Three of Laird's principal critics from CBS, including Salant, Ed Sullivan, and Lassie, made their views known at a press conference yesterday at the Pentagon.

Salant called the book "propagandistic manipulation," and demanded that his comments be placed in their entirety on the conclusion of page 293.

Sullivan, standing erectly on top of a chair, his arms folded across his chest, declared, "There's been a really big mistake in this book. Here tonight, at this press conference, we have for you out there a really special answer to your book".

Just before he stepped off the chair, Sullivan waved one hand, and shouted, "Out there tonight, seated in the middle of all the reporters, is our very own David Frost. Well, c'mon now, let's really hear it for him". David nodded his head, and repeatedly said, "Marvelous."

Pentagon reporter John Wayne then stood up, and politely removed his green beret, placing it on the table next to the bayonet. "I just wanna ask Lassie why he felt the book was unfair," the Duke stumbled. "Well, c'mon, ya little doggie, speak."

The angered CBS spokesman responded ruffsly to the question.

"I was quoted out of context," Lassie barked, "so that I appeared to be speaking on my own while I was really reading a quote from human producers."

The veteran television actor used the human's statement to support a CBS contention that if "Green Acres" goes off the air, Eva Gabor will cease to exist.

Spiro Agnew, whose company published the book, said none of the critics "have refuted the essential accuracy of the Pentagon piece on CBS." Agnew claimed that Laird's book was part of "the people's right to know."

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

. . . and I intend to voice further disapproval of this administration's present Asian rationale. Mr. Nixon's argument that Johnson got us in over our heads is ludicrous. He should realize that Vietnam presents a sink or swim political situation as far as 1972 is concerned. As for my prospects in 1976, I'll cross that bridge when I come to it.

Ted Kennedy

. . . Vietnam? Bring all the boys home now!

Wayne Newton

Then we'll tell all our brothers and sisters about the massive shoot-out strategy which is underway for next spring. After all the pigs are wasted and we've trashed the White House, we'll begin plans for the revolution. This won't be possible unless all brothers and sisters unite and excape from their apathy. I only wish that I could be there to lead them, but my 1971 horoscope says that I should "avoid confrontation" at all costs.

Eldridge Cleaver

Dear Diary,

Someday, maybe everyone will realize that there is a solution to all the world's problems. I think if everyone just got together and rapped with one another and made love in the streets and smoked dope and traded colored jelly-beans everything would turn out o.k. for almost everyone.

Gene McCarthy

Besides, all those critics back home aren't aware of certain advantages involved in our Cambodian and Laotian involvements. The grass IS better on the other side of the hill.

P.F.C. Milton Morlids

Dear Diary,

The rock festival lived up to its promise of five days of peace and love except for thirteen people who were brutally murdered by the guards, two fans who suffocated in their waterproof sleeping bag, one girl who lost an eye from a flying roach-holder, seven infants who were accidentally stepped on by their parents, one boy who suffered a pitfall in a Sani-Fest portable toilet, innumerable bad drug trips, seventeen girls who perished from roadside abortions and several suicides. It was really groovy!

Bill Graham

. . . what is Richard Nixon hiding between his cheeks? Preparation-H, as far as I can determine.

George McGovern

. . . such as the good results seen in last year's lettuce boycotts. If enough pressure is applied, we'll hit the California prune growers with the hardest labored movement they've ever experienced.

Caesar Chavez

To Help Society

By Darrell Frick

There is no perfect society. A perfect society may exist in theory, but not in actuality. Society is based on human relationships motivated by greed, envy, fleeting joy, the pursuit of power and so on. The mind is a product of society, of the culture in which it has been brought up in; and as society is always in a state of corruption, always destroying itself from within, a mind that continues to be influenced by society must also be in a state of corruption or deterioration.

To put a civilized coating on violence through the double-talk of ideals, is not to bring violence to an end.

To educate a student to conform to society is only to encourage in him (her) the deteriorating urge to be secure, to climb the ladder of success, to become somebody, gain recognition--this is the very substance of our degenerating social structures and to be a part of it is to deteriorate, also.

Change within the pattern is no change at all; it is mere modification, reformation.

Only by breaking away from the social pattern without building another can you "help" society.

Look and be simple.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of San Francisco City College of S.F. as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte
EDITORIALS Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE Ed Hartzler
PHOTOGRAPHY Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, David Boitano, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Neil Seippel, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Personality of the Week

CCSF student Virginia Woodard can't deny that she is the "short dummy" in her family.4She does indeed have a hair-above-mediocre I.Q. of 119, while her two sisters boast of 145 and 178 (above-average and genius, respectively).

At 5 feet 8 inches tall, Virginia casts a shadow several inches shorter than her 5 foot 10 inch and 6 foot 1 inch sisters and 5 foot 11 inch mother. As punishment for being a Pygmy among Watusis, and because Montgomery Ward didn't make extra-long sizes in days of yore, Virginia learned to sew all her family's clothes at age 11.

Tired of playing family seamstress, Virginia quit high school at 17 to marry print shop employee Roy Woodard. She managed to sandwich in her diploma between the births of her three children, now teenagers Nita, 17, Richard, 15, and Ruth, 13.

After working as a bookkeeper days and accumulating credits at night school for nine years, Virginia enrolled in college as a full-time student.

How does her husband feel about her returning to school and the attendant changes in the family life style? "He doesn't mind. He's used to it by now." Nor does Roy feel emasculated by his wife's ambition. Virginia smiles: "He has one of those rare gifts; he can accept people for what they are and not try to change them."

In her spare time, Virginia works on a volunteer basis with retarded children and teenagers from eight to 20 years of age. Sometimes she will take them into her home singly and teach them sewing, ceramics, denominations of currency, and the like.

Virginia plans to major jointly in psychology and teaching, to fulfill her desire to help mentally retarded persons. Her main interest is to enable the entire family to adjust to the situation, and not just the retarded member.

She feels that parents tend to become overly protective and that, as a result, some children are emotionally disturbed as well as mentally retarded.

Virginia speaks with some degree of experience and authority on this subject. Her youngest child, Ruthie, is "retarded but well adjusted."

By Barbara Ellett

Child Care Center Opens

The Child Care Center of City College of San Francisco will be open within two weeks. Students are welcome to attend the opening ceremonies, and donations of educational toys are appreciated. The center has been given a bungalow on campus. The facility includes office space, kitchen area, new bathrooms and storage area. The play area in front of the bungalow will be fenced in.

Funds for the center were provided by various groups; the Student Counil put up $5,900, the Rummage Sale held during the fall semester of 1970 brought in $1,400, and the CCSF Administration paid the costs of refurbishing the facility.

The purpose of the center is to provide adequate and free on-campus care for the children of parents attending classes at City College. The program provides for 20 children to any given hour, and one adult to every four children ages two to five. The center will be open daily from 7:45 to 4:45 pm. 50 children have already been enrolled in the program; they were selected on the basis of need and first-come, first serve. No meals will be served but snacks will be provided, and insurance fees will be taken out of the budget. Volunteers who will work with the children have been selected, and will start training next week.

The advisory committee will include parents, Administration, and consultants in preschool education.

Film that has a Coat of Satire

Many films recently have dealt with the wave of violence in our society. Jules Feiffer's screenplay, LITTLE MURDERS, treats the madness in our country with biting humor that satirizes everything from sex to murder. The emphasis in this tragic comedy is on violence.

Alan Arkin, in his first attempt at directing, falls short (especially in his own role as a paranoid detective). He overacts so much, it would be a relief if his part were entirely cut out. But Eliott Gould, as the unhappy Alfred Chamberlain and Marsha Rodd, as the aggressive bachelor girl, and Patsy Newquist, handle their parts with great credibility. The only inconceivable thing in their characters is their ability to endure abuse for as long as they do.

Centering around Patsy is a frenzied attempt to "reach" Alfred, a nonfeeling, totally apathetic misfit. The film is a succession of events, that despite Patsy's efforts, alienate Alfred until finally he becomes part of the evil society he was once so extremely indifferent to.

Patsy first meets Alfred in his introverted state and she is shocked at his callousness towards life. She scolds him for his insensibility and shows him how much "fun" life can be; Alfred remains unmoved. Quickly, Patsy draws Alfred into her life; realizes that she loves him; takes him home to meet her parents and then coerces him into marriage. Even after marriage Patsy is still frustrated with Alfred and is about to give up hope when he finally expresses his emotion.

But, keeping within the violent nature of the film, Patsy is brutally and senselessly murdered in Alfred's arms. Alfred then wanters in a coma-like state to Patsy's family. They help him release aggression on the world in ahumorous and pathetic episode of urban warfare. In the end, Alfred can finally feel. Grotesquely, his emotional happiness depends upon how many human lives he can destroy.

Covering societies' cruelty with a thick coat of satire makes LITTLE MURDERS an even more exceptional film. Though we laugh at much of the action, in the end we realize the film is a commentary on paranoia and hatred existing today.

Body and Soul

THE GRACE OF GOD

by Tina Brant

A friend told me the other day he is on a mucas-free diet, eats little or no protein, goes out in lifty degree weather in short sleeves and feels fantastic. I was noticing his six foot four inch, 125 pound body. But he was smiling so I believed him.

Some can, most cannot. I cannot and probably you cannot.

I love you, brothers and sisters, and I love the cow and the pig. It would be so nice to see us all healthy with the joy buzzing our minds, and smiling ear to ear, letting each other live.

God told us in Genesis 1:29 that he gave us certain things for food and in Exodus, he told us "Thou shalt not kill."

Kill? You don't kill the meat that sits on the counter. But someone does; and if we didn't eat them, we could save them. For God's sake, THERE'S ENOUGH KILLING!

We must turn to other foods to get our protein in order to keep our cells functioning normally and in order to maintain digestion.

Lack of protein causes low blood pressure, anemia, and the body's inability to produce the enzymes necessary for the breakdown of foods into energy.

When the amount of protein is adequate our bodies have built up a high resistance to disease and infections.

Without meat we get our protein from eggs, milk, buttermilk, yogurt, powered milk, cheese, soybeans, and powdered yeast. Nuts, beans, peas, and grains are fair sources.

We must study the amino acids and their importance. We must understand the beauty of health as nature intended us to understand it. And we must love nature as she loves us; she gives us the chicken, we feed the chicken, the chicken feeds us; she gives us the cow, the cow nourishes us as we do the cow; she gives us herbs and rain and fresh vegetables and rain and fruit and rain.

I saw a girl on campus with a heavy coat buttoned around her. She came out of the Science Building as I entered. She said, 'Brrrrr, it's cold." I, in a light weight shawl, didn't even notice the coldness. It has been a long time since I watched meat bleed in the skillet, and I question the sensitivity of those who can. They owe God an apology for doubting Nature's abilities.

•Geological Hazards Examined•

Professor Raymond Pestrong, Department Chairman of Geology at San Francisco State College, recently hosted "Geological Hazards of the Bay Area," a KQED series which examined some of the geological pitfalls behind the physical beauty of San Francisco and the Bay Area.

According to Pestrong, there are a number of mishaps that occur due to shifts in Bay Area faults, after effects of potential tremors and building constriction on soft mud areas.

"If an earthquake were to occur, let's say, in mid-afternoon, with the epicenter in San Francisco, and assuming that it would have the magnitude of the 1906 earthquake (it was 8.4 on the Richter scale, 700 times as great as the recent Los Angeles quake which was registered as 6.5), the most eminent possible danger would be the shattering of windows and the facings from the sides of buildings, notably the skyscrapers, falling on the panicking crowds below," explained Pestrong.

Tsunamis (soo-na-mees), seismic seawaves which are caused by earthquakes, do pose a danger, but San Francisco has a steep offshore area and chances are that the waves would exhaust themselves before they reached the shore.

"The freeway overpasses would also be marked for danger. They could collapse because of the quality of the soil which supports their foundations," Pestrong said.

Pestrong surveys earthquake torn house

There are several faults which pass through San Francisco and the Bay Area. The most notable of these, the San Andreas Fault, does not pass through San Francisco. Two others, the City College and San Bruno Faults, are said to be inactive at this time.

"The San Andreas Fault has been in motion for more than 100,000 years and it is not about to stop moving now," said Pestrong. "this area will definitely have another earthquake, but whether it will take place within the next five days or fifty years is indeterminable."

What causes faults to stir in a process called "slow creep." As geological stresses build, the fault breaks. Small quakes occasionally occur and relieve the fault stress, but in the Bay Area, the San Andreas has not moved since 1957. This is one of the reasons why geologists are expecting a major tremor when the fault does finally stir.

A section of the BART system passes through the Hayward Fault in the East Bay and Oakland Hills. The bay tube is designed so that it has couplings on either side of it. If the Hayward fault were to shift, the couplingswould serve as a buffer so that the tube could stand the movements. The tube is not built through bay mud, but is instead a "flowing tube."

"There is no such thing as 'earthquake proof' ", said Pestrong, "engineers can design structures to resist tremors and structures can be reinforced but no building can be really safe from a major quake."

Presently, the Department of Housing and Urban Development is working in conjunction with the United States Geological Survey to point out various geological hazards to professional men as well as to the general public.

"The motion to build high-rise structures on the waterfront was defeated, supposedly because the buildings would obstruct the view. I'm glad it was defeated because the ground in that area is composed of bay mud.

Guardsman Sports

Swim Team Wins First Victory In Five Years

"All around team effort, that's what made Citys Swim Team win its first meet in five years," stated Mr. Decker, coach of the Rams swim team, who beat Laney 58-50 last Friday. People like Fred Doone and Roger Aymard volunteered to swim and dive in events they had never competed in — both took first in these events: Aymard in the 500 yd freestyle and Doone in the 3 meter diving.

Dennis Glass seemed to take the show though, winning three individual events. Dennis now holds four school records: 1000 yd Freestyle, 500 yd Freestyle, 200 yd Butterfly, and the 200 yd Breathstroke. The 1 meter diving competition was won by City's own Peter Affolter and another first place was taken in the 400 yd medally relay. The members of the relay team are Les Carr, John Astor, Bill Clark, and Len Lynch.

"The team wanted this win as bad as anyone," Coach Decker stated with a grin. It was an outstanding showing for the Rams and, possibly, the swim team might be on the warpath. If such individual competitiveness remains and pride the ultimate goal, things are looking good for CCSF's Swim Team again.

Swimming Schedule
April 2	Foothill	at Chabot
April 16 & 17	Golden Gate Conference Championships
April 23 & 24	Northern California Championships at Visalia
April 29 & 30 May 1	State Championships	at DeAnza

Spiksters Fall to Merritt

By Bob Metz

Colliding head-on with one of the premier track powers of the Golden Gate Conference, CCSF limped away form a 95-41 dubbing at the hands of Merritt J.C. March 19th at the losers field.

Individual highlights for City were scarce. Frank Oross continued his mastery of the Discus with a winning heave of 135'4". City's distance trio of Jeong, Melody and Nowell swept the top spots in the two mile run.

Louis Vasquez, CCSF Track Coach, commented after the meet, "It was pretty much a one-sided meet, it's obvious the league championship is going to be a two-way battle between Merritt and Diablo Valley College."

Coach Vasquez added, "Merritt and Diablo Valley outclass the league, the other five teams are about even with any team capable of beating another on a given day. Quality wise we have the material, numerically we don't. The GGC tournament should tell the story."

Dennis Glass set four school records.

Lewis Gets Full Ride

Charles Lewis received a full scholarship to Long Beach State College. Charles, who held the linebacker position for the last two years on the Rams football team, was honored recently, being named to the First String All Golden Gate Conference Football Squad.

He will continue his studies and football adventures at well known Long Beach State College.

When asked how he felt, he said, "I'm honored to be selected for this scholarship and also being able to work under such an excellent man, Coach Elston."

Get it on, brother!

Lions Vie for Third Title

The Young Lions, an intermural basketball team coached by Karl Frank, may be on its way to a third title.

With returning veterans Raoud Wardner, Richard Beverly, Charlie Steward, and Victor Scott chances for repeating the title are excellent. All are veterans of last year's championship team which went undefeated for 13 league games.

Karl Frank believes his team can do it but did say, "Anything can happen."

The Young Lions meet the Six-Pac (1-1) on March 30th. It will be their first game this season but the material, from what I heard, is there!

Check it out! Game time is 7:10 pm in the Men's gymnasium.

The Executioner

By Jack Hansen

Robert (Sweet T) Taylor has recently been compared to Pistol Pete for his showmanship on the Court. Sweet T also has a deadly eye from 25 feet.

Brad Duggan was downed in the national Judo Championship by a fellow known as "Scretch".

"It takes a thief", Frank Alcaraz quoted with droplets running from his eyes, after finding out that someone ripped-off his books while he was taking a shower in the Men's gym. "If only I had spent the money on something else."

Cliff Williams and Karl Frank have been nominated as "Referees of the Year" for their outstanding calls made in the Freshman and Sophomore shootout at the Rams gymnasium on March 24th.

Susan Baumann has been seen talking to an older reporter for the campus newspaper. Susan is in the modern dance department at the womens' gymnasium.

Athlete Loses Again

As usual, varsity outfielder Frank Alcaraz went to his 3:00 p.m. baseball class in the Men's Gym. During practice, someone stole his four textbooks.

"I put them down on the bench in the locker room and went to take a shower. When I came back, they were gone."

The books have not turned up at the school bookstore, and Frank thinks that the thief will probably wait until the end of the semester to resell them. Meanwhile, Frank has had to replace the pilfered books.

Frank now realizes that he should have put the books inside his locker, instead of on the bench, and he hopes that others will think twice before leaving their personal property unguarded.

Netters Beat Themselves

By Jack Hansen

CCSF's Varsity Netters demanded and shouted. The sophomore players challenged the freshmen to an inter-squad game at City College March 24th in the men's gym. Sophomores team captain Bill Metcalf coupled with Jerry LeBlance, Larry Haren, Malcom Kirkwood, Harold Byrd, anticipated an easy victory. Metcalf, stating that experience is the key to victory since both squads have excellent material will tell the tale. When asked who he thought would win the game Metcalf replied, "Are you kidding, brother!" The freshmen edged out the sophomores 115-110.

Willie Daigle, who during season competition was Metcalf's running mate, laughed when he was told what METCALF said. Daigle, in answer, only gave a summary of his squad. They are: Sweet T (Robert Taylor), Rubberband (Ron Dale), The Dipper (Wayne Snelgro), The Beedle (Tony Escobar), Duce (Steve Flatherty), The Stomper (Cary Dunn), Goody (Charles Goodwin), Net (James Sims.)

At the jump ball the sophomores scored a quick two points with Larry Haren taking command at the beginning hitting consistently from the outside. But the freshmen, pulled out their reserves and that proved to be the needed strength. Goody Goodwin seemed to take over the show until Sweet T Taylor started hitting. T's showmanship was breath taking to the spectators.

This is not to say that Willie Daigle, Harold Byrd, Wayne Snelgro, Steve Flaherty, Cary Dunn, Tony Escobar, Malcom Kirkwood, and James Sims did not display their ability. They all gave sufficient evidence of their qualification for being on the Rams Squad. Metcalf and Le Blance were up to their usual standards. But the Freshmen beat the Sophomores! Could it be that they are aging?

KID — By Adrian Barrek

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 7
April 15, 1971

PUT YOUR FEET UP IN STATLER WING! Flashback to last year's blood drive where an attractive nurse is "giving the needle" to a student donor. Pints will be flowing again — this year's theme: Bring Your Own Pint.

City's 17th Annual Blood Drive Slated To Run April 28, 29, 30

The 17th annual City College of San Francisco blood drive, sponsored by the Greek Council, will take place April 28, 29, and 30 at the college's Statler Wing. Statler will be open from 8 am to 7 pm on Wednesday and from 8 am to 4 pm on Thursday and Friday.

The blood donated is transferred to the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank. By donating one pint, the donors establish credit for an unlimited supply of blood for themselves or their families for one year.

City College has ranked highest among California Junior Colleges in number of pints given during past years. Students donated a record 655 pints in 1969, and topped that mark with 703 pints in 1970.

Eligible donors, between the age of 18 and 66, can also designate anyone of their choice to receive up to eight pints of blood free through the City College blood fund.

The event has received commendation from Supervisor Robert Mendelson and a resolution was adopted unanimously by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors. The resolution saluted City for "its humanitarian effort to meet the increasing need for blood."

Prizes will be given to those who donate blood. Among the gifts are about 900 Peanuts calendars, Creedence Clearwater albums, and many popular 45's.

For further information contact Ed Lew at 587-7272 extension 581.

'Serve the People Press' And Samoans Recognized

Some new campus organizations were recognized by the Student Council meeting this week. One was the "Serve The People Press," who said their aim is to get out a newspaper in a straight to the point manner, by whatever means necessary. It was passed by: 8-0-4.

Another accepted was the "Samoan Association Club." Their purpose is to aid Samoan students to adjust to college life.

A compromise was finally agreed upon about he Bike Club. The bikes will be permitted to be stationed at the third lower level of the Student Union Building. It was unanimously approved.

The Child Day Care Center of City College will open April 12th, in Bungalow 7.

"Recreate Palestine Politically For Equal Rights" — Says Mid-East Director

By Ed Hartzler

Describing the history of Palestine from 1917 until the present as one of "avoidance of law and justice," Ibrahim Tawasha, Executive Director of the American Committee for Justice in the Middle East, called for the state of Palestine to be recreated "not only geographically, but politically as a bi-national, multi-racial state."

Tawasha spoke at City College March 31.

Under this proposal, Palestinian Arabs and Jews would enjoy equal rights and both would share in the running of the government. Tawasha feels that for this plan to work, it would require "a great act of faith on the part of all concerned."

"For Jews to admit so large an Arab minority would require as much courage as for the Arabs to accept to live in a state with such a great Jewish minority. And there would have to be some cooling-off period to allow for tempers to subside, where perhaps the

(Continued on page 3)

Vandals Strike At Architecture Display

City College vandals have struck against the Architectural Department again.

The Architecture Display Room (Cloud 207) was opened on the morning of April 1 by Larry Franceschina, department chairman. In a matter of hours, the room was vandalized.

A model of an architecture studio by Brian Egan was found smashed. The rock base was cracked and broken, and the roof was partially torn off. The roof fragment was found in a water fountain out in the corridor.

Also ruined was a model of a space modulator by George Yee. According to instructor Ralph O'Neill, the model looked as though "someone gave it a karate chop."

O'Neill said that last semester, the display room was beseiged by someone named "The Spitter." O'Neill said that this person went around spitting on some of the projects. No implication was made to connect the April 1 thief with "The Spitter."

Several drawings were stolen from Cloud 203, an adjoining classroom, last semester.

SURVEYING DAMAGED DISPLAY — Bill Gin, George Leong, and instructor Ralph O'Neill in Cloud 207.

According to O'Neill, it will be up to the architecture students to re-open the room since their works are on display.

O'Neill put the situation bluntly by saying: "The phantom has struck again," nominating the culprit for the Mental Midget Of The Year Award.

Students Protest Campus Seal Rules

The newly voted in City College seal has been objected to by a group of architectural students.

Their claim is that the design did not follow the contest rules, which called for the design to be submitted on a 12x12 illustration board and encompassed in a circle. Of the fourteen designs in the contest, only the winner was not bordered in a circle.

Art Samuels, Dean of Student Activities, and Martin Poon, Associated Students Council Vice President, suggested that the discussion of the seal be held off until April 12, at the next council meeting.

Samuels said that Dan Atzinger (the student in charge of the seal competition) ran the contest. "We stayed out of it," he said.

Samuels also announced that the payment of prize money ($50 to the winner Steve Benitez) would be held back until the matter was brought up at council.

The students protested that the Architectural 21 class had many of their designs for the contest rejected because they didn't fit the requirements.

College Physical Exam Eliminated

By Bruno Forner

The traditional physical examination as a future entrance requirement for City College has been eliminated.

According to Judy Carey, head of the Student Health Service, the reasons for having the exams as a requirement were to classify all students for physical education; screen all records for potential problems; and to help identify "high risk" students.

The requirement was made when there were only 4,000 students attending City. Now that there is over three times that much, the process of classifying every student took too much time, leaving too little time to take care of the problem students.

Carey termed the exams inadequate, and said she made the recommendation to the Board of Education. She gave the following reasons for the examination being outmoded: a student could conceal many problems during the course of the exam; some doctor's will disqualify a student from PE, thus making the exam inaccurate; the exam because a financial burden for most students, forcing them so to free clinics, which became overburdened; and finally because the exam didn't give an accurate picture of a student's medical exam.

The college will still continue to make the health inventory and chest X-ray mandatory. Only students who wish an exemption from physical education will be required to take the physical examination.

Carey termed the elimination of the examination a first step toward establishing a better system of helping college students.

JUDY CAREY — Head of Student Health Service at City College.

GUARDSMAN FREE SPEECH

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

The Ugly Alarm Clock Can Shake Up A Lot of People

By Jim Toland

Recently Congress gave its final approval to a Constitutional Amendment which would allow 18 year old citizens the right to vote in all elections.

When Congress passed the Amendment, the vote was nearly unanimous in both Houses. Congress also approved of extending the 18 year old voting right to state and local elections.

Although Congress has confirmed the right of the 18 year old to vote, this Amendment must still be ratified by a three-quarters majority of the fifty states, before it becomes an actual reality.

High school and college students have been working and campaigning on this issue for years. Many people under the current voting age of 21, have campaigned, done volunteer work for, and constructively supported, candidates and political parties that they felt represented their own beliefs.

It would be an understatement to say that the young people of California were instrumental in initiating the successful passing of the 18 year old vote.

Now that the political dream of thousands of people is about to unfold, the piercing buzzer of an ugly alarm clock, looms in the background, threatening to awaken the young voters before their dream is fulfilled.

Bzzzzz.....Governor Ronald Reagan does not feel that 18 year olds should be allowed to vote in all elections. He feels that voting rights and drinking rights should not be considered separately.

If Reagan and other opponents of the 18 year old vote in California succeed in combining voting and drinking rights into one issue, there may never be an 18 year old vote in state or local elections.

Reagan, who strongly reacts to "unnecessary" state expenditures, is willing to subject the state of California to an estimated five million dollar cost for dual-voting procedures.

California could save money, young people would finally have a chance to feel like real citizens and be able to express their own beliefs through the system, if they only had the chance.

Eighteen year olds should be given this chance to vote at the pools. Why not themselves? The drinking situation can be resolved at another time.

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

Deat Dairy,

Nothing can be more of a bummer than shouting the wrong slogan at the wrong time at the wrong protest rally. Imagine my embarassment when I climbed on-to the podium and began screaming "1-2-3-4, who needs your war" only to learn that the rally was in support of Panther revolutionary strategy. That's worse than the time when I was carrying a placard saying "off the pigs" at a vivisectionists' meeting.

Jerry Rubin

So, I told Joey, I said, "He that lies down with dogs, will arise with flees."

Mrs. J. Alioto

. . .finally our office received correspondence from His Holiness' Secretariat regarding the present dilemma. He strongly suggests that we initiate a "Save the Cathedral" collection as soon as feasible, in hopes that the parishioners will overlook 15 million dollars already appropriated from their ailing pockets.

With these additional funds, the Archdiocese could purchase the few remaining properties on Cathedral Hill and erect more "low income apartment dwellings" with modest rents at $400 per month—in the name of charity, of course.

Herman Guthry, Esq.
Archdiocese of S.F.

. . .and Mr. Henderson was especially displeased with today's disastrous mishap. A 70 ton tanker returning from Goold Mhine, Vietnam with it precious cargo of grade-D petroleum, was ruined when its intoxicated skipper inadvertantly ran aground, causing serious structural damage to several storage vats on board.

Our Asian adviser informs us that the valuable cargo was found to be contaminated, with over .10 parts per million of salt water derivative, rendering the total cargo unfit for commercial use.

I. Foreye
Standard Oil

....Besides, it's fun being a member of City College A.S. Council. I meet lots of interesting people that way and we have a ball.

Sonnie Boloman

I've Got A Secret . . .

By Joe Konte

Everybody knows some secrets. But, I doubt if most of yours are as good as mine. You see, I have ways of finding out many things you'd never know. Oh, there's nothing mystical about it, just a little insight.

I bet you didn't know:

that the midnight cowboy was the Lone Ranger, and now you know why he always wore that mask that the Apollo moon flight was filmed in Hollywood that Colonel Sanders is under the supervision of chief chef General Foods that disgruntled Guardsman editors all pack up their typewriters and take the long walk down to the Free Critic (a la Jim B., Tom C., and Paul T.)

that M.K. was ex-editor (he called it head coordinator) but he didn't even want any part of the Critic. Or was it vice-versa?

that some disgruntled Free Critic editors could pack up their typewriter and stroll into the Guardsman. But they may not want any part of the Guardsman. Or is that vice-versa?

that the hotel and restaurant department is considering the use of topless waitresses, and does it matter what the hamburgers really taste like?

that marijuna leads to ill health, corruption, and a life of crime, and isn't that what happens if you're put in jail for smoking it?

that Joe Alioto has been cast for the lead of the "Godfather" that Alcatraz is still a prison that there's no difference between innocent people dying at My Lai or at Hiroshima that Tiny Tim is really three feet tall that go-go girls are to dance atop all the vending machines, and even if no coke comes out, you still get your money's worth that none of the secrets are true. Well, that is, most aren't true. But, I CAN'T TELL YOU WHICH ONE'S ARE REAL AND WHICH ARE MADE UP.

Heck, that's a secret.

So says the VA...

POPEYE by Bud Sagendorf

©King Features Syndicate, Inc., 1970

For information, contact the nearest VA office (check your phone book) or write: Veterans Administration. 232X, 810 Vermont Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20420

The Thing In Indochina Isn't All That Stupid

By Bruno R. Forner

While members of my peer group begin making preparations for the April 24 Moratorium, and Nixon-Agnew and Company is coming out with its own answer to these preparations, it seems that we've forgotten just how beneficial the war in Vietnam really is.

- Viet-nam has now acquired some sort of notoriety, as it has now been put on the map.
- Tourism in Viet-nam and Canada have increased voluminously.
- New words like "vietnamization," "napalm," and "sharpnel" have come into everyday use.
- The U.S. population has been depleted by around 40,000.
- Because of a lack of men, Women's Liberation rose up.
- College students have found a new cause.
- Moratoriums and peace marches have run rampant.
- And there have been some ridiculous editorials.

Don't really turn your back on the Viet-Nam war in disgust. It just has to be the greatest PR campaign ever devised!

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte
EDITORIALS Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE Tina Brant
PHOTOGRAPHY Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Jerry Cranor, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Dennis McGhee, Mike Slattery, Kelley Tripp.

CUB REPORTERS
Steve Borchett, David Boitano, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nastari, James Parsons, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Plans Outlined For Jew-Arab Equality

(Continued from page 1)

United Nations could help by taking the West Bank under some form of trusteeship until the final arrangements could be worked out to knit together the two parts of Palestine, Jewish and Arab.

Refugees

Tawasha stressed that the United States is in a key position to bring about a settlement of the Middle East crisis by inducing the Israelis to make peace with the Arabs and redress wrongs done to the Palestinians. He recounted how the U.S. had forced the Isralies to withdraw from territory captured after the 1956 Suez episode, but stated that "no such pressures seem to be available today and Israel is able, indeed encouraged, by this totally negative attitude to stand pat upon her conquests."

A second crucial point dealt with concerned the issue of refugees and the historic relationship between the Arab and Jewish peoples. Calling the plight of Palestinian refugees "a basic issue of the people of Palestine," Tawasha stated that this was what the conflict was about and "this is the issue that has to be settled." He added that the Arabs will "never abandon the cause of the dispossed brothers of Palestine and will never accept that the land of Palestine shall remain as it is today under the occupation of an alien Western state."

Awesome Precipice

Historically, he said, the Arabs had been the one country in the civilized world that had not persecuted the Jews and he defied anyone "to find a closer human relationship between two segments of the same race." It was this traditional hospitality, according to Tawasha, which persuaded such Arab leaders as Emir Faisal to agree to encourage Jewish immigration to Palestine.

Tawasha accused the World Zionist Organization of pressuring a long line of British governments into allowing the Zionists to buy the land of landowners cut off from their property by lines separating dated territories, evicting Arab tenant and farm workers from their land in order to create a purely Jewish state. He declared that it was this action, along with a history injustices inflicted on the people of Palestine, which contributed to the present situation in the Middle East. He pictured the whole area as being "poised as never before upon the edge of the most awesome precipice." However, he described the Arab world as ready to reach a just and honorable peace and said that this may be the best and possibly the last opportunity to end this conflict.

The first Frank Sinatra Film Festival is being held April 16th through May 9th at Von's Cinema, Half Moon Bay.

DUSTIN HOFFMAN-- The Little Big Man

A historical battle is won but yet the war is lost. Did the Indians really "win" the Battle of Little Bighorn against Custer?. The 121 year old survivor of this battle answers the question in a three hour movie, "Little Big Man."

The movie unfurls with Dustin Hoffman as Jack Crabb the only living survivor who can tell the real story behind the most famous Indian battle in the United States' history.

The story begins with Crabb's boyhood and how he was brought up by both the Indians and the whites and throughout his entire life never being able to find his real home. He lives through many of the battles between the whites and the Indians sometimes fighting for both sides.

Hoffman plays his part well and with considerable ease. He is comfortable living in two different cultures and makes his transition between the two easily.

DUSTIN HOFFMAN AS JACK CRABB — sees battles from both sides.

The other characters contribute their part to the movie also. Faye Dunaway adds humor as an extremely righteous preacher's wife who later becomes a "madam."

Richard Mulligan, as Gen. Custer is almost strictly satirical. Never has the United States Cavalry looked worse. Custer would roll over in his grave today if he could see himself in this picture.

Finally, Chief Dan George, a real Indian, portrays the chief of the Cheyennes with dignity and decorum. He deserves respect.

The character of Jack Crabb is the whites and Little Big Man to the Indians is fictitious but the story nonetheless is historically true.

When a three hour movie seems too short and the "good guys" don't wear white hats, the movie has to be worth seeing.

By Charlene Ho

Baby, You Won't Be There at All

"One pill makes you larger, and one pill makes you small but the ones that Mother gives you don't do anything at all;" floating downwards to a hole, downward through a sea of Southern Comfort, down, down, down on a trip to nowhere and back again through a thousand yesterdays with no tomorrows. Pretty frightening isn't it? This is the unreal world of the dope addict. A complete withdrawal into oneself, into a never-never-land that has dreams that are never quite attainable and ideals that are always shadows on the horizon of the mind; nothing but self dillusion; only a dream from which one would awake to find himself in a nightmare reds; yellows, uppers, downers, acid, smack, speed, and all of the pretty, pretty pills. "The Crystal Ship is being filled, a thousand pills, a thousand thrills;" so many ways to be high and fly and so many more to crash and die. As one warning says, "One pill makes you larger, and one pill makes you small; but if you take speed, baby, you won't be there at all."

By Jaime Lee

Handcrafts Fair

Sell your handcrafts on Thursday, May 6 and Friday, May 7, between Cloud Hall and the Science Building.

If you can help or if you want a "Permit" to sell, contact Tina Brant in S304 or write her at 607 Mt. Vernon Avenue, San Francisco, 94112, or see Dean of Student Activities, Mr. Samuels.

Permits are free . . . all you need is to be a student at City College!

Body and Soul

Cereals for Breakfast
By Tina Brant

Are your legs giving way on the stairs? Are you depressed by 10:00 am? Does your heart pound from nervous tension? Do you play the "look what you made me do" game when actually you are the dummmmm dumb?

All your life you've heard that breakfast is the most important meal. You've rejected it due to lack of time. But it takes more time to reject it (due to low blood sugar) than it does to eat it. Breakfast gets your energy up, puts your smile on, and gets your work done. What a blessing to have you around!

The propaganda from cereal companies is a rip-off to your body. If you don't have the time to seekout ingredients in the box, take my word because I took the time:

1. Don't eat cereals with sugar already in the box; they will bring you DOWN;

2. Read the side of the box to see if vitamins and protein are a part of your favorite brand, if not, throw it out! (There are only four brands suitable for giving you the energy you need);

3. Pay a little more for MUCH more health;

4. Add wheat germ and honey;

5. Don't worry about calories! You burn off your morning meal, so worry about calories at night.

Here is a tested recipe for Granola. You'll have to inconvenience yourself a little by going to a health food store, but for $1.50 you can eat for a month. and Eat DELICIOUSLY WELL!

1. Mix in a large bowl: 2½ lbs. rolled oats, 1½ cups coconut,

2 cups sliced almonds, 1 T salt,

1 lb. flax seed, ½ lb. sunflower seeds or pumpkin seeds.

Add 1 cup water. Mix 1 cup oil, 1 T. vanilla and 1 cup honey.

3. Pour liquid into dry ingredients and toss.

4. Spread thinly in pans and bake at 325, stirring often for one-half hour or until light brown.

5. Add wheat germ (2 cups), and if you like sesame seeds or bran add to your heart's content.

6. Store in a large jar. You can mix granola with your favorite cereal to increase the quantity.

HAVE A HAPPY DAY

Listening and Viewing Center Moves Down

The listening and viewing center, once located on the third floor in the library, has been moved downstairs to room C249 for expansion purposes.

City College has plans to expand the Listening and Viewing Center. At present it has slide tape programs for physics, business, and chemistry courses. It is also available for students interested in learning slide rule, biology, self defense for girls, and chemistry.

The centers new location will soon be able to equip more students. Since its move the center has already set up a booth for the use of Speech Students to listen and record tapes of themselves.

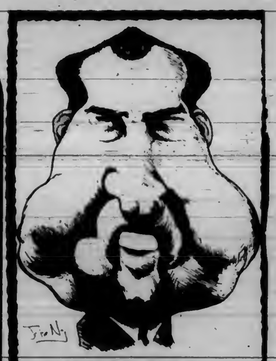
Cassette tapes of drama, poetry and literature may be added to the list of new items purchased for the center. Two equipped carrels with large recorder slide projectors have been purchased, but not yet received by the center.

Next fall City College is going to purchase cassette tapes ranging from Bach to the Beatles. Students may then be able to come to C249 for reasons other than class assignments, they may spend time listening to tapes for recreational listening purposes.

Board Reviews Disciplinary Action

There is a committee here at City College that guarantees the rights of students — the Review Board on Student Affairs. The Board is composed of six students, three faculty members and three administrators. In the last two years the Board has become an active instrument for student grievances concerning grades, discipline and personal files.

At the time disciplinary action is taken against a student, which he feels is unwarranted, he can fill out a "Request for Review" form. The form is turned in within five days to the Coordinator of Student Welfare. If the request merits a hearing, the Board meets to review the case. Out of this session comes one of three decisions; dismissal of charge, reduction of charge, or concurrence with the action taken. Their recommendation is then forwarded to the President of the college, whose decision is final.



The Review Board will listen to any student who feels information in his file is unsuitable. After submitting a "Request" form (available in the offices of the Coordinator of Student Welfare) the Board will hear the appeal of the student. The Board has the right to inspect the file and remove or submit information.

If there is a discrepancy between the grade a student received and what he thought he deserved — he can turn to the Board if he cannot relate to the instructor or department chairman.

Dean Hillsman, a member of the Board, stated, "most cases are resolved before reaching the Board." But he also mentioned, "The Review Board gives the student an outlet — a real outlet — for his appeal."

There have been three cases reviewed so far this semester. Three students felt the need to speak out and the Review Board was there to hear them.

By Michael Nastari

What is Richard Nixon Hiding Between His Cheeks?

Guardsman Sports

Editor: Jack Hansen

Writers: Jim Parson
Andy Metz
Kathy Armstad

TWO POINTS FOR THE HOME TEAM

By Jim Parsons

As I leaned against the wall sipping my hot chocolate, two firm facts took solid root in my mind: 1) I get lousy story assignments; 2) City College vending machines serve lousy hot chocolate. And now that I think better of it — give the hot chocolate top-billing. Having made such adroit analysis, I tossed the empty cup into a nearby refuse container. Wow! Didn't even touch the rim. Two points for the home team. Conditions just might improve. On that high note, I sallied forth.

The catacombs of Rome must surely take a poor second to the subterranean tunnel that runs through the basement level of CCSF Science Building, I dourly mused. If not, why should S30 be so difficult to locate. And that's how a guy wins ball games. Complain. I was now peering through the entrance to S30. Beyond, a sign gyrated in living technicolor: 'ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING.'

Engineering, and the likes, don't shake me up at all. It's like hitting against Bob Gibson. Ya' can't hit what ya' can't see. All I know about electrical engineering is what Micky Rooney showed me back in the mid-thirties. As a frail stripling I had plunked down twenty-cents at the local cinema and in boyish awe watched Rooney, as the young Tom Edison, toot out the Morse Code on a locomotive steam whistle. It was somethin', I tell you. From then on, I viewed railroading with new dimension. Now I was straining for full focus on a current dimension, nailing down an electrical engineering story.

The room seemed to close in on me from all sides. Devices of all size and proportion stood about in weird juxtaposition. I shivered frightfully — could it be the return of The Four Horsemen? Ohms. Watts. Kilocycles. Megacycles. A voice — a pleasant voice — saved me from certain doom. "Are you looking for someone?" I turned and saw . . .

A round, beaming face, dark eyes unwavering: this was the face of a scholar, a learned one. He said his name was Mazda Mutsikomo. He'd of owned me had he said Perry Como.

Quickly I told Mutsikomo of my plight — The Guardsman insisting I write a story about City College electrical engineering activities. Just as quickly did Mazda come to my rescue. He filled my head to the brim with the myriad mysteries of his chosen field. My head oscillated, revolved, jumped and jittered. I think I heard him say something about the centrifugal two-way force that conjugates the backward thrust of a single stroke eggbeater. Through all of this maze I struggled to make the understatment of the day. "I don't quite understand ?"

I was alone — for how long, I do not know. Mazda had vanished. Just like that. Oh, it's true, I thought, they are a most wonrous people. Now it was my turn. I wobbled, as best I could, out of S30 into the long, dark cavernous corridor I had recently trod. After brief pause, I started to backtrack my initial route. Far ahead of me was the familiar oasis of vending machines. Now, as the area loomed larger, I could see . . .

A solid phalanx of students standing shoulder to shoulder in front of the vending machines. Their busy buzz of animated small talk sought every nook and cranny. My curiosity was at the point of bursting as I sidled alongside a placid little female — placid and kooky. "What's all the stir about?" I asked. My high standards of journalistic aplomb have always amazed me. "Someone's gone berserk at the hot chocolate machine," she squeezed out. "Clawing, tugging and screaming all kinds of strange laments at the metal monster. He wants it to return the correct change out of the quarter he deposited." Before I could make further inquiry . . .

The students massed in front of the vending machines were giving way — yielding as the Red Sea must have done at the command of Moses. Now there emerged from the parting swarm two campus security officers. They supported between them a limp, hopeless figure of a man. I struggled to establish identity. Now I could see the dejected and crushed soul. Mazda! It was Mazda Mutsikomo. Mazda the engineering wizard of CCSF. Mumbling pathetically. Incoherently. My heart wrenched as I heard him slowly stammer to a distant diety, "my change . . . please . . . tell the machine it must return my change."

Patiently, the security officers escorted Mazda outside the Science building and into a white motor van. The side of the van bore a green inscription that featured a white cross. That's the last I ever saw of Mazda . . . because just then . . .

All my lights went out.

Rams One Two In 100 yd. Dash

By Jack Hansen

Larry Shields and Joe (Pretty Boy) Jones placed one two in the 100 yd. dash at the College of San Mateo Wednesday March 31st. Shields tied the meet record at 9.7 seconds with P.B. Jones right behind at 9.9 sec.

Frank Oross took another first in the duscus with a heave of 126'7". Bill Leddy (CSM) took second with a toss of 121 feet. Oross also placed second in the shot-put (145'3") while San Mateo's Steve Boschetti placed first with a 45'6" throw.

With basketball season over Bill Metcalf and Ron Dale have taken to track. Metcalf took first place in the High Jump clearing 6'4". Ron Bosch edged out Dale for second place honors at 6'2". Dale broke the 6'1" barrier.

The Pole Vaulting event was dominated by the Bulldogs with Jim Lyden and Ron Getchel taking first and second respectively. City's Von Rhodes had third place honors at 12'6".

Williams displays excellent form

Rock-Away Sportsday

Recreation Association is sponsoring its yearly Rock-Away Sportsday Saturday, April 24. All swingers and would-be swingers are invited. The R.A. is a co-ed athletic organization but the women out-number the men 2-1!

If it's competitiveness the men are looking for it can be found at Rock-Away Sportsday. These young ladies are out to beat the men and unless the men make a showing they just might do it.

Contests will be held in archery, bowling, tennis, badminton, karate, and volleyball. There will be no football or basketball games but there will be lots of WOMEN!

Mrs. Dawkins, adviser of the R.A., believes the men are afraid to be out done by the women. Could she be right? Not many men can out do the women in ethnic dancing and master ballet but it should be good for a laugh.

Activities begin at 8:30 am. For further information contact Mrs. Dawkins in the women's gymnasium, Ext. 419.

Men's Saber

Kathy Aamstad

Saber is a man's sport. It is rough, both physically and mentally. The saberman always has to be one step ahead of his opponent.

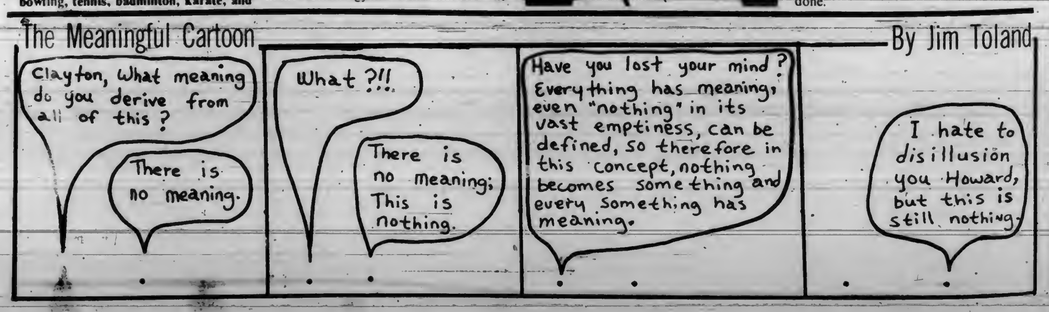
City College has some outstanding sabermen. Preparing for an important intercollegiate competition are City's best: Alan Fong, Raymond Chui, Nick Sardy, Chui Dea, Tat Ming Ko, and Robert Quan.

On April 24, 1971, our men will compete in the Northern California Saber Championship; both individual and team. The tournament will be held here at City College in the Women's gym.

Last year, City College took 1st by Alan Fong, 2nd by Raymond Chui, 3rd by Chui Dea, and 5th by Nick Sardy; an outstanding record which is to be respected and admired. Saber is a fascinating sport to observe for those who like to see action. The CCSF fencing teams have consistently held some of the highest records of achievement of any other competitive sport here. The caliber of competition is also higher. The fencers not only compete with other junior and state colleges, but they also compete with universities.

Sardy tries harder

Jung is Tops



Tom Jung is the photographer responsible for the track action shots which have appeared in the last two editions of The Guardsman.

He is a pre-dental student here at City College and really knows how to zero-in a 35mm camera. Tom learned from his father whose hobby has been photography for 30 years.

The Guardsman Sports Section owes Tom a big "THANKS" for a job well done.

The Meaningful Cartoon

By Jim Toland

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 8
April 22, 1971

City Anti-War Rally Builds Moratorium

By Joe Konte

The City College Student Mobilization Committee staged an anti-war rally here April 2 in an effort to build momentum for the April 24 moratorium day activities. A generally unresponsive crowd of an estimated 500 students relaxed on the grass, with the silence broken only with a few "right ons" and an occasional hand to some noteworthy statement.

Seven speakers and a guitar-singing Moses Thrasher headed the festivities.

Bonnie Shephard (San Francisco SMC) noted the effect anti-war rallies can have on US policy, saying that we "raised a specter last May that the Nixon administration is afraid of."

PAUL HEWITT — "Journey to a sane America is a long one"

Shephard claimed the anti-war movement must be brought to the factories, barracks, and the shops. "This is what will stop the war," she concluded. According to Shephard, this was the goal of April 24.

Paul Hewitt, a college physics instructor, solemnly announced that "1984 is here already."

"This country was once the hope of people everywhere . . . now it is taken over from within," he observed. "Most American people refuse to believe that this has happened," Hewitt grimly said, adding that "these are dark times."

The bearded, long haired Hewitt posed the question of "what would happen if one bomb was dropped on one American city." He answered it in the next breath, saying that "the country would rally together for this major disaster."

His punch line pointed out that there are bombs dropping on that country (Vietnam), and yet we do nothing about it.

Hewitt encouraged the students to "show that conscience is not dead in most Americans."

"How will you be received by your children when they ask you, 'when did you take a stand against the war,' " he inquired.

"The journey to a sane America is a long one," Hewitt claimed, citing April 24 as "one significant step" of that journey.

Black, from the Black Students Union, turned his off-the-cuff speech into a lecture on the Black man's plight in America in general, and in Vietnam in particular.

THE MOBILIZATION OF A COLLEGE — Bonnie Shephard (foreground) announces plans for April 24 Moratorium

(photos by Tom Jung)

"A Black man who goes to Vietnam is a fool, and a Black man who thinks he's an American citizen is a double-double fool," he stated.

"The white people are the devil," Black pointed out, seemingly with tongue-in-cheek. "If they think the Black man is going to do the killing and the fighting to keep white people in power, their crazy."

Black people have nothing to fight for, they have no stake in this country, Black shouted, noting that Blacks "have nothing to gain, and nothing to look forward to but a cemetery.

Black swung his attention to the war itself. "The Vietnam war is unjust," he said. "We have no right to tell them (the Vietnamese people) what they're going to do. When you get that letter saying 'we want you,' tell them to go to hell," he demanded.

(continued on page 3)

Seal Contest Director Quits — Claims Controversy Not Reason

By Ed Hartzler

Dan Atzinger resigned from his position as A.S. Council publicity director but denied that his move had anything to do with the current controversy over the campus seal contest.

"The seal contest had nothing to do with it. I've just gotten tired of taking all sorts of crap. I had decided to quit before the campus seal contest became news."

A number of contestants, including second place winner Roger Yee, had accused Atzinger of disqualifying their entries because of failure to meet certain specifications while simultaneously accepting the entry of contest winner Steve Benitez who, the protestors claim, also failed to meet the expected requirements.

The contest rules stated that an entry must be submitted on a 12" by 12" poster board and must be encompassed by a circular boundary. According to Atzinger, if an individual found the rules too confusing or confining "a slight alteration or interpretation of the rules could be approved by me."

Atzinger stated that Benitez's entry was on paper larger than the required 12" by 12" but that the drawing itself did not exceed the limit; therefore, the entry itself could have been cut down to regulation size without affecting the drawing. Furthermore, though the drawing didn't have a specific circular border, he felt that the wording in the drawing constituted an "abstract circular boundary encompassing approximately 80 to 90 per cent of the design."

The reason given for the disqualifi

(continued on page 3)

New Asian Course To Be Offered Here

By James L. Moses

Jose L. Bonpua, Jr. has proposed and drafted two courses: "Modern Asian Leaders" and "The Role, Plight and Achievements of Immigrants in the United States." These two courses have no particular department. They will be offered as an interdisciplinary / interdepartmental course sponsored by the Filipino Studies Program. Both have been approved.

The courses have no pre-requisites and their credit-transfer values are: Humanities, Social Sciences, Asian Studies, and Ethnic Studies. Units are transferrable to the University of California and San Francisco State College.

The Modern Asian Leaders course will be offered in the fall of 1971 and its instructor, who also will be the instruc-

(continued on page 3)

'You Can't Transfuse Dollar Bills'

By Janet Kramer

(City College of San Francisco will host its 17th annual blood drive at Statler Wing, April 26 through 28 from 8am to 4pm. Many people need blood desperately. Your donation (one pint) can help supply a needy child whose family must struggle to meet the high cost of blood. Young Jon Hoy is such a child.)

Seven-year old Jon Hoy has been receiving blood transfusions every two months since he was 2 years of age.

Jon has acute anemia. He needs three units (pints) of blood every two months to stay alive.

Irwin Memorial Blood Bank, which transfuses the blood to Jon, received a grant from the Federal Government to cover the cost. This grant has now expired. His family must find a way to meet the cost.

The Hoys are Chinese. Their native tongue is Cantonese. Grandfather Hoy, 90, has resumed working to help his afflicted grandson. Jon's father is a dishwasher at Fisherman's Wharf. His mother doesn't work.

Jon and his older sister are the only members of the family who speak English.

May Wong, a family friend, acts as interpreter between the Hoys and Rita Sears, registered nurse in charge of Jon's case at Irwin Memorial.

JON HOY — Anemia victim needs blood every two months to live.

Rita, who attends City College in the afternoons, hit upon the idea of having City students solve Jon's plight. "You can't transfuse dollar bills," she said, "but I feel if students knew about Jon, they would be anxious to help by donating the required pints of blood."

This would solve a two-fold need. Jon could continue to live with the regular blood supply and Papa Hoy's meager salary could be utilized for other essential family needs.

Maybe Grandad would also live longer. Ninety is well beyond retirement age!

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

It Can Use Mothballs

By Jim Toland

This is one of those weeks where the idea of writing a profoundly informative editorial is beyond me. Too much fresh air and ocean spray has filled my mind with less mustier thoughts.

Had Easter vacation been any longer, I might have forgotten how to write completely. This of course, may have been a blessing to us all.

But since I have to write an editorial or a column every week, I have decided to relate some little known facts that every student at City College should be aware of before he goes on to any major university.

If a single atom of magnesium is detached from the chlorophyll molecule and an atom of iron is put in its place, the same numbers of atoms and their arrangements become a molecule of red blood. (Rutherford Platt; "The Great American Forest.")

An octopus has three hearts, no bones and lies 180,000 eggs at one time.

Alfred E. Packer was the only human being who was ever tried and convicted of cannibalism in the United States. This incident took place in Lake City, Colorado, in 1883, after Mr. Packer ate five companions who were caught in a blizzard with him.

San Diego is actually further east than Reno, Nevada.

George Washington was born on February 11, 1732. His brithday now falls on February 22, because of a calendar revision after his birth.

Recent statistics show that psychiatrists have the highest suicide percentage among all other professions and occupations.

Thomas Jefferson once said in a letter to Edward Carrington, (January 16, 1787) "Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter." He also said in Writings XI; "The man who never looks into a newspaper is better informed than he who reads them, inasmuch as he who knows nothing is nearer the truth than he whose mind is filled with falsehoods and errors."

To wrap up this collection of "meaningful" thoughts, Lenny Bruce was once heard to remark, "Any man who calls himself a religious leader, and who owns more than one suit, is just a hustler as long as there is someone in the world who owns no suit at all."

Anatomy of a War Rally

By Joe Konte

Anti-war rallies have become the American way of life. Everybody does it. In fact, the City College Student Mobilization Committee did it here on April 2.

The whole idea was to publicize the April 24 Moratorium Day. The speakers sold April 24 like a sponsor sells his deodorants and toothpastes. If this had been a commercial, I'd have switched to another channel.

About 500 students were stretched out on the grassy slopes enjoying the sunshine. Many happened to find themselves accidently in the audience. Some viewed the rally's speakers as a form of entertainment, and others saw it as a way to kill an hour before the next class. A few seemed upset because the procedures broke up their frisbee game.

The rally really began on a sour note. Guitar-playing Moses Thrasher, making his second annual appearance at the second annual City College war rally, attempted to get the crowd keyed for the speakers. Those who dozed didn't miss much. If Thrasher's music could be bottled, he'd put Sominex out of business.

Those who heard the minstrel's singing eulogy never quite recovered. Purple Hearts should have been issued immediately.

Bonnie Shephard, a vibrant gal, served as master (or is that masteress?) of ceremonies. She had visions of April 24 dancing in her head. Bonnie's been out in the sun too long if she thought this rally would inspire anybody.

The physics department's very own Paul Hewitt concocted the day's best speech. I found it rather interesting, and even humorous when he referred to April 24 as the "Saturday to remember." Golly, how could I forget it?

Student Body President Tom Lai spoke in slow motion. I thought he was deciphering a message. Maybe, next time, Tom will write his own speech.

Brother Black, one of the BSU heads at City, drew most reaction with his soapbox preaching, but he didn't know when to quit.

The White people only grinned when he shouted that they were the devil. He was more interested in getting an ovation or a few laughs. All that was missing was an applause meter.

Prior to the rally, SMC poster pushers decked the campus with handouts announcing the speakers.

No shows included a Black Moratorium organizer from Riverside, Calif.; a third world task force member; and a group of City drama students who were to perform a skit. You don't suppose they knew something?

Also missing from the rally was any mention of Martin Luther King, Jr. It was the anniversary of his death, but even though the handouts made note of it, none of the speakers could fit King into their speeches.

How quick we forget.

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

. . . Well, one thing is for sure. Our decision of recent date to formulate an image as the "Antiwar bank" has proven fiscally sound and credible, as far as gross profits have displayed. All indicators exhibit a marked and effectual rise in home assets, essentially among the younger elements.

The irony however, rests upon the fact that profits in 1970 exceeded those of 1965 by .50% — the year in which large scale defense oriented financing became prevalent. Why, last year alone, we wrestled $6.8 billion from the total Defense Department budget and realized lucrative returns from our five Southeast Asian branches. "Anti-war bank?" Sure. A war against peace.

— Mrs. Dollares Clausen
Bank of America

A lot of people are maliciously using me as a scapegoat in their efforts to undermine the causes I'm committed to. The water project, the 72 foot height limit — sure, they offer financial rewards publicity-wise. But, it's becoming unbearable at this point. Imagine my dismay when a spokesman for the "Committee Against the Right of Private Citizens to Meddle in Politics" announced that my greatest satisfaction in designing dresses is trying them on in the closet!

— Alvin Duskin

Just between you and me, dear diary, I sure wish that we could withdraw from Vietnam as swiftly as Vietnam withdrew from Laos.

— Dick

Just between you and me, dear diary, I sure wish that silly Dick would dump these notions about withdrawal from Vietnam until I've reached my eligibility for full retirement pension.

— Gen. Creighton Abrams

Dear Diary,

Yesterday's tragedy was the most imminent of all. Mr. Nader, while on one of his regular snooping investigations, got his tie lodged between the assembly cogs in our engine department, and was compressed, riveted, and solidified into a four-speed transmission before anything could be done. I'm terribly regrettable for any inconvenience caused Mr. Nader, but I'm more concerned with our public image. For years, General Motors has carried the distinction of using only the "highest quality materials" known to man.

— I. Foreye
General Motors

. . . and strictly off the record, dear diary, I wish people on the outside were as gullible as students at City College. Where else than the A.S. Bookstore, can you establish a "sky's the limit" markup and keep them coming back for more? What other business could survive selling used articles at markups sometimes exceeding the original price? Who, but a stupid college student, would allow himself to pay the cost of a hardcover book for a paperbound atrocity? Sometimes, I wonder if we couldn't charge a $3.00 admission fee to get through the door. I believe in that old catch-all . . . "let the buyer beware."

— Mrs. I. Robyew
A.S. Bookstore

Empty Reservoirs Need Not be Dull

By Bruno R. Forner

Room S-304, our editorial office, affords a nice view of the Farralone Islands, provided the clouds and smog are willing.

When the clouds and smog aren't willing (as they are 3/4th's the time) then we get a pretty neat view of both reservoirs. Not that each reservoir is that dull. Sometimes we can count the cars parked there if we have nothing to do. Or we can watch the seagulls land and take off in the south reservoir landing field. An empty reservoir need not be dull.

It makes me wonder what the empty reservoir is used for. The only times it will ever fill up with water is when it rains.

We have to find some use for that other reservoir other than a seagull airport!

An idea that has been percolating in my limitless brain for a semester now is how to constructively use that empty reservoir. Why can't we hold a rock festival?

No! Not a rock-throwing festival as some people on this campus would like, but a rock music festival.

We can present it on the weekend before final exams, the weather permitting (Oops! Then we may never put it on). We can charge $20 a head ($25 for straight people) with the proceeds going to a worthy cause — the Guardsman.

Let's face it. With all the bread we can make on this whole shebang — the administration won't have to fund us for the next 10 years!

Of course, the idea will anger anyone over 40 (as well as some old fogies down in a certain bungalow) and delight the people under 30 (except for some young fogies in a certain bungalow).

All we have to do is to concentrate on getting that group between 30 and 40 . . .

The Standard Bearer — By Mike Nastari

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

"Sleep and Relaxation"

Approximately seven million persons use "harmless" sleeping pills at night in order to get the amount of sleep needed for the next day.

A user builds tension, and the more tension there is, the harder it is to fall into dreamland. With continued use of "non-habit forming" sleeping aids the tension mounts.

Tension is dangerous. It interferes with the various functions of the body; therefore causing the need for a recharge. While you sleep you store energy and your body eliminates toxic poisons that have accumulated.

Sleep comes when blood gradually withdraws from the brain. But tension causes blood to circulate through the brain.

If you want to sleep, soaking your feet in hot water will draw blood from the brain. Cutting salt out of the diet (or cutting it down) will help. Increase calcium intake. Stretch so that your spine can feel stretched.

An herb that helps is catnip tea for total relaxation if taken hot and at full strength at bedtime. Camomile tea also helps bring on sleep.

Most important for a good rest is to start slowing down an hour before you go to bed.

A good exercise for releasing tension in the morning or at night is followed step by step:

1. Remove shoes, glasses and anything tight:
2. Lie down flat without a pillow;
3. Starting with the feet, tell your feet to be numb with relaxation;
4. Move mentally to the calves; knees; thighs; hips; stomach; chest; hands; arms; shoulders; neck; mouth; nose; eyes; ears; brain;
5. Stay in this numb position for five minutes;
6. Concentrate on nothing. Cleanse your mind of EVERYTHING;
7. When you rise you will feel like you took a three hour nap.

"O sleep, O gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse."

. . . Shakespeare — Henry IV

HAVE A HAPPY DAY!

Pilipino Studies Opens New Course For Fall Semester

(continued from page 1)

tor for the other course, is Bonpua. The course is designed to show the impact of their thinking in the political culture of Asia and the world.

Starting in the Spring of 1972 will be the course, The Role, Plight, and Achievements of Immigrants in the United States.

This course will be a comprehensive survey of the achievements of immigrants groups to the United States especially as it relates to assimilation, acculturation, opportunities, hardships, and solid contributions. Special emphasis will be devoted to such ethnic groups as Jews, Irish-Catholic, Chinese, Japanese, Pilipino, and Latino.

Bonpua's background is prolific to say the least. He is responsible for the drafting of the Philippine Studies Program at City College. He was a scholar of the Spanish Government and the Institute of Hispanic Culture in 1963-64 in the field of diplomacy. Since his coming to the United States he has earned a master's degree from the University of San Francisco and is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the California Institute of Asian Studies. He has received numerous awards. Published works have included one book, Southeast Asian Culture & Relations plus research papers and articles.

Bonpua was a vigorous student leader in his college days and consistently stood for student and minority rights. Today he is still an outstanding individualist. He advocates that even the faculty of this college should take his courses so that they will be informed about Southeast Asia politics and culture.

He has personally pushed for the two courses above because he feels that they are pertinent to our times, the student and mankind.

Council Investigating College Seal Issue

(Continued from page 1)

cation of designs entered by the architecture students were that some were on plain brown paper which was very clumsy to handle and that certain designs had used the initials CCSF instead of the complete name of the college.

Atzinger disclosed that he had told the students that they could re-submit designs; to his knowledge, only Roger Gee took advantage of this opportunity.

The A.S. Council has appointed a committee, headed by Dora Leung, to investigate the matter. Meanwhile the complaining students are circulating a petition calling for the contest to be held over. Atzinger's only comment was that it was "the best way to go about getting a student referendum on the matter."

Council To Request Assistance In Budgeting PE Department

By Martin Poon
AS Vice President

Few still remember the time when O.J. Simpson played football for the Rams, and even less, the fifties, when every game filled the stadium. Sports was practically the only thing that the Associated Students concerned themselves with at the time. However, times have changed.

Students are now more concerned with their environment, the war in Asia, pollution, a child day care center, lectures and concerts. For the increasing organized activities dealing with these extensive interests, the budget request is increasing every semester, yet the income itself is slowly decreasing.

The AS was committed to finance the physical education department because it receives all the benefits from the sports. But this does not take cognizance of the fact that PE is still a mandatory subject, and its department is a functioning department on campus serving the community. For this reason the Student Council can find no justification in the AS carrying this burden alone.

Council will approach the Board of Governors on April 22, 7:30 pm to request the district's assistance in budgeting the PE department.

Personality of the Week

"No one's ever named him because he doesn't have any personality, as do my two cats," said Jane Lee Rowe, apathetic reptile guardian. She was referring to a six foot long boa constrictor, who lazily contemplated his mistress' interview through his glass cage overlooking the colorful colonial sofa in Jane's parlor.

This nameless reptile wonder had been a wedding gift to Jane's friend. When the friend obtained a divorce, the snake came to be regarded as a white elephant which evoked an unpleasant nostalgia for the absent spouse.

Jane is keeping an eye on it until its rightful owner eases her divorce pangs. Meanwhile, it serves as a conversation piece. No-name consumes 20 baby chicks monthly, occasionally molts and defecates, but does not cry real tears.

The most exciting thing he's done to date was to break loose and emerge three days later in a chest of drawers wearing Jane's roommate's lavender undies. Roomie chose chartreuse instead.

Prior to snake-custodianship, Jane was a reporter for the Shenectady Gazette in New York State. Due to a broken love affair, and because she felt limited in Shenectady, Jane moved to San Francisco. "I was afraid I would just be sitting at a reporter's desk the rest of my life."

"I didn't want to report any longer because I saw a lot of things as a reporter that I would rather affect directly instead of discussing them. I like a direct action type of thing." For this reason, Jane is enrolled in a pre-nursing curriculum at CCSF.

To make ends meet, Jane taxi-dances weekends at the Savoy ballroom in downtown Oakland. In the 1930's, taxi-dancing was a popular pastime, whereby men bought tickets for the privilege of dancing with the ladies of their choice.

The Savoy has a "30's" atmosphere, and Jane is frequently told that her hairstyle is reminiscent of the period. Jane says she is now in better physical condition than ever before. Many of the men who come to the Savoy are servicemen; the rest are a diverse mixture. A guard is on duty to discourage any over-aggressive admirers.

Jane describes herself as a hobby hound, currently pre-occupied creating her own secret-formula ceramic jewelry. This jewelry will be displayed for sale at the upcoming May 6 and 7 Craft Fun Faire on campus.

— By Barbara Ellett

African Summer School Planned

The American Institute for Foreign Studies will conduct a college and high school summer school at the University of East Africa at Nairobi, Kenya.

The school will commence on Friday, July 3 with a plane trip from New York. Two itineraries have been set beginning from that date.

The first one will end on August 12 and will include visits to the fabled city of Mombasa on the Indian Ocean, the Ngorongoro Crater, and Olduvai Gorge (where evidence of stone age man has been discovered.)

The other itinerary will end on August 10, and includes a climb up Mount Kilimanjaro.

Courses to be offered (and all classes will be held in the morning) include: Contemporary Africa, African History, and a choice of special interest courses (i.e.: zoology, botany, geography and geology, Swahili, and African Music and Dance). Three of the above subject areas are required.

Students will stay in the student dormitories, where three meals a day and special services will be provided.

Tuition fees are $1,050 plus $25 for registration.

For further information, contact via mail the American Institute for Foreign Study, 102 Greenwich Ave., Greenwich, Connecticut 08830.

Seven Speakers And A Singer Head Rally

"Black is in, Black is on the scene again," he revealed, warning that "the day of America the beautiful is over."

Howard Wallace, of the Labor Support Committee, claimed there were two major forces that could stop the war. One is the GI's fighting it, and second are the workers producing the materials.

Wallace compared the actions of GI's saying "no" in the battlefields of Vietnam to laborers here. "GI's on patrol are taking votes to see if they will follow orders," he noted. "We want people in the shops to do the same thing.

Tom Lai, City College Associated Students President, said "Uncle Sam was playing an endless game of chess with our sons and daughters." He pointed out that "war was good business at the expense of students. I don't support the war," Lai stated, "but my taxes pay for it."

A representative from the Arab Students Association said "the war was not a mistake, but was planned and conducted to protect interests in Southeast Asia. Marching won't do it (end the war), but support of the Vietnamese people in their struggle against American imperialism will."

The crowd size and interest dwindled down considerably by the time City SMC organizer, John Goebels, concluded the event with a final plug for April 24.

BONNIE SHEPHARD — Wants anti-war movement brought to barracks

Guardsman Sports

Editor: Jack Hansen

Writers: Jim Parson
Andy Metz
Kathy Armstad

Taking The Sweet With The Sour

Dance Odyssey

By Jack Hansen

"Dance Odyssey," the annual dance presentation of the Women's P.E. Department is flourishing. Today, April 22 at college hour in the Little Theater, and Friday April 23, at 8:00 pm, there will be legs, tights, and pretty young ladies displaying their talents.

This semester's presentation includes dances from various classes such as Jazz, Ballet, Modern, and Folk dance as well as dances created by the students themselves.

Though Homer's epic poem of Ulysses' ten years' wandering has left a dent in literature, the dancers will imbed similar impressions on the mind.

The Dance Committee consists of Marlene Dumpit, Eva Martinez, Mona Lisa Morgan, Tammy Downing, and Yolanda Adra.

The admission for the evening performance is 50 cents or free with ASU cards. The college hour performance is of course free.

Yolanda Adra and Claudine Murphy are two of the many dancers that will participate in Dance Odyssey.

Frank Oross and Bob DelToree sweep Discus.

Double Victory for Oross

By Andy Metz

Taking the sweet with the sour, CCSF's track squad chalked up one victory and one defeat the week before Easter vacation.

March 29th, CCSF dropped a 71-65 heartbreaker to College of San Mateo on the winner's field. As in prior meets, Larry Shields and Derrick Williams were the sparkplugs of City's squad; each man copped a double victory in his respective events. Shields sped to a 9.7 victory in the 100 yard dash and a 21.9 triumph in the 220. Williams soared 21'9-1 /2" in the Long Jump and 44'1" in the 44'1" in the Triple Jump. Other highlights for City were Bill Metcalf's 6'4" leap in the High Jump and a 126'7" toss by Frank Oross in the Discus.

April 3rd, CCSF at last savored the sweet taste of victory with an 80-56 conference win over Laney. Once again, Derrick Williams was the big point man for City with 3 key victories: a 22'4" winning effort in the Long Jump, a personal season best of 46'7-1 /2" in the Triple Jump, and a leg on the winning 440 yd. relay.

Also, Frank Oross had a double victory in the shot (43'2-1 /2") and discus (139'10").

Upcoming Events

Dance Odyssey	Apr 23	8:00 pm Little Theatre
Sportsday	Apr 24	Invitations sent to many Junior Colleges
Golf	Apr 23	Sharp Park
	Apr 25	Olympic Club
	Apr 26	Sharp Park

All golf games start at 1:00pm

Guess Who

By Jack Hansen

"The league is progressing excellently with no one team fully dominating," stated Chris Davis in reference to the Intermural Basketball League. There is three undefeated teams presently with the Guess Who leading with a 2-0 record followed by Hotel and Restaurant and last seasons champs the Young Lions both with one win.

Chris added that the main problem is teams not showing up at the scheduled time. One example is two teams forfeiting and one winning because it had a few players present.

There is a league every semester and it is open to all students. No varsity players are allowed in the league and if anything, it's good for physical conditioning if competition is not the main objective.

League Standings

1. Guess Who	6. Armadillos
2. Show Stoppers	7. New Generation
3. Young Lions	8. Six Paks
4. Hotel ? Rest	9. The Lions
5. Drop Outs	10. The Rebels

Cycle for Credit

By Charles Kilkenny

Richard Jesse, president of the Bike Club, is in the process of making cycling part of the curriculum for the P.E. department.

The bike club was the center of debate during the last few weeks at A.S. council. Jesse wanted a centralized area where all cyclers could park their bikes so that rip-offs could not occur.

The Bike Club offers numerous advantages such as guarded bike racks, discounts on parts and bikes, free maintenance cycltrons, and camp outs.

Richard also stated that S.F. Coalition of Bike Clubs are trying to have Bart put a bike lane in the tunnel so that Easy Bay cycling would be possible.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Jim Toland

MANAGING EDITOR
Ron Patrick

NEWS EDITOR
Joe Konte

EDITORIALS
Bruno R. Forner

FEATURE EDITOR
Charles Prongos

SPORTS EDITOR
Jack Hansen

EXCHANGE
Tina Brant

PHOTOGRAPHY
Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS

Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Tina Brant, Rich Brongel, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Ed Hartzler, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Mike Slattery.

CUB REPORTERS

Gilbert Francis, David Boitano, Joe Brinkley, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Arthur Jinks, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nasatari, James Parsons, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Spediaci Gets Fifth Win

By Jack Hansen

The hit that saved the game and victory possible.

CCSF's diamond nine once again obtained the sweet sensation of victory as they edged by the Diablo Valley Vikings 5-4 April 17th at Diablo Valley.

Spediaci, with the help of a excellent Ram team, won his fifth game of the season by signing in Ramos in the top of the ninth. The Viking's could not retaliate.

The Red and White lead until the seventh inning 2-0. But a sudden rally by the Vikings put them out in front Spediaci then clinched his own game by singling in Ramos.

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72 Number 10
May 6,1971

Locked Register Thwarts Robber In Bookstore

By Ed Hartzler

A lone man attempted to hold-up the Associated Students Bookstore at 2:00 p.m. on April 27, but fled when the clerk was unable to open the cash register.

Mabel Johnsen, a bookstore employee, was changing the ribbon in her cash register when a man she described as Black, nicely dressed and of medium height, approached the counter. He placed a bag which he claimed contained a gun, on the counter, and demanded that she hand over all the money.

"Give me the money ma'm," he said, "I need it, I need it really bad."

Unaware that the register had been locked by one of the girls upstairs, Johnsen made several futile attempts to open it, finally telling the robber that it was impossible for her to do so. At this

continued page 7

Special Election To Settle Council Grade Qualifications

By Joe Konte

A proposed special election has been passed to let students vote on amending the Associated Students Constitution in reference to qualifications of council members according to their grades.

The matter was decided after flareups at two consecutive council meetings in which three council members were found to be unqualified due to low grade point averages. The constitution requires an office holder to carry a minimum 2.0 GPA.

A motion by Vice President Martin Poon was passed calling for a special election to ratify the section of the constitution which stated the grade qualifications.

Prior to the passage, much of the discussion centered around a motion by Dora Liang and the relevance of a grade average to perform on council.

Liang's proposal, which she termed "an interruption of the constitution," called for the student's eligibility according to grades to be arrived at by comparing the previous GPA with the first midterm average. A cumulative average of 2.0 would be used as eligibility.

ARTICLE II

Section 1: Qualifications

A. Elective Officers

1. Must be an active member of the AS.
2. Must carry a 2.0 grade point average with a minimum of 10 units from the previous semester.
3. Must maintain a 2.0 grade point average with a minimum of 12 units during his term of office.

POINT OF ORDER — AS council deliberation concerns whether points 2 and 3 should be abolished.

Charlie Smith voiced his feelings from the audience by explaining that midterm grades mean nothing to the instructors and that they are only used to satisfy the registrar.

Smith also questioned the correlation between grades and the ability of a person to serve adequately on council. His sentiments were echoed by Florence Chan and Danny Martinez, both of whom were affected by the GPA ruling. Chan said that people didn't realize how rigorous the job as a council member was, and how it might affect one's grades. Martinez blasted the ruling, saying that rules such as the GPA requirement were the "kind that were keeping minority people down."

Chan announced her resignation from council in a letter read by President Tom Lai at the April 29 meeting. She also cited Lai for being "undiplomatic" for failing to notify her of the GPA situation sooner.

Jack Hansen and Dennis Cox, who gained 418 and 272 votes, respectively (out of 1160 possible), in this year's elections, were awarded the vacant seats of Frank Fung and Tat Ming Ko.

Opinion:

"Will Mass Demonstrations Continue In Futility?"

By Ron Patrick

To make use of contemporary jargon, it might be said that U.S. withdrawal from Indochina in the foreseeable future is strictly "out of sight" — both politically and economically.

Mr. Nixon offers testimony to this assumption by his recent disclosure that a "residual force (numbers undisclosed) will be maintained in Southeast Asia as long as Communist aggression continues . . . or one American prisoner of war remains in captivity." This solution is hardly new. The harrowing possibility of continued intervention into the next decade sees precedence by way of Korea.

So. What about the peace movement? Is the 73% majority in favor of immediate withdrawal (as indicated by a recent Gallup Poll) incapable of halting the war machinery? Will mass demonstrations, such as April 24th in Washington and San Francisco, continue in futility? According to high Administration spokesman, the answer is yes.

Vice President Agnew emphasizes that such demonstrators are "a miniscule proportion of the total population" and should not be permitted to "dictate foreign policy from the streets." Mr. Nixon prefers television football games while the Secretary of Defense urges an extension of the draft which is due to expire in mid-June. Tantamount among these considerations, the yearly escalation of the tax-payers' funds toward war-oriented spending continues.

Of the $60 billion awarded to U.S. corporations for goods and services related to the war effort, the largest consumer-oriented companies have jumped on the bandwagon. $33.5 billion in Defence Department contracts have been distributed among 523 U.S. corporations which are involved in every consumer product from kitchen appliances to sporting equipment.

More than $1 billion in war contracts, primarily for electronics systems, have gone to home appliance dynasties including General Electric, Singer, Magnavox and Motorola, while the five leading watch manufacturers have appropriated $398 million for their intricate services.

Awards for mortar and artillery shells, bomb housings and small firearms ($339 million) have gone to none other than AMF Inc. — the largest manufacturer of athletic equipment available to sportsmen, and the deliverors of Harley-Davidson Motorcycles to law enforcement agencies and cycle enthusiasts across the nation.

Kodak, the maker of photographic equipment for "people on the go" has gone all out in their production of apparatus used in reconaissance plans and spy sattelites for $249 million, while McDonnell Douglas, Lockheed Aircraft, General Dynamics and other

continued page 7

City Represented At Sacramento Conference

By Mike Slattery

The bi-annual statewide conference of the California Junior College Student Government Association met in Sacramento on April 19-21.

Student Council President Tom Lai, Council members Paul Yee, Bonnie Solomon, and Tat Ming Ko, and Student Council faculty advisor Arthur Samuels represented City College of San Francisco at the conference.

The aims of the California Junior College Student Government Association, which covers nine separate areas in the State and a total of 800,000 students, are officially given as follows:

- To provide an effective channel of representation and action for California Community College students.
- To promote maximum communication among community colleges.
- To represent California Community College students in all areas where that leadership is beneficial to provide democratic student government for the benefit of the students and the community colleges of California.
- To eradicate racism in the California Community Colleges.

One month prior to the Sacramento conference, a pre-area conference for Area 6, which covers 150,000 students and 14 Junior Colleges (including City College of S.F., which has the largest student body in the Area), was held at De Anza College.

continued page 7

Last Day To File For AS Petitions Is May 12 - Elections: May 26-27

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

Hitchhiking May be Outlawed

By Jim Toland

Hitchhiking may soon be banned in the State of California.

Senate Bill No. 92, introduced by "liberal" Senator John Nejedly of Walnut Creek reads as follows: "(It) prohibits persons from soliciting a ride from a driver of any motor vehicle being operated on a highway or upon a roadway or on the approaches to any toll bridge of a bridge and highway district, rather than only prohibiting standing in a roadway of any highway, or on the sidewalk of any district toll bridge or the approaches thereto, for such purpose."

"Except persons soliciting ride in specified place or location; in emergency situations; attempting to attain assistance or fuel for a disabled vehicle stopped upon or alongside a highway; or soliciting a ride from a driver of a taxicab or of a vehicle operated by a common carrier."

Senator Nejedly received some criticism of the bill by a few scattered opponents to the measure and is proceeding to make amendment changes.

These new amendments will probably prohibit hitchhiking on the approaches to freeway offramps.

Presently it is legal to hitchhike before the freeway entrance, while it is illegal for a car to pick up the hitchhiker on the approaching ramp.

However, hitchhikers are usually given a ten dollar fine by the Highway Patrol and may be taken to jail.

If SB92 is passed it would be almost impossible to enforce it. The measure would, of course, cause an increased hostility towards the police and also give them the burden of a new "meaningless" law to enforce.

This bill would certainly be detrimental to students who don't live near public transportation and also to those who plan traveling through the state this summer.

SB92 would take away the right of those people who do not have any money to travel to their daily destinations.

The argument against hitchhiking is that the "crime rate" would be reduced if it were banned.

Everytime someone thumbs a ride, or a driver picks him up, he is taking a slight risk. However, no one is ever forced to pick up a rider. Opponents of hitchhiking need not ever be forced into having to do so.

Many people, in the other hand, like to talk with hitchhikers and exchange points of view with them. Most of these people feel that these benefits far outweigh the possible consequence of giving someone a lift.

The attempt to ban hitchhiking must be stopped. People have the right to decide individually whether they can hitchhike without any legislative restriction.

Senate Bill 92 can be killed in committee. The task only involves writing to key state senators and expressing opposition to the bill.

The Faculty and a Calendar

By Nike Slattery

The faculty vote to determine Academic Senate support for five separate dates in the Spring Anti-war Calendar, ineluding April 2, April 24, and May 5, resulted in nearly a two-to-one defeat for the anti-war dates.

April 24 received the most faculty support, with 58 instructors for sponsoring it, and 125 against. Nearly half the faculty participated in the poll.

This firm defeat might seem a surprise, since the same faculty only one year ago decided to allow students upset by the Cambodia invasion and by murders of students at Kent State and Jackson State Universities, to "work for peace" as an alternative to finishing their regular program during the final midterm of that semester. Also, there is a drastic gap between these results and the results of the student referendum last semester, in which 90 per cent of the students who voted were in favor of immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces and materiel from Southeast Asia. Why was the faculty opposition to endorsement so strong?

Paul Fisher, President of the Academic Senate Executive Council, argues that many of the "no" votes were placed by faculty who are sympathetic with the Anti-war Calendar, but who on principle do not like the Academic Senate to take official stands on controversial issues. Fisher feels that support for the Calendar would have been several times stronger if endorsement had been asked for without a vote, but only as a voluntary sign-up.

Many faculty believe that when the Academic Senate takes a majority stand on such issues, the minority who oppose the issue are misrepresented and the principle of academic freedom is violated. For example, if the Academic Senate ever happened to endorse a conservative position on the war, the anti-war faculty members would feel that their freedom to exercise their own opinion had been decreased.

Thus, in Fisher's opinion the results of the poll do not accurately reflect the opinions of the faculty on the war in Southeast Asia or on the Anti-war Calendar, but are more a vote against committing the faculty as a whole to the political views of a voting majority.

The campus Student Mobilization Committee, who initiated the poll, fell far short of their initial desire for a majority vote, but organizer John Goebel feels that under the circumstances the 58 votes in favor of April 24, and more than 40 votes for each of the others, shows significant support. If Fisher is right, the number of faculty who would approve the anti-war actions would be in the hundreds, if they could express approval without feeling they were creating political friction in the Academic Senate.

Should You Have To Pay?

By Barbara Ellett

The Caribbean pastime of slithering under a limbo stick may have actually originated as an alternative to the pay toilet.

Who has not as yet been intimidated by these one-armed bathroom bandits, controllers of the public excretory system? These coin-operated metal handles constitute a veritable fortress on the doors to the stalls in public restrooms, in department stores, airports, hotels and bus terminals.

How many times have you impatiently hopped up and down waiting to use the solitary, frequently filthy, free commode provided? Or waited to catch a door opened by the dime of the previous occupant, before the lock clicked shut forever? Or if you did break down and pay, did you discover that (1) the seat was soiled, (2) your lower garments dropped into an unseen puddle on the floor, or (3) the place was devoid of bathroom "stationery?"

And how many times have you laboriously descended into the bowels of a given establishment, only to have to return from whence you came to obtain the necessary coin from a cashier, friend or relative?

Are you going to continue to pay this duty?

Public places intimidate their restroom patrons by levying fees, because they presume that we are too sophisticated, too refined, too genteel to protest, much less find pragmatic alternatives to this perpetual nuisance. To date, no one has been able to get beyond wedging a paper towel in, vaulting over or shimmying under the sacred portals to the throne.

Such tactics have not encouraged anyone to remove the locks, and forcing the issue is recommended. If a graphic portrayal of discontent were to be deposited by impatient patrons on the floor before the locked doors, perhaps the proprietors who exploit civilized society would get the message.

An Exercise In Futility

By James Parsons

A nation that has too long ignored the wanton abuse of its God-given physical beauty should welcome with open arms our active student concern as they strive to push for re-establishment of a clean, unpolluted environment as it once was.

That City College students have supported and also climbed aboard the vanguard of a national cleanup drive speaks well of our academic society here at home. We applaud them vigorously.

However, there is one facet of this commendable student activity that, we feel, borders on the side of exercise in futility.

In looking about, here on the CCSF campus, and the interior of our several buildings, we see stark evidence of poor house-keeping practices. Paper, empty soft drink cans and smoked out cigarettes litter our area in striking belicment to the lofty principles set forth by our ecologically dedicated students.

"Cleanliness is next to Godliness." So it is said. All of us at City College might do well to adhere to this old adage. And in the doing, establish a standard of ecological excellence that should carry us forward to high success at the national level.

Hypocrites we don't need — or want to be.

Methadone - Good or Bad?

By Arthur Jinks

Despite its various flaws or merits, the Methadone Program, like everything else has its hangups.

Although the addict would no longer crave for hard core drugs, he would still be addicted to methadone. And for an addict to use methadone is the same as telling an alcoholic don't drink bourbon, baby, drink Scotch.

The real question is whether the addict would rather be addicted to methadone or the other harder drugs. During my regular visits to the doctor on South Van Ness, I often stop by the Center for Special Problems (located in the same building) to get the latest on the Methadone Program. Recently, I was told by Mrs. Elite, Secretary of the Methadone Program at the Center, that since it was started here in July of 1969, 95% of their patients have been rehabilitated. She explained further that the switch from hard core drugs to methadone permits the addict to function in society as a useful citizen, not as a thief.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR: Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR: Joe Konte
EDITORIALS: Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR: Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR: Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE: Tina Brant
PHOTOGRAPHY: Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Rich Brongel, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Ed Hartzler, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Mike Slattery.

CUB REPORTERS
David Boitano, Joe Brinkley, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Gilbert Francis, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Tony Hardwick, Julia Jaurigui, Arthur Jinks, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nasatari, James Parsons, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

Dear Diary,

I'd like to make something perfectly clear about that with Pat. She says that I can't write speeches or talk that well and that I should rely on my staff for that. I can only be perfectly candid about that in saying that those boys are missing something that ought to be found.

Actually moreover, there's something sensible about what Hank Kissinger said the other day about that. He said that my speeches were adding to the credibility gap because a lot of things I say aren't believeable because of the way I mix up when I say them like that. (Like the time I decided not to send any boys into Cambodia to protect our boys but forgot to tell the staff writers and didn't find out about their mistake until I already said it and we were dropping the bombs already, or the time I said that Manson was guilty when he wasn't proven innocent yet, or some of those things I used to tell Spiro that he told the people that I told him not to tell). Hank says that if I would just take the staffwriter's word for it and relax a little and quit looking up at the cameras and losing my place and stop perspirationing so much all over the place, I wouldn't have so much problems like that. I hope I've made this perfectly clear, dear diary.

-Dick

. . .and a few more weeks on the picket lines, and things in those mortuaries will get pretty ripe.

Miss Ellaneous Putrid
Embalmers Union Local

Dear Diary

I warned them, but no, they wouldn't listen. They just kept saying something about "the ping-pong players are the strongest thing we have going diplomatic-wise" and "this will enable us to concentrate our efforts on containing the worldwide threat of Communism in Russia" and so forth.

I didn't stomp out until that useless Bill Rogers insinuated that I should keep my nose stateside and concentrate on the student protesters, panthers, ministers and politicians, however. Well phooey on all of them!

I just happen to realize that the whole idea of sending a group of ping-pong players to China is another Communist plot. But I'm one step ahead of all of them. Those ping-pong balls were bugged.

J. Edgar

. . .All them stupids out there try and say that I'm stupid and can't even read the cue-cards for Laugh-In when I'm on Laugh-In. Well, I'll have you know that my manager teached me how to memorialize my lines for the Academy Awards in two days flat! And I even learned how to hang my tongue out all the time so as to look sexy for the audience all by myself. He says I'll be a talented movie-star someday if I can just keep hanging my tongue out and learn how to stop from dripping saliba.

Goldie Hawn

Waging a Private War

By Bob Forman

Our country, our entire world, is under a state of siege from depraved and murderous individuals, waging a private war with society.

Murder is often the product of the heat of that fevered anger which is a part of our time; but another kind, the premeditated, cold-bloodedly executed killing for purposes of self-publicity, is becoming a new and frightening phenomenon.

The most chilling thing about this sort of killer is that he apparently has no feeling against his victim, only a desire to become famous. Witness the cases of the Bay Area's Zodiac killer and that of the would-be assassin of Pope Paul. Both of these were promoting themselves from a well-deserved obscurity to the limelight through the news media.

The Zodiac made the front page every time with his letters to the Chronicle. Mendoza, the artist who sought sales for his paintings by the notoriety that would be gained, he thought, by killing the Pope, became a world figure, albeit for only a few hours. The fact that he failed only left him with a sense of unfulfillment. The Zodiac, as we know, succeeded only too well.

The difference between the murderer of today and those of the past is that those who were mad or just criminal could only achieve limited fame in their lifetimes. The worst aspect of publishing today are those "as told to" books which serve as a showcase for every thug alive, seemingly.

People like Charles Manson and Charles Whitman make the covers of national magazines and the evening network news broadcasts. This is one editorial that isn't going to make the stock charge that news sources create a murderer. I have only a few suggestions to offer; that no photographs of a suspect be shown or printed; that where ever possible biographies of the accused be omitted; no interviews with weeping (or dry-eyed) relatives be allowed; that a little more respect for the feelings of the relatives and friends of the victim be shown; also, and most significant of all portray the victim with compassion. These guidelines will make for a better press and may just save a good many lives.

Nixon's Ark

By Joe Konte

I suppose the US could be likened to a great ship.

It has sailed through turbulent seas of anger, but no storm had been able to sink it.

This vessel was once a proud one, and all the other ships in the world respected and feared it.

But now the navigators had chartered the US on a fatal course. A storm is brewing, and even the Great Admiral and his officers can't make the threatening sky perfectly clear.

And there is mutiny among the crew.

This once powerful ship which has braved all challengers, now is being ransacked by its ahgered mates.

Why would they turn on the ship which was home to these seafaring people?

What caused the shouts to hurl the Great Admiral overboard?

The answers were found written out on some wrinkled papers, the ink smeared by water.

. . . There was a war going on. The US would fire its long-range guns at a far away target cruiser. The Great Admiral said he was protecting the smaller vessel from being captured by that large Red Boat.

. . .Many of the crew had been to sea for years living in the dungeons eating whatever scraps came their way. Meanwhile, above their heads on the first class list of the Admiral were the affluent, dining in brilliant rooms, consuming the cooks' delicacies.

. . . Some of the Blacks didn't trust the Chicanos; and the Chicanos didn't trust the Chinese; and the Chinese didn't trust the Whites. And nobody trusted that Admiral.

. . .At one time, there was vast open space on the deck, and people would be scattered throughout the ship. But suddenly, that wide space became narrower, and there were more mates aboard than ever, until all were stepping on each other's toes.

. . .Fumes from the smokestacks soon engulfed the sky, and visibility decreased. The birds flew away and the crew coughed and gagged. Instead of finding a way to keep the smoke from spewing out, the officers built more smokestacks in the guise of progress.

. . .Thousands of the crew became fed up with the Great Admiral and his officers. They carried banners and paraded around the deck with signs saying "power to the crew." Some even called for revolution and cried, "Torpedo the US!"

Finally, the sky was clear. Birds came out of hiding. There were no more Red Boats, no more conflicts between races, no more crowding, and no more crew. There wasn't even any more Great Admiral.

Those are the facts. They were found in the ships log sometime ago by a deep-sea diver.

The Time Has Come

By Jamie Lee

This is an open invitation to my gay brothers and sisters to come out of hiding, to come out of their closets. In a college as large as City College of San Francisco and in a thriving metropolis such as San Francisco it seems sad and rather inhuman that gays have been forced into hiding from the straight society. I find it disgusting and disheartening that I should see graffitti on the bathroom walls in an attempt to meet a gay brother or sister. We as people should not have to resort to such low means of self degradation in order to hide from the straight (heterosexual) world.

If we are ever to be truthful to ourselves or to be free people the time is now. If people cannot accept us and our friendship as it stands then perhaps we need to take another look at our friends.

The time has come to quit hiding in bathrooms behind walls of graffitti. The time has come to be a free people!

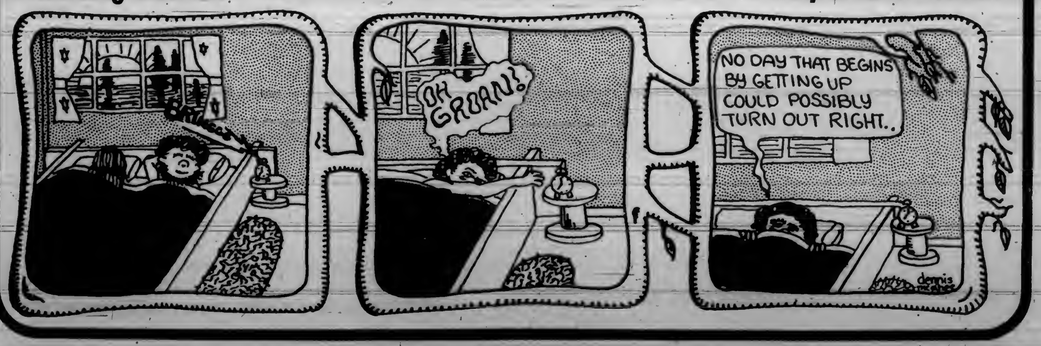
The MONEY Goes Where?

By Bruce Bosso

Each year, the student bookstore makes over $75,000 from the pockets of City College Students.

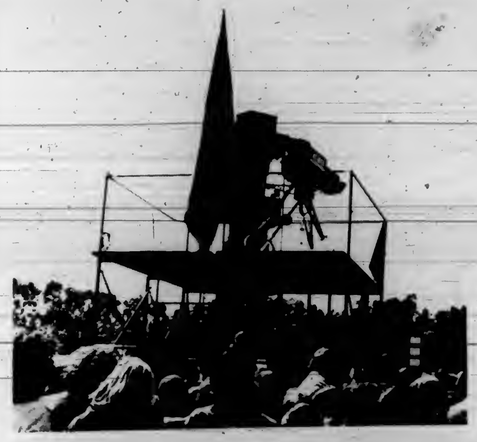
However, this is only about 55% of the business, the other 45% walks across the street to purchase books at the California Book Store.

The reason for the existence of two bookstores is unclear, since both tradition and practice call for only one. Competition for giving the student a better deal is certainly not the reason. As any student who has priced the same book at both stores knows, there is rarely a "dimes worth of difference" between the two.



Dean of Student Activities, Art Samuels, has said that the bookstore doesn't want to handle the volume of the entire student body. Instead, the student bookstore has made to what amounts to a deal with the California Book Store. Of any one textbook, the student bookstore buys 55 % of the number needed, California Book Store buys the rest.

Although the student bookstore provides the Associated Students with $75,000 a year, the officers of the A.S. complain that there is great need for more revenue.



Why not have the Student Bookstore take a greater share of the business. Break the unofficial "deals" made between the two stores. Students, with a little urging, could easily be convinced not to buy at the California Book Store, but to purchase their books at the Student Bookstore.

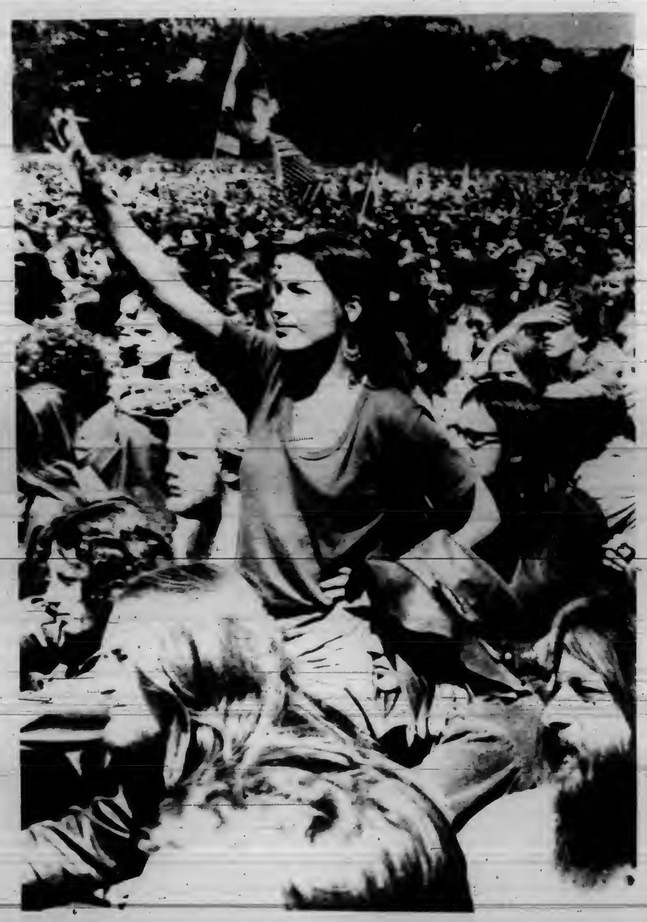
Mourning Sickness

By Dennis McGhee

...Photography By Tom Wilkins

Americans Against the War / April 24, 1971 / Seven Mile March / Rally at the Polo Field / IMPRESSIONS...

A human chain of men and women, their arms joined, holding hands across each others' shoulders, walked slowly, circling Golden Gate Polo Field Sunday, singing "All we are saying is give peace a chance." The Clergymen for Peace and bare nippled nubile girls echoed it. A small child wearing simply a sign saying "enough" rephrased it.



The Che Guevera brigade filled the field with color and flair, as a smiling vegetarian stood on the sidelines selling avocado sandwiches to those without. A girl carried a cross and helmet through the picnicing people, in the wake of a trench-coated anarchist toting his black flag. Another loner, an old gentleman representing the Petaluma Jewish Cultural Center for Peace, tripped happily through the turned-on crowds: "I once beat up a peace marcher, just think, I once beat up a peace marcher." A hard hat turned on by the crowds, reminisced nostalgically.

And then the politicians came on. The student representatives condescendingly thanked the workers for joining the struggle for peace and piled up personal points. The congressional spokesman gave the money pitch and attacked the militants. Absentee politicians sent the usual form telegrams apologizing for their absence and pushing their projects.

Non-political speakers spoke . . . and said something. A soldier spoke to potential soldiers exhorting them, if drafted, "fight from within." A practical enthusiast announced plans for a march on Washington this month. Dick Gregory announced that he wouldn't eat a bite until war's end, and the music of Big Brother and the Holding Company started. The ladies announced that peace wouldn't mean much until men knew their place.

The rains came. But it was only a sun shower; and the crowd it dispelled will be back next time.

— By Sesame

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

Recently many critics have hit me hard with rebuttals to my column and I feel justified in taking this space to answer them. There is a phrase for each of them.

HYPOCRISY IS:
1. Degrading a philosophy before trying it;
2. Pretending to be what one is not;
3. Judging a person before knowing the person;
4. A "revolutionary freak" cutting down a "Jesus freak";
5. A "Jesus freak" cutting down a "revolutionary freak";

The most BORING PEOPLE:
1. Say, "My psychiatrist says I am right and you are wrong";
2. Close their minds to everything around them except their selfish personal interests;
3. Never stop talking long enough to listen;
4. Never look one directly in the eyes;
5. Get loud in an argument;
6. Never think positively;
7. Are nervous and depressed;
8. Are jealous;
9. Complain about sickness;
10. Complain about their problems;
11. Are followers of sheep;
12. Run from reality;
13. Back one in the corner and talk about drugs, yet close their minds to religion and good food (the natural high).

The most BEAUTIFUL PEOPLE:
1. Are truthful;
2. Open their minds to become aware;
3. Understand and use their vitality and energy;
4. Smile and try to make others happy;
5. Have magnetic personalities;
6. Stand up and fight for what they believe in;
7. Are never boring and therefore do none of the thirteen listed above.

Open the door and Let the Sunshine IN!

• Personality of the Week •

Gilbert Francis is enrolled at CCSF in a broadcasting curriculum and works part time as a record promotion representative for Advance Sales of rock and soul music fame.

Originally from New Orleans, 25 year old Gil decided to remain in the Bay Area upon his Army discharge in Oakland.

Busted in San Francisco for possession of marijuana, petty thefts, assaulting a police officer, and robbery, he became a familiar guest of the county jail from 1965 to 1969.

According to Gil, "The so-called criminal elements were not criminal people but were hooked on heroin. That nullifies the fact that you're a criminal, but rather a sick person who needs help."

Gil says that the present penal system combines first time offenders with older, experienced criminals who spend all their time concocting new and improved ways of committing crimes upon their release from jail. "That's what their lives were all about. That's why it's bad to mix younger people with older ones, because the younger ones become subject to negative influences. There should be separate facilities for those people."

Gil's last 30-day sentence at San Bruno County Jail was reduced to 20 days, in order for Gil to join VISTA, the domestic Peace Corps. Upon completion of VISTA training in Eugene, Oregon, Gil became a volunteer in the

GILBERT FRANCIS

Mission district. "I worked with kids 11 to 17 who had done what I used to do myself. How much you do you cannot tell. You open yourself up and let them get what they can from what you are doing and from where your head is at."

— By Barbara Ellett

Film Depicts Possible Crisis of the Future

"The Andromeda Strain" starring Arthur Hill, David Wayne, James Olson, and Kate Reid is a take-off on a possible crisis of the future: biological warfare.

The movie is tense and dramatic throughout. Scientists are faced with the dilemma of stopping a biological warfare growth from spreading. If the growth spreads it will cause death throughout the world.

The acting is on the questionable side but some of the special effects are extremely well done. The plot could have been developed more, but the general idea of a crisis caused by biological warfare is of particular interest to people because of the harrowing possibility of it actually happening today.

A movie well worth seeing!

—By Jamie Lee

CLAD IN ANTI-CONTAMINATION GEAR — Arthur Hill searches for life.

Poetry In Motion

"The Dreamer"

I watch the wind as it swims the sky
And I wonder if I too could ever fly
To kiss the moon and touch the night
Forever wander in timeless flight

Soot and dust free from my mind
Riding a comet through mists so fine
Away from the noise away from the world
Playing with stars watching them twirl

So I stand among the muck and mire
A wingless prey to my one desire
To rise above my place of birth
To rise above my place of birth
To lie by the sun and look at the earth
To breathe the colors from gills of mind
To polish the stars and make them shine
To travel to galaxies dimensions unknown
To seek that which has never been shown

Closing my eyes and fighting the storm
Finding the reason just why I was born
Give me a brush so that I may create

That which is me
Before it is too late.

— By James Moses

Revivals, Hits Coming to the Curran

San Francisco's 1971 Civic Light Opera season opens on May 11 at the Curran Theater with a revival. "Knickerbocker Holiday," with lyrics and music by Maxwell Anderson and Kurt Weill, is a first-time production on the west coast.

Based on the story by Washington Irving, the production was not too well received when it originally was presented to New York audiences during the 1930's.

"It was ahead of its time," asserted Mrs. Theresa Cone, Civic Light Opera director, "people could not or did not want to relate to the play's central theme. They were recovering from the sad and cold reality of the Depression and wanted their musicals to be lighthearted and carefree, devoid of any hidden or realistic central motives."

MARY COSTA — "Candide"

"Holiday's" theme bases itself upon a not uncommon human predicament. A man is accused and convicted of a crime that he has not committed.

The story takes place during the mid-1600's when New York was the Dutch colony of New Netherland and Peter Stuyvesant (portrayed by Burt Lancaster) was its vigorous but arbitrary governor.

Brom (David Halliday), the man who is convicted, is sentenced to be hanged at one of the Bowrie's "Friday Hangings" (the Bowrie consisted of the farmland and business areas of what is now lower Manhattan) which are put into effect by the local lawmakers. What happens to Brom, those closest to him and how the events come to involve Governor Stuyvesant, makes up the substance of the story. The universal and timeless ideas of injustice and whether or not man has the moral right to judge man, are subtly depicted in Max Anderson's lyrical and sometimes biting satire.

A second revival follows "Knickerbocker Holiday." It is the Leonard Bernstein musical, "Candide." Bernstein has created several new additions to the original score of the production scheduled to open at the Curran on Tuesday, July 6.

Sheldon Patinkin penned the dialogue for the Voltaire satire on which the original Hellman drama was based. The perpetual innocence of the character, Candide (Frank Poretta), is, despite his consistent exposure to dissolute and strange incidents, played upon.

"One could say," commented Mrs. Cone, "that Candide himself represents the universal innocent; that kind of individual who may be found during any era, in any society. Voltaire uses Candide to make fun of the wanton and hypocritical factions of his society." Mary Costa portrays Conegonde, the fiance of Candide.

The Harold Prince production of "Company" will follow "Candide." It opens on Tuesday, September 7, at the Curran Theater. George Chakeris and Elaine Stritch will star in leading roles in this comedy about a bachelor whose married friends try to convince him to officially become a member of their conjugal combine. Their constant attempts to prod him into marriage are avoided by Robert (Chakeris), ergo, the story line.

The final production of the 1971 Civic Light Opera Season, will make its debut here in 1972. The Curran Theater will welcome Lauren Bacall and the New York cast in "Applause" on February 29, 1972.

LAUREN BACALL — "Applause"

There are no student discounts on Civic Light Opera tickets, however, a season pass, good for admission to all four of the productions, may be purchased for as little as $7.50.

The 34-year old association, which has introduced to the musical theater such expoundingly successful productions as "Kismet" (Alfred Drake created the role of Hajj, the beggar, in San Francisco) and "Song of Norway," this year boasts its largest seasonal ticket sales ever. Season tickets will be available until May 15. Information and tickets may be obtained by writing Civic Light Opera, 414 Geary Street, San Francisco, 94102.

—By Shirley Fogarino

Guardsman Staff Takes a Trip to the S.F. Examiner

Mike Nastari and Charlie Prongos watch as the latest UPI story comes in.

Guardsman reporters get a view of the Examiner City Room where many may someday work.

Publisher Raps With Journalists

In an exclusive interview with City College journalism students, Charles Gould, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner revealed his concern with "bringing youth into the newspapers."

In his press conference at the Examiner's editorial offices at Fifth and Mission Streets, he disclosed, "I've recently had a discussion with one of the owners, Randolph Hearst. Why wouldn't it be possible to bring a new approach to the Chronicle on Saturdays? he asked. We could give college journalism students the chance to edit the newspaper once a week."

This "student control" issue is now being explored. Gould stated that this idea, if it goes into effect, would be approached on a rotation basis, allowing all of the local colleges and universities to participate.

Gould, who said, "Young people should be brought along to feel the future," says that the only problems that will arise with the student control policy will be with the labor unions. He fears that this idea may interfere with some of their contracts.

"The role of the newspaper is to communicate without recourse to the language in the streets." Gould feels like "letting the newspapers swing a little more, but in good taste."

Charles Gould, who came to San Francisco nine years ago, said that he was the first person on a major newspaper to hire a black reporter. This took place in Chicago in 1937. He is by self-description. a "liberal-conservative." "This is a nation of laws, not of men; we are neither for or against the police or any other group."

Regarding editing and censorship Gould explained, "Stories often reflect the viewpoints of the writers." He said that there was no censorship of news and that with all of the news that they receive each day, tight editing is a necessity. "We could publish a hundred page newspaper everyday with no ads ith just the material we receive from Associated Press and United Press International alone, so we must make the revisions."

Charles Gould answers the questions of future journalists.

Gould emphasized several times, that the student control issue was being "explored" and made a final political statement. "The only thing worse than a free press is a controlled press."

Staff members study some of the mechanized elements of the wire services.

Story By Jim Toland
Photography By Wythe Bowe

The Guardsman staff listens enthusiastically as Examiner Publisher Charles Gould emphasizes, "Bring Youth into the Papers."

Unruh To Speak Here On Political Campaign Spending

Jess Unruh, California Democratic gubernatorial candidate in 1970, will speak at City College, Thursday, May 13, at 11 am in the College Theater.

Unruh's topic will be, "Where the Bodies Are: A primary in Campaign Financing."

College lecture series sponsors note that Unruh has had much experience with such matters, as evidenced by last year's campaign.

A release stated that "in 1970, Unruh abandoned traditional campaign financing, took his campaign to the people, and relied upon on-the-spot briefings for the free media. He lost the election, but has influenced public scrutiny of campaign financing by wealthy special interest groups.

Presently, Unruh is titular head of the California Democratic Party. He is also on the Board of Directors of Young Legislatures, and is working toward renovation and modernization of state government.

His legislative achievements include the Unruh Civil Rights Act, plus the instituting of the California Human Resources Department. Unruh was involved in legislation concerning consumer protection, school reorganization and financing, and in the encouragement of the arts.

Unruh has served for 16 years as an elective official, including eight years as Speaker of the California Assembly; as executive director of Democratic State Central Committee; and as the leader of the California Delegation to Chicago Democratic Convention.

JESS UNRUH — 1970 Gubernatorial candidate to speak on campaign financing.

City College Represented at Sacramento

continued from page 1

The pre-area conference, open to all students, was attended by six S.F. City College Council members and the faculty advisor. Proposals were submitted by all colleges and were drawn into a single format by Area 6 Executive President, Roberto Alvarese from Skyline College.

At the statewide conference, emphasis was placed on a Nine-Point Student Statement, most of it in favor of specific proposed state legislation. The statement was drawn up based upon proposals from each of the nine Areas. The nine-points cover the following demands: increased funding to community colleges; no mandatory physical education; increased (restored) Educational Opportunities Program funding; birth control help to girls under 18 without parental consent; ban on use of chlorinated hydrocarbon pesticides and herbicides in California; ban on use of inorganic nitrates and phosphates in detergents; lower voting age in the state to 18; American history courses to more adequately reflect contributions of ethnic minorities; and mandatory student body cards (price could be reduced).

As part of the conference program, student delegates asked State Assemblymen and Senators to fight for the nine-point program. The City College delegation was given an audience with Assemblymen John Burton and Willie Brown, and with State Senators Milton Marks and Marstead, in place of George Moscone. According to Lai, almost all the points in the program were endorsed by the legislators contacted.

Delegates to the conference also participated in workshops and attended a special dinner with Wilson Riles, new State Superintendent of Schools, as guest speaker. At the dinner delegates also heard five candidates for California Junior College Student Government Association Executive President and four candidates for Vice-president. These posts are currently held by John Vasques from Antelope Valley and Lynette De Nike from American River College.

Other activities of the delegates included visiting the Assembly in session and lobbying among themselves for the Executive President and Vice-president.

A Look At The Futility Of Mass Demonstrations

continued from page 1

giants receive $100 million or more.

As one General Motors official disclosed in an interview in 1968, "We want to be known as a car and appliance manufacturer, but we also want to be ready to profit from the apparently endless series of brushfire wars in which the U.S. seems to involve itself." Profit indeed. $780 million have thus gone toward such "cars and appliances," including the Sheridan Tank, the M-16 rifle, artillery and other weapons.

Bank of America, renowned as the "anti-war bank" following a series of whirlwind speeches by the executive eschelon in 1970, should re-examine its new-found image. Last year marked an all time high for Defense Department contracts, in which B. of A. wrestled more than $6.8 billion from the total budget. Exactly how the five Southeast Asian branches perform an "anti-war" effort is highly questionable.

But there is a "light at the end of the tunnel," to borrow from Mr. Nixon's refreshing imagery. Edward Gelsthorpe, President of Hunt-Wesson Foods, offers a welcomed turnabout in corporate responsibility for the war. "Major corporate executives should actively support those who resist the war," he says. Hunt-Wesson is thus initiating a revolutionary movement in personnel hiring policies wherein returning veterans will not be discriminated against for receiving less than honorable discharges, nor will draft resistors suffer because of past prison terms. It opens a whole new chapter in the history of military-industrial complicity.

Following this precedent, some 50 California firms have pledged similar guidelines and new chapters of Business Executives Move for Peace are spreading like wildfire.

Political pressures have miserably failed, but economic sanctions against the major corporate participants have yet to be explored. To thine own pocket be true.

Campus News

Symphony Pianist in Forum

The San Francisco Symphony will present an on campus forum with pianist Leon Fleisher at the City College Faculty Dining Room on Tuesday, May 11 at 7:30 pm.

Admission is free and refreshments will be served.

Fleisher, heralded by the Christian Science Monitor as "one of the more brilliant, yet subtle of young American pianists," will be the featured guest.

The forums present guest artists of the San Francisco Symphony in an attempt to give students the opportunity of meeting and conversing with international concert artists.

Fleisher is currently appearing with major symphony orchestras throughout the world. It has been said that his "attainments have established a record difficult to beat or even emulate."

Although Fleisher will not perform at the forum, he will appear as soloist for the SF Symphony May 12.

Poetry for Peace May 11

An all-day poetry seminar will be held at City College May 11.

The poetry readings will take place in the Visual Arts Building, room 114 from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

All students are encouraged to come to this informal gathering where a casual atmosphere is promised.

Students are welcome to bring their own original poetry that they would like to read or have read. If there is a shy author in the audience he may have his material read by someone else.

Featured at "Poems for Peace," the title of the May 11 happening, will be CCSF's own published poets which include Brown Miller, Dan Allen, Merritt Beckerman, and David Rath.

Other faculty speakers include Eileen Rossi, Barbara Bell, and Jim Madden. Many students will also be speaking.

Those who would like to participate in this seminar, either as an author or reader, please contact Barbara Bell at her office in Cloud Hall, Room 338, Ext. 272 or their English teacher for further details.

Second City is Coming

For a close and amusing look at your friend's hangups (real or imagined), don't miss The Second City, a group of eight fresh and talented young satirists. They are coming to the College Little Theatre on Tuesday, May 11 at 11 A.M. Brought to you by your friendly College Lecture Series.

Physiology Summer Course

The summer session of Physiology 12-Section 1, from 12-3 pm daily in room 307. The instructor is Dr. Perry Close.

Bookstore Hold Up Try Foiled

continued from page 1

point, the man fled, leaving Johnsen yelling to co-workers to "Grab that guy, grab him."

"At first, I thought that he was just joking," she said. "Now I keep thinking that I could have been shot. I was worried that he might try to rob one of the other cashiers, but he didn't, he just left."

"April 27, 1971," Johnsen mused — "I won't forget that day for a long time."

Students Asked To Vote For Registration

As reported in last week's issue of The Guardsman, a ballot is being conducted on campus enabling students to vote on one of two registration priority systems.

Each student is requested to cast their vote by completing the coupon below, cutting it out and mailing it in one of the numerous ballot boxes set up around campus.

My preference of the priority system for registration is: (please check appropriate box)

1. Current system of assigning priority numbers based on total number of units completed and total number of accumulated grade points.

Yes no

2. Proposed system combining an alphabet rotation plan and the total units completed at City College.

yes no

3. Do you feel that readmits should be allowed to register with continuing students regardless of past grade point average?

yes no

4. Do you have any comments in addition to the questions above regarding the registering of readmit students?

_____

Signature or ID

*(A readmit is defined as a student who has already attended City College)

BALLOT BOX LOCATIONS ON CAMPUS:

Student Union — by information desk
Science Building — main entrance hall
Cloud Hall — by entrance to the library coming from the main forecourt
Educational Services Building — main foyer
Cafeteria — Ramble Inn section
Visual Arts Building — next to the dome
At the entrances to both the men's and women's gymnasiums

Coupons should be mailed by Tuesday, May 18th. The result will be announced in the May 27th issue of The Guardsman.

According to Edna L. Pope, dean of Women, "Should the alternative registration priority system carry the majority vote, it will not become effective until Spring 1972."

Guardsman Sports

Editor: Jack Hansen

Writers: Andy Metz
Kathy Aanestad
Tim Kilkenny

Dennis Glass First Triple Winner in School History

By Jack Hansen

Dennis Glass proved to be impossible last week at the Northern California Swimming Championships. Dennis took three events in the competition. Coach Decker had nothing but praise for Dennis saying, "He's an outstanding swimmer but most of all a hard-working individual and very dedicated."

A legend in his own time best describes Dennis' feat as he is the first swimmer in the history of CCSF to become a triple winner in the Northern California Swimming Championships. The events he swept are the 200 yd Breathstroke (2:20.1), 400 yd Individual Medally (4:30.9), and the 200 yd Individual Medally (2:04.9). In all events considerable time was knocked off the old records which Dennis had set for himself.

Now the holder of six school records Dennis has the opportunity to seize a few more since this is his first semester at CCSF. He is a graduate of Woodrow Wilson High School. He now heads the swimming records book with first in the 1000 yd Freestyle, 500 yd Freestyle, 400 yd Individual Medally, 200 yd Butterfly, 200 yd Individual Medally, and the 200 yd Breathstroke.

Majoring in Oceanography he might have a difficult time conquering the seas but with such individual excellence and supreme dedication, I wonder!

Dennis Glass, a sensational CCSF Winner.

Left to Right: Raymond Chiu, Alan Fong, Maestro Makki, Tat-Ming Ko, and Chiu Dea.

Show Stoppers

By Tim Kilkenny

With the intramural basketball league reaching its apex the Show Stoppers have edged out the Guess Who for first place. The Show Stoppers wound up the season with a 3-1 record.

The playoff schedule has not been officially released by AMS Director Chris Davis. But Chris stated it probably will be an elimination procedure where the first place team plays the fourth and the second place team playing the third, with the emerging victors battling for the title. Trophies will be given to both teams in the title game.

Chris also stated that Sports Night will be held June 1st. Last semester the men's gymnasium was packed. The intramural basketball and volleyball championships will be played that evening.

Mr. Travis, coach of the gymnastics team, feels he has very talented students who will display the art and usage of the balance beams, uneven parallel bars, and the trampoline. Free Exercise and vaulting are also on the agenda.

Sports Night is always highlighted by boxing. If its brutality one is seeking it can be found in the ring. But the grace and stamina exhibited by CCSF's boxers are staggering. Last semester's heavyweight bout ended in a draw. Sam Helmer, Golden Glove Heavyweight Champ, gave an exhibition which was viewed in awe. Coach Diedrichsen is coordinator of the boxing event.

Saber Championships

By Kathy Aanestad

Outstanding performances in saber were given in both skill and agility when our CCSF men competed on April 24, 1971 in the Northern California Saber Championships held here at City College.

For the second straight year, City College came in first in the individual and team championships. Out of 24 men, all four CCSF sabermen placed in the finals. Raymond Chiu took 1st, Chiu Dea took 2nd, Alan Fong took 4th, and Tat-Ming Ko took 7th.

Not only was it a fine day for saber victories, but also for good sportsmanship. Mrs. Johnson, at the closing of the awards presentations, complimented all the sabermen for their honorable display of sportsmanship.

The competition was Tat Ming Ko's last, for four years anyway. He is going into the Air Force.

Tat demonstrated many excellent parry reposes, while Raymond Chiu, Chiu Dea, and Alan Fong all excelled in their flesh attacks. An outstanding day for the CCSF sabermen.

She's A Prize

By Jack Hansen

Leala Jew is president of the Recreation Association. She has been an active member since her admission to CCSF. Leala is a P.E. major planning to attend San Jose State upon graduation.

"R.A. involves a lot of students — it is a student activity rather than a teachers activity" stated Leala. "I'm not knocking the P.E. department because it's the most fabulous department I have encountered and the teachers are willing to work hand in hand with the students if such participation is desired by the board."

Leala hopes that more students will become active in the R.A. and asked any students having gripes about R.A. to come to the board meetings (Tuesdays 11-12 in B7 next to the womens gymnasium) because the students make the policy involving R.A., not the teachers.

When asked to comment on Leala, Mrs. Johnson simply said, "She's a prize!"

A Rocking Success

By Ed Wong

One might say that the Rock-Away Sportsday, held on Saturday, April 24th, was a rocking success. For many of the junior college participants, it was a morning of competitions and in the afternoon it was a fun-frolicked test of durability. The morning activities consisted of volleyball, tennis, bowling, archery and badminton. City College of San Francisco took first in bowling, tennis mixed doubles, the men's singles in badminton while placing second in volleyball and archery. The many colleges that participated were: Chabot, San Jose, San Mateo, Foothill, De-Anza, Marin, Cabrillo and Monterey Peninsula College. After a period of refreshments and the presentation of awards, of which CCSF was announced as the overall champions, every one was invited to the football field to "take on" a 24-obstacle course. The course included jump rope, blowing balloons, running, gymnastics, throwing eggs at your partner and even walking through a wading pool filled with mud and worms.

A "job well done" should be extended to Mrs. Tansko Dawkins, sponsor of the R.A., Leala Jew, Nancy Choy and the members of the Recreation Association for their part in planning this activity.

The next scheduled Sportsday will be held on May 15th at Monterey Peninsula college. Students, with A.S. cards and are interested, must sign up in the Women's Gym.

Jennifer Wong Takes A First

Jennifer Wong took a first in the April 24th gymnastic meet at San Jose State. Jennifer placed in every event displaying excellent coordination. In the Free Exercise competition Linda Leon and Sheila Kelly niched 5th and 6th place.

Jennifer took a fourth in the Free Exercise, third in Vaulting, third in the Balance Beam, and a first in the Uneven Parallel Bars.

Coach Travis commended that the team made an excellent showing and added that Jennifer Wong was magnificent.

Rams to Collide With Vikings

CCSF's nine will collide with the Diablo Valley Vikings today at Balboa Park, game time is 3:00 pm. The Rams 6-9 this season are looking for their seventh win of the season. Ray Spediaci, (5-1) is City's probable starter.

In last week's game the Ram baseballers dropped their ninth game of the season losing to a fired up San Mateo Bulldog squad.

San Mateo's first run came in the second inning on an error which seemed to strengthen the Bulldog attack. The remaining three runs came in the third and fourth innings with the Rams unable to batter Serena, SMC pitcher.

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, No. 12
May 20, 1971

ON HAND FOR RECRUITMENT DAY — (left:)) Bryan McCoskey Southern Pacific; Karen Fung, Southern Pacific secretary and City College graduate; Joe Amori, Director of Student Placement and "emcee" of the Recruitment Day affair.

City Graduates are Hailed at 16th Annual Recruitment Day

By Jim Toland

Statler Wing was the sight of the kickoff for the 16th annual Recruitment Day at City College. The successful event was held on May 12, starting with a breakfast and a series of speeches.

Joseph Amori, Director of Student Placement, acted as "emcee." He introduced the deans of instruction, department chairmen and honored guests.

The purpose of Recruitment Day is to bring together the faculty and administration with business and industry.

Each business or industry recruits a number of City College students for jobs. A total number of 1,000 students participate in the program.

The first of the speakers, Assistant Superintendent Harry Buttimer, extended greetings to the various business and industrial groups that were participating.

He then spoke about the readiness of many students here, excusing some by saying that many come here without any goal in mind. Buttimer said that the best way to avert such a thing is to establish a Career Guidance Program in conjunction with the Placement Office.

Dr. Zuretti Goosby, President of the Board of Governors for the San Francisco Community College District, was the next speaker. He focused n the school bond measure in the upcoming November election. Goosby said that if the bond measure is not passed, the S.F. school districts will face a serious financial crisis by 1975.

Another member of the Board of Governors, Dr. David Sanchez, told the audience that in all colleges, the place-

Cont. Page 7

GPA Issue Added to Ballot

General Election To Decide Grade Hassle

By Joe Konte

A decision was made to put the recent squabble over grade point average and qualification for Associated Students Council on the ballot for the general election, May 26 and 27.

This decision ruled out the proposed special election which was to be held a week prior.

The grade point average issue will be treated separately from the ballot which simply lists the candidates. In question Q is whether the voter is in favor of maintaining the section in the constitution which requires a council member to have a minimum 2.0 GPA while having taken at least tef units the previous semester.

A pro-con argument will be presented on the ballot, but in-actuality, the two sides come to this point:

Those in favor of retaining the grade and unit requirement feel that achieving at least a 2.0 GPA, shows that the role of the student is taken seriously.

Those in favor of abolition of the requirements feel that an interested student should not be kept out of office just because of a low GPA.

. . .Elsewhere in council:

• One noteworthy item is the possibility, therefore, of a student with a less than 2.0 GPA who may win a council seat in the election, and yet be disqualified because the same election voted down the lowering of the GPA requirement.

• The controversy-plagued campus seal contest received a boost from council with the passage of Steve Marigan's proposal to keep the new seal and award the prize winner, Steve Benitez, the $50 price.

Further discussion on the matter was held off until a petition could be brought before council for a recall vote.

Previously, a group of architecture

Cont. Page 7

Unruh Proposes Ways to Lessen Political Campaign Spending

By Ed Hartzler

A capacity crowd jammed the City College Theater on May 13 to hear Jess Unruh, former Speaker of the California State Assembly, and unsuccessful Democrat gubernatorial candidate in 1970, call for drastic reform of campaign spending and financing.

Unruh's proposal includes four points, which he said would lessen the impact of money on our political process:

o Congress should pass a law requiring complete disclosure of an officeholders income including how much he receives during a campaign, the source of the money, and where it went to.

• Congress should appropriate $30-40 million to finance the 1972 Presidential Campaign which Unruh said was "a small enough price to pay to give the Presidency back to the people."

• Elimination of spot television commercials which Unruh said "don't contribute to the political dialogue, but only confuse the voter." Instead, free television time should be made available to all major candidates.

• A limit on what wealthy candidates may spend on their own campaign.

"I am afraid," however, said Unruh, "That we can't put any kind of a ceiling on campaign spending. For one thing, such a limit would be a handicap to the challenger since the incumbent can send out much of his material . . . newsletters,messages to his constituents . . . tax-free under his franking privilege.

Unruh described the present situation as one where "the special interests and power brokers exert the biggest influence on the elections.

Among the most common methods employed by politicians to gain these people's support are the testimonial

PROFILE IN CAMPAIGN SPENDING — Jess Unruh calls for drastic reform of campaign spending and financing.

Cont. Page 7

Mutual Acceptability Is Theme of Student Participation in Hiring

By Joe Konte

A tri-partite committee is being formed to aim at bringing students equal hiring power in the selection of a Co-ordinator of Instruction through the theme of "mutual acceptability."

The committee will consist of three administrators, three faculty members, and three students, who are to work towards filtering out three recommended candidates from a list of 56 applicants for the position.

Dr. Harry Buttimer, Superintendent of City College, used the phrase "mutual acceptability" at the May 12 Associated Students Council meeting to denote the type of process he wished to be used. "The student segment is in a position to make a recommendation," Buttimer pointed out. "This principle will hopefully assure the role."

Buttimer originally submitted a letter to council read at the May 5, meeting in which he requested that AS President Tom Lai and another representative participate in the hiring process.

Objections were raised that many other interested students should have a say in the hiring, and a letter was sent back to Buttimer asking for the establishment of a tri-partite committee with more power granted to the students.

After the realization that the three candidates would have to be agreed upon by all three groups, Dennis Cox suggested that it "might be a long drawn-out process."

Buttimer offered a rebuttal by explaining, "I have more faith in the process than some others on the campus. Sharing in authority is a significant aspect of this thing." He reminded council, that this is the principle of "mutual acceptability."

Debate then shifted to what was termed the "safeguard clause." Buttimer made a stipulation that if any segment, including administrators, faculty, or students refused to participate in the hiring process, the other two can act in authority.

Charlie Smith, a student, sought to abandon the safeguard, which he said "was invented by the administration just because students are involved."

"Mutual acceptability is mutual trust," Smith commented. "We don't need the clause."

Smith stressed, "The only body that can hire is the administration." All student and faculty participation is strictly a courtesy, he noted.

Buttimer answered, "All authority is in the Board of Governors." A final decision for the new pos s to be made by Buttimer, in conuunction with the Board of Governors and its president, Dr. Zuretti Goosby.

Council Vice President Martin Poon suggested, "The process could go on forever." He queried, "What would happen if the administration walks out?"

Buttimer confirmed that students and faculty would take up the hiring process in that case if the safeguard policy was adopted.

Council decided to table the matter until a special meeting on May 14. At that time, a discussion as to what three students would serve as representatives on the committee would continue.

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

The Case of Media Discreditment Versus The Federal Government

Spiro T. Agnew, the Vice President of the United States, is the tool of an administration plan to shake the American citizen's faith in their news media.

Agnew is the instrument and mouthpiece for a well organized assault devised by the Nixon administration to bring people to distrust their news sources.

The Vice President's bumbling and awkward manner, however, would have made it an impossibility for him to have been in the original planning of the media discreditment. His arrogance is only surpassed by his ignorance and lack of common sense; and this plan seems to be very clever.

Initial attacks on the validity of news stories reported in newspapers, in radio and television, are meant to weaken in advance, and to create disbelief in the stories concerning our present economic recession and our failures in the Vietnam war.

Attorney General John Mitchell's efforts to subpoena newsmen's files also fits into this plan. It suggests that secretive or anti-American activities are taking place in newsrooms and in broadcasting stations.

The Federal Communications Commission tried unsuccessfully to restrict the lyrics and subject matter broadcast over radio stations; another direct attack in the media.

The media discreditment plan is already working. The Vice President's ominous shadow has struck fear into the hearts of some of the less courageous television executives and they are already running for cover. With this kind of pressure, most of them will soon bend.

Nixon seems to be grossly overemphasizing the discreditment of those who report "bad news." His ideas on media control are shameful, as far as the American tradition of "freedom of the press" is concerned.

Maybe if the administration would expand its program beyond re-election, the President and the Vice President might be able to concern themselves with more important things than the repression of news and discreditment of facts.

Letters to the Editor

The Guardsman is more than glad to accept letters to the editors dealing with various topics. Just address your comment or gripe to The Guardsman, S-304, 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112 or bring them up to S-304.

Editor:

In regard to the recent luncheon held to raise money for the Black Students Union, I wish to congratulate the Black teachers in their effort to do something on behalf of the Black students on campus. There were many people at the luncheon, including the president of the school.

Yet I condemn Dr. Buttimer for his actions in permitting Black students to gamble in his presence. I condemn equally, the members of his administration who took part in this type of open neglect.

I will never stop telling the truth about white and black teachers deceiving Black students. You Black teachers should be ashamed of yourselves because the nations of the world are watching you, while you permit your brothers and sisters to gamble their lives away. There is no love in you for Black people on campus or off. Some of you hate me for telling you this, but I do not care for I am one of the Tribe of Shabazz which means "The Greatest."

Students, who are you fooling? Me or you? Understand, Black students, what it is to be young Black men and women.

Yours in Unity,
Carlton Thomas

Editor:

Your somewhat inarticulate writer, Jamie Lee, should stop apologizing for the legitimate activities of his gay brothers. Graffitti is the art of the oppressed, and that on the toilet walls offers a commendable service to the young and frightened boy who, in searching for his identity, is in need of every bit of support he can get. His preacher tells him that he is guilty of sin, that heaven cries for vengeance, his former friends ostracize him with dehumanizing slogans, while all too many instructors at this institution indiscriminately and unacademically introduce homosexuality into their lectures on history and literature when it is advantageous to their description of weak men, but rarely, if ever in case of unquestionable strength and integrity. Indeed, in the latter case, the monumental homosexual figures of the past are invariably referred to as having been "great in spite of their handicap." Is it any wonder that so many gays have an identity problem when all their heroes have been reduced through slander to grotesque hermaphrodites.

Sincerely,
Emil R. Pernsteiner

Dear Editor:

While in essence I agree with Dave Boitano's argument that the recent wave of bombings and vandalism serve only to "bolster reactionary sentiment against the bomber's cause," I protest the manner of his presentation.

Many of the ills which confront our society have too often originated from individuals who have drawn conclusions without allowing the ACCUSED to present his case.

Robert J. Bourdewija

There Are Reasons Men Die

By Darrell Frick

When men are killed by other men (in this instance four men were students, while the other men were policemen) we have the debate of justice.

Who can kill?

Society has decided to allow itself to be the judge of itself, with the help of law and order.

In the past we have even gone to the aid of a god in our hurrying efforts to declare the wishes of society. We are a race who judge then punish each other, we select and choose who can and who can't and I just sit back in my rocking chair swatting flies. With the course we're on brutality will lead to further brutality.

Man seems to hate man. Man depends upon another till he gets what he wants, then, like the slick monkey that he is, he slides the knife up your back — paranoia, oh yes there's plenty of that around. Poverty, of the mind, sure there's plenty of that but what are we going to do about it. The killings we are doing to each other — and the answer blows in the wind.

There are many reasons why men die. Men have died for causes that they have held high in their causes for life. Men have died at the hands of themselves. Men have died from vain acts of destruction, Men have died in wars, revolutions. Men have died fighting for a bottle of alcohol.

Scientology Is Not a Fad It Is Merely a Philosophy

By Rob Foote

Unfortunately, it is a self-evident truth that the human race is on a course of disaster.

There exist many organizations formed in attempt to w[illegible] the upcoming extinction. O[illegible] group is called Scientology.

Sometimes called a religion, Scientology is more a philosophy. Founded in 1950 by L. Ron Hubbard it has constantly grown in size and strength.

Called a church for tax reasons, the church of Scientology has a branch in San Francisco located at 414 Mason St. It is only one of many located throughout the world. There are branches in 38 countries.

Being involved in Scientology for less than a week myself I am limited in the scope of knowledge of the field. But I am definitely aware of Scientology's positive implications for the human race.

Doing Something That Hasn't Happened Since A. Johnson

By Arthur Jinks

Representative Ronald V. Dellums, a Democrat, from California, said in Washington last Monday that he would vote to impeach President Nixon because of his Vietnam war policies and that he will decide soon whether to introduce an impeachment resolution in the House.

Dellums isn't the only congressman disenchanted with the Nixon administration because on the seventh of last month, three House Democrats filed a suit in the Federal District Court in Washington, D.C., alleging that the war in Southeast Asia was illegal and in violation of the Constitution.

The suit, filed by representatives Michael Harrington (Mass.), Parren J. Mitchell (Md.) and Benjamin S. Rosenthal (N.Y.), asked the court to stop the administration from continuing the war unless Congress, within 60 days, prove their authority to continue.

According to the Justice Department this was the first suit ever brought against the President and Administration by members of Congress.

One questions the mass media's censorship of importaft events relevant to the people.

Some type of amendment should be initiated to regulate the power of the Nixon Administration.

If not, like the old saying goes: shape up or ship out.

Three Alternatives: $7.50, County Jail, or Sore Feet

By Al Levin

We are now faced with three alternatives: blue marked tires, $7.50 for ten feet of asphalt, or sore feet.

The CCSF parking policy must change if hundreds of students are not heard by the Administration and the Associated Students.

Upon arriving at CCSF one instantly comes on the problem of where to park. Unless you get to school before sunrise you cannot get a parking place near the college. The only available space then becomes the two hour zones surrounding school or the reservoir which costs $7.50 per space.

The A.S. and the Administration should act now to open up the second reservoir and lower the rate to $3.50. Many of the students who are forced to park in the two-hour zones would park in the reservoir for this fair rate, and the treasury of the Associated Students might gain.

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Jim Toland

MANAGING EDITOR
Ron Patrick

NEWS EDITOR
Joe Konte

EDITORIALS
Bruno R. Forner

FEATURE EDITOR
Charles Prongos

SPORTS EDITOR
Jack Hansen

EXCHANGE
Tina Brant

PHOTOGRAPHY
Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS

Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Rich Brongel, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Ed Hartzler, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Mike Slattery.

CUB REPORTERS

David Boitano, Joe Brinkley, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Gilbert Francis, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Julia Jaurigui, Arthur Jinks, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nasatari, James Parsons, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

. . . promotional efforts. Wanted: Males, 18-36 years, for a challenging employment opportunity with the U.S. Government. Rapid advancement possible with salary commensurate to leadership abilities. You may qualify by having experience in one or more of these categories:

- communal living;
- preparation or consumption of wierd foods;
- street warfare;
- collective gathering or marching;
- morals predisposed to alteration.

Those interested should apply in person at their local recruitment center.

Mr. B. Ware
The "New Army"

. . . but lak I told Lady Bird this evenun, thar's no sense in worryun 'bout politics from here on out. I'm happy with ma family, ma past glory, ma lovely ranch, and I am now able to pursue my lifelong interest in bull production without consequence.

L.B.J.

Dear Diary,

Who says reincarnation is a shuck? I, for instance, used to be a war-hawk back in the Johnson circus. Now I'm a phony dove just winging the vast herd of political sheep.

Hubert Humphrey

. . . me too.

Ed Muskie

. . . accusation that I am being manipulated by personal business contacts in my capacity on the Board of Supervisors. That is absurd! All of my contacts are dead.

Mike Driscoll

. . . but just between the two of us, dear diary, I do realize that one must pay tribute where tribute is due. Someday, I'm going to sit down and write a little thank-you note to Joe Konte of The Guardsman for the inspiration and guidance he's given me in the development of my journalistic style.

Art Hoppe

. . . revised procedure for issuing vehicle parking citations. Student officers should:

1) Select teammates on the basis of chatter-compatibility on a daily rotation schedule;

2) insert walkie-talkies in rear hip pockets, taking precautionary measures against sitting on same;

3) apply official badges to official uniforms in order to appear official;

4) fill out ten or more parking citations, omitting particulars until the game's conclusion;

5) select area of concentration;

6) spin furiously, ten times in each direction, until moderate dizziness occurs;

7) close eyes tightly;

8) pin the tail on the donkey.

Mr. I. Citechew
Campus police

Yes, We Must Pay!

By Bruno Forner

A recent editorial laxbasted the use of pay toilets. As the editor-in-charge of this page, I have been besieged to print an opposing viewpoint. So, I have interviewed Mr. John Head, chairman of the Board of Quick-Buck Enterprises, a prominent national pay toilet firm.

HEAD: What's all this balderdash about putting a ban on my pay toilets?

BRF: Well, sir, it seems that a lot of people are growing discontented with your service.

HEAD: Service? What service? Do you know how much it costs to employ good toilet cleaners?

BRF: No.

HEAD: Plenty, That's why we don't hire any!

BRF: No wonder they're always dirty.

HEAD: Absolutely.

BRF: Why do you levy a dime?

HEAD: Next month, we raise it to a quarter.

BRF: But why a fee at all?

HEAD: It keeps out the riffraff. Would you like someone to come into your bathroom and mess it up?

BRF: Sir, I'm supposed to be asking the questions.

HEAD: Quiet, you young whippersnapper.

BRF: But I'm no whippersnapper. I've never snapped a whip in my whole life!

HEAD: I believe in the old philosophy practiced by one of the finest of all government agencies. "Hit 'em where it hurts!"

BRF: What agency said that?

HEAD: The Internal Revenue Service.

BRF: Oh. And what other reasons motivate you?

HEAD: Profits. In this great country of ours, it's possible for any kid to rise from rags to riches in a short while. My success in the pay toilet business represents a great example of the fulfillment of theAmerican dream.

BRF: Isn't that supposed to be "The great American dream"?

HEAD: Shut up! As I see it, there will be a day when there will be a pay toilet in every home.

And so I left.

How to Accept Red China And Retain Our Sanity

By Marvin Francis

For decades the white, rich, Christian power structure has moralized politics.

They have convinced peasant and middle America that Communism is all evil and Capitalism is all good. They said Communist China is so evil her existence should not even be acknowledged; so they didn't. They blocked her admittance to the U.N and tried as hard as they could to make life as difficult as possible for China, but China was able to withstand all the pressures and survived.

Now in 1971, the government decides that the time has come to recognize Red China. It's disgusting that all at once the American government is going to recognize one-quarter of the human race. Out of the heavens comes eight hundred million people, and the Government is going to recognize them. The arrogance of the United States power-elite ruling class is downright insanity.

The time has come for citizens of the United States of America to stop relying on the rich politicians to think for them. If the people would write letters to the Chinese government admitting that they accept China regardless of what the rich government says or does, the United States of America, China, and the World would be a lot better off.

Abolish the Drunk Tank But Don't Abolish Booze

By Joe Konte

I'm tired of all this talk about abolishing the drunk tank and trying to rehabilitate all those alcoholics. I can't see why they drink if they can't control it.

Of course, I've got nothing against "respectable" people who tend to overindulge their bodies to a certain extent with booze.

In fact, I've been known to have one or two sociable drinks with my friends, and is it my fault that they're an extremely sociable group?

And so it is with a heavy heart and a happy liver that I let you in on a plan ~~devised by (Phil) Albert and (Frank)~~ Allison, two former alcoholics, who have formed AA, better known as the Albert and Allison plan.

The two men figure that after being locked up as criminals for years, alcoholics should be granted their constitutional rights, and be allowed to stumble through life at their own risk.

As Albert said, "Our goal is to take the drunks out of the homes, and put them back into the streets where they belong."

AA holds the opinion that as long as the drunks were not infringing on the rights of others, then why should they be swept off the streets like debris and be caged in a tank like animals?

"We have been oppressed too long," Allison screamed, as he addressed an estimated 500 alcoholics at Fifth and Mission. Standing proudly atop an empty case of vodka, Allison urged his audience "to demand the release of Wally Wino and all other prisoners picked up off the ground in last night's raid by the police."

The flaming rhetoric brought on spontaneous reaction from the crowd. One elderly gent in dirty gray overalls and torn t-shirt held his bottle above his head and said, "I'll drink to that."

Meanwhile many bystanders had been attracted by the noise.

Business executives returning from the bar where they had just drunk their lunch, snickered at the "funny old men" women shoppers shook their heads in anger at the "dirty slobs," and some children laughed at the "old drunks."

Soon the police arrived and the crowd was broken up. The drunks returned to their alleys and doorways, and began drowning their sorrows again.

Allison and Albert became disgusted, and were spotted emptying their pockets into the cash register at "Sam's Liquor."

Those business executives went back to their plush offices, and the ladies went back to the store to decide if they should buy those $75 shoes to go with that new dress. The children went away to play.

And the drunks? . . . well, they're good for nothing anyway. No one cares where they went.

I feel depressed.

Hey, bartender, you wanna make that a double?

It's Not a Fountain of Hope

By Barbara Ellett

The new Ferry Plaza fountain is a financial and aesthetic put-on.

Here is another classic example of the decision makers of this City projecting upon an inherently worthless endeavor in their preoccupation with prestigious images and increased tourism. Would the same powers permit the creation of a FREE work of art? Not likely, for the old Puritan ethic is at work: "It can't be good if it doesn't cost anything."

For the $40,000 fee received by Canadian sculptor Armand Vaillaincourt for his talents, a quality product was expected, but not delivered:

1. The "fallen freeway" sculpture was destined to be black, instead of concrete-gray.

2. Vertical iron ladders attached to the sculpture for participatory pleasure are in plain view, rather than being incorporated into the overall design.

3. The fountain is dangerous. One must gingerly navigate across the cement "lily pads" in the pool, up the ladder, and down and around sharp corners to avoid injury. Already an elderly man has fallen in the pool, and the City can probably anticipate future lawsuits.

This display of sloppy workmanship is just tough luck for San Francisco. How does one revamp a massive concrete sculpture, especially after it has been dedicated?

During its dedication, Vaillaincourt himself gave it the bird.

Apparently he does not regard the sculpture as art per se. Perhaps he had a different motive for the design.

Aesthetically and financially a loser, the Ferry Plaza fountain could become socially and politically significant.

By jumping into the pool and stencilling "Quebec Libre" on the sculpture during its dedication, the Jesus-haired sculptor struck a blow for all oppressed minorities. Perhaps it was intended for more graffitti to follow, more admonitions for peace, Angela Davis, Los Siete, etc.

And maybe it was intended that other freaks frolic in the pool beneath the shadow of the Embarcadero Freeway, while gawking tourists click madly away.

Is this type of fun and games Vaillaincourt really had in mind?

A Combined Victory/Defeat

By David Boitano

The recent election of four "radical" candidates to the Berkeley City council can be viewed as both a victory and a defeat.

It is definitely a victory for their radical cause or that particular view of politics which has founded itself upon the idea that a rapid and complete change in our political institutions is feasible.

It is a victory for the student portion of the Berkeley community, which has been clamoring for control of the Berkeley City council for years. And in a great sense, it is a victory for the four candidates who were elected, in that, now they personally wield a great deal of power and can use that power to their own ends.

Yet at the same time, it is a great defeat, for the following reasons:

The elected radical councilmen must now implement the campaign promises they made before they were elected.

The radicals campaigned on a platform in which was included an amendment to the City charter destined to exercise community control of the police department. While the amendment failed, Mayor Warren Widener has told reporters that he will probably fire the Chief of Police. This type of harassment towards the police, could result in a "flood" of resignations on the part of Berkeley's patrolmen.

This would then damage the efficiency of the Berkeley police department, rated by a recent survey as being one of the best in the nation. With the police in turmoil, crime will increase in Berkeley, and peace-loving residents will be at the mercy of hardened criminals.

Guardsman reporters Janet Kramer and John Gose confer with Examiner cartoonist, Ken Alexander.

Interview:

Examiner Cartoonist/Ken Alexander

"My caracatures are never kindly," said Ken Alexander, San Francisco Examiner's Editorial Cartoonist. There is no way you can do a kindly caracature of Mayor Alioto. He is square, with a bald round head and distinctive jowls and is not going to come out looking like Rock Hudson!"

We were sitting in Alexander's light, spacious office which he shares with columnist Guy Wright and Alexander Fried, the Examiner music critic, in the Examiner building on Mission Street. Alexander sported a red, short sleeved shirt which he assured us carried no significance. He had an affable manner; appeared modest and we felt we could talk on equal levels.

Who's Who has him listed as being born June 16, 1924, in Gridley, California. He is married with three sons, the eldest, a senior at Berkeley.

Alexander joined The Examiner staff in 1958. "A high school friend was the Sunday Editor for the forerunner of the present California Living magazine," he explained. "He called me up one day about a job and I came in as Art Editor."

Subsequently he was made Editor. "I've always written though never had anything published prior to that time." Later Alexander became Sunday Art Director for three years, until four-and-a-half years ago when he was hired as the paper's Editorial cartoonist.

"I was taken on trial for six weeks" he reflected. "A cartoonist is not considered successful or hired for producing just a good cartoon. He must be able to crank them out and keep up the flow."

Filling the time gap from when his predecessor left the paper until Alexander was hired, The Examiner bought syndicated cartoons. "But," stressed Alexander, "Using such a service causes the paper to lose out on local scene coverage."

Alexander said he wasn't worried about competition in the Bay Area. "Mine is a rarified job. There are just three of us here. It is a safe position."

Describing a cartoonist's qualifications, he said, "I don't know how anyone could prepare for this kind of a job. You have to be more than slightly cynical and have a nasty turn of mind. You have to be able to draw. There are some successful cartoonists who have a naive style, but to have impact, the cartoon has to have visual appeal. People like to look at good drawings."

"Usually, I'll take cartoons in batches of three, and will always ask what the editorial for the day will be . . ."

Alexander said that Journalists think cartoonists have an easy job - working bankers hours. "My day begins in the office at 8:15 am, and I continue through to 4:30 pm, without stopping for lunch. My immediate boss is the editorial page editor. I try to keep in line with his schedule."

"Usually, I'll take cartoons in batches of three, either on one subject or three different ones, and will always ask what the editorial for the day will be, since I kind of rely on the editorials, as the cartoons should tie-in. My cartoons have to go along with editorial policy rather than mirror my particular philosophy - unlike gag cartoonists, we don't have to get a laugh."

"There are few people. . . who can do as they please."

We asked him what he considers the ideal situation: "I think, to be in Paul Conrad's (LA Times) shoes," he answered. "Conrads can do as he pleases. He is an excellent cartoonist."

Alexander concluded that a job with the Washington Post would be a model position "My politics are more akin to this newspaper than the Examiner. I am a knee-jerk Democrat: that is I react predictably.

Alexander does some freelance artwork but feels that cartooning on a freelance basis "is a touchy thing," and as a rule, he doesn't. "It would be unethical and not in my favor to produce a cartoon that goes against my work. He stated. "I am not in this business to get my point across. I am here to make money. Cartooning is a job. If I didn't like it I needn't stay. It is fine to be idealistic but there has to be an element of practicality. There are few people in this world who can do as they please."

Alexander's work is not syndicated, although he would like it to be. Additionally, his work is not copyrighted by the San Francisco Publishing Company (Owner /Publishers of The Examiner). Any newspaper can pick up his cartoons so long as they give a credit line. "Benevolent people pay, others don't. As far as I know there is no law to protect the cartoonist," he claimed.

He believes there is also no law against plagiarism. "It's tough to prove, but if you're worth your onions, you should not need to resort to stealing. Many copy the Australian cartoonist Patrick Oliphant of the Denver Post.

"Lifting ideas, however, is okay particularly where cliche situations occur." He cited the case of Walt Disney's death. "Out of 150 cartoonists, 100 portrayed Mickey Mouse crying!"

". . .And Sergeant, buy yourself a dictionary."

"Spare change? . . . I was about to ask you for the same thing."

"I have a hard time drawing the line between admiring and envying my fellows in the field, but here is a brief list."

- "Norris of the Vancouver Sun - a magnificent draughtsman. He plain draws funny things, and he is one hell luvan artist!
- Herb Block is a national power. They say that presidents worry about how Herb will treat them.
- Bill Mauldin of the Chicago Sun Times is first class.
- Paul Conrads, and of course everyone's favorite, Patrick Oliphant."

"On standard subjects that are always fair game. I think that inflation, Red China, unemployment, crime (but not a specific crime, nor the Church) may be considered. It is unfair to attack a political figure on things that have not been proven. You can always throw a few rocks at Russia, but try to avoid offending unless there is someone who needs offending. Sometimes I have to redo my ethnic groups. Dressing like a hippie is like becoming a caracature."

"What advice would I give to aspiring political cartoonists? I have a lot of guys come in with assorted cartoons and I don't really know what to suggest. If is a doggone tough business to come in the front door. It's a chicken and egg deal.

How can one get experience without being offerred a chance? I'd say luck plays a great part in this game. The only way the job falls open is by attrition."

. . .Story By Janet Kramer and John Gose.

. . .Cartoons Courtesy S.F. Examiner

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

"A Religious Trip"

A group of youth in California has found a culture more fulfilling than drugs. It's been going on since the year zero, but now is the time of the revival.

Businessmen are making homes for runaways. Psychedelic music has turned to mellow, "Praise the Lord") style. Clubs for drinking and loud music have changed to coffee houses for worship. Bumper stickers phrased "Smile - God Loves You" and "Have a Happy Forever" are seen frequently.

The ministers are young people who had in the past depended on drugs, but now feel there is a new light. They will say "Jesus is coming" and they will believe it. If asked if they are happy they will answer with a smile and another question, "Are you serious?"

Newspapers with headlines, "Jesus is Better than Hash" are passed out free on Hollywood street corners.

The ministers can promise a thirty second heroin cure with no withdrawal pains and show you living proof of someone who knows.

When asked about bringing other people into the movement, one young girl answered, "People have to want to open their hearts and their minds to let Jesus in. The least they could do is to read Revelations."

****

I would like to have your "Religious Trip" in writing. Please send it to Room S304.

Gonorrhea Rates Getting Worse

Sex is "Mm Mm good," but right now it is advisable to stick to Campbells Soup. To add to the existing epidemic of venereal disease in California, there is a new type of gonorrhea that is Mm Mm bad. This new strain of gonorrhea called Asian or Vietnamese gonorrhea is stubbornly resistant to conventional treatment.

Dr. Geoffrey Simmons who treats 250 to 300 cases of gonorrhea a week at a Los Angeles free clinic said, "The situation is out of control and is getting worse; the number of cases may well double in California this year to somewhere around 2 million.

The source of this new strain is believed by some medical men to have been introduced into this country through military personnel returning from Southeast Asia. Other authorities agree that the new strain was the result of natural mutations.

Whatever the source of this new strain, the old faithful penicillin is no match for it.

Well you might not switch to Campbells soup, but you would have to be foolish not to switch to prophylactics.

—By Carolyn Stephens

Poetry in Motion

"Thought"

'Tis the wall that does stand tall
Gostique yet small,
Simple not at all,
Plain to the eye but invisible to the mind,
Open to thought
Silent to the ear, euphoric, but insensitive
How do you change the conscious so?

"Shadows of the Mind"

Behold the chatter in the sky,
The mimicking in the room,
The box in the chair, exchanging witful dreams of what tomorrow brings.

Like birds in the wing, seeking, seeking, seeking; the box in the chair hastens to spread the wings of its mind, so that yesterdays dreams become tomorrows scheme!

Oh, seeker of the mind stay fast!
Let yesterdays dreams sever tomorrows scheme
Look at thee,
Then will they see!

By Jack Hansen

Float Off to Dreamland

Will the waterbed eventually replace the innerspring mattress? Why not? If all claims made by waterbed manufacturers are true, people are plain stupid not to replace their old inner-spring, old fashioned mattress.

Taking into consideration such advantages as no pressure points, even distribution of body weight, and the fact that a water mattress will custom contour to the individual's body, waterbed dealers and owners claim that the waterbed will end back problems, insomnia, tension, aches and pains.

Many doctors recommend waterbeds for everything from toothaches to arthritis.

However, waterbed dealers have their own angle. Extensive and enticing advertising campaigns and slogans, promoting the sexual aspect of the beds have been numerous.

One advertisement boasted of the waterbed's "sexual position, usually achieved only by acrobats." Radio waterbed ads use a background of arousing moans and sighs, while television ads usually show an attractive girl resting on a waterbed.

Although claims to increased sexual enjoyment cannot be medically proved, commercially they are heavily emphasized.

Waterbeds opened a new industry. As yet, there are no government or union controls. With a "gold rush" in this new fad, waterbed manufacturers rushed in to make money and unsafe products. A prospective waterbed buyer should take care when selecting a water mattress.

- All waterbeds should have a safety liner and frame.

CHRISTINE MARTIN — There are many "fun things" a person or persons can do on a waterbed besides sleeping.

- Rounded corners are stronger than square ones.
- Clear plastic water mattresses are bad.
- Unheated beds should hae a foam pad.
- Coil heating devices are dangerous.

Cheaper models should be avoided. A fair price for a waterbed averages around $100. This is much less than the conventional mattress. In addition to the lower cost factor, there are many other advantages.

The outcome of the waterbed will be interesting to observe. There's a possibility it will contribute to the population explosion!

Facts About Financial Aid

The Federal Government has over 200 financial aid programs to help students get through school. Here are three that anyone can apply for and most likely get.

National Defense Student Loan Program

Eligibility:
Be a citizen, national or intend to become a permanent resident of the United States.
Carry at least one-half load (six units). Need a loan in order to stay in school.

Procedure:
Obtain your application from the Financial Aid Office.

Support:
City College students may borrow up to $500 dollars after you leave school. However, the loan may be extended for ten years if the student stays in school.

Educational Opportunity Grants:
Eligibility and Procedure are the same as above.

Support:
Student will get from 200 to 1000 dollars for an academic year. Matching grant from the school in an amount equal to the Federal grant and additional assistance, if necessary, to meet remaining needs.

College Work-Study Program:
Eligibility and Procedure — same as above.

Support:
Work with pay an average of 15 hours per week. Pay is for work on or off campus.

Students requiring additional information should consult "Federal Dollars for Scholars" by Henry Toy, Jr., which can be found in the school library.

There is another book which gives a more comprehensive survey of available grants including government. It is called "ANNUAL REGISTER OF GRANT SUPPORT." The book is divided into four sections:

General:
Which covers a broad range of grant support programs of general interest.

Humanities:
Which includes Humanities-General, Architecture, Fine Arts.

Social Sciences:
Which covers Social Sciences — General, Business, Economics, Communications, Education.

Sciences:
Which includes Sciences-General, Earth Sciences, Engineering and Allied Sciences.

"Bed and Board," Fine French Comedy

Life is funny but Americans don't know it. Francois Truffaut does.

Known for directing such films as Shoot the Piano Player, Jules and Jim and The Wild Child, Truffaut has successfully brought to the screen, real life, with all its humor and pathos. He sees the humor in ordinary situations delighting in involving the audience with the confrontations facing his characters.

His latest film, Bed and Board, the third of a trilogy, continues the plight of Antoine Doniel, (Jean-Pierre Leaud). Antoine had been seen as an unwanted child, frustrated by his circumstances, faced with the task of growing up before his time in 400 Blows, Part I of the trilogy.

In Part II, Stolen Kisses, we saw Antoine as a young man discharged from the army, becoming aware that he must find a place for himself in the world and having great trouble doing so. Now, in Bed and Board, Antoine is newly married, not quite matured, and unsure if his marriage is satisfying to him.

Far from the usual romantic comedy, Bed and Board is a study of French character. The film is enhanced through good plotting, directing, and photography. Truffaut reproduces the atmosphere, manners and morals of contemporary French life almost perfectly, and inherent in that perfection is a quietness, even a drabness; quite different from what we call entertainment today. But through its direction real life emerges.

The bitterness of Christine (Claude Jade) when she learns Antoine has been haing an affair is universal and the suffering they both go through because of it is natural. Very little is contrived in a Truffaut film.

Briefly, the film concerns the young couple in the first period of their marriage. Both are finally on their own, though as a married couple they just can't do anything right. But, the film is about learning and finally they do. Christine and Antoine make a wonderful married couple in the end for they have learned well.

And so has Truffaut. This is one of his finest films and he has again very effectively captured the spirit of today without letting go of his sincerity, one of his strongest characteristics.

CLAUD JADE AND JEAN-PIERRE LEAUD — nearing their first argument.

Impressions: Environmental Pollution and Solution

Air pollution is a major threat to all life forms on our planet, industry is a major contributor to the problem.

Pollution is not limited to air alone.

Imagine a fuel conditioner that gives 20% more miles per gallon and eliminates 30 to 80% of all pollutant emissions while creating no new emissions! Imagine that it also boosts horsepower, cuts knock, and allows twice as much time between tune-ups and oil changes (by forestalling carbon build-up on plugs and sludging of oil). Imagine that such a fuel energizer really exists but was bought out by the powerful oil companies who were afraid of losing 20% of their sales if it ever came to market.

Such a fuel energizer does exist and is finally available to the general public through an ecology foundation.

It works by breaking down gasoline particles so they burn completely. The source of most air pollution, the incomplete combustion of fuels, is thus confronted directly. However, because complete combustion means a savings to the public of about 20% in fuel consumption, the oil companies and the vested interests are unreceptive to the pollution solution lest they sell 20% less gas and lose 20% of their income.

The so-called gasoline additive of Standard Oil and Shell Oil are nothing but weak detergents added to the gasoline with the end result of cleaning the carburetor and nothing else.

In contrast to F310 and TCP-2, the fuel energizer called CAN POL 91000 works directly on the gasoline and also cleans the entire engine.

For information about CAN POL, contact the Ecology Committee or the Student Advice Center here at City College. You may also phone for further information at 824-0694 (San Francisco) or 763-0360 (Oakland).

Photography by Richard Blair
Story by Philip Riley

Unless some control is placed on industrial and automotive waste products, man may not live to see the 21st century.

Photo Department Head Reveals Many Thefts

City College's photography department is the victim of recurring thefts.

Beverly Pasqualetti, head of the department, stated that since the thefts have become so chronic, the matter is being turned over to city police for investigation.

A four-page list of items stolen from the department is being prepared. The thefts, running into thousands of dollars, date back approximately three years ago.

The photography students are sending a letter to Student Council, and probably the Academic Senate, asking that a program of insurance and "lamp" fees be set up to ease some of the burden on the students.

For the time being, a system of structer control is being set up, as is a system of administrative decisions for the department.

Some of the strict controls will govern taking equipment out of school due to the high number of off-campus thefts reported.

Student Careers Discussed At College's 16th Recruitment Day

continued from page 1

ment office plays a key role, but it becomes more important on the community college level.

Amori introduced Karen Fung, a graduate of City College in Fall 1970 who is now a secretary with Southern Pacific Transportation Company (formerly Southern Pacific Railroad Company). Fung was singled out as a success story of a City graduate.

Bryan McCoskey, Assistant to the Manager, Personnel-Training of Southern Pacific, then spoke of the close ties the company has with City ColleE] He called most of the graduates of the college now working for Southern Pacific "very adequate" and attributed it to the specialization the two year college graduate receives as opposed to that of the four year senior college graduate.

McCoskey then made note that many of the people who work in management are graduates of a two-year college.

Amori, giving credit where it is due, introduced the people "behind the scenes" who co-ordinated the breakfast from the Hotel and Restaurant department. He also presented corsages to the two efficient secretaries who acted as hostesses.

The keynote speech was made by Superintendent / President Dr. Louis Batmale. He said that the administration was satisfied with the work they were doing, but were not satisfied with the numbers of students who were participating in the various programs. He stated they were taking a long, hard look at many programs.

His next subject concerned the number of students who drop out. "The old philosophy of the college was 'make a career choice when you graduate.' But now it's 'make a choice. If you made the wrong choice, turn around and pick another."

Batmale then said that the purpose of the placement office was to assist students develop and keep productive skills off the relief rolls and into jobs. He also said that the college needed more models of success to help stimulate interest and he also proposed that there should be a Downtown Center by next year.

The personal interviews which began at 9:30 am in Cloud Hall involved 150 students and 1500 personal interviews.

Many of the graduates received job offers. Salaries were five percent more than last year's.

Unruh Speaks On Campaign Spending

continued from page 1

dinner ("Mayor Yorty has about two or three of these per year"), front Committees, and face-to-face supplication for funds which Unruh described as "demeaning and time-consuming for a public official."

He stated that big contributors often remain anonymous, are able to reap many benefits in return for their support, and in effect exercise complete control over the system thereby hindering efforts by elected representatives to solve many of the problems that plague our society.

"Underlying all of our problems are the situations aggravated by the large campaign spenders and the benefits they receive."

Unruh praised Congress for beginning to deal with this problem but concluded by saying, "The next move is up to the people." He urged citizen groups to make reformation of campaign spending the heart of their programs.

After the speech, Unruh told the assembled press that while he thought Governor Reagan's statement that politicians have a private life is true to a certain extent, he still feels that people have a right to know how much influence a politician has, how much money he has, where he got it, who gave it, and what the contributors will get in return for it.

Cinematography Department Formed

Beverly Pasqualetti, chairman of the photography department, announced that a new department related to photography has been formed called cinematography.

Cinematography, the art of shooting motion pictures, comes to City College by way of 19 new courses set up for next semester.

The cinematography major will be offered as an alternative to the regular photography major. Students who desire to have both majors combined are asked to see Pasqualetti.

"If the interest expressed by everyone happens during registration, all the courses may be full," says Pasqualetti.

The classes will begin next fall and students have the assurance that there will be plenty of equipment and space in the visual arts building.

Science Bldg Paralyzed

Curtailment of many classes — involving both students and faculty members — was attributed by Otis Repairmen Thursday to an inoperative elevator in the Science Building.

The remains of an unidentified faculty member who attempted the three floor hike to her afternoon laboratory period were discovered at the second floor landing.

Name is being withheld until notification of next of kin.

Final Exam Error

The Spring 1971 exam schedule printed in the April 29 Guardsman omitted the times for Chemistry 1A and 1B and Business 1A. The classes final will be from 1 5 pm on Thursday, June 10.

Poetry For Peace

POETRY FOR PEACE DAY — Wendy Gilbert, one of the many students who participated in the May 11 program; and faculty members Stephen Leninson and Barbara Bell. They were among the many who took part in the poetry reading dedicated to peace.

Student Body To Decide Council Grade Requirement Controversy

continued from page 1

students protested the winning design, claiming that it failed to meet certain contest specifications.

Heated debate stirred between contest director Dan Atzinger and a few members of council before the Marigan motion was passed.

• Charla Duke was unanimously named chairwoman of a committee to investigate the causes of the high drop out rate of Third World Students.

Charla plans "to set up channels of communication as to why there is such a high drop out rate among Third World Students. "We want to see what programs on campus are aiding us," she explained.

• Dora Liang humored council when she said that the KCSF staff "came in suits and ties, like they were ready for a big blow," in referring to an April 19 meeting with the radio station crew in which only two council members showed up.

Florence Chan, who accompanied Liang to the meeting, noted that "nothing would have come out of it anyway," although she did wonder what happened to the rest of council.

Tom Lai, AS president, was disturbed since he and three other officers were at a Sacramento conference when the meeting occurred.

"Maybe we (council) were in error," Lai admitted.

Campus News

"How to Succeed" Here

The City College drama department will present the Pulitzer Prize winning musical "How To Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," May 26, 27, 28 and 29 in the College Theater; admission is $1.00.

AS Election Dates

Associated Students elections, Wednesday May 26 and Thursday May 27.

Fun Faire in Jeopardy

A Craft Fun Faire was held at City College last week.

The crafts sold were photographs, leather works, crochet goods, handmade earrings, girls waist cinchers, jewelry boxes, stuffed animals and foods.

Sales were high on the stuffed toys. Proceeds went to the Child Day Care Center at City College. The leather pouches, selling for $1, were sold at the rate of ten per day.

Participants urged students to plan a repeat for the Crafts Faire next fall.

Philipine Insurrection Speech

Stuart Miller, author and professor at SF State College, will speak at 66 am on Thursday, May 20 in the College Theater. His lecture topic will be "The Philippine Insurrection (1899-1902): An Earlier My Lai."

Financial Aid Deadline Nears

All students who expect to receive financial aid for the summer session and /or the fall semester must call at the financial aid office, E-109, to obtain and file summer and /or fall statements of intent to enroll. Students must also file a 1971-72 confidential financial statement if they have not already done so. Deadline: MAY 28, 1971.

Middle East Speech Topic

"The Soviet and American Influence in the Middle East" will be the topic of the SF State College Graduate Forum on International Relations. Students will debate this explosive issue May 25, 11 am in the College Theater.

Earhart Biographer Coming

Frederick A. Goerner (best selling author, film maker, broadcaster and commentator) is returning to campus this semester. His topic is "The American Crisis in Credibility."

Mr. Goerner is best known for his best selling book "The Search for Amelia Earhart." His lecture will be Thursday, May 27 at 11 am in the College Theater.

Leave of Absence Deadline

Last day to take a leave of absence is May 21.

Guardsman Sports

Editor: Jack Hansen

Writers: Andy Metz
Kathy Aanestad
Tim Kilkenny

Triple Play Brightens Defeat

Rams bench seems depressed as SJCC takes command with a 3-0 lead.

SJCC Overwhelms Ram Nine

Ray Sepediaci and City's baseballers lost 3-1 last week to San Jose CC. Jerry Mayberry, SJCC pitcher, held the Rams to only two hits.

San Jose's first run came in the first innings when John Staley singled and advanced to second on an error. Frank Rocca singled to score Staley from second, 1-0 SJCC. In the third, Staley was on an error, Mike Walsh doubled and Dave Salozar tripled scoring two more runs giving SJCC a 3-0 edge.

City's Diamond Nine, even in the sight of defeat, put together a triple play in the fourth innings. Mario Sparacino (SJCC) singled, Jerry Mayberry singled, and then Joe Saci laid down a beautiful bunt to load the bases. John Staley fired out to Randy Karp (1 out) in right field. Randy threw to Willie Dickens who relayed to Frank O'Leary who tagged out Sparacino at home plate (2 outs) and then fired to John Trank, third baseman, who caught Mayberry sliding into third; Triple Play.

The Rams only run came in the sixth innings when Willie Dickens walked and went to second on a single by Randy Karp who proceeded to second on an error and Dickens scored.

Coach's Lament

By Andy Metz

"The days dwindle down to a precious few.." go the oft heard lyrics of a familiar song which might be re-titled "Coach's Lament", in commemoration of the last few weeks of track season. With summer around the corner, junior college track coaches are either eagerly awaiting the results of the final championship meets or muttering to themselves about "next year." Coach Lou Vasquez, of CCSF, is doing a little of both.

April 30th, the Golden Gate Conference track finals were held. As expected, Merritt J.C. rolled over its opposition with a 129 point total in the team scoring. Diablo Valley was a distant second with 81 1/2 points and CCSF was far down the totem pole with a scanty 48 points.

However, what City lacked in point quantity it made up in individual quality. Nine Ram trackmen placed high enough in their various events to qualify for competition in the Junior College Northern California trials on May 14th in Modesto. If these men place in the top six spots of that meet, they will be eligible for competition in the Nor-Cal Finals, May 22nd, also in Modesto.

The City trackmen qualifying were: Frank Oross, in the discus; John Brooker, in the 120 high hurdles; Bill Metcalf, in the high jump; Larry Shields, in the 100 and 220 yard dashes; Derrick Williams, in the long jump and triple jump; Bill Askey, in the 440 yard intermediate hurdles; Rudolpho Narvaez, in the 3 mile run; and City's 440 yard and Mile Relay team of William Daigle, Tony Joe, Larry Shields and Derrick Williams.

Larry Shields a leading point gainer for CCSF's track team.

Last weekend, as a tune-up for the important Nor-Cal meet, the relay squad traveled to Fresno for the world-renown Fresno relays. As a result, they copped a fifth in the J.C. division 440 yard relay and a second in the mile relay, but were disqualified in the longer distance for improper passing technique. Also, while catching his wind between relay assignments, Derrick Williams snared 4th place in the J.C. Triple Jump.

Commenting about his team's prospects in the final weeks of the season, Coach Vasquez said, "This coming Nor-Cal Trials meet is going to be the big hurdle for my guys. If they can qualify there, they're on their way to the state championships.

Putters Third In GGC Championships

By Jack Hansen

CCSF's light handed putters place third in the Golden Gate Conference Golf Championships last week, May 3rd, at Castlewood.

Led by outstanding performances by Berry Gevertz and Mike Kerns City's green conquerors were able to edge out the Diablo Valley Vikings by one point 945 to 946. The conference title was snatched by San Jose CC with a meet total 924 while Chabot tabbed down second with a 937.

Berry Gevertz placed fourth in the GGC conference shooting a 72-78 for a total of 150. Mike Kerns wasn't far off tallying a 154 for two rounds. Though Kerns did not place his total along with the other members of the team it enabled the Rams to sum up the reason with admiration.

"With the completion of the season I'm very pleased. The team came on very strong; when it counted", pondered Coach Klemmer. During conference matches the team beat both San Jose and Chabot so it's not a matter of capibility but consistency.

Block Awards Banquet

By Jim Parsons

City College athletic department next Monday evening will hold its annual Block SF Spring Awards Banquet in the main cafeteria that will honor approximately 80 athletes who have earned their monograms in varsity and junior varsity competition.

Coach Brad Dugan is slated to serve as master of ceremonies and will gavel the festivities to order at 6:30 p.m.

Award winners represent seven sports - senior and junior varsity basketball, baseball, track, tennis, swimming and golf.

Block awards are made to those individuals who have been carried as squad members during the entire season of their particular sport. Emblem jackets are earned by those lettering for two years in the same sport, or, where members of a conference championship team.

City College President Louis Bat-

Master of ceremonies Brad Dugan male will head an estimated attendance of 120 guests that will include members of the CCSF athletic department, school administrators and San Francisco high school varsity coaches.

Ex - L.A. Ram Co-Coach

By Tim Kilkenny

Coach Willie Hector is a man of diverse backgrounds. He is assistant football and track coach here at City College.

the L.A. Rams Hector proceeded to Canada and played for the Calgary Stampede's. Discovering football was not his thing Coach Hector accepted a head football coach position at Mount Tamalpais High School but stayed there only a year.

A member of the Physical Education Department since 1966 Coach Hector stated, "I like City and the students who make this school what it is, splendid!"

Sports Night

By Janet Kramer

Representatives from the following sports sections will participate in the event: Mens basketball, co-ed volleyball, co-ed judo, mens sabre, boxing (all weights), co-ed gymnastics and fencing.

Trophies for outstanding achievements will be presented in each section.

All students are invited to attend this event. Refreshments will be available. AS card holders will be admitted free. City College student ID card holders will be charged .75 cents, all other students, $1. and the general public's entrance will be $1.50.

GGC Golf Championship Results

1. San Jose CC	924
2. Chabot	937
3. CCSF	945
4. Diablo Valley	946
5. Foothill	954
6. Laney	975
7. San Mateo	984
8. Merritt (did not compete)

Campaign Statements and Platforms Page 4

STUDENT ELECTIONS TODAY

The Guardsman

Published by the Journalism Students

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 72, Number 123
May 26, 1971

Bruce Bosso | Ron Bowerman | Dennis Fong | Tom Lai | Harry Littell | Darryl Pilcher

Equality: Step Up or Down?

By Ron Patrick

"It would take a highly intellectual fish to realize that he lived in a wet environment," said dynamic women's rights advocate Marian Ashe in the City College Little Theater on May 18. "Would Equality Be a Step Up or Down?" was the topic of her speech.

Ashe feels that "It is very important how you define equality" in analyzing the plight of the contemporary woman, and more importantly, "why we're here and what we're good for. For 100 years it's been, 'All men are created equal'. This is fine for the men, but what about the women?"

Ashe defines equality as "the opportunity to become whatever you're good for," but criticizes people who assume that "we want to use the men's rest room" in the process.

The mother of a 20 year old female emphasized, "Most girls are raised to feel unfulfilled unless they've had children. This is wrong. If I could do it over again, I would not have had a child."

Concerning marriage, she feels that "It is falling apart" as a useful institution and must undergo extensive revisions "in order to survive." She blames the "148 per cent rise in divorces within the last three years" on the system's "rejection of change and the failure of education to change perverted attitudes" in man-woman relationships.

A divorcee of many years, she considers new divorce legislation unfair, because "It hurts terribly as far as alimony is concerned" and generally provides only 50 per cent of the community property to the woman involved. Previously, "Many women took their men to the cleaners," she admitted, "which justifies the legislation somewhat."

Governor Ronald Reagan was the target of a stern rebuke for his proposed welfare legislation. "These women on welfare are ideal women by present standards! They stay at home where the men want them to be, raising their families and keeping out of the employment market, which hasn't got the jobs to offer them anyway. So what's Reagan squawking about? If the welfare system

Continued Page 3

Record 54 Candidates For Student Elections

By Joe Konte

Today's City College 1971 Spring student body elections have attracted a record 54 candidates in quest of 16 council seats. The dates for the election are May 26 and 27.

A president, vice president, and fourteen council members are to be voted on by the City students to serve in the Fall semester.

Six candidates are running for president, five for vice president, and 43 for council positions. The 54 candidates are the most in college history.

Along with voting for candidates, students will be asked to vote on the Associated Students Constitution. The 1970 constitution amended from the 1966 document requires student body passage in a general election for ratification.

Also at stake is the decision on changing the constitution grade and unit requirement which states that a student must have a 2.0 GPA and carry ten units minimum to qualify for council. A special ballot will be used to vote on this matter.

Four of the presidential and vice presidential candidates are running on a party platform. Dennis Fong and Charla Duke, United Students Alliance; Tom Lai and Paul Yee, Unified Students; Ron Bowerman and Kee Kwok Chan, Students for Reform; and Darryl Pilcher and Don Brown, Concerned Coalition for Student Fellowship, are the party candidates.

Bruce Bosso and Harry Littell are running as independents for president, while Sophia Lisiukoff is the line independent vice presidential candidate.

A fifth party in the election is the Young Socialist Alliance, consisting of four candidates for council seats.

The parties and the number of candidates in each are: Unified Students, 17; United Students Alliance, 16; Students for Reform, 4; and Concerned Coalition for Student Fellowship, 2.

Incumbents running for office again include President Tom Lai, and council members Charla Duke, Dennis Cox, Marge Gunnell, Steve Marigan, and Danny Martinez.

Although student apathy is usually spread campus-wide during elections, the unusual turnout of candidates may hint at an increase in voters.

Only ten percent of the student body voted in last January's election, but it was an improvement over the 8-1/2 percent in the previous semester.

Six voting booths are planned to be set up around the college. Six women are to be hired to work at the booths, in an effort to gain neutrality. The booth locations:

- Smith Hall
- Student Union Buildung (Information Booth)
- Arts Building (second floor)
- Science Building (second Floor)
- Men's Gym
- Women's Gym

(EDITOR'S NOTE: As The Guardsman went to press, a group of concerned students requested space for the following rebuttal.)

"VOTE FOR STUDENTS WHO BELIEVE IN STUDENTS"

The above headline appeared on the Free Critic, which is funded by the A.S. Council. Student Body funds paid $2400 for printing the newspaper for the Spring semester.

The Free Critic is supposedly "The voice of the CCSF Student Body." However, the newspaper has recently been used for the purpose of furthering the ends of the United Students Alliance.

The newly-released copy of the Free Critic is campaign propaganda for the U.S.A. Party. "Vote for students who believe in students," the paper emphasizes, yet hypocritically refused to give other parties equal space.

By endorsing 16 candidates out of a total of 56, including the editor of The Free Critic, isn't this a denial of equal rights to be heard in a democratic election?

— Dora Liang
A.S. Council Member

Instructors Rated

By David Boitano

The Constructive Program for Course Evaluation is being conducted on the City College campus this week. The Course Evaluation is a poll designed to find out whether City College students feel their present instructors are doing a good job of teaching their particular courses.

The Evaluation is being conducted by the Experimental College with the sanction and financial support of the Student Council and school administration.

The questionnaires consist of 15 multiple choice questions including: "Did this instructor present his material clearly?, was this instructor readily available out of class? or how many papers were required during the term?"

The student marks his choice on an IBM card given him by the class volunteer. After completing the 15 questions, the student is free to answer on the back of his IBM card any of seven optional questions marked A-G.

The questions cover such subjects as "How might this instructor improve his course? or What was the instructor's attitude towards the students?"

Once all the questions are completed by the class, the IBM cards are returned to the Experimental College where volunteers protess them and tally the results.

Continued on Page 4

Cutback for Center

The City College Tutorial Center has been forced to make cutbacks in services due to the fact that its $15,000 budget alloted for the Spring '71 semester is not enough to keep the center operating on its planned level, revealed Dr. Lance Rogers, the center's director.

The major cutback is in the amount of tutoring done. Normally, the number of hours which the tutors work run between fifteen to three hours per week. The paid tutors, who constitute about 85 percent of the total work force, receive an hourly salary of $2.43, the wage set by the Federal Work Study Program.

Ponnamperuma Talks of New Discoveries

Modern discoveries in astronomy biochemistry, and the acceptance of Darwinian Evolution have greatly aided our ability to discuss the origin of life from a scientific viewpoint, according to Dr. Cyril Ponnamperuma, Chief of NASA's Chemical Evolution Branch, Exobiology Division.

Ponnamperuma spoke at City College on May 18, in room 115 of the Visual Arts Building. He will return next semester as a guest lecturer for students in Astronomy 1 and 17, who will be studying Cosmic Evolution as part of their course.

Continued Page 4

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

Street Artists Harassed

-By Jim Toland

During the last few weeks dozens of street artists have been incarcerated, charged with variously peddling without a license and obstructing the sidewalk. The artists feel that they are being unfairly harassed by the police and jailed unjustly.

So far, the city of San Francisco has refused to give the streetartists peddling licenses. This negative action is due primarily to the protests of influential merchants in the Fisherman's Wharf, Ghirardelli Square and Cannery areas.

Mayor Alioto supposedly imposed a moratorium on police interference while plans for the permits were being worked out. The harassment, which has centered around Victorian Park at the foot of Hyde St., is an unjust depriving of human rights. The big-money merchants are once again taking away the right of the "little man" to make a living!

The street artists add atmosphere and a cultural flavor to this beautiful city. Creative and unusual people are a part of the scenery in S.F. To take away the right of another huxan being to make an honest living and to express himself, through his art, to the rest of humanity, is one of the most repressive forms of social and cultural castration imaginable.

It's The System

-By Ed Hartzler

Unlike the rest of us ordinary citizens, Governor Reagan does not seem to be overly concerned with many of the more bothersome details of modern life — like paying taxes for instance. How interesting it was to hear the Governor explain to reporters that "I had a bad year." Of course, it would have been much more interesting for him to explain to the poor and the working people why they can't dodge taxes when they have a bad year.

But before we rise as a body and lynch the Governor, either literally or in effigy, it would be wise to remember that what he did was neither rare nor illegal. For the rich, the tax system abounds with such nicities as the oil depletion allowance and write-offs for business losses. To paraphrase an old adage, "there's a loophole for everyone and everyone has a loophole" — sometimes several of them.

If life is rosy for the rich, it is anything but that for the rest of us. Outside of children, there are very few things an average person can deduct from his taxes. The man in the factory or office, the lone woman trying to raise and feed a family of children, the young person working in a low-paying job to get money for his education pay the bulk of the taxes to a government that allows millionaires and large corporations to live off the fat of the land. You may think that people are kidding when they say that the-more-you-make-the less-you-pay. They're not.

What is really needed is less discussion about who blew the whistle on the Governor and whether he should listen to his wife's advice about throwing in the towel as far as politics goes and more discussion on possible rexforms for a system that made his action possible. If the poor and the middle class must "tighten your belts," then Reagan and others like him should be forced to take theirs in a few notches.

Ten Years Before

-By Bruno Forner

The year isn't 1971 any more. It is now 1981 and things have changed something fierce. Let's look in on a few.

*****

The rail workers went on strike for the fifth time this year because they forgot what they were supposed to do. "We were always supposed to carry picket signs!" exclaimed Harvey Balderdash, union representative.

*****

President Spiro Agnew died today after he stepped out of his car without his gas mask on.

*****

The draft was finally abolished. Says draft director, General William Westmoreland: "We just got tired of spending all that money just to draft two guys."

*****

The Nobel Prize was awarded to Jacqueline Susann for her latest book "Beyond The Valley of the Love Machine." The Nobel Commission gave it to her because she was the first person in five years to afford having a book published.

*****

And finally the biggest news of all. A day of peace finally occured, only to be broken today by a group of marauding snipers who hated to see things so quiet all over.

Back to the present.

Big Brother or Self Control

-By Michael Nastari

Shades of 1984 in the Seventies? Perhaps. Slowly, the federal government is moving toward a policy of limiting the number of children a family can have. The proposed average is two children per family.

We may witness the first attempt before the end of 1972 depending on the agreement of a two child goal. If enacted, this policy would not abruptly forbid a family to have more than two children. The first step would be more subtle — tax exemptions for children might be decreased or birth control programs may be expanded.

The direction in which the administration is steering is all too apparent, though. The environment cannot support an increase in birth rate — there must be limits and the administration realizes this. Only harsher measures can follow.

Unless the people assume the responsibility of limiting their families voluntarily. the government may be left with no other choice but to dictate the amount of children people can have. The population growth in America is of serious enougt consequence that the people must come to a decision — individual control or an intervening government? More people can only bring less freedom. We do not want to hand this problem to future generations.

The problem is here. By telling ourselves this, we alleviate being told.

Why I Should Vote Today

-By Joe Konte

Every college election for student officers in almost every campus bring on boring editorials and columns about student apathy, and why everybody should vote.

Of course, it never does more than to merely fill up a good amount of space and give the writer an easy column for that issue.

So I don't expect anyone to run out and vote after he or she reads this. I'm sure there are many who are too busy to cast their ballot. After all, it takes at least a minute or two for the voting procedure.

However, there are also people who might vote, but don't really know what student council is all about.

If you know already, then quit sitting on your rump reading the paper. Go vote. If you're not sure, but you'd still like to vote if you knew a little more about student government, sit tight and I'll fill you in. If you don't care to vote, I suggest you move on. I don't want you here.

Now listen closely. Student council does have power at City College, and you could use that power to your advantage.

A student who has a complaint can come to the president, have his item placed on the agenda and be given a chance to bring it up before council.

It has been said many times council is only as powerful as the students make it. When only 1160 students vote, as happened in last January's elections, and a candidate is elected with 311 out of about 14,000 possible votes, the council is called "unrepresentative."

But who is really not representing the college: The students who ran for office or the nearly 13,000 who failed to vote?

Don't be one of the 13,000. Fifty-four students are running for office today, while only 24 ran in January. Interest is building at City College among many students. If you're going to be here next semester, you might as well get interested too.

If this column turned into one of those boring go vote pitches, I apologize. But, then again, I'm talking to people who won't even vote in their college's election, and I think they're boring.

Dear Diary

By Ron Patrick

(St. Paul to Ephesians, 5, 22-33) Brethren: Let wives be subject to their husbands, as the Lord: for the husband is the head of the wife . . . For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave to his wife, and they shall be two in one flesh . . . Let the wife fear her husband.

Mr. Betty Freidan

. . .but most significantly, it is the moral and spiritual obligation of all the world's peoples to assist one another in the abolition of poverty through the dispersal of wealth in the spirit of Christian brotherhood.

As the leader of apostolic Catholicism and a relatively mortal human being, I am fatigued and disgusted with the indifference, arrogance and hypocrisy of those multi-national, rich and powerful organizations which fail to practice as they preach.

Paulus Sixtus
The Vatican

. . .tsk, tsk. Should never poke fun at the Holy Father.

Madelyn Murray O'Hair

. . .and we just keep going around in circles like a perpetual ferris wheel — at the circus — getting caught in our own machinery.

One monkey proposes that bananas-puree be added to the cafeteria menu while another participant of similar species regards the monkey's proposal as absurd. Several puppets second the motion.

A committee is formed which will inevitably arrive at the conclusion that bananas are a tropical fruit which have no relevance to student welfare or student government.

"Neither do the monkeys!" says one spectator.

Meetheds
Student Council

. . . What me worry? My salary isn't all that bad for conducting a circus.

Dean Samuels
Advisor A.S. Council

. . . and what was that about censorship?

Ron Patrick

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR: Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR: Joe Konte
EDITORIALS: Bruno R. Forner
FEATURE EDITOR: Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR: Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE: Tina Brant
PHOTOGRAPHY: Thomas Wilkins

REPORTERS
Janet Alston, Wythe Bowe, Rich Brongel, Mike Ferraira, Shirley E. Fogarino, Robert Forman, Robert Guichard, Ed Hartzler, Thomas Jung, Janet Kramer, Romero Mabutas, Neil Seippel, Mike Slattery.

CUB REPORTERS
David Boitano, Joe Brinkley, Bruce Bosso, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Russ Cramer, Joe Davidson, Barbara Ellett, Rob Foote, Gilbert Francis, Darrell Frick, John Gose, Eve Goldberg, Christal Green, Jimmie Hardin, Julia Jaurigui, Arthur Jinks, Charlene Ho, Al Levin, Sophia Lisiukoff, Chris Maestri, Andrew Metz, James Moses, Mike Nasatari, James Parsons, Rosemary Sutton, Kay Van, Ingrid Van de Velde, Paula Weinkauf, Rick Woo.

FACULTY ADVISER
Dorry Coppoletta

City Drama Presents Musical

HOW TO SUCCEED IN BUSINESS WITHOUT REALLY TRYING — Cast to perform at College Theater May 26 through 29.

For the first time in more than a decade, a musical comedy is being presented by the San Francisco City College Drama Department.

An updated production of the 1961 Pulitzer Prize winning play, "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," will be performed in the College Theater May 26 through 29. Curtain will rise at 8:30 pm. Admission is $1.

The play, based on the book by Jean Sheppard, is a musical spoof on "Big Business" about an ambitious young man and his spectacular rise from the mail room to executive positions in the World Wide Wickets Corporation.

Directed by Jim Orin, the 33 member cast will feature Michael Logsdon and Carol Miller in the respective lead roles of J. Pierrepont Finch and Rosemary Pilkington.

Assisting Orin in the production is Ken Kuta, assistant director; Sharon McKnight, music director; Rick Sikes, of the San Francisco Ballet, choreographer; and John Lechner, who is getting his master's degree from San Francisco State College for the musical's set designs.

In supporting roles will be Simon Levy as J.B. Biggley; Michael Pulizzano as Bud Frump; Laura Voeth as Hedy La Rue; Michel W. Potts as Bert Bratt; Mary LaPorto as Smitty; and Branda Nickerson as Miss Jones.

Music for the show will be supplied by an orchestra from the City College Music Department.

Marian Ashe: Equality a Step Up or Down hadn't picked me up a long time ago, I'd be out in the gutter right now," she confessed.

Continued from Page 1

She cited a number of tests and surveys which "prove beyond a doubt that we must re-evaluate our differentiations between what is feminine and what is masculine" and stated that, "Feminity is often considered synonymous with frailty or dependence upon the man."

"Why don't you stay home where you belong, like a real woman," is the argument she most frequently hears in her contact with the opposite sex. "This really hurts. I am a real woman and I resent these types of implications. The days of women being used as mere receptacles for babies is over."

She touched upon Betty Friedan, another crusader, "who turns me off and turns other people off by her militant tactics. I'm sick and tired of the philosophy that in order to be something, we have to downgrade other people. Too many of these radical women are advocating the abolishment of men. I happen to like men! What's more, it is more beneficial to work within the system." Her thrust is directed towards "the legislature in Sacramento," where she feels that it will have the most impact.

Ashe is perhaps best known for her legislative newsletter for women entitled "Skirting the Capital" (in addition to other numerous activities) and her former capacities as legislative aid to two state senators and special assistant to former California Governor Edmund G. (Pat) Brown.

Third World To Select Students for Hiring Group

By Joe Konte

City College Third World Coalition gained the right to choose the students to sit on the tripartite committee for the selection of a Coordinator of Instruction.

Student Council unanimously accepted a proposal to request that four students be placed on the committee and that the representatives be of ethnic background.

The actions came about in the May 19 meeting in which Jocelyn Won of the coalition read a letter which called for council to be "responsible to all ethnic and interested student groups in selecting student representatives and to insure equal ethnic student representation in all hiring until an ethnic balance has been achieved in terms of ratio of administration, faculty, and students."

The coalition also condemned the "default clause" introduced by college Assistant Superintendent, Dr. Harry Buttimer. The clause stated that either administration, faculty or students could continue the hiring process if one of the groups failed to cooperate.

The Third World group also explained that having only ethnic representatives was noha deliberate attempt to exclude non-ethnic student representatives, but an attempt to achieve an ethnic balance between students, administrators, and faculty.

Elsewhere in council:

- Approximately ten members of the City College Veterans for Peace armed with makeshift wooden guns and cardboard daggers, invaded the May 17 meeting. The army fatigue-clad aggressors attacked various students, including council member Florence Chan.

All escaped unharmed, but when the commotion cleared, one member of the group peered into the meeting room and soberly warned, "This time it's only a game, maybe the next time, it's for real."

- Harry Littell was appointed to lead a student delegation to the bookstore committee. The appointment followed Littell's comments on the campus store, which he cited for its "paranoic type of salesmanship because they're afraid they'll get ripped off."

Littell said Associated Students are entitled to jobs and more money there and that the bookstore is capable of making a fortune."

- Bonnie Solomon told council City College should belong to Area 7 instead of Area 6 because the problems are more in tune with the colleges in Area 7. She mentioned the higher minority population in that area.

The matter was tabled to a later date.

- Bonnie also received an official kiss from President Tom Lai on her May 17 birthday. Council took time out from its busy agenda to sing "Happy Birthday."

- Lai's announcement that 56 candidates are running for Student Council brought on this gem from Randy Siebert: "that means at least 56 votes will be cast."

- Xandra Malandra discussed Cloud Hall East, the new building to be constructed on campus. She objected that students didn't have a say on the site chosen for the structure, and complained that it would block the view from Cloud Hall.

Martin Poon, vice president, agreed to research the matter and report his findings to council in the next week.

'I Like To Watch a Good Sex Movie' - Says Filmaker

By Joe Davidson

Art and Jim Mitchell are brothers who share more than just a kinship. The two work as a team producing adult films, and are also co-owners of the O'Farrell Theater in San Francisco. They've been in this business a little over two years; which seems to the San Francisco Board of Supervisors and various civic groups to be two years too long.

An inside look at this notorious enterprise, revealed the Mitchell's movie house, which is super clean. A few straight theaters around town could take an example from it.

In an interview with Art Mitchell, he candidly expressed what motivated him to go into business: "Money! I had just gotten out of the army, and my brother was a film student at San Francisco State," Art explained. "We didn't do well at first, but things eventually improved."

"We tried an entirely different approach by adding a story line and a bit of humor to our films," he concluded.

Some people might refer to him and others in this type of operation as pornographers or smut peddlers. Mitchell said pornographic material would be the depicting of sadism, child rape, and bestiality. "We have never depicted this type of thing and those who accuse us of this have never seen any of our films," he noted. "I personally don't find these deviations erotic."

Art also commented on how he and his brother were contending with the current crackdown the police are waging on adult theaters and porno book stores.

Art responded to the question of whether he enjoys sex films. "We're all voyeurs to a degree." "Sure, I like to watch a good sex movie," he admitted.

FOCUSING IN ON O'FARRELL THEATER — An action scene from adult films produced by Art and Jim Mitchell.

"It's unfortunate for those in the business that the more one is exposed to erotic films the less one is stimulated.

At the conclusion of the interview, Art invited this writer to watch the current feature called "Wild Campus."

If you want a review of the film, you will have to see it yourself.

Neither the space nor the courage is available to review it here.

Presidential Candidates and Platform Statements

★ Bruce Bosso ★
(Independent)

Responsibility is a word that is often heard in election circles. Every candidate claims that he is responsible, yet their plans are unclear, and their actions seem unrelated to the job they desire.

My plan of action is closely related for the school that I wish to represent. If I were to assume the job of A.S. President, I would immediately investigate the A.S. budget. Each semester, over $40,000 is spent by the A.S. Most of the time sums of money benefit very small groups on the campus. A.S. Presidents tend to rubber stamp this farce, but I wouldn't. I would make sure all the money spent by the A.S. would benefit all members of the student body.

I would also look into the Student Body Card situation, and make sure that either prices are lowered, benefits raised, or hopefully both. If you want your money spent wisely, and the parking lot extortion stopped, then you want BRUCE BOSSO for the next A.S. President.

★ Harry Littell ★
(Independent)

Many of you know me as the companion of a Beagle named Samantha. Sam and I like City College; we enjoy the beautiful views, the wonderful plants and flowers, and the many different and exciting people. So, I am running again.

Sam and I do not rejoice in a community where leaders seek after self glorification; where by flattery and self-righteousness, they win the hearts of followers and thereby destroy righteous feelings.

In addition, we become angry when leaders use their positions of esteem and respect as thrones of judgment. Many behave as self ordained gods, manipulating the lives of students, abusing their positions of authority and leadership; all the while, having a perfect knowledge of their fraud.

Sam and I are you and you. All of us feel and want to believe our leaders care about us and our welfare.

I care about you, (Sam does too).

★ Ron Bowerman ★
VP - Kwee Kwok Chan
(Students for Reform)

I'm the presidential candidate for the Students For Reform. I believe the elections are a farce which means student government is a farce. Four to twelve percent of the students vote for a government which represents all the students. When the student government acts, they do it in the name of a majority of the students at City. It's not just-if a government doesn't represent its people, it shouldn't exist. Ninety percent of students don't care about student government-they want to get their grade and move on to a four year college (myself included). Students participating in government are becoming an "elitist faction" on ego trips. Campus police should only direct traffic and give parking tickets-not harrass students. A percentage of the ticket fine should go to the school. A majority of students buy AS cards to obtain a parking permit. This is unjust. Students are giving money for activities they may not support. If you want a parking permit, you should be able to buy one for, say $2. If you belong to a funded activity, you should be forced to buy an AS card to support your own cause. I feel that I or my party will not be elected because the students I feel we represent don't go near the voting booths — they are the unrepresented majority.

★ Darryl Pilcher ★
VP - Dan Brown
Concerned Coalition for Student Fellowship

Since most of us must spend some time at City College, we may as well make the best of it.

We want City College to be a place to which students want to come, learn, and have fun. We, therefore, will:

1) promote more daytime campus entertainment
   a. bands
   b. dances, and
   c. sports;
2) get more coverage of student activities;
3) take a liberal stand on the dissemination of information;
4) work to acquire more money for groups, a few of which are:
   a. Child-care Center
   b. Tutorial Center
   c. Clubs and their activities;
5) will work to get more counselors to represent those students who are not adequately represented;
6) make sure that students have an effective voice in the hiring of instructors;
7) welcome suggestions.

We are looking forward to a great voting turnout and to serving whoever you choose.

★ Tom Lai ★
VP - Paul Yee
Unified Students

I am running for re-election for the office of A.S. President and urge the whole student body to participate and vote.

The Constitution of the Associated Students of CCSF, in Article 2 Section 1-A2 reads that a person "must carry a 2.0 grade point average with a minimum of 10 units from the previous semester" in order to participate in student government. I feel that this is not asking for blood nor is it demanding one's life. I ask all to vote to uphold Article 2 Section 1-A2.

It is my wish to see students pay only $13.50 for parking and $3.00 for student body cards. I suppose all athletic, cultural, and scholastic activities on this campus.

If a person will pick at his skin for an infection, or for trouble, he will not only get the infection but double trouble.

Let us all be a little less impatient with those we deem too slow and a little less arrogant because of all we might know.

I do not believe there is a snake behind every tree and I'll continue to trust and work with those who are sincere.

★ Young Socialist Alliance ★
Joe Ward, Bonnie Sheppard
Mike Slattery, John Goebel

What we stand for:

1) Student-faculty control of all hiring and firing of personnel.
2) Independent ethnic studies departments controlled by the students and faculty of those departments.
3) Free Speech on campus.
4) Free health care with facilities for men and women. Free contraceptives on demand. Abortion referral service.
5)Free childbirth available to all students, faculty, and staff.
6) Student control of the Guardsman.
7) Abolition of the Police Science Department.
8) Immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia. No Campus complicity with the war. Abolish the draft.
9) Vote Yes on referendum to eliminate restrictions on student council elections.

★ Dennis Fong ★
VP - Charla Duke
(United Students Alliance)

If you are tired of a Student Council primarily consisting of a token few students who want to implement change for students, then we offer the solution of an entire council who will work to suit the needs of students.

A group of students who feel student grievances should have first priority on campus have formed the United Students Alliance, composed of many campus organizations: Black Students Union, Asian Association for Unity, La Raza, Philippine Coalition, Bicycle Club, Veterans for Peace, Student Advice Center, Experimental College, Day Care, Ecology Club, Free Critic, and Course valuation.

A vote for us is a vote for:

1) "Mutual Acceptability" among students, faculty, administrators on hiring and major policy-making decisions 2) Full time medical doctor on campus 3) two day grace period for students receiving parking tickets; 4) auditing the bookstore; 5) re-evaluation of fiscal expenditures; 6) installing asphalt pathways where there are dirt roads; 7 more flexible library hours; 8) student run health store as alternative to cafeteria; 9) better protection of bicycles and moterbikes.

Candidates

UNIFIED STUDENTS

A.S. President - Tom Lai
Vice President - Paul Yee
Student Council -
John Beauchamp
Peter Beauchamp
Robert Brown
Dennis Cox
Marge Gunnell
Cheryl Hritz
Lee Hubbard
Francis Kok
Faanape Liaiga
Connie Louie
Guymond Louie
Steve Marigan
Larry Pong
Gary Pool
Hung Sing "Marks" Lam

STUDENTS FOR REFORM

A.S. President - Ron Bowerman
Vice President - Kee Kwok Chan
Student Council -
Charles Colton
Joe Deramon

UNITED STUDENTS ALLIANCE

A.S. President - Dennis Fong
Vice President - Charla Duke
Student Council -
Dan Atzinger
Raymond Bazurto
Felicia Cala
Robert Kahn
Cecilia Madrid
Jack McCloskey
Jim O'Donnell
Samuel Sanchez
Randy Seibert
Steve Sum
Charles Taliafero
Joe Tolero
Earlene Walters
Jocelyn Won

YOUNG SOCIALIST ALLIANCE

Student Council -
John Goebel
Bonnie Sheppard
Mike Slattery
Joe Ward

CONCERNED COALITION FOR STUDENT FELLOWSHIP

A.S. President - Darryl Pilcher
Vice President - Don Brown

On Ballot

Should Article II, Section I, reading:

"Elective officers must maintain a 2.0 grade point average with a minimum of ten units from the previous semester"

be amended to read:

"Elective officers must have a minimum of ten units from the previous semester?"

Argument Pro (yes vote means "amend")

The present requirements discriminate against students whose academic background are below par against those whose activities in behalf of students and the community at large consume much of their time. We have no right to strip from these people their right to serve their fellows. Students who are involved in active programs for change on the campus community are likely to be most attuned to student needs. Academic elitism has no plake in student governance.

Argument Con (no vote means "retain")

The present requirements demand only a "C" average, the minimum for a council which hopes to encourage respect for its work. We should not allow our representatives to neglect schoolwork; this would downgrade the quality of council. Student government should have the respect of factions (students, faculty, administration), and grade point requirements are the best way to ensure this.

New Discoveries

Continued from Page 1

He told how the ancients had explained the origin of life as that of spontaneous generation, the belief that all living things developed from non-living things. While modern scientists are looking back to that theory, "we aren't talking about mice jumping out of primeval ooze or frogs coming out of dirty linen."

"What we are trying to do," he stated, "is to find what the components of life are, what amino acids that life develop from." The methods being used to obtain a solution to this question were further illustrated with slides, showing the various components of amino acids, the mathematical devices used to calculate the age of the universe, the solar system, the earth, and the oldest evidence of life on our planet.

He decided the various stages of evolution, ranging from inorganic, to organic, to biological, and announced that according to modern thinking, "I am inclined to believe that concept of chemical evolution would lead from the small atom, to the molecular atom, to life."

"It is important, I think, to study as much as possible about other planets and galaxies; perhaps we can find many answers to the origin of life development that way."

Instructors Rated

Continued from Page 1

Once all the tallies are made, the Experimental College hopes to publish a book in which the evaluations of the students would serve as a manual to incoming students concerning the best instructors available. "Such a book," a student volunteer remarked, "will tell the student all about what kind of a teacher he is signing up for at registration time."

If an instructor receives a very low rating from his students, he would not be automatically dismissed since a tenure system is in operation at City.

This type of system basically guarantees a tenured teacher job security in his present post. This same volunteer remarked, "If an instructor is rated low and each term nobody signs up for his classes, the college will be forced to look at just how effective the teacher is."

CUB STAFF MASCOT and Personality of the Week
(See Page 7 for story)

Lee Lashes at Free Critic United Alliance Under Fire

Dr. Alfred Lee

"I feel there ought to be a rigorous academic standard adhering to the present qualifications set down by Council regulations."

Dr. Alfred Lee, chemistry faculty, and sponsor of the Chinese Cultural Club, lashed out at the Free Critic's lack of fair representation in their May 25, 1971 edition when it appeared on campus.

"In four pages, the Free Critic only managed to endorse 16 candidates out of a total of 56," he said.

"This is just going too far. Associated Students Council allocated the Free Critic $2400 for the Spring semester, which unfortunately is uncontrolled.

Something ought to be done about it. The editors are using the paper for their own ends.

The United Students Alliance, to which the Critic gave the lion's share of AS Council candidate publicity, included the names of several students connected with Experimental College where the Free Critic is prepared for publication.

Dr. Lee said he would pursue this matter further with AS Council.

"I highly disagree with what has been said about grade point average in the USA's propaganda," he continued.

— by Janet Kramer

Financial Aids Short On Funds Students Suffer

The Financial Aids office is facing the serious problem of having too little money to help the needy students attending City College.

Kenneth Castellino, financial aids officer, was not optimistic when he said, "The main problem we face is that the amount of needy students on this campus has increased by roughly 20 per cent, whereas the state and federal grants to this campus have increased by only approximately 10 per cent.

Kenneth Castellino

In addition, there have been new cutbacks by the state which are bound to effect our programs."

Last year, the Financial Aids office received a total of approximately $323,471 from the federal government to run its various programs. Added to this money, was a total of $182,000 from the state.

An approximate total of $500,000 was loaned to students through the numerous programs the office administrates. This year, however, California will probably loan the college much less.

Continued on Page 8

Mid-East Hot Spot Debated at Forum

State College's "International Relations" presentation of "Soviet Goals in the Middle East" at the Little Theatre Tuesday, May 25, during College Hour, hi-lighted intensive and analytical information on the Israeli-Arab conflict in the Middle East.

Teresa Barrett and Karen Yorke, members of State College's "Task Force," established one aspect of "Big Powers" goals in the Middle East with the Soviet Union undermining "military balance and stabilization" in the United Arab Republic.

Miss Barrett began her brief with the history of British imperialism in the Middle East. "The Middle East conflict existed long before Israel became a state; with the groundwork for the creation of that state by the British government.

With Israel's independence in 1948, Britain became unable to assert power over the sizzling Arab-Israeli conflict.

Big powers in turn recognized the newly proclaimed State of Israel and the competition for US and USSR influence in the Middle East began.

With the Jewish potential for socialism, the USSR foresaw an inroad into

Continued on Page 8

Plan Summer Workshop On Ecology Improvement

A special summer workshop aimed at developing effective ecology programs for various civic, neighborhood and student groups will be offered this summer at City College from June 28 through August 6.

Leading Bay Area ecologists will conduct the workshop which is specially designed to instruct teachers, student teachers and community leaders in new and stimulating ways to make ecology programs pay off.

For more information students may contact Edmund Bedecarrax at 587-7272, extension 603.

Foreign Students React Angrily To Tuition Hike

Students holding foreign visas were notified of a proposal by the College to raise tuition fees to $30 per unit as of the Summer Session.

This recommendation, made by the administration, has not yet been acted upon by the City College of S.F. Board of Trustees.

Dr. Joseph Jacobsen, foreign student faculty adviser, said the reason for the rise is to average out the cost per student per unit for the State of California. For example, students carrying 15 units costs the school $1100 but the average throughout the State is $900.

Most colleges will be charging $30 (also not effective) beginning July 1st. Present cost per unit at CCSF is $14.

At a meeting with the Board of Governors in the Statler Wing Wednesday evening, May 26, Lada Pahlnic, foreign student, member of the International Students Club, said: "There are two different groups of foreign students in City College of S.F. The first, those who come on exchange programs, (national or international scholarships) or on resident visas. The second group is made up of foreign private students who are not blessed with any of the privileges previously mentioned, and have many more problems with which to cope.

"They are required by the immigration laws to be full time students and sometimes [illegible]owed to work, but no more than twenty hours per week. In most cases they do not come from rich families and it is a struggle for their families to put them through the College."

Can They Cope?

Student response to tuition rise was:

"It will be harder to continue. If they do raise the tuition, I can always move to another country," said Gustavo Romero, 21, from Equador.

"I will be able to continue but at a much harder sacrifice," said Gabi Khoury, 23, from Egypt.

"It will make it harder for my parents to send money. I wouldn't be able to stay as long as I wanted, which would be a waste of time because I couldn't complete my desired objective," said Beatrice Gaglianone, 20, from Brazil.

Continued on Page 8

HIGH PRICE OF TUITION — Foreign students have a rap session about proposed hike in fees. (Left: Nahira, Anwar Khenaisser and Raja Seth).

HANDS THAT WORK ...

For many students, school means books and papers.

In contrast, the students in the ceramics workshop live and work in a world of more physical tangibles. Their hours are spent with their minds and hands involved in the world of clay, wood and paint.

The enthusiasm of those who are creating stimulates feelings of joy which can be viewed and felt by the observer.

One need not linger long in the ceramics workshop to share the excitement experienced by students as new creations take form at their fingertips.

... IN WOOD AND CLAY

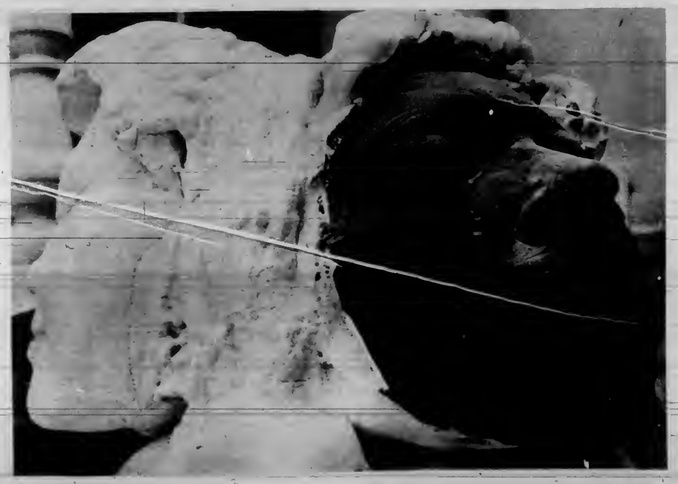

Photo-Essay

by Wythe Bowe

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

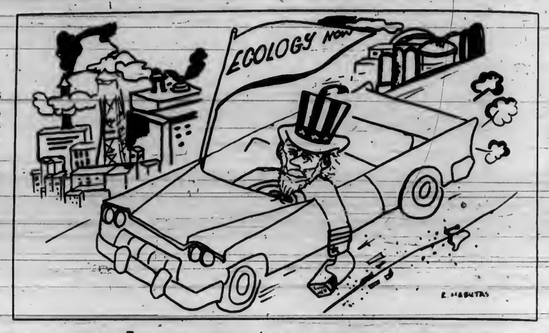
Approval Just Not Needed

By Bruce Bosso

Anyone who has ever tried to hang up a poster at City College realizes that the poster must first be approved by the Associated Students.

This approval consists of each poster being stamped with a small rubber stamp.

Yet, not one member of the Associated Students ever looks at the poster, nor are they the ones to stamp them.



In effect, the manner in which a poster is approved is by the use of manual labor. Anyone who wishes to have his work approved, has to have the desire and time to stamp it himself, causing quite a problem if there are a large number of posters to be approved.

Worse yet, if an unapproved poster is displayed, the City College custodians, assuming that they realize the poster is unapproved, are authorized to tear it down.

However, it is difficult to assume that the janitors survey every poster, looking for a small rubber stamp.

Often, unapproved posters remain up long after the approved posters have been torn down.

If the Associated Students wish to practice an "approval" system concerning posters, then the mechanics of the system should be reorganized. At present, the system is little better than a farce.

Open Other Reservoir Now

By Jim Moses

The high price of the student body card has forced many students to park outside the school boundary. If the inconvenience that these students must suffer by parking far away does not warrant the utilization of the unused reservoir, then neighborhood and student safety should.

Since a high school and grammar school are located in or around the neighborhood, the homeowners have much activity to contend with, in addition to City College.

It is only understandable that sometime in the future, parking is going to present problems such as a driveway being blocked or the classic complaint of trash found in front yards.

These people are a voice in the overall community and they pay taxes that help support this school.

School bonds are getting harder to pass as state and property taxes increase. Why take chances of jeopardizing the college community?

Rather than wait for the predicted complaints from vexed neighbors why not open the vacant reservoir, give students free parking and liberate the neighbors from unnecessary problems that could cast a bad light on students and the college community!

Break Chain of Apathy

By Paula Weinkauf

Unfortunately in the last federal election only 60% of the population voted. People walk by the ear-shattering screams of a victim being abducted in the street. Individuals shrug off the war in Viet Nam by saying, "There's always been a war, there always will be."

This apathy isn't just present among "adults." Students seem to be totally unphased by the fact that they are flunking out of school. In the fall CCSF elections, only 10% of the student body voted. This is hardly a majority.

Why is there this feeling of apathy pervading such a large majority of people? Is there anything that can be done to re-instill a sense of caring and love of your brother? Why do people insist on non-involvement?

People should be taking an active interest in their government and be voting for the leaders responsible for running their country. If citizens would write their congressman condemning the war, at least they would be doing something instead of just accepting it. And it might help!

Students are lucky to be getting an education for so little and they should be trying and getting involved in its workings.

If even a minority of people would get involved, they would help to break a link in the chain of apathy that has developed.

Apathy has engulfed the nation and it's time for a change.

Editor Tears Her Hair Out

By Barbara Ellett

Barbara Ellett, editor-in-chief of cub edition, says: "Come up and see me some time."

Feature editor John Gose was incapacitated for a day when he broke his finger in a fall with a 50 lb. sack of kitty litter.

My reign as Editor-in-Chief of the 13th issue of Volume 72 of The GUARDSMAN began with a barrage of telephone consultations. "Is the unemployment report a news story or an editorial?" "Where do we get a photograph for the horny toad feature story?" "Mr. Administrator won't be available for comment until his return from Bora Bora. What now?" "How much space is allotted to the photo essay?"

And so it went. There were calls in the morning, calls in the evening, in the bath, during the weekend, at dinner, and enroute to the garbage can.

One morning I was scheduled to meet news editor Janet Kramer in front of my Spanish class. Arriving late and not finding her, I cut the class and went directly to the Guardsman office to wait for her. It was learned later that she had been sitting inside the Spanish classroom, bored to tears, while I nervously paced back and forth in the newsroom.

One member of the staff threw a tantrum and walked out in the middle of not one, but two, unfinished important news stories.

At the 11th hour before printing deadline, suddenly all concerned participants in the notorious "library" incident began screaming that our story was variously slanted in favor of the suspect, the police, the witness, the librarian, the third world, the butcher, the baker, and the custodian, or you name it.

Moral: According to my grandmother, the only cure for all ailments is chicken soup. I strongly recommend it to all journalists.

Ecology Starts With You

By Christal Green

Squish, schuffle, clunck, crack, go the sounds of the city. Do not mistake these sounds for that of those made by children playing in the playgrounds, or backed up traffic on Market Street. Those are the sounds made by feet schuffling through waste and garbage deposited there by its citizens.

Today everyone is concerned about keeping our water and air pure. They dondemn factories for needlessly polluting the air and water. But they neglect to see what they are doing to their environment.

On any city block, at any time of the day, torn up newspapers, cigarette packages, and candy bar papers, may be found. These obviously were not discarded by factories or the Standard Oil Company; they were thrown there by the same people who damn the factories for polluting the air and water.

Before it is possible for anyone to control those big factories that our country exists on, and the waste that they create. They must take a look around and see the waste that they themselves are creating. Clean up your own backyard first.

SST Not on the Way Out

By David Boltano

It has been over two months since the United States Senate first defeated a proposal to fund the building of a Super Sonic Transport plane (SST). Recently, SST proponents attempted to stage a comeback by diverting SST severance funds into a windfall of support for the project.

Immediately after its defeat in the Senate, SST backers claimed that the vote against it was a blind, emotional, anti-technology vote, while opponents hailed the victory as a national statement of concern for the environment.

Yet in a great sense, it was neither. The SST was stopped by a number of circumstances, the most important being that many Congressmen felt that a change in Congressional priorities was needed.

There were other non-environmental reasons for the SST's defeat. Ironically, a critical reason may have been the fact that the massive campaign launched on behalf of the SST by the Nixon administration, the aerospace industry, and the unions, had a boomerang effect on some members of the Congress who then became opposed to any additional SST expenditures.

Environmentalists, aided by skeptical Senators, attempted to gain public support for the SST's Congressional defeat by testifying before Senate hearings. A number of valid scientific reports on the effect of the plane's exhaust on the stratosphere further convinced the public that the SST funding was a plan which would benefit no one.

Regardless of the circumstances through which it was defeated, the SST will continue to make its presence felt in international economic circles. The massive forces which backed its development will not rest until they can see their dreams of vast Supersonic profit realized. They will continue to seek private or public funding for their programs, irrespective of the damage to the world's environment.

It is hoped that the alliance of ecologists and economists that helped bring about the demise of the SST will continue its opposition to this potentially dangerous aircraft. We cannot allow our technology to become the epitaph of our existence.

This special issue of the GUARDSMAN is the Cub Edition. It is published by the students of Journalism 21A class as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. City College of San Francisco, 50 Phelan Avenue 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Barbara Ellett

MANAGING EDITOR Bruce Bosso

NEWS Janet Kramer, Tom Wilkins

EDITORIALS Jim Moses, Carolyn Stephens

SPORTS Andy Metz, Jim Parsons, Al Levin

PHOTO ESSAY Wythe Bowe

POETRY Kay Van, Arthur Jinks

LAYOUT Chris Maestri

FEATURES Mike Nastari, John Gose

NEWS PHOTOGRAPHY Tom Wilkins

REPORTERS
David Boitano, Joel Cartwright, Jim Christopher, Joe Davidson, Joe Brinkley, Rob Foote, Christal Green, Jamie Lee Hardin, Julia Jaurigui, Sophia Lisiukoff, Paula Weinkauf, Neil Seippel, Ken Dukes, Craig Cain, Joanne Perac, Russ Cramer, Marvin Francis, Dominique Groslier, Rosemary Sutton, Darrell Frick.

FACULTY ADVISER
Dorry Coppoletta

Nigger

...Shadow of the man?
mostly black sometimes tan, kinky hair brown eyes projecting that lazy stare.

Don't stare...
don't dare;
Instead of watermelon in your hand pick some cotton for the man.

—Arthur Jinks

Societies' Child

How beautiful it must be to be young and free, joy and beauty each day brings;
Playful,
laughing and discovering things.
Untouched by evils life holds,
yet, unknowingly society conceives his molds, slowly sifting joy, draining carefree ways;
that rare natural love suddenly manuvered, manipulated and controlled
as if he were a toy.
Yes, through the years has taught, this mania has lurked and
and sought, killing young minds—conditioning, then recreating another
assemblyline robot.
Yet, who knows what this new generation
perceives and holds;
Maybe he will combat hate and fear with his smile washing away universal prejudiced vile.

—Kay Van

To A Friend

As we grow sometimes apart sometimes together always touching the earth, sweet and warm the morning sky, high and endless the light that that is all love all life forever expanding
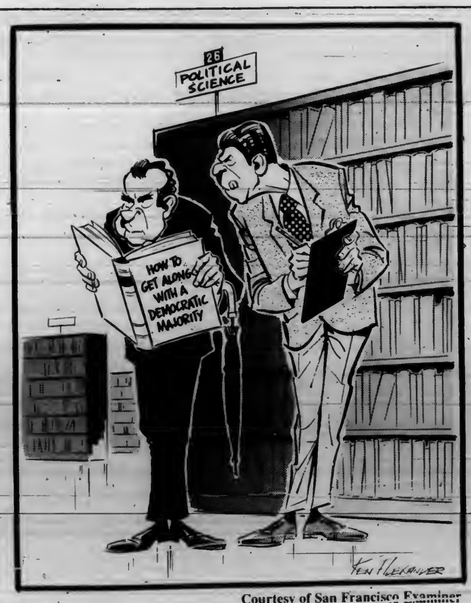
as we grow

In peace,
Ed



For You

Pursuing my ghost Vapor weaved as flying dream creatures displaced the breath of a heart;
a beat ago
I smiled through the vacuum of all we can touch returning to the sun flower
I gave you...

—David Allayne

ANYONE FOR PICTURES . . . FUN . . . SUN . . . BIKINI?

Courtesy of San Francisco Examiner

• Essay • Competition

Sammy Davis, Jr., will serve as a judge for a $25,000 scholarship essay competition, "Obscenity: Censorship or Free Choice?".

The competition is open to all registered students over 18 years. No entry forms are required. Students must include a single sheet of paper with entries giving name, address, telephone number, name of school attending, age and signature.

Essays must be of 3,000 to 5,000 words in length. Deadline is July 4, 1971. $5,000 is being offered for first prize, $3,000 for second place and $2,000 for third. Additionally, ten $1,000 and $500 prizes will be awarded.

Entries should be sent to: "Scholarship Competition," P.O. Box 69900, Los Angeles, Ca. 90069.

The competition is sponsored by Greenleaf Classics, Inc. /Reed Enterprises, Inc. Winners will be announced in the Fall.

Gay Students Union?

In an interview with Arthur Samuels, director of student activities at City College, he stated that during a recent meeting of deans held in San Diego, the question of a Gay Student Union for homosexuals was presented.

Some of the problems and differences in starting this type of organization on a community college level as opposed to the state college level were vividly expressed by the dean of men at Canada College, Redwood City, where the same problem of a Gay Students Union had arisen.

The dean stated that some 70 percent of all of Canada's funds came from the community; and with that in mind, it was evident why local sentiment would play a large role in the decision-making of such a controversial issue.

He added, "Homosexuality is not illegal; just some of the sexual acts which homosexuals perform."

Samuel's feelings were: "I am not concerned with keeping homosexuality on or off campus."

By Jamie Lee

More Lawmakers Not Police

One wonders if major crime in our cities has ceased. Especially when day after day we hear accounts of our men in blue busting pornographic theatres, laying elaborate traps to capture pot smokers, and chasing prostitutes and homosexuals. What ever happened to crimes such as rape, robberies and burglaries?

Our citizens are afraid to leave their homes after dark for fear of returning to an empty house, or being ripped off on the street. The police are not entirely to blame for this situation. We continue to carry laws in the books which try to legislate morals. The courts are hopelessly clogged with persons being charged for so-called moral crimes.

Money for the hiring of additional police and judges has not been the answer in the past, and is not the answer now. We must elect lawmakers willing to stick their necks out and remove these antiquated laws. Let's put the police back on the street and out of our bedrooms!

—By Joe Davidson

Good Earth: Discover New Way To Live Communally

Within the last five years, thousands of young people across the United States have banned together to form communes, to combat the increasingly high cost of housing and to create a family atmosphere.

Participants feel that communal living provides a mutual learning experience in growing and sharing with many people, household management and often parenthood.

Members of commune usually range from infancy to thirty years of age. They are of all religious, social, geographical and ethnic backgrounds. They are held together by a common goal — not to drop out of society, but to create a society more suited to the needs of their generation. Many communes are also involved in community projects.

According to "Jami," spokesman for the 40 member, seven-year-old Good Earth Commune, "Our commune is an example of a communal situation that works because all the people involved seriously work hard at its success."

There exists a very tight family relationship between all the people at Good Earth. There are many married couples, some with children, as well as single people who refer to each other as "brother and sister." Communal members say they learn skills in the commune that often were not used at home.

Some members discover that they have to learn to communicate honestly, act in consideration of others, make concessions and take on responsibility. Domes[illegible] are also learned by both men and women.

Each individual is free to get involved with any personal activity as long as he does not try to push his activity on someone else. There are very few set rules, one of which states that there is to be no use of hard drugs nor sale of any drug.

When conflicts occur, they are first given time to work themselves out. If they are not resolved and begin to affect the entire household, a group meeting is called to give everyone the opportunity to air his feelings and discuss alternatives.

The Good Earth is supported by working members and those receiving welfare assistance. Everyone pays an equal share toward the rent, food and the "house fund." Some members are on vegetarian or macrobiotic diets while others are not. There is always plenty of fresh food supplied by the Food Conspiracy.

This commune, like many others, is striving to improve the environment by starting recycling projects. They are trying to create a community consciousness by starting a school and food cooperative.

They are also involved in political activity, including a police control board which is taking a critical look at the work of the police force in the community. Many of the house members are studying law.

The commune also supports a Women's Liberation Group.

By Linda Grauber

Guardsman Sports

Editor: Andy Metz
Photos: Tom Wilkins
Writers: Al Levin
Jim Parsons

"Coach 'Dutch' Elston and Robert Brown rap hopefully"

Grid Coaches Assess '71 Hopefuls

By Jim Parsons

Approximately 50 first year City College varsity football aspirants met with Coach Art "Dutch" Elston Thursday afternoon, May 21, in the men's gymnasium to formally sign up for 1971 workouts that will commence next August 31.

Coach Elston presented the newcomers with a program for off-season conditioning that he believed would contribute heavily toward a winning CCSF football team. Elston also underscored several off-the-field rules of conduct he expects every player to faithfully embrace.

The Rams on September 9 will travel to San Jose for their first scrimmage of the fall season when they knock heads with Western Valley.

The second scrimmage will be held at CCSF, September 9, against American River, of Sacramento.

The Red 'n White host the Chabot Gladiators on October 8 in the 1971 home opener.

Coach Alex Schwarz closed the session with a spirited talk that supported Coach Elston's earlier determined remarks to field a football team that would restore CCSF to the championship heights it had enjoyed in the recent past.

Olympics Lure CCSF Boxer

Sam Helmer, 20 year old City College sophomore, is an up and coming hopeful in the Olympic Games boxing tryouts to be held next year in Los Angeles or San Francisco. Sam has been boxing since his early teens; already, he has captured the Light-Heavy crown in the S.F. Golden Gloves Tournament.

If Sam can continue in his winning ways at the Olympic Trials, he will travel to Munich, Germany in October of 1972 to do battle for Uncle Sam in the '72 Olympic Games.

City College Tracksters on their Way to State Meet

By Andy Metz

Nailing down three thirds and a fourth place, five City College trackmen scored 24 points to cop seventh place in the Northern California J.C. Track and Field championship held Saturday, May 23rd at Diablo Valley College.

Coming on strong for City in the meet was the 440 relay squad of William Daigle, Tony Joe, Derrick Williams and Larry Shields; they sped to an easy third place victory in a game of 41.7. Elsewhere in the meet, Larry Shields used his speedy talents to snag third place in the 220 yard dash with a respectable time of 21.5. Also, Rudolpho Narvaez, long distance ace for City, jogged twelve long circuits around the track to come up with a 14:57.8 clocking in the three mile run, easily good enough for a fourth place. Derrick Williams, one of the big point men for City throughout the season, came up with his finest effort to date in the Triple Jump, soaring 48'6-1 /2" to score a strong third in the competition.

As a result of their fine performances in the Nor-Cal Finals, City's trackmen will travel to Modesto, May 30th, for the Junior College State Track Championships, being held in conjunction with the California State Relays. Coach Louis Vasquez commented on his athlete's prospects in the upcoming meet, "I have high hopes for all these young men. Derrick Williams, can, of course, hold his own with any Triple Jumper in the state on the J.C. level. Larry Shields, who incidentally, was voted Most Valuable Track Athlete in our awards banquet the other night, is a truly great dashman. He had a bad experience at the Nor-Cal in the 100 yard dash due to an incompetent starter, but he came back in the 220 and pulled out an easy third place. I have hopes he will take it all at Modesto in the 220. As for our other athletes, our 440 yard relay team has the speed necessary for a winning effort; if they can get their technique down to perfection, they have a good chance of victory. This meet is the last of the season, all our boys are ready for an all-out effort."

"Coach Vasquez and his 440 relay team"

	1970-1971
FEDERAL	323,471.00
STATE	182,910.00
	1971-1972
FEDERAL	333,430.00
STATE ..	(tentative) 130,000.00

Champion Wristwrestlers Invade Petaluma; Egg Capitol Moans, Groans

By Al Levin

"Two stalwart lads demonstrate the manly art"

The mammoth on the right weighed in at a boisterous 265 pounds. His opponent was a beast of equal proportions. It had come down to these two men of strength to decide the heavyweight championship. The men clasped hands with a thumb grip, and stared blindly at one another. The match lasted a mere ten seconds with a Santa Rosa Junior College football player coming out the champion. Where was this all taking place? The Garden in New York, The Forum in L.A.? No, Petaluma's own Veteran's Memorial building.

Every May 18th for the past eighteen years a crowd of about 1500 wrist-buffs gather for the World Wristwrestling Championships. Petaluma, California is known throughout the world for its chickens. The small community continues to lay an egg every year by hosting the competition. The contestants come from throughout the nation to participate in the hard fought competition. Some of the men and women wristwrestlers arrive from as far away as Hawaii and Connecticut. A strange occurrence took place this year at the championship. Every weight division was swept by the wristwrestlers of the Bay Area. Either the Bay Area has the strongest wrists or many of the contestants to-be from elsewhere couldn't find Petaluma.

CCSF failed once again to be represented at the competition. The competition is tough, but anyone can participate in their respective weight divisions.

If wristwrestling isn't your bag the National Frog Jumping Championships take place every May 15th in Calaveras County, California.

City Student Competes in Bay to Breakers

By Thomas Wilkins

Bill Smith, photo major at City College stated, "I ran in the 7.8 mile run just to say I did it, or maybe to prove to myself that I could still do it."

Of the 2000 plus starters, (men women, and children of all ages) Bill finished 1107 in the time of 57 minutes, 30 seconds.

Bill ran in marathons while in high school over 10 years ago and had been jogging about two months prior to the May 22 Bay Brakers race.

"Bill Smith relates his marathon run"

Winning the race for the 4th consecutive year and out-pacing his nearest competer by at least 360 yards, Ken Moore broke his previous record with a fantastic time of 36 minutes, 57 seconds. Moore, a grad student at University of Oregon, is one of the top runners in the United States. He collected his number-one trophy and won a trip to Sydney, Australia, where he will compete in the 10 mile marathon in September.

The first woman to cross the finishing line, Mrs. Fran Conley, placed 418th to beat the 150 participating females and many "men." Another blow for "women's lib"; as Fran even outdistanced hubby, Phil, with the time of 50 minutes, 45 seconds.

A certificate of participation was given to all starters and finishers of the Bay Breakers.

As a stiff wind brought a cool breeze off the ocean's waves and the sun hid behind dark clouds, one could see the pride of accomplishment in the tired, sweaty faces of the marathon runners. Their families and friends greeted them with hugs, kisses, pats on the back, and of course — some warm clothes.

"Tired runners take after-race break"

Cool Sounds Revived at Beach

"Foxglove appears regularly at The Friends and Relations Hall on the Great Highway."

by Mike Nastari

The Sopwith Camel, good vibes, a mellow light show, and inexpensive admission. It all sounds like an era long past, a time when the Avalon Ballroom and the Fillmore Auditorium (at Geary and Fillmore) were getting it on.

Well, Bill Graham is leaving town, after blowing the little auditorium in the Fillmore district into a nationwide enterprise. The Family Dog ran away after moving from the old Avalon out to the Great Highway.

Just when all seemed lost for the small dance hall entrepreneur, along came Gerry Weiner and Jim Gravanis to revive the whole scene with the new Friends and Relations Hall. Along with five others on the board of Directors, they have invested time, work and money so that the doors could reopen.

What they are trying to do is bring back the peace and love theme of a few years ago. "Also, I have a place for my band to play," said Gerry, who is the rhythm guitarist in Foxglove.

It is apparent that bringing back a friendly atmosphere is not so hard to do. Penelope takes the tickets with a smile. Inside people can be seen dancing freely, expressing themselves — some had roller skates. The 200 or so who attended experienced a mood of relaxation — it was mellow. For those who tired of people getting uptigtt, bumping and being stepped on— they can lie down on the floor of Friends and Relations Hall and absorb the good sounds.

On the first set was Foxglove. Starting with a few country numbers, they soon got into some innovative hard rock. Sopwith Camel followed and didn't let anyone down. Their music is easy to get into. They did some fine things with flute and saxophone. Then The Flamin' Groovies emerged and picked the place up with their strong, well synchronized boogie sound. With Cyril Jordan at lead and Roy Loney's vocals and theatrics, the place was really moving.

Friends and Relations Hall has the formula for asuccessful run at the beach. The place is the cleanest it has ever been. The newly painted hall has a good layout, stage and a fine sound system — not to mention the brown bread and pero coffee available at the organic food bar.

Will the formula be able to work? ". . .We have a year lease and things are cool with the landlord," said Gerry.

Dirty Campus Aids Needy City Students

by Joel Cartwright

Ever wonder about those funny looking guys who wander around the campus filling their cardboard boxes with bits and pieces of strewn litter?

Think they might be CIA agents keeping an eye out for all you subversives? Or maybe you think they're undercover narc's sniffing out all you dope-heads. Well, you've no need to worry, they're simply student members of the City College work-study program.

Working out of the custodial department, the students endeavor to keep the campus as litter-free as is humanly possible.

The only obstacles they face in their ecological duties are the mounds of garbage indiscriminately deposited by students and the unrelenting winds that whip the debris about the campus.

The pay for all this dirty-work is not bad, $2.43 an hour, with the maximum number of hours a week set at 10.

In order to qualify for any of the on-campus work study jobs, students must carry at least 12 units and be in need of financial aid.

Woody Allen Splits and Goes 'Bananas'

by John Gose

Woody Allen is a proponent of filling the screen with insane verbal and visual wackery. In "Bananas," his latest film, he proves that nothing is sacred and nothing is allowed to escape his outrageous barbs. He crams the screen with everything from Miss America, Howard Cosell, the United Jewish Appeal, and more.

Fielding Mellish is an ordinary 115 pound Jewish dictator of a Latin American country who looks exactly like Woody Allen.

As a child, Fielding was forced to endure countless shocks from his electric blanket because he was a habitual bed wetter. He also stole pornographic books in braille and rubbed the dirty spots. With this start, is it any wonder that Fielding Mellish grew up to be a sex-starved tester of products?

After falling hopelessly in love weeth a young activist, Nancy, and subsequently being rejected, Fielding runs off to the republic of San Marco where the president has just been assassinated on "Wide World of Sports." Fielding is captured by rebels and given the job of procuring food supplies. In one sequence he orders a thousands sandwiches "to go" from a local restaurant. Eventually, he manages to seize power and, in disguise, he returns to the U.S. where he again meets Nancy, and is arrested and tried on a variety of charges including using the word "thighs" in mixed company. He is freed only after promising not to move into the judge's neighborhood. Eventually he marries Nancy in a televised ceremony.

Despite a few flaws, notably a curious lack of refined style, "Bananas" is guaranteed to help you rediscover the art of sitting for eighty minutes and laughing hopelessly. See "Bananas" if you're looking for a truly funny movie. In fact, see it twice so you will be able to catch the laughs you missed the first time around.

Question Man

In response to John Kenneth Galbraith's recent defense of the women's liberation movement, WHAT IS YOUR OPINION ABOUT A WOMAN MARRYING SOMEONE LESS INTELLIGENT THAN HERSELF?

Kerstin Barnett, age 26:

"When you marry, you don't think about that. What is intelligence anyway?"

Clara Elena Franco, age 23:

"A woman should marry a man who is smarter, or at least as smart as she is."

Jill Yee, age 18:

"The man should be more intelligent. Otherwise the woman would become the more dominant."

Judy Yee, age 18 (twin sister of Jill):

"A woman should find someone equivalent or superior. Why should she settle for less?"

Linda Dea, age 21:

"The guy should be smarter because he's the head of the family, or should be."

Mannik Tchakerian, age 19:

"If she does, it would be a bad relationship and would cause trouble eventually."

Carol Govnik, age 20:

"Me, personally, I don't think I could marry anyone less intelligent, as I would eventually get bored."

Nancy Howell, age 18:

"If a woman is capable of loving a person less intelligent than herself, then love would be the dominating factor. But personally I would tend to dominate him."

Ann Murphy, age 19:

"Yes, if your value systems are the same and compatibility of personalities are more important than I.Q."

David Lam, age 21:

"Both should be of equal intelligence level. If the woman was more intelligent than me, I would feel ashamed."

Jim Madden, age 36 (English instructor):

"If a woman marries someone with half her brains, the marriage will be in trouble."

Mary Gray, over 21:

"In this day of easy divorces and more relaxed moral attitudes, you might as well have an affair instead of a marriage with someone of inferior mental capacity. That marriage would lead to a divorce anyway."

By Neil Seippel

Looking for a Summer Job?

Unions are a good place to look for summer jobs. But before giving any money to a union, one should be guaranteed a job, since some unions will take money even if there are no jobs available.

It is best to telephone first, because usually they will tell you over the phone if work is slow or fast. This way you save yourself a trip.

At present, jobs are hard to get even from the general labor unions; nevertheless, here are some possibilities:

TEAMSTERS, LOCAL NO. 860
1139 Mission St., Phone 431-9737 Job: Warehouse, Rate: $4.11 per hr. Student Work Permit, $8.50 per month Open Mon. thru Fri. 7:30 - 9 a.m. Students should call because the hall will be closed. Ask for the summer training program.

TEAMSTERS, LOCAL NO. 85
First & Harrison St. Basement of Sailor's Union Hall, Ph. 781-6636, Job: General loading and unloading, Rate: $5.03 per hr. Work permit. $10. per month, Open Mon. thru Fri. 6:30-4 p.m.

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMAN WORKERS' UNION (U.K.W.U.) Local No. 6
1331 Harrison St. Ph. 621-1393, Job: Dock work, Rate: $4.10 per hr. Dues: $7.31 per mo. Open Mon. thru Fri. 7-4.

INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMAN WORKERS' UNION (I.L.W.U.) Local No. 2
285 Lusk St. Ph. GA 1-1905, Job: Dock work Rate: $3.60 per hr. Work permit: $10. per mo. Open Mon. thru Fri. 6-6, Sat. Sun. and holidays 6-9 a.m. and 4-6 p.m.

by Joe Brinkley

Personality of the Week

The only nominee for campus mascot, wearing a collar of Indian prayer beads and weighing in at 1-1 /2 lbs., is "Rags." Rags is a Cockapeekapoo, a cross between a Cocker Spaniel, Poodle and Pekinese. He is the product of a Cockapoo mother (combination Cocker Spaniel and Poodle) and a Pekinese father.

Rags was born on Valentine's Day of this year, which makes him an Aquarius. A true native of his sign, he is very romantic. He loves to kiss anybody, loves to sniff flowers and loves to play with other dogs.

When his mistress, CCSF student Miss X, was recently evicted from her apartment due to Rags' presence, they moved to Mill Valley. Now Rags can roam through grass and trees to his heart's content.

Rags can do one trick; if someone says hello to him, he will extend his paw. A pooch with plain tastes, he sticks to Calo dog food. His favorite pastime is to go to the beach and dig holes in the sand.

Rags still can't distinguish between cats and dogs. He runs up to cats and sniffs, trying to make friends with everyone. "He is completely oblivious to bad vibes," says his mistress, who obviously adores him. "He combats bad vibes with kisses. He never picks a fight. At most he will yip."

Attending rock concerts is always a treat for Rags. His favorite group is "Gideon and Power," which appears at Mooney's in North Beach. Although under age, he imbibes red wine, and can hold his liquor with the best of them. He is a welcome guest everywhere, but when in doubt, his mistress hides him under her poncho or in her purse.

Rags goes to school every day. His favorite class is flute class, where he sleeps in an open flute box. Rags likes the flute box because its plush blue velvet lining feels so yummy next to his furry body. His mistress has only one slight problem — Rags eats the clay in her ceramics class. The Registrar at CCSF will not find Rags' name on record. He does not care for a community college atmosphere, but will register as a full time student when his mistress transfers to the University of California at Santa Barbara this fall.

He may even be graduated from UC, unless he should drop out of school to marry a Dachshund. What would their offspring be called? Why, a Cockadachsapeekapoo, of course!

By Barbara Ellett

Anatomy of News Story

Editor's Note:

At Noon, Wednesday, May 19, the campus police received a telephone call from a librarian reporting, "A girl student was being harassed by a male student."

The Guardsman's cub staff set out to cover the news break, attempting to derive some truth from the incident.

The editors have since gone through about 25 pages of copy submitted by five reporters who interviewed most everyone directly or indirectly involved in the incident and its conflicting versions.

This incident should never have happened, but it did happen and it could again.

If there is a lesson to be learned from all this, maybe the accuser, accused, police, student group, administration and people involved, will act more responsibly — The Next Time?

The following facts were drawn out:

The police responded to the emergency call. There was a scuffle between the accused and police. Many conflicting stories (or rumors) of the incident spread like wildfire about the campus.

The librarian who summoned the police gave a report which differed from that of the involved girl student.

The accused told a story of harsh police brutality. The police spoke of battery by the accused. They added that they only used as much force as necessary to subdue the accused.

Six letters from witnesses suggesting improper handling of the accused are on file at the police station, with six letters commanding their action.

The next day, a student group brought demands upon the administration concerning alleged police brutality against the male student involved.

"Student groups demands are now under consideration."

Harry R. Buttimer — Ass't. Supt.

The student group making demands upon the administration is not talking to reporters.

The administration said that charges of battery and disturbing the peace against the accused and the charge of police brutality are under investigation by the District Attorney. They also stated that charges are not being pressed by the involved girl student.

"We are investigating and evaluating the current incident."

Tim Foley — Head, Criminology

"The case is now in the hands of the district attorney and court."

Ralph O. Hillsman — Dean of Students

Tuition Hike

continued from page 1

Other reaction was recorded in a survey recently taken by Lada Pahlnic and some of the feelings expressed were:

"I will have to go back to my country or work more than six hours a day."

"I will have to either find a part time job, or ask my father for more money, even though it will be very difficult for him to send more money, since I have two more brothers who he supports."

"I do not know the reasons for raising tuition, but the only thing I can say is that I still have not paid most of my tuition for the current semester due to lack of money. I am in debt for more than $600."

"I have to eat paper instead of bread."

Final word came from Anwar Khenaisser, president of the International Students Club, "I can afford extra tuition, but some students will be forced to find a job which causes visa problems since they cannot work. We do accept a raise but not more than double the present fees! ($14-$30.) Dr. Jacobsen recommended $22.50 which is quite enough."

Gustavo Romero

SST v.s. Sun Blindness

Sun blindness could be caused through gas fumes emitted from engines being considered for Super Sonic Transport.

Professor Harold Johnston, University of California, Berkeley, made this fact known when he released his latest scientific defeat for SST last week.

Prof. Johnston tested the known gas fume and deduced that such exhaust, gas fumes and related action of the SST would affect the stratosphere and the amount of ultra-violet sunlight on the surface of the earth, which could result in sun blindness.

Mid-East Hot Spot

Continued from Page 1

the economic interests of that State and began aid and influence with a desire to become "protector" of Israel.

The Arab Republic had a feudal system of government with personal power as the main political premise. The USSR stepped into the shaky government and formed a closely knit alliance with the Arabs after the "Coup of Free Officers" in which Nasser played a part.

With the Arab defeat in the 1967 War against the Israelis, Russia began building a strong Arab military force with highly sophisticated weapons such as MIGS 23.

The USSR has thus far contributed 4.5 billion dollars in aid to Egypt in the last four years with 2.5 billion dollars in 1971 alone.

"With a strong military build-up and convenient Soviet relations, the Arab-Israeli conflict can be sure to reach even higher degrees of tension," she said.

Miss Yorke stressed "That such tension could perhaps begin another full-fledged disastrous war beinging about involvement by the Big Powers."

—By Julia Jaurigui

Financial Aids

Continued from Page 1

"The figure of $130,000 is stretching it a bit," Castellino said. "We probably won't get that much. As you can see," he continued, "The federal government is increasing its amount by roughly $100,000. Yet with the state decreasing its grant, the total amount of money we have available to use is down by almost $42,000.

"When you add this to the increased number of students applying for financial aid, you are presented with quite a grim picture."

Cut Back

Castellino had mixed feelings when he said, "I really don't know why the funding is cut, except that it has been a very poor year for the economy, and that even the government is having financial problems.

Our requests are made through the office of the Chancellor of the State College system. We will have to cut back on all of our programs."

Asked by how far, Castellino smiled and said, "As far as we have to."

Needy Group Starts Fund Raising Drive

In an attempt to help the Financial Aids Office out of its current fiscal problems, an independent group of students will attempt to raise funds from among the Student Body during registration time in September.

If this fund-raising drive is met with an adequate response from the Student Body, the students hope that various community firms will contribute equal amounts of money, thereby doubling the amount of money available for the fund.

The student fund calls for representatives to set up a table during registration and solicit voluntary contributions from the Student Body.

A student spokesman said that "A goal of $100,000 would be realistic, if a majority of students, faculty, and parents became involved."

'Students' to be in KRON Documentary

Dolores Solomon, first semester student at City College, will appear in a KRON Channel 4 documentary scheduled for release in the fall.

The documentary, one of a four-part series features the work of the California League for the Handicapped. Miss Salomon is an active member of the San Francisco branch. The documentary was shot on location at Fort Cronkite beach near Sausalito.

Hazel, Miss Salomon's part-airdale /part-wire-hair terrier, who constantly attends classes on campus with Miss Salomon, is also featured in the documentary.

"In fact, Hazel commands more footage than I do," said Miss Salomon.

By Janet Kramer

Dolores Salomon and dog, Hazel

Campus News

A concert and pot luck dinner will be held Friday, June 4, at 8 pm in the College Theater. Music will include works by Prokofieff, Gershwin, Respighi, Wagner, Handel, and Holcombe. Admission is $2. All proceeds will go to the Music Scholarship Fund.

★★★

"The A Capella Choir and the Chorale will perform Sunday, June 6, at 4 pm, at the First Congregational Church at Post & Mason," announced William R. Grothkopp, Jr., of the City College music department.

★★★

On Wednesday, June 9, the Physics Department will wind up their Physics Film Festival with celluloid presentations of "Plane Talk," an intimate interview with a Boeing 707, and "Make Way for Bart," a tunneling epic that has to be seen to be believed.

The films begin at 3 o'clock in C245 and admission is free.

★★★

In the fall of 1971, Political Science 45 will be introduced into the curriculum of the Social Science Department. The course will deal with Middle Eastern politics. It has been accredited by UC Berkeley and is open to anyone interested in political science and history.

The Administration has yet to pick the new instructor for this course. The Arab Club would like to copy the Physics Department's example of student-faculty hiring, whereby interested and knowledgeable students in the area of learning would participate in choosing the instructor.

Mr. Taylor, chairman of the Social Science Department, has approved of student participation in hiring, but will not grant them the power to veto a prospective teacher.

LAI WINS PRESIDENTIAL RE-ELECTION

The Guardsman

City College of San Francisco
Volume 72 Number 14 5
June 10, 1971

Published by the Journalism Students

Senate Head Asks Batmale to Move on Campus

By Ron Patrick

"We deserve the right to have a President on Campus," says Paul Fisher, City College faculty member and President of the Academic Senate.

While Dr. Harry Buttimer, Assistant Superintendent of City College resides on campus, President Louis Batmale operates from the district office at 33 Gough Street.

"Every Community College in California has a president on campus except City College," says Fisher. "This enables those Community Colleges to expedite decision making matters, especially of urgent nature."

"Recent disturbances in the campus library or bookstore robberies, for instance, required immediate attention" but working through official channels apparently caused a delay in communications between Batmale's and Buttimer's offices.

Under current operational procedures, Buttimer must go through Batmale in most official matters. This creates too many unnecessary channels of communication, Fisher explained.

The Academic Senate, which consists of the entire full-time faculty and 15 executive council members, is responsible for academic and procedural matters on campus.

Following a Board meeting last July, at which time members endorsed Fisher's proposal and agreed to discuss the matter with Batmale, Batmale stated in private sessions that, "We're not inclined to change the present situation."

At the June 2 Student Council meeting, council passed a resolution 8-2 in favor of the Academic Senate's proposal and Fisher emphasizes, "We will raise the issue again at the regular Academic Senate meeting on June 24."

TOM LAI—Second term President admits, "I was not confident of winning."

Interview With Tom Lai

President Says Free Critic Paper May Be Advised by Student Council

By Bruno Forner

Tom Lai, re-elected as Associated Students President by 14 votes, termed his victory "right on!"

"This election, no doubt has been the largest election in the history of this school. The election was strictly between the United Students Alliance party and the Unified Students Party. As for independent runners, I had already predicted that they would have been crushed and they were crushed."

"I was not confident of winning. In an election like this, no one can be so confident that he can come out and say, 'We will win!' Anyone who says that is not for real."

"I was fortunate that in my first semester I had my cultural club backing me totally. This semester, I did not get their backing. As a matter of fact, had I received their backing, I believe I could have won by a few hundred more votes."

Lai had the following comment on the graffiti scrawled on the reservoir: "No doubt it did take away a lot of possible voters. It helped certain individuals."

Concerning the Free Critic: "No doubt the Free Critic was the biggest advertisement anyone can have for this election. They, the USA Party, took advantage of it. We can discuss that on a Student Council level. It was a big issue at last council meeting (June 2nd) . . . and possibly this coming Monday (June 7). The financial chairman, Dora

continued on page 4

Student Election Plagued by 105 Illegal Ballots

By Ed Hartzler

In the May 26 and 27 student body elections plagued by recounts and invalidation of ballots, Tom Lai and Paul Yee of the Unified Students Party, were elected to the offices of Associated Students President and Vice-President, respectively. The United Student Alliance captured eleven of the fourteen AS Council seats.

A record of nearly 1900 students voted in the election.

Lai, last semester's AS President and the first person in the college's history to win re-election to that office, polled 636 votes, giving him a three vote margin over U.S.A. candidate Dennis Fong who polled 633. In the recount demanded by Fong, Lai increased his total to 642 votes with Fong dropping to 628.

The Vice-Presidential race, which was also settled by a recount, saw Paul Yee, Lai's running mate, receive a final

continued on page 4

Sang Ik Choi Speaks on Direction in Life

By Shirley Fogarino

A New World Exposition was presented by the Principle of Humanity students of the experimental college.

Presented in the courtyard of the Visual Arts building, the exposition consisted of photographic displays and film, and slide series, depicting the projects and purposes of the International Re-Education Foundation, the organization to which the student group belongs.

A lecture by Sang Ik Choi, internationally renowned educator and advisor

continued on page 4

Students Outraged at Critic Propaganda

By Joe Konte

A June 2 Student Council meeting broke into near pandemonium in a fiery rage over an alleged misuse of the Free Critic newspaper.

At one point, an enraged student had to be restrained from advancing toward Associated Students President, Tom Lai. An overflow number of students sharply divided on the heated issues jammed the overcrowded room, adding to the tension.

The Free Critic, supported through AS funds, published a special election issue May 25, which devoted four of its eight pages to the United Students Alliance, of which the publication's editors are members.

The only other candidate to put his platform in the edition was Darryl Pilcher, who ran for president under the Concerned Coalition for Student Fellowship. Pilcher's brief campaign statement was placed on page seven in small print next to bold large print listing the USA candidates.

Dora Liang, council member, called the issue "total propaganda" and demanded the resignation of the Critics' editors, Dennis Fong, Jocelyn Won, and Jack McCloskey.

Fong lost the presidential race to Lai by 14 votes, but Won and McCloskey captured council seats.

"There's been a deceit of the students," Liang explained. In speaking to the editors, she said, "You spent $250 on your own thing, and that can't happen. You're not for students, you're for USA."

Councilmen Dennis Cox and Henry Lau continued the barrage against the Free Critic. Cox called the front page "blatant propaganda" and proposed that the 1971 budget for the paper be eliminated. A frustrated Lau told the pro-Critic spokesmen to "quit throwing a bunch of bull" and that "I can't understand you people."

Liang's charges that other candidates were not given the opportunity to put their platforms into the controversial issue were validated by some of those candidates.

John Goebel, from Young Socialist Alliance, explained, "What happened was we got our stuff in and it wasn't printed. We questioned why it wasn't printed and Dennis (Fong) said it was lost."

Goebel said that the editors should not be fired, and that the solution instead is to expand the Free Critic editorial staff.

Bruce Bosso, independent presidential candidate, complained he never was informed by the Free Critic that he could submit a statement. Bosso said responsible editors would make an effort to notify the candidates, but that no effort was made.

Lai also admitted that Fong failed to ask him to submit anything.

Pilcher, the most vocal voice in the onslaught against the Free Critic, screamed at Fong and those who interrupted him while he was revealing that his campaign statement was initially turned down.

"Dennis can call me a liar, but I went down on a Friday to the Free Critic, and was told by Dennis, no you can not have your platform in the paper," Pilcher bellowed.

The enraged Pilcher said Fong told him to his face he was not going out to any other candidates.

The Critics' editors responded to the accusations, explaining the purpose of the newspaper.

Jocelyn Won said, "We never claimed to be the official student paper. When the Free Critic first came out, we came to ask for student groups to help out the paper."

Won answered the propaganda attack by explaining, "There is no such thing as equal time. Tom Lai's slate was not put in because it was too late. Anyone who wants to submit an article

continued on page 4

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

A Farewell Message to the Graduating College Classes

By Jim Toland

Nearly 245,000 students will get a college degree this month from universities and colleges in California.

This is over fourteen percent above the amount of people receiving degrees last June.

California has a leading role in the world of higher education, with 80% of the state's high school graduates going on to college.

The California Coordinating Council for Higher Education in Sacramento estimates that about 145,000 students will be graduating from the 93 community colleges in this state, 27,000 from the nine U.C. campuses; 49,500 from the 19 state colleges; and 26,500 Trom private campuses.

With so many people successfully completing part of their college education, it is difficult to be optimistic about their chances for success in the tumultuously changing world of today.

Just when one has learned all of the technicalities of a job and is ready to engage in it as his livelihood, he is informed that the profession has become obsolete.

Many once secure workers have been replaced with either machines or computers.

During these revolutionary times, it is impossible to choose a profession that will not revolutionize itself out of the need for you.

To make a college degree work for him, the graduate will either have to relocate to an area where there are fewer people with the same qualifications as him or enter into some abstract area not exactly related to his field of study.

With things becoming as tight as they have become, and with the strange changes that have been taking place throughout the last few years, the Ph.D. of today may become the farmer of tomorrow merely to survive.

Why Not Donate Your Eyes?

By Christal Green

The age of "Buy now and pay later" has come upon us. Air lines advertise a "Fly now-pay later" plan. Many churches and charitable organizations ask you to pledge now and donate later.

This too is true of the University of California. They are asking for pledges for donations of your eyes, to be used for corneal transplants at your death.

A donor will supply two corneas which will in turn serve for two different transplants. As long as the donated eye has a clear cornea it can be used. It does not matter if the donor wears glasses.

The cornea is the transparent bulgy window in the outer layer of the eyeball. It permits light to pass through the pupil to the back of the eye. When this window becomes coulded or scarred, due to injury or infection, the result may be poor vision or blindness.

Today in this country there are 110,000 blind men, women and children who will be able to see because of corneal transplants. But at present the number of blind outnumber the number of people willing to donate their eyes.

Every person who contacts the University of California Medical Center in the interest of donating their eyes may help someone who is blind today to see tomorrow.

To: Associated Students, CCSF
From: CCSF Associated Student Council
Subject: The McGee Defense Committee: A Minority Report

On June 4, 1971, the Associated Student Council, in a 6-5-1 vote, allocated $61.50 to the R. McGee Defense Committee. We, the undersigned Councilmen who opposed the allocation feel that allocations of this nature do not represent the true feelings of the Associated Students of City College, and that student funds should be used to support student activities directly.

Therefore, it is our recommendation that in the future persons wanting to solicit funds for political causes should be allowed to come on campus for 2-3 days, and, by using an area such as the flagpole, go directly to students and ask for funds. In this way, those students who are sympathetic to the cause may donate, while students with different views have the freedom not to contribute. We make this recommendation because we feel that when funds are donated in the name of the Associated Student Council, it tends to make a blanket endorsement of the causes by ALL students at CCSF, an endorsement that many students disagree with. The fact that many students on this campus are deeply disturbed by council's action last Friday, June 4, seems to reinforce this position.

Signed,
Margie Gunnell
Dennis J. Cox
Dora Liang

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR Joe Konte
EDITORIALS EDITOR Bruno R. Forner
FEATURES EDITOR Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE EDITOR Tina Brant
PHOTOGRAPHY Tom Wilkins, Wythe Bowe

REPORTERS
Russ Cramer, Shirley E. Fogarino, Linda Grauber, Christal Green, Ed Hartzler, Janet Kramer, Mike Nastari.

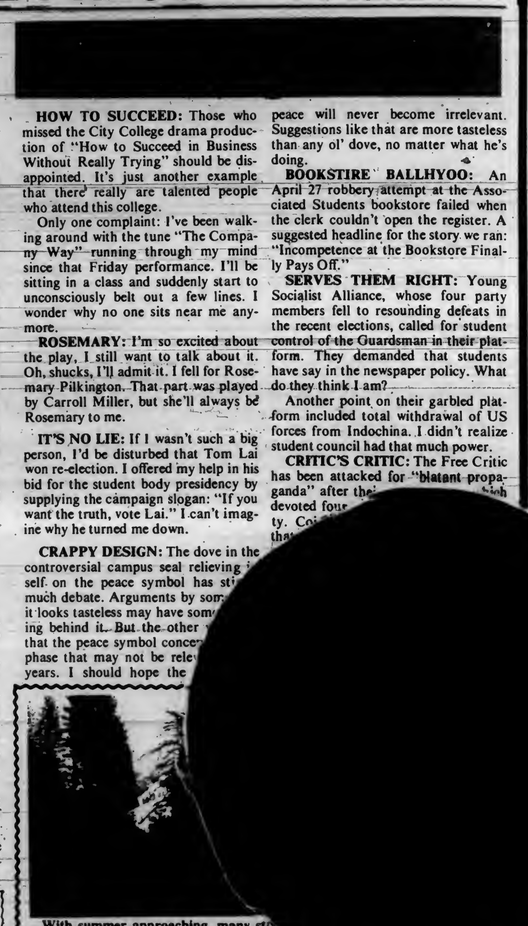
FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

HOW TO SUCCEED: Those who missed the City College drama production of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" should be disappointed. It's just another example that there really are talented people who attend this college.

Only one complaint: I've been walking around with the tune "The Company Way" running through my mind since that Friday performance. I'll be sitting in a class and suddenly start to unconsciously belt out a few lines. I wonder why no one sits near me anymore.

ROSEMARY: I'm so excited about the play, I still want to talk about it. Oh, shucks, I'll admit it. I fell for Rosemary Pilkington. That part was played by Carroll Miller, but she'll always be Rosemary to me.

IT'S NO LIE: If I wasn't such a big person, I'd be disturbed that Tom Lai won re-election. I offered my help in his bid for the student body presidency by supplying the campaign slogan: "If you want the truth, vote Lai." I can't imagine why he turned me down.



CRAPPY DESIGN: The dove in the controversial campus seal relieving itself on the peace symbol has stirred much debate. Arguments by some that it looks tasteless may have something behind it. But the other claim that the peace symbol concept is a phase that may not be relevant in years. I should hope the peace will never become irrelevant. Suggestions like that are more tasteless than any ol' dove, no matter what he's doing.

BOOKSTIRE BALLHYOO: An April 27 robbery attempt at the Associated Students bookstore failed when the clerk couldn't open the register. A suggested headline for the story we ran: "Incompetence at the Bookstore Finally Pays Off."

SERVES THEM RIGHT: Young Socialist Alliance, whose four party members fell to resounding defeats in the recent elections, called for student control of the Guardsman in their platform. They demanded that students have say in the newspaper policy. What do they think I am?

Another point on their garbled platform included total withdrawal of US forces from Indochina. I didn't realize student council had that much power.

CRITIC'S CRITIC: The Free Critic has been attacked for "blatant propaganda" after the[i]r [fi]rish devoted four[th] ty. Co[ld] tha[t]

With summer approaching, many st[u]dents, as this shot by staff photographer Wythe [B]owe, took to Yosemite National Park.

Believe It . . . or Don't!

By Russ Cramer

Though the following statements may sound credulous, parts of them, and sometimes even the complete statements are figments of the imagination. Believe what you will —

• In a recent appearance at the University of California, Berkeley, Senator George McGovern was cheered on by the student body when he denounced all wars and called for an end to our support of the present one. The same student body, was not so enthusiastic, and even booed his call for adopting a similar policy in the middle east. The Senator wondered what he had said wrong.

• Accusations of the campus police being carried away with their role as lawkeepers, and counter-accusations of student biases towards them, have caused the administration to look into the possibility of having the policemen shed their uniforms and patrol the area in "civvies," wearing only a badge which identified them as policemen.

• African activists at Hyde Park corner, London, denounced those "Third World" slogans that have gained popularity in the U.S., on grounds that one couldn't profess to have "Third World" views and continue to live outside that world.

• The suicide division of the S.F. Police Department are toying with the idea of erecting a gigantic net just below the Golden Gate bridge and in the path of the "jumpers." They hope this action will cut down present expenditures of maintaining a 24 hour suicide squad. A second leap from the net wouldn't be lethal.

• Last semester a group of behavioral scientists conducted a study in race relations here on campus. "City" was chosen for the study above several other colleges for its racially diversified student body. One of the more disheartening conclusions the experts reached was that the extent of integration on campus is strikingly low. The Social Studies Department are now offering a course in race relations next semester with the view of having its students look into the findings of the study more closely, its causes and come up with possible solutions.

• Bumper Sticker: "America — Love it — it's too late to change it."

• A recent study shows campus women to be politically more active than the men.

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

Somewhere out there in this great big world is a smile waiting for you.
Look in the mirror — it's you — but where is that smile? Lost in a cold view of life? Or loaned to someone else for the day?

Joy is a feeling. Some people say it is impossible to experience. Some, on the other hand, have the feeling in their minds and will never get rid of it.

"JOY," by William C. Schutz, (Grover Press, Inc., New York), is an excellent book. It will aid in ridding you of tensions or animosity toward other people or yourself. It will teach you about interpersonal relations and organizational relations. When you have finished reading "JOY" you will feel like a new person, ready to try your wings in a new world, a more beautiful world than before.

The Moody Blues have a joyous feeling when they sing. They can convey it through their voices and their bouncy music. The mood is mellow and the words have happy meanings. To describe them in a few words is difficult, but they are for everybody, both old and young.

"Floating"

Floating free as a bird
Sixty foot leaps it's so absurd
From up here you should see the view
Such a lot of space for me and you

Oh you'll like it.
Gliding around, get your feet off
the ground
Oh you'll like it.
Do as you please with so much ease.

Now I know how it feels
To have wings on my heels
To take a stroll among the stars
Get a close look at planet Mars.

Oh you'd like it.
Gliding around, get your feet off
the ground
Oh you'll like it.
Do as you please with so much ease.

Bouncing about on the Moon
Guess you'll all be up here soon
The candy stores will be brand new
And you'll buy rock with the Moon right through.

Oh you'd like it
Gliding around, get your feet off
the ground
Oh you'd like it
Do as you please with so much ease.

—R. Thomas — The Moody Blues

Are You Fooling Yourself?

By Tom Wilkins

ou enjoy taking photographs?
own a polaroid or instamatic nd like photographing friends
? If you have answered "yes" he above questions then you be on the verge of entering department at City College. department is rated as one of the west coast.
o you have money? You will there is much more money than just a few books and pholies that are stated in the course ption.
you have not become discouraged ow then you should talk to one of photo instructors. He will tell you ore about the programmed system one must go through in order to become proficient with the view-camera, editorial, design, movie, commercial, black and white, and color photography.

To be a "picture-taker" is easy, and one should stick to the polaroid or instamatic. But if you wish to be a knowledgeable well-rounded professional photographer and not really specialize in anything; that is probably how you will be after the two year curriculum at City College.

How about a little specialization? That is what everyone seems to be doing these days. Why can't a person be a portrait photographer without being a commercial, view-camera or movie photographer or vice-versa.

A person who says, "I know most everything about photography" is either a "genius" or "fooling himself."

A Real Dud Opens

By Charles Prongos

Knickerbocker Holiday, now at the Curran Theater is a total flop and makes for an unenjoyable evening.

Based on a story by Washington Irving, Knickerbocker Holiday has a simple, run of the mill story line. Set in colonial New York, Brom (David Holliday) and Tina (Anita Gillette) are in love. The conflict is established as Governor Pieter Stuyvesant (Burt Lancaster) arrives and Tina's father orders her to marry the Governor. Brom is sentenced to be hanged, but law and order and a happy ending prevails and Brom and Tina are free to marry.

While Brom and Tina are happy the audience is not. By the second act, the people who did return for it, were not even clapping. Even the ingenues in the second balcony didn't clap as is usually expected of them.

The book written by Maxwell Anderson and music composed by Kurt Weill are both boring. The one good song (September Song) is brutally murdered by the star. The jokes are few and far between and are also ruined by Mr. Lancaster's lack of timing and acting.

More uncreativity can be credited to the unimaginative costumes, setting, lighting and choreography.

Burt Lancaster as the "colorful" Governor is very imperfect. Mr. Lancaster seemed comfortable on his silver peg leg. He seemed to be ill at ease with the dialogue, singing and audience.

Anita Gillette did a fantastic job on the character of Tina. It's too bad Mrs. Gillette does not have the voice for the uninteresting operatic score.

David Holliday was good as Brom, however there are a dozen performers who could have played the undemanding role.

Nothing seems to work in Knickerbocker Holiday. The whole cast seems inadequate, as does the whole production. It seems that perhaps the Civic Light Opera should stop creating and reviving musicals, for only two in the past 34 years have become hits.

—By Charles Prongos

Burt Lancaster and Anita Gillette star in Knickerbocker Holiday.

Personality of the Week

By Mike Nastari

This week's personality is the Guardsman's Editor-In-Chief, Jim Toland.

Jim, a 22 year old fifth generation, native San Franciscan is finishing his second semester at City College. He has a 3.7 grade point average. "People don't believe me when I tell them that I don't read much," he said.

"I'd rather spend my time walking along the beach, making things out of wood, and talking to nice people."

Jim says that nice people are those human beings who are not trying to push a trip on him. "I don't want to be analyzed, criticized, or categorized."

It seems that people won't take you as you are, they always want to mold you to what they feel you should be. I don't like pushy people.

Jim feels that his wide variety of experience has aided him greatly in his mental growth. He has lived in many areas of the city. "As a kid, I grew up around the Precita Park-Bernal Heights area, later my family moved out to Geneva and Mission. When I left home I lived in the Haight-Ashbury, and Mission districts.

Jim Toland has had many jobs, he has worked on the waterfront as a longshoreman, driven a beer truck, had one professional prize fight, sold astrology charts, and was in the Army for three months until he received a medicalkiscbarge. Jim is also a Doctor of Divinity in The Church of the New Truth. I've also done a few other things that I'd rather not mention, but he wouldn't elaborate. I get bored easily, he said, "I've always had a curious urge to find out what was really happening in the world."

Jim has spent the better portion of the last three years hitchhiking around the United States. "I got shot at in Georgia, and a cowboy tried to run me down in Texas with his station wagon."

Jim liked New Orleans. "I lived there on and off for almost a year. I had a cheap attic apartment in the French Quarter where I did a lot of writing and sketching. It was about three blocks away from the Mississippi River and near a lot of the old jazz clubs.

Guardsman Editor Jim Toland

"I love listening to all kinds of music, but for me, jazz is where it's at, especially big city blues-jazz.

"I think that instrumental music is much more beautiful than vocal, words strip music of feeling, feeling is important to me."

When he lived in New Orleans, Jim wrote an astrology column for an underground newspaper and worked part-time as a bartender in a bohemian style tavern.

"All I want out of life is to live in a house on a beach somewhere with someone who loves me. I want to have two brown horses to ride on the beach, and a green and red parrot that will sit on my shoulder when I come to the city."

Platypus in City Hall

By Linda Grauber

Tony Serra, long-haired, local criminal defense lawyer has just officially announced his acceptance of candidacy for Mayor of San Francisco. He is supported by the Platypus Platform which is devoted to the concept of "Renaissance Now!" Their major interest is to make San Francisco streets safe for dancing.

The first area of concern is the war in Viet Nam. The Platypus Party would postulate for San Francisco that the compulsory U.S. drafting of San Francisco residents be forthwith eliminated. San Francisco would further provide sanctuary to all draft offenders. And, as a corollary, all taxes, including personal, property and income taxes, would be discontinued in San Francisco. Without war, taxes are not needed, states the party.

Financing the city's government would be accomplished by cultural activities as present in Medici's Florence in its Renaissance Era: music, film, video, open air concerts, craft, artifacts and art objects, operated by the municipality.

Another chief theme for converting San Francisco into a renaissance city would be to translate the present urban downtown area into a city park. This would involve converting all of the streets and sidewalks into parks and lawns. No combustion engines would be allowed inside such area. City codes would be renovated so as to allow geodesic domes and other improved forms of architecture to exist in the city. In chief, the party's intentions are to facilitate San Francisco in establishing itself as a contemporary renaissance city by politically and sociologically seceding from the United States.

San Francisco will be a free port. No duties or tariffs will be commanded from imports or exports.

In addition to Tony Serra running for mayor, other candidates will be announced in the future who will seek Supervisor's positions, judge positions, and public defender and district attorney positions. Ronald Landberg of the Good Earth is a platypus for supervisor.

Students who would like to participate in the fun and work of the Platypus Party may contact the campaign headquarters.

GUARDSMAN FREE PRESS

Guardsman editorials express the opinions of the writer, and do not reflect those of the staff, faculty, or administration.

A Farewell Message to the Graduating College Classes

By Jim Toland

Nearly 245,000 students will get a college degree this month from universities and colleges in California.

This is over fourteen percent above the amount of people receiving degrees last June.

California has a leading role in the world of higher education, with 80% of the state's high school graduates going on to college.

The California Coordinating Council for Higher Education in Sacramento estimates that about 145,000 students will be graduating from the 93 community colleges in this state, 27,000 from the nine U.C. campuses; 49,500 from the 19 state colleges; and 26,500 from private campuses.

With so many people successfully completing part of their college education, it is difficult to be optimistic about their chances for success in the tumultuously changing world of today.

Just when one has learned all of the technicalities of a job and is ready to engage in it as his livelihood, he is informed that the profession has become obsolete.

Many once secure workers have been replaced with either machines or computers.

During these revolutionary times, it is impossible to choose a profession that will not revolutionize itself out of the need for you.

To make a college degree work for him, the graduate will either have to relocate to an area where there are fewer people with the same qualifications as him or enter into some abstract area not exactly related to his field of study.

With things becoming as tight as they have become, and with the strange changes that have been taking place throughout the last few years, the Ph.D. of today may become the farmer of tomorrow merely to survive.

Why Not Donate Your Eyes?

By Christal Green

The age of "Buy now and pay later" has come upon us. Air lines advertise a "Fly now-pay later" plan. Many churches and charitable organizations ask you to pledge now and donate later.

This too is true of the University of California. They are asking for pledges for donations of your eyes, to be used for corneal transplants at your death.

A donor will supply two corneas which will in turn serve for two different transplants. As long as the donated eye has a clear cornea it can be used. It does not matter if the donor wears glasses.

The cornea is the transparent bulgy window in the outer layer of the eyeball. It permits light to pass through the pupil to the back of the eye. When this window becomes coulded or scarred, due to injury or infection, the result may be poor vision or blindness.

Today in this country there are 110,000 blind men, women and children who will be able to see because of corneal transplants. But at present the number of blind outnumber the number of people willing to donate their eyes.

Every person who contacts the University of California Medical Center in the interest of donating their eyes may help someone who is blind today to see tomorrow.

To: Associated Students, CCSF
From: CCSF Associated Student Council
Subject: The McGee Defense Committee: A Minority Report

On June 4, 1971, the Associated Student Council, in a 6-5-1 vote, allocated $61.50 to the R. McGee Defense Committee. We, the undersigned Councilmen who opposed the allocation feel that allocations of this nature do not represent the true feelings of the Associated Students of City College, and that student funds should be used to support student activities directly.

Therefore, it is our recommendation that in the future persons wanting to solicit funds for political causes should be allowed to come on campus for 2-3 days, and, by using an area such as the flagpole, go directly to students and ask for funds. In this way, those students who are sympathetic to the cause may donate, while students with different views have the freedom not to contribute. We make this recommendation because we feel that when funds are donated in the name of the Associated Student Council, it tends to make a blanket endorsement of the causes by ALL students at CCSF, an endorsement that many students disagree with. The fact that many students on this campus are deeply disturbed by council's action last Friday, June 4, seems to reinforce this position.

Signed,
Margie Gunnell
Dennis J. Cox
Dora Liang

The GUARDSMAN is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. Editorial office S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. Mailing address: 50 Phelan Avenue, 94112.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Jim Toland
MANAGING EDITOR: Ron Patrick
NEWS EDITOR: Joe Konte
EDITORIALS EDITOR: Bruno R. Forner
FEATURES EDITOR: Charles Prongos
SPORTS EDITOR: Jack Hansen
EXCHANGE EDITOR: Tina Brant
PHOTOGRAPHY: Tom Wilkins, Wythe Bowe

REPORTERS
Russ Cramer, Shirley E. Fogarino, Linda Grauber, Christal Green, Ed Hartzler, Janet Kramer, Mike Nastari.

FACULTY ADVISER
Mrs. Dorry Coppoletta

HOW TO SUCCEED: Those who missed the City College drama production of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" should be disappointed. It's just another example that there really are talented people who attend this college.

Only one complaint: I've been walking around with the tune "The Company Way" running through my mind since that Friday performance. I'll be sitting in a class and suddenly start to unconsciously belt out a few lines. I wonder why no one sits near me anymore.

ROSEMARY: I'm so excited about the play, I still want to talk about it. Oh, shucks, I'll admit it. I fell for Rosemary Pilkington. That part was played by Carroll Miller, but she'll always be Rosemary to me.

IT'S NO LIE: If I wasn't such a big person, I'd be disturbed that Tom Lai won re-election. I offered my help in his bid for the student body presidency by supplying the campaign slogan: "If you want the truth, vote Lai." I can't imagine why he turned me down.

CRAPPY DESIGN: The design of the controversial campus seal relieving itself on the peace symbol has stirred much debate. Arguments by some that it looks tasteless may have some meaning behind it. But the other reason is that the peace symbol concept is just a phase that may not be relevant in ten years. I should hope the concept of peace will never become irrelevant. Suggestions like that are more tasteless than any ol' dove, no matter what he's doing.

BOOKSTIRE BALLHYOO: An April 27 robbery attempt at the Associated Students bookstore failed when the clerk couldn't open the register. A suggested headline for the story we ran: "Incompetence at the Bookstore Finally Pays Off."

SERVES THEM RIGHT: Young Socialist Alliance, whose four party members fell to resounding defeats in the recent elections, called for student control of the Guardsman in their platform. They demanded that students have say in the newspaper policy. What do they think I am?

Another point on their garbled platform included total withdrawal of US forces from Indochina. I didn't realize student council had that much power.

CRITIC'S CRITIC: The Free Critic has been attacked for "blatant propaganda" after their election issue which devoted four of eight pages to one party. Coincidentally, three members of that party, United Students Alliance, are editors of the paper.

FAREWELL: So here I am at the end of my last column for City College. I want to say something witty, but I'm speechless. How about if I just say "Peace." No, that's no good. "Right on, brothers and sisters." Gads, that's worse. "How about love and happiness." No, how about . . .

With summer approaching, many students will be witnessing scenes such as this shot by staff photographer Wythe Bowe during a weekend trip he took to Yosemite National Park.

Believe It . . . or Don't!

By Russ Cramer

Though the following statements may sound credulous, parts of them, and sometimes even the complete statements are figments of the imagination. Believe what you will —.

• In a recent appearance at the University of California, Berkeley, Senator George McGovern was cheered on by the student body when he denounced all wars and called for an end to our support of the present one. The same student body, was not so enthusiastic, and even booed his call for adopting a similar policy in the middle east. The Senator wondered what he had said wrong.

• Accusations of the campus police being carried away with their role as lawkeepers, and counter-accusations of student biases towards them, have caused the administration to look into the possibility of having the policemen shed their uniforms and patrol the area in "civvies," wearing only a badge which identified them as policemen.

• African activists at Hyde Park corner, London, denounced those "Third World" slogans that have gained popularity in the U.S., on grounds that one couldn't profess to have "Third World" views and continue to live outside that world.

• The suicide division of the S.F. Police Department are toying with the idea of erecting a gigantic net just below the Golden Gate bridge and in the path of the "jumpers." They hope this action will cut down present expenditures of maintaining a 24 hour suicide squad. A second leap from the net wouldn't be lethal.

• Last semester a group of behavioral scientists conducted a study in race relations here on campus. "City" was chosen for the study above several other colleges for its racially diversified student body. One of the more disheartening conclusions the experts reached was that the extent of integration on campus is strikingly low. The Social Studies Department are now offering a course in race relations next semester with the view of having its students look into the findings of the study more closely, its causes and come up with possible solutions.

• Bumper Sticker: "America — Love it — it's too late to change it."

• A recent study shows campus women to be politically more active than the men.

Body and Soul

By Tina Brant

Somewhere out there in this great big world is a smile waiting for you. Look in the mirror — it's you — but where is that smile? Lost in a cold view of life? Or loaned to someone else for the day?

Joy is a feeling. Some people say it is impossible to experience. Some, on the other hand, have the feeling in their minds and will never get rid of it.

"JOY," by William C. Schutz, (Grover Press, Inc., New York), is an excellent book. It will aid in ridding you of tensions or animosity toward other people or yourself. It will teach you about interpersonal relations and organizational relations. When you have finished reading "JOY" you will feel like a new person, ready to try your wings in a new world, a more beautiful world than before.

The Moody Blues have a joyous feeling when they sing. They can convey it through their voices and their bouncy music. The mood is mellow and the words have happy meanings. To describe them in a few words is difficult, but they are for everybody, both old and young.

"Floating"

Floating free as a bird
Sixty foot leaps it's so absurd
From up here you should see the view
Such a lot of space for me and you

Oh you'll like it.
Gliding around, get your feet off the ground
Oh you'll like it.
Do as you please with so much ease.

Now I know how it feels
To have wings on my heels
To take a stroll among the stars
Get a close look at planet Mars.

Oh you'd like it.
Gliding around, get your feet off the ground
Oh you'd like it.
Do as you please with so much ease.

Bouncing about on the Moon
Guess you'll all be up here soon
The candy stores will be brand new
And you'll buy rock with the Moon right through.

Oh you'd like it
Gliding around, get your feet off the ground
Oh you'd like it
Do as you please with so much ease.

—R. Thomas — The Moody Blues

Are You Fooling Yourself?

By Tom Wilkins

Do you enjoy taking photographs? Do you own a polaroid or instamatic camera and like photographing friends and places? If you have answered "yes" to all of the above questions then you just might be on the verge of entering the photo department at City College. The photo department is rated as one of the best on the west coast.

Now, do you have money? You will find that there is much more money involved than just a few books and photo supplies that are stated in the course description.

If you have not become discouraged by now then you should talk to one of the photo instructors. He will tell you more about the programmed system one must go through in order to become proficient with the view-camera, editorial, design, movie, commercial, black and white, and color photography.

To be a "picture-taker" is easy, and one should stick to the polaroid or instamatic. But if you wish to be a knowledgeable well-rounded professional photographer and not really specialize in anything; that is probably how you will be after the two year curriculum at City College.

How about a little specialization? That is what everyone seems to be doing these days. Why can't a person be a portrait photographer without being a commercial, view-camera or movie photographer or vice-versa.

A person who says, "I know most everything about photography" is either a "genius" or "fooling himself."

A Real Dud Opens

By Charles Prongos

Knickerbocker Holiday, now at the Curran Theater is a total flop and makes for an unenjoyable evening.

Based on a story by Washington Irving, Knickerbocker Holiday has a simple, run of the mill story line. Set in colonial New York, Brom (David Holliday) and Tina (Anita Gillette) are in love. The conflict is established as Governor Pieter Stuyvesant (Burt Lancaster) arrives and Tina's father orders her to marry the Governor. Brom is sentenced to be hanged, but law and order and a happy ending prevails and Brom and Tina are free to marry.

While Brom and Tina are happy the audience is not. By the second act, the people who did return for it, were not even clapping. Even the ingenues in the second balcony didn't clap as is usually expected of them.

The book written by Maxwell Anderson and music composed by Kurt Weill are both boring. The one good song (September Song) is brutally murdered by the star. The jokes are few and far between and are also ruined by Mr. Lancaster's lack of timing and acting.

More uncreativity can be credited to the unimaginative costumes, setting, lighting and choreography.

Burt Lancaster as the "colorful" Governor is very imperfect. Mr. Lancaster seemed comfortable on his silver peg leg. He seemed to be ill at ease with the dialogue, singing and audience.

Anita Gillette did a fantastic job on the character of Tina. It's too bad Mrs. Gillette does not have the voice for the uninteresting operatic score.

David Holliday was good as Brom, however there are a dozen performers who could have played the undemanding role.

Nothing seems to work in Knickerbocker Holiday. The whole cast seems inadequate, as does the whole production. It seems that perhaps the Civic Light Opera should stop creating and reviving musicals, for only two in the past 34 years have become hits.

—By Charles Prongos

Burt Lancaster and Anita Gillette star in Knickerbocker Holiday.

Personality of the Week

By Mike Nastari

This week's personality is the Guardsman's Editor-In-Chief, Jim Toland.

Jim, a 22 year old fifth generation, native San Franciscan is finishing his second semester at City College. He has a 3.7 grade point average. "People don't believe me when I tell them that I don't read much," he said.

"I'd rather spend my time walking along the beach, making things out of wood, and talking to nice people."

Jim says that nice people are those human beings who are not trying to push a trip on him. "I don't want to be analyzed, criticized, or categorized."

It seems that people won't take you as you are, they always want to mold you to what they feel you should be. I don't like pushy people.

Jim feels that his wide variety of experience has aided him greatly in his mental growth. He has lived in many areas of the city. "As a kid, I grew up around the Precita Park-Bernal Heights area, later my family moved out to Geneva and Mission. When I left home I lived in the Haight-Ashbury, and Mission districts.

Jim Toland has had many jobs, he has worked on the waterfront as a longshoreman, driven a beer truck, had one professional prize fight, sold astrology charts, and was in the Army for three months until he received a medical discharge. Jim is also a Doctor of Divinity in The Church of the New Truth. I've also done a few other things that I'd rather not mention, but he wouldn't elaborate. I get bored easily, he said, "I've always had a curious urge to find out what was really happening in the world."

Jim has spent the better portion of the last three years hitchhiking around the United States. "I got shot at in Georgia, and a cowboy tried to run me down in Texas with his station wagon."

Jim liked New Orleans. "I lived there on and off for almost a year. I had a cheap attic apartment in the French Quarter where I did a lot of writing and sketching. It was about three blocks away from the Mississippi River and near a lot of the old jazz clubs.

Guardsman Editor Jim Toland

"I love listening to all kinds of music, but for me, jazz is where it's at, especially big city blues-jazz.

"I think that instrumental music is much more beautiful than vocal, words strip music of feeling, feeling is important to me."

When he lived in New Orleans, Jim wrote an astrology column for an underground newspaper and worked part-time as a bartender in a bohemian style tavern.

"All I want out of life is to live in a house on a beach somewhere with someone who loves me. I want to have two brown horses to ride on the beach, and a green and red parrot that will sit on my shoulder when I come to the city."

Platypus in City Hall

By Linda Grauber

Tony Serra, long-haired, local criminal defense lawyer has just officially announced his acceptance of candidacy for Mayor of San Francisco. He is supported by the Platypus Platform which is devoted to the concept of "Renaissance Now!" Their major interest is to make San Francisco streets safe for dancing.

The first area of concern is the war in Viet Nam. The Platypus Party would postulate for San Francisco that the compulsory U.S. drafting of San Francisco residents be forthwith eliminated. San Francisco would further provide sanctuary to all draft offenders. And, as a corollary, all taxes, including personal, property and income taxes, would be discontinued in San Francisco. Without war, taxes are not needed, states the party.

Financing the city's government would be accomplished by cultural activities as present in Medici's Florence in its Renaissance Era: music, film, video, open air concerts, craft, artifacts and art objects, operated by the municipality.

Another chief theme for converting San Francisco into a renaissance city would be to translate the present urban downtown area into a city park. This would involve converting all of the streets and sidewalks into parks and lawns. No combustion engines would be allowed inside such area. City codes would be renovated so as to allow geodesic domes and other improved forms of architecture to exist in the city. In chief, the party's intentions are to facilitate San Francisco in establishing itself as a contemporary renaissance city by politically and sociologically seceding from the United States.

San Francisco will be a free port. No duties or tariffs will be commanded from imports or exports.

In addition to Tony Serra running for mayor, other candidates will be announced in the future who will seek Supervisor's positions, judge positions, and public defender and district attorney positions. Ronald Landberg of the Good Earth is a platypus for supervisor.

Students who would like to participate in the fun and work of the Platypus Party may contact the campaign headquarters.

Re-elected President Calls for Free Critic Scrutiny by Council

continued from page 1

Liang, has asked for the resignation of the editorial staff of the Free Critic."

"I had a lot of faith in a lot of the people with the Free Critic. After the Free Critic issue (of May 25) came out, no doubt it blew my mind, but it blew countless minds on this campus. I believe we should have a Free Critic, but I also now believe that we should have people from student council sitting in as advisers to the Critic or as part of the staff — especially since the Free Critic is funded by Associated Students Council.

As a matter of fact, with the Experimental College group, I would say we allocate $10,000, which is a lot of money . . . It would have been nice to have given the same privileges by the editors extended to all candidates that were running in this election. This was not done."

"A lot of people had faith in the Free Critic and their people have their supporters from the whole school," Lai stated. "The eyes of all the students and countless people are watching. What we're going to do, as far as the Free Critic is concerned — I would rest it upon this council."

In regard to partisan voting in next semester's council: "I say they (members of the United Students Alliance) will vote independently." As for the Unified Students, he said, "I hope they vote according to how they feel, not how I feel."

Lai, when queried about the high point of his administration, remarked: "It seems that at the end of Judy Kay's term, she had a high point. It seems that with a few more meetings remaining, I have a high point — and that seems to be the Free Critic."

Lai also commented on the controversial campus seal: "Roger Gee, who came in at number two, should have taken action immediately — he did not do so . . . I'm sorry the way it came out. We picked a winner and that's the way it goes." His personal reaction to the winning seal was: "I really dig it. I really like it!"

Humanity Students Hold Expo - Discuss Purpose of Education

continued from page 1

to the San Francisco group, highlighted the presentation.

Choi's lecture, "The Purpose of Education," emphasized several basic reasons alluding to the causes of conflict and destruction in today's world.

Choi stressed that while in college, students seriously begin to search for a direction in life which will be best suited to them. It is a period in which the individual may either choose to accept or reject society's values.

He further stated that in today's "highly materialistic, highly technological society," individuals tend to search for more meaningful, more aesthetic modes of living and often reject the society. They may revert to a variety of lifestyles — hippieism, isolationism, communalism — in search of a direction. "What many individuals truly fail to ask themselves is, 'I am rejecting this way of life, but what have I to offer to improve the situation?' "

"One may reject the ways of the society, but the conflict, confusion and destruction still remain."

"It is often simple for a person to accept or reject a philosophy or a lifestyle, but once the individual selects and then begins to tailor certain aspects of a direction meant for an entire group to his personal wants, conlfict and destruction usually result."

"Man is man," added Choi, "because of his essence, because of his character. Each individual character is basic and unique. A person has the potential to realize his full uniqueness and simultaneously has the potential to contribute this conscientiously, to the benefit of the entire society."

Choi stressed also that educational trends today bend toward the scientific, the rational. "While man advances technically and materially, conscientiousness seems to be on the decline. As a result, many individuals feel empty, confused and frustrated."

"Behind any revolution is a purpose of evolving a better standard of human life. There have been scores of revolutions throughout human history with many ideologies promising better ways of life. These, however, seemed not to have raised man's basic characteristic traits," Choi said.

He added that individuals often neglect their conscience and heart in pursuit of the rational and the materialistic and until the utilization of heart and conscience can be integrated constructively with the rationalistic and the material, conflict, misunderstanding and destruction will continue throughout the world.

SANG IK CHOI — stresses "The Purpose of Education" at Exposition.

Backbreaking Work Pays Off for the Orthopedic Assisting Program

By Tina Brant

The Orthopaedic Physician's Assistants, a nationwide program that started at City College, will have its first graduating class at the end of the semester. This came after two years of training on and off campus.

The graduating class consists of 18 students, only two are female. One-third are ex-military corpsmen, one-third have prior medical experience and one-third are inexperienced in the field of medicine.

Requirements for the training program consist of one semester of hospital orientation, one semester of emergency room technique, one semester of cast and traction application, and one semester of operating room technique.

Classrooms for the Orthopaedic Physician's Assistants (OPAs) are filled with equipment from Ace Bandages and Plaster of Paris to traction equipment. The students practice on "Mrs. Chase," a flexible mannequin.

After graduating from City College, the OPAs will seek employment by either a private physician or a hospital. They will fill the gap between the nurse and surgeon, leaving the surgeon free to perform the more professional services.

The assistants obtain and record salient orthopaedic medical history and carry out certain aspects of the examination.

They are experts in plaster cast application and understand the possible dangers of this form of treatment. They instruct patients in cast care and have the skills to remove plaster casts with care and facility.

The assistants are equipped with the general principles of traction treatment. They prepare or set up specific types of traction requested by the surgeon after which they are able to check a patient in traction, repoft deficiency in the apparatus, as well as make simple adjustments.

The assistants are able to exact minor surgical procedures. They are trained as surgical technicians to assist the orthopaedic surgeons in surgery.

The OPAs assemble and prepare the fracture table to the specifications of the orthopaedic surgeon for various procedures. They have special knowledge of orthopaedic surgical instruments and understand the maintenance of the various screwdrivers, drills and power equipment.

The assistants are able to apply simple braces and perform minor adjustments and repairs. They are also able to make simple splints for various conditions under the direction of the orthopaedic surgeon.

They teach patients the proper methods for use of the crutch, cane, and walker. In addition the Assistants instruct patients and assist them in the performance of specific active exercises as directed by the orthopaedic surgeon.

The Assistants are also familiar with routine office procedure and are able to understand and perform certain basic secretarial and nursing functions.

Seventy-five surgeons have already stated that they are definitely in the need of the Orthopaedic Surgeon's Assistant and soon radiology will be added to the program.

Applications for the program are filled. Three hundred students have filed applications and there are only 25 seats in the class.

Record Turnout for Election

continued from page 1

total of 624 votes to U.S.A. candidate Charla Duke's 609. The original figures showed Yee with 621 and Duke with 608.

Elected to the AS Council from the United Student Alliance were Jocelyn Won, Robert Kahn, Cecelia Madrid, Jack McClosky, Felicia Cala, Jim O'Donnel, Steve Sum, Dan Atzinger, Sam Sanchez, Charles Taliofero, and Ray Bazurto.

The remaining three seats went to Unified Students candidates Connie Louie, Francis Kok, and Larry Pong.

The voting on the two propositions ended with Proposition 1, calling for the ratification of the new constitution passing by a margin of 1067 votes to 375 votes. But Proposition 2, the controversial proposal to end the required 2.0 grade point average necessary to hold office, and requiring a two-thirds majority to pass, was defeated by 842 in favor to 901 against.

Perhaps the biggest controversy in the election concerned the invalidation of 105 ballots.

The disqualification of these ballots stemmed from the Unified Students Party running a slate of fifteen candidates for Council, whereas only fourteen seats are available on the council.

"I decided before counting the votes," said election commissioner Jack Hansen, "that any ballots with fifteen names checked would be disqualified. We ended up eliminating 107 ballots. We did, however allow the votes for president and vice-president on these ballots to be counted."

"It's too bad those votes were eliminated," said Vice-President elect Paul Yee. "With those votes, we (the U.S. party) could have won five more seats on Council which would have changed its entire make-up."

PAUL YEE — Newly elected Vice-President.

Lai explained the extra candidate on the U.S. ballot by stating that one of the US candidates for council, Steve Marigan, dropped out of the running before the election but his name remained on the ballot anyway.

Art Samuels, Director of Student Activities, called the voter turnout one of the highest he had ever seen and said, "We tried to run a fair election."

Samuels also revealed that next year votes would be counted by machine rather than hand.

Following his election, Lai thanked the students and promised he would do "my best to serve and to see 'all goes well,' that fairness and justice prevail on this campus."

Free Critic Blasted At Fiery Meeting

continued from page 1

only has to submit it before deadline."

McCloskey defended his paper in its content by saying, "It's the editors' right to state what they think should be done."

Fong, seemingly tired of the hour long inflammatory arguments, expressed his concern for student unity as the foremost goal:

"The Free Critic people got together and we became one. Seventeen inner organizations managed to pull together under one group. Students established programs for students. We are going to keep on moving for student unity. If cutting off funds is what will keep unity, do it."

Lai's near physical confrontation arose when he engaged in a shouting match with one student, who was sitting next to another student, Charlie Smith, in front of the room. When the student screamed in defiance of Lai, the president said, "Call your boy off, Charlie." Smith, strongly upset at Lai, calmed down the angered student before he could move towards the president.

No decisions were made after the hour and a half marathon, and council tabled the matter until a special Friday meeting.

SCHOOL YEAR

1971 — 1972

WHAT MAKES MICHAEL WONG RUN ?

THE GUARDSMAN

City College
of San Francisco
Volume 73 Number 1
September 30, 1971

Published by the Journalism Students

Administrative Positions Open

Fall 1971 semester begins with three administrative job openings that could result in changes beneficial to students.

One of the positions open is guidance counselor. The primary function of this counseling job will be to communicate with and counsel Black, Filipino and Latino students.

Candidates for guidance counselor are required to be interviewed by a committee consisting in part of students of the same ethnic or racial background as the applicant.

This $17,120 year position has attracted many applicants, all of whom are required to have a Master's degree.

The resignation of Dean Arthur Samuels as director of student activities created an opening for candidates who have or are eligible for an administration or supervision credential.

Applicants for the position of director of student activities must also have training and experience in the areas of student activities, parliamentary procedures, and fiscal responsibilities.

The main function of the job is to assist the dean of students in administering regulations governing student organizations or persons or groups conducting non-institutional activities on campus.

Another responsibility of director of student activities is to assist The Asso-

(continued on page 4)

Samuels to Join Counseling Staff

The newly vacated office of director of student activities is the office that will have the most effect on the students of City College.

The office was vacated by former Director Arthur Samuels in order to return to his former position as a counselor. He resigned from the post during summer vacation.

Dean of Students Ralph Hillsman, the acting director, stated that "he (Samuels) requested a return to the counseling department by the Fall of 1971. Because of the new format for hiring, Samuels wanted to continue until a new director was found. Eventually, he became ill and was hospitalized. I was required to fill in for him."

Hillsman was director of student activities from 1958 until 1962. He will be assisted during this interim period by two Assistant Deans (Edna Pope and Willis Kirk) until a new director is hired.'.

The new director will be selected by a committee made up of students and members of the administration. The position will be advertised not only in San Francisco but through the state as well.

Applications will be made through Reginald Alexander, dean of certified services, San Francisco Community College District.

Screening of the candidates will take place in October if a selection committee has been officially appointed by then. November 1, 1971 is the tentative date for the announcement of the new director.

MICHAEL WONG is a 20 year-old running for supervisor.

CCSF Student Wins Right to Enter City Supervisors' Race

As the result of a federal court ruling, a City College student is now allowed to run for the San Francisco Board of Supervisors although he is unable to pay the required filing fee.

Michael Wong, 20, needed only to swear under oath that he was unable to pay the filing fee in order to run. This was ruled by Judge Alvin Woolenberg on September 17.

At a press conference held in the Gang Room of the Student Union building last Monday, Wong announced that any money given to his campaign will be donated to free health clinics throughout the city.

"After swearing that I couldn't pay the filing fee, I couldn't in good conscience accept money for my campaign, so any money I receive will go to these clinics. In addition, 75 % of my supervisor's salary (about $8000 per year) will also go to these clinics."

Wong feels that this gesture will help "bring a new consciousness to America," as well as fight the drug, suicide and venereal disease problems which he said are especially bad in lower and middle class neighborhoods.

Michael Wong is also interested in a British-type program for controlling drug use. This would entail giving drugs to addicts at government-run clinics.

Wong stressed his concern with the veterans returning home, often, impaired physically by drugs and psychologically by the horrors of war.

He feels the pressing problems of health conditions and overcrowding in Chinatown, as in the Black and Brown communities, are to be given top priority in the city.

Wong is of two minds on the controversial busing issue:

"I am for it in that it will improve education opportunities for minorities but I feel that it is wrong because it only affects poor people: the rich can afford to send their children to private schools and can avoid busing."

Wong's campaign will consist mainly of knocking on doors since he has no money. Any money donated to his campaign will be given to the free health services.

Wong is currently a member of the Drop-Out Prevention Committee at CCSF, and expects to be supported by the Student Council.

Wong would like to be a fulltime supervisor.

A third-generation San Franciscan, Michael Wong is the son of a postal clerk and the oldest of three children. He is a graduate of Lowell High School and plans to attend the University of California at Berkeley to study law. His ambition is to someday be on the Board of Governors at U.C. Berkeley or City College.

"I would like to win," he said, "but even if I lose the election the free health clinics would win because of the money they would get from my campaign."

New 60 Unit Transfer Rule

California State College Trustees recently approved tough new admissions standards for community college transfers.

The new rule, adopted by the trustees, will not go into effect until fall semester, 1974.

It will affect some 40,000 students a year who transfer from two-year community colleges to state colleges for their junior and senior years.

Up to now, any student with 60 units of work in any subject matter area has been automatically eligible to transfer to any state college of his choice as long as there was room for him.

Because many of these units might have been in non-academic work not accepted for degree credit by the state college he chose, the student might have to spend three or four additional years completing the work for his bachelors degree.

Under the new system, community college transfers will not be eligible for admission to a state college unless the 60 units of work are in academic areas and can be accepted for degree credit by the state college.

The new admissions policy would be similar to transfer policies which the University of California has required for years.

The trustee's unanimous acceptance of the proposal came despite opposition from spokesmen representing the community colleges.

John A. Gresham, Marin Community College Superintendant said, "The proposed regulations include no uniform definition of transferability. Transferability would be defined at the discretion of the state college president."

Gresham continued, "This change will upset the principle of equal treatment for transfer students."

But Chancellor Glenn S. Dumke said the 1974 implementation date "gives us plenty of elbow room" and that "if we wait until everyone agrees, we'll postpone this thing forever."

The new policy was also opposed by representatives of the Board of Governors of the California Community Colleges and the California Community College Association.

Draft Extension Ends All Student Deferments

After months of delays, the Senate Tuesday sent to the White House, the bill extending the military draft to June 23, 1973.

Attaining President Nixon's signiture will enable the Selective Service System to renew draft inductions halted when the old law expired last June 20.

The new bill abolishes deferements for students beginning college this fall semester, extends the rights of the draftee before his local board, and limits the inductions to 136,000 this year and 140,000 next year.

"Now is the time for seeing a good draft counselor so that you can plan to finish school," says Mike Mitroff of the draft counseling services located in the Experimental College.

Mike, a student at San Francisco State, and his colleague, Rod Rose, are located in Bungalo 5. Their office hours are: Monday 8 a.m. - 5:30 p.m., Wednesday 8 a.m. - 12:30 p.m., Friday 8 a.m. - 5:30 p.m.

Mike and Rod urge all students who face the draft to see them before and induction notice arrives. This will allow them the needed time to advise students as to possible legal ways a man can avoid the draft. Free forms and brochures concerning various deferements are available now.

Foreign students who have visas or are exchange students are exempt but all others of draft age are eligible to be drafted. Mike and Rod urge men who find themselves in this spot not to wait, but see a counselor now.

GUARDSMAN OPINIONS, FACTS

New Slant On Prison Reform

After all the terror and bloodshed reported during the last few months in the nation's prisons, it is time to take some form of decisive action to make institutional living more humanly tolerable.

It is true, of course, that most of the men in prison have done something to make themselves a threat or a danger to society. Some people have argued that prison conditions are too soft as they are now, and that prisoners should be treated harsher and given more severe sentences.

Prison conditions are not soft. Brutality and homosexual rape run rampant in America's prisons. Murders and beatings are almost a daily occurance, and now even riots are not rare.

Two years ago, on a prison farm in Alabama, several bodies were dug up all of whom were listed as "escaped" prisoners.

In Louisiana's Angola Prison, men have had to eat rats and other rodents to keep from starving, because prisoners there are punished by not being fed.

Experimentation at a Southern California prison with conjugal or family visits has proved to be a complete success. Yet when a bill to allow conjugal visits was brought up before the assembly floor, it was actually laughed off by members of the assembly in what witnesses say was one of the most disgusting displays ever seen in the capitol chambers.

While the California Assembly denied visits to its prisoners, Mississippi has allowed wives to make these visits for years.

When 40 people were slain in Attica Prison in New York in mid September by anxious state troopers and National Guard troops ordered out by Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller, a point was proved.

State and local governments are incapable of caring for and rebabilitating the people they incarcerate.

Their prison systems have proved to be inefficient, corrupt, and subject to the influence of local politics and politicians.

Some of the employees of these prisons appear to be barbaric sadists or incompetent idiots. In some prisons such as Angola, convicts are allowed to guard other prisoners with shotguns (regular prison guards are out of range in prison towers with machine guns aimed at the convict guards) sometimes finding a "necessary" reason to shoot fellow convicts.

The only answer to the prison problem in the United States today is to put all penal institutions under Federal Government control.

In the Federal prisons there is no capital punishment, and conditions are uniform and decent. Convicts with outside assistance may often have a television in their cells along with all the books and reading matter that they desire.

When asked his preference, an ex-convict answered, "I'd take a federal rap anytime. I had a partner once, who was wanted in Georgia for gunning a state trooper. The law was on him; he knew he'd get caught eventually, so he went into a post office and killed a postal clerk."

Since federal crimes have priority over local and state, the murderer was sentenced to life in a federal prison rather than a cell on death row in Georgia.

Federal control of prisons would solve many, if not most, of the problems in America's prisons.

— Jim Toland

OUTLOOK: Steve Duchnowski types his first Guardsman assignment.

First Semester Outlook

From the viewpoint of a 23-year old student at City College the outlook can be very dismal the first semester.

Not being up to date on any of the subjects for about six years can tend to make a person's study habits a-bit faulty. When I think back, it's been a long time since I have read a book or even grabbed a pen and paper and jotted down any information that I might benefit from.

If you were any kind of average student, all of the different variations of subjects or topics should come right back to you. If you were not that swift, it will probably be a hardship for quite a lengthy time until you achieve that period of adjustment. There is no set age group at City College, young and old alike are welcome, but the fact remains, I guess you never know until you try. I suggest if you have been away from school a long time lighten up on the number of units you take the first semester.

Run through it the first semester to get an idea of how much you can handle. Then, next semester you'll know what your capacity is.

If you can touch your toes that's cool, but when it hurts your back that's something else. So if it's your first semester like me, take it easy.

— Steve Duchnowski

Disappointing Entertainment

Fillmore West has died, but Bill Graham still lives to carry on the San Francisco music tradition.

Besides promoting the giant rock acts in Berkeley's Community Theater, Oakland's Coliseum and San Francisco's Civic Auditorium, Graham has again regained control of Winterland Auditorium to produce weekly shows there.

Among the groups coming to Winterland include Black Sabbath Oct. 1 and 2, Allman Brothers Oct. 8 and 9, and Pink Floyd for one nitht only Oct. 15.

Jesus Christ Superstar come to the Oakland Coliseum Oct. 2 and 3, and Grand Funk Railroad Oct. 24.

Donovan comes to Civic Auditorium on Oct. 24, while David Crosby and Graham Nash visit the Berkeley Community Theatre on Oct. 14 and 15, and Gordon Lifhtfoot on Oct. 17.

Upcoming Bill Graham productions in the near future include Traffic, The Jeff Beck Group, Sha Na Na, Ten Years After, and The Who.

KFRC radio will present Credence Clearwater at the Oakalnd Coliseum Oct. 16 and the rock-opera Tommy will return to Friends and Relations Hall starting Sept. 28.

— C. Csavossy

THE GUARDSMAN

The Guardsman is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. The Editorial office is located in S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. The mailing address is 50 Phelan Avenue, San Francisco, California 94112.

Editor — Jim Toland
News — Ed Hartzler
Bruno R. Torner
Sports — Jim Parsons
Photography — Jim Serpilio
Exchange — Robert Forman

Reporters: Leonard Bellanger, Richard Blair, Bruce Bosso, Aushim Chaudhuri, C. Csavossy, Kathleen Girard, John Gose, Maha Jaber, Mike Lorenz, Gregory McKeag, Mike Slattery, Paul Snodgrass, Oscar Vinson.

Faculty Adviser — Dorry Coppoletta

BART MAY MOVE: After months in mothballs, this strange vehicle, a monorail, may soon adorn our skyways. Perhaps in six months we will ride on the project that has been taking the taxpayer for a ride for a long time.

Aggravating Gym Classes

The time has come to re-examine the requirement that all students take a gym class.

In a time when all young people are being given increasingly larger says in their own life, it is a shame that there are still people who think they know how to run another person's life better than the individual does.

Eighteen year-olds can vote, and they may soon be able to drink, but they are unable to decide if they need physical education.

There is no defense for forcing students to take P|E| The only conceivable one, that it is good for them, is easily seen to be full of holes when held up to the light of examination.

As anyone who has taken such a class knows, the people who want to get something out of it work, and the students who don't more-or-less stand around and look silly. There is no stipulation that one must break into a sweat; the only requirement is that one get dressed and be there.

Why, then, does this rule persist? The answer lies in that the people who make the rules do not have to obey them.

Voluntary gym classes are immensely more sensible than required ones. They will allow those who want physical education to have it and let those who do not want it schedule their time in a much more useful manner. There is no practical reason why this cannot be done.

It is time for a change.

— King Thompson

FEATURES, NEWS AND REVIEWS

Motorcycle Flick Opens

Anyone who remembers the Beach Boys, "Woodies", and Surfer Magazine will remember Bruce Brown and his surf-movies.

Bruce started by narrating his own short films in person at high school auditoriums in Southern California. When it became apparent that even non-surfers enjoyed this kind of exciting visual entertainment, Bruce made "The Endless Summer", a full-length film which was eventually screened in theaters.

Bruce Brown doesn't merely make sports documentaries. He is essentially into cinematography as an art form. He has done for cycles what he previously did for surfing. He captures, by the use of slow-motion and daring close-ups, the speed, grace, beauty, in fact the very "feel" of piloting a high-powered motorcycle.

HILLCLIMBING: "On Any Sunday is a new type of motorcycle movie.

The film made enough to keep young Bruce in surfboard wax, and to help finance further moviemaking experiments.

Brown's latest cinematic exercise is "On Any Sunday." This is a full-length color film with complete soundtrack, and is being run commercially around the regular theater circuit, often with other documentaries, like the Stones' "Gimme Shelter".

The flick covers all aspects of motorcycling. It focuses especially on dirt-riding and the men who ride "On Any Sunday" in competition and just for fun.

Bruce Brown doesn't merely make sports documentaries. He is essentially into cinematography as an art form. He has done for cycles what he previously did for surfing. He captures, by the use of slow-motion and daring close-ups, the speed, grace, beauty, in fact the very "feel" of piloting a high-powered motorcycle.

Many segments show the view over the handlebars. Even non-enthusiasts' pulses will quicken when they see how it looks sliding sideways with your left boot on the ground, around a curve in a dirt track at 80-plus miles per hour.

Besides some of the best action film probably ever shot anywhere, the flick has some good insights into the type of men who choose to make a living by gambling their lives racing. The film zeroes in on Mert Lawwill, 1970 American Motorcycle Association National Champion, holder of the "No. 1" plate.

We see him, with van and motorcycle, leave his suburban home and family in Tiburon, drive 29 hours non-stop and then hop on his bike and race all day at 100 miles an hour around a mile oval of dirt.

The movie is a joy to watch for anyone who has ever been hillclimbing or scrambling on a bike, which is to say, an enthusiast. (Once you try it, you're hooked!) And for those who think scramblers and choppers are some kind of kitchen utensils, the movie should prove educational indeed, and will at last satisfy their curiosity as to why those nuts ride up cliffs on those noisy gizmos, making all that dust and noise.

It figures that a small, independent outfit like Brown's would be first to do a realistic film on motorcycles and motorcyclists. Hollywood has finally taken cars seriously, with films like "Grand Prix" and "Le Mans". However their only use of motorcycles in movies continues to be as props for sensationalized youth exploitation epics full of sex and violence.

The image of the motorcyclist presented to movie audiences in the past has been a sort of beer-guzzling neanderthal man in a leather jacket. So if you could dig seeing a documentary for a change of pace, and if you are into bikes, or merely curious about them, go see "On Any Sunday". It's a real eye-opener.

— Paul Snodgrass

Portraits of the Past Reflected in Comedy

Our favorite comedians are, we would like to think, men of vision. If this be so, then make the most of this: "Groucho" (Julius Henry) Marx following the death of producer Irving Thalberg, one of the boy wonders of Hollywood, gave voice to these words (in paraphrase) why do great men all die young and worthless people live forever?

Groucho was born in 1895, in Yorkville, on the Upper West Side of Manhattan Island in New York City, the son of a French Jewish immigrant tailor. His brothers (no sisters were ever born to the large family) were Leonard (dubbed "Chico" for his portrayal of an Italian, in dialect, in the brother's vaudeville act.); Arthur "Harpo" (another vaudeville sobriquet), Herbert ("Zeppo"), and in the vaudeville days, Gummo, who also starred with them on Broadway in the early Twenties, in the musicals I'll Say She Is and Cocoanuts.

The boys nicknamed their mother "Minnie," and their father "Frenchy". Their father's real name was Samuel.

— Bob Forman

CITY COLLEGE OF SAN FRANCISCO
1971 FOOTBALL SCHEDULE

DAY	DATE	OPPONENT	PLACE	TIME
Fri.	Oct. 8	Chabot	Here	2:30 p.m.
Fri.	Oct. 15	Merritt	Merritt	2:30 p.m.
Fri.	Oct. 22	Laney	Laney	7:30
Fri.	Oct. 29	San Mateo	Here	2:00 p.m.
Sat.	Nov. 5	San Jose	Here	2:00 p.m.
Sat.	Nov. 13	Diablo Valley	There	7:30 p.m.
Fri.	Nov. 19	Foothill	Here	2:00 p.m.

City College's football fortunes mark time this weekend with a welcome break in a schedule that permits Coach "Dutch" Elston's 'n White squad to prepare for their first conference encounter when they host Chabot's Gladiators, Friday, October 8, at 2:30 p.m.

Although the 1971 Rams grid machine has suffered early season disappointments, Coach Elston views the upcoming Golden Gate Conference campaign with considerable optimism.

"Our squad contains great potential, offensively and defensively," advises Elston, "and added game experience should bring us favorable results."

Coach Elston reports he is pleased with the defensive performance of first year player Ed Levi, LB (Balboa). Also receiving high praise from Elston is Francis O'Leary, LB, a second year student who did not participate in varsity football last season.

First year offense players earning plaudits from their chief mentor are: Tim O'Shea, QB (St. Ignatius); Lee Hubbard, OG (Washington) and Michael Fauss, center (Balboa).

Second year offense players Louis Cobos, OT, and Pat Grimesey, LB, have rated warm comment from Elston.

On Friday, October 15, the Rams hit the road to engage the Thunderbirds of Merritt college. Kickoof time is 2:20 p.m.

• Campus Views •

QUESTION: What is your favorite form of recreation?

Terry Twist - English Major
"Taking trips on my bicycle, it's good exercise, and by riding out in the fresh air and meet a lot of interesting people."

Ellena Tadla - Gen. Ed.
"Dancing. I make a point to try and go dancing at least once a week. I like almost every kind of dancing."

Lydia Jefferson - Nursing Major
"Volleyball and softball and swimming. It keeps me healthy."

Doreei Jong - Secretarial Major
"Bowling. I'm not a real good bowler; it takes so much skill. I sure wish the lanes were straighter and more level."

Jeannie Evans - Registered Nurse
"Fishing. It's a challenge; you need patience. I go with my mother, she's still teaching me how to fish. I prefer freshwater so I can catch bass and catfish."

Nancy Miller - Philosophy
"Riding Horses. It's a really together thing. The horse I ride Keysha I raised from a colt and we communicate together."

Director Announces New Library Changes

The City College library has opened for Fall '71 with new educational aids, new personnel, and new hours.

Located in the third floor of Cloud Hall, the library has almost completed establishment of a centralized and efficient reference area in the huge West Room. With new catalogues and lighting on the way, the room will offer the student easy access to all material the library has to offer.

The General Reading Room, located to the left of the main entrance, now contains the back issues of major periodicals. These issues were once kept on the third floor of the stack area.

The General Reading Room offers the student a quiet area to study and the convenience of quick reference to periodicals. A micro-film center, with an expanded library and "Reader-Printer" for duplication, is also located in the General Room.

New personnel have also been added. Mrs. Ethel Crockett, the library director, has welcomed to the staff this fall James Berg, a reference librarian and Miss Yen Chang, a library technician.

With the addition of new hours, the new and improved facilities can now be put to excellent use this Fall. Sunday has been added as a regular day of operation and the library will be open from 1 to 5 p.m.

Weekday hours are Monday - Thursday 7:30 - 9:00 and Friday 7:30 - 4:30.

In addition, the library offers other facilities.

With these and other projected changes, the library has begun to meet the growing academic needs of City College.

Ethel Crockett

School News Round Up

A proposal by Chancelor Glenn S. Dumke would allow all California veterans who flunked out of high school to have special admission privileges at 19 state colleges next year. The proposal will be voted upon by the trustees at their November 22-23 meeting in Los Angeles.

* * *

All students with a 3.0 GPA in 12 units from last semester and new students with California Scholarship Federation Life Membership are eligible to join the Omega Chapter of the Alpha Gamma Sigma, the City College scholarship honor society. Contact Mr. Wells in E-205h for more information. All interested and qualified students should sign up before the first meeting which will be held at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 5 in the Gangroom of the Student Union building.

* * *

Auditions for "The Great White Hope," second drama production of the CCSF season, will be held from 5 till 8 p.m. October 4th and 5th in the Little Theater.

The large cast calls for both black and white actors. Any CCSF student is welcome to try out for the show, scheduled for production in mid-January.

The play is based on the life of Jack Johnson, the first Black man to hold the heavyweight championship of the world.

* * *

Associated Student President Tom Lai today announced that positions are open on both the Curriculum and Student Review Committees of the Student Council. Any student is eligible for membership on these committees. Application should be made to Tom Lai, at the Student Union building, no later than Oct. 6.

* * *

The Student Health Advisory Board of City College has nine openings for the 1971 fall semester. The Health Advisory Board is a body of CCSF students planning and working for permanent health facilities and health services on this campus. The Board is ethnically balanced with students who will work with the community in which they live. There is a salary of $2.50 per hour.

Any students interested in these positions should apply at the Student Advice Center, E109A, or call Richard Gallyot at 928-8212.

Fall Plans for Anti-war Group

The City College Student Mobilization Committee has begun its fall Anti-war Offensive on the City College campus.

Their activities will focus on building student participation in the Saturday, November 6, mass antiwar marches in 15 U.S. cities (including San Francisco), and in the October 13 local moratoriums around the country.

These dates were jointly called by the National Peace Action Coalition and the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice, the two main ongoing anti-war organizations in the U.S.

The Student Mobilization Committee, with the support of the NPAC, has called for a national student "strike" on November 3, which should be a day on campus devoted to antiwar activities for the November 6 march.

SMC expects to see more Americans marching behind the demand for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops and material from Southeast Asia, than ever before.

Council Refuses to Endorse Student Anti-War Group

A student Council endorsement of the Fall antiwar movement has been denied by an angry coalition of minority student council members.

Jocelyn Won and Felica Cala, student council members and leaders of the rejection movement cited mistreatment of both Asians and Chicanos in the Anti-war demonstration as a reason for the denial.

Won feels that Third World people should be separate from the Student Mobilization Group and other related peace organizations. "We were treated like shit in the April 24th march, we can't endorse a white man's movement."

John Goebel, head of the Campus Student Mobilization Committee, was both surprised and disappointed by the council's action.

"I fear the action taken by the council will appear to be a rejection of the whole anti-war movement," Goebel commented, "We're trying to build a united movement to end the slaughter of millions of Vietnamese and American G]1]'s. I feel they voted without thought."

Goebel feels that Third World people are vital to the anti-war movement. "We want the Third World people in the Fall offensive. I offered a seat on our steering committee to any Third World council member to resolve any hassles, and that offer is still open."

As of now, there will be no student council endorsement of Fall activities. However, John Goebel said; "I plan to propose endorsement again in 2 or 3 weeks, when tempers have cooled. I hope the result is different next time."

Warning! Police Now Issue Tickets to Parking Violators

Campus police are now issuing citations to owners of vehicles parked on City College authorized parking areas that do not display the required parking permit. A ten dollar fine is levied for this violation.

Parking permits are obtained by purchasing an Associated Student card at the Student Union. The AS card costs $7.50 and is sold throughout the school year.

Timothy M. Foley, Chairman of the Criminology department, confirms that as of last Tuesday, 1127 parking permits have been issued through the campus police office.

Three Major Posts Offered

Continued from pg. 1

ciated Students in planning, scheduling, and financing its activities and the activities of other student organizations.

The director of student activities also serves as representative to the Golden Gate Conference, and assists in the CCSF orientation for new students and teachers.

Selection of the candidate for this $19,290-$21,740 a year job will be announced on November 1.

Also open this semester is the position of the coordinator of instruction. The primary duty of this position is to aid the assistant superintendent in charge of the college division with the responsibility for the successful operation of the college in all areas of instructional development and in coordinating all instructional programs.

The applicants for coordinator of instructor must possess a Master's degree and an administrative or supervision credential. In addition, the candidate must have demonstrated teaching experience in curriculum and instructional development.

Depending upon the qualifications of the applicant this job could pay up to $29,625 per year.

All applications and information relating to these three positions should be referred to Mr. Reginald Y[illegible]er Dean of Certified Services, [illegible]isco Community College [illegible] Gough St. San Francisco, Ca[illegible]

Jess Mitford Speaks on Death Trade

Jessica Mitford has been poking her nose into other people's business since she ran away from home to fight in the Spanish Civil War.

Miss Mitford was the initial speaker in the College Hour lecture series last Thursday.

"At first," said Miss Mitford, "I made a lot of jokes about the Necrologists and their 'lay-away' plan, but I soon became interested in it myself."

This interest was the genesis of her best-selling expose of the funeral racket, "The American Way of Death." Much of the success of the book was due to Miss Mitford's acrid humor, a quality she used to great effectiveness in her lecture.

One of the most memorable chapters of the book was the detailed description of the embalming and cosmetic processes used by morticians. (A buck-toothed cadaver would have his teeth polished with Bon-Ami, for example.) This section so terrified her publishers that it almost resulted in the cancellation of the book as well as the loss of her agent. Ironically, this same chapter is now used as an example of excellent description in a college text on prose writing.

Her husband's professional involvement in estate management led him to form the Bay Area Funeral Society, a group devoted to stripping away the excess trappings from the cost of interment.

The author touched briefly on her latest book, "The Trial of Dr. Spock", and the rather devious methods she used to gain interviews and information for the work, including an hilarious story in which General Hershey taught her how to iron contour sheets.

Jessica Mitford

It's been 35 years since Jessica Mitford stuck her nose in Franco's business and she's still going strong. A recent article of hers in Atlantic Monthly caused the capitulation of the Famous Writer's School and she is currently at work on a book concerned with prison reform.

The product of an ultra-conservative English family who believed that proper young ladies do not attend school, her "education" ended when she could faultlessly read editorials in the London Times at age six. She emigrated to the United States on the eve of World War II and currently lives in Oakland where her husband, Robert Treuhaft, is an attorney.

Miss Mitford continued her career as an activist involved in unpopular causes by serving as Executive Secretary of the now-defunct Civil Rights Congress, once a prickly thorn in the side of House Un-American Activities Committee.

During this period she began work on her first book, "Daughters and Rebels", an account of her life in Europe between the two World Wars.

THE GUARDSMAN

City College of San Francisco
Volume 73 Number 2
October 7, 1971

Published by the Journalism Students

MIKE GORDON - spokesman for Christians in San Francisco.

Love Feast at Student Union

City College members of Christians in San Francisco held a Love Feast in the Student Union Building last Friday. Delicious food and catchy guitar music highlighted the 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. festivities.

The feast was organized and presented with the intention of bringing Christ to the people. Michael Gordon, one of the campus spokesman of Christians in San Francisco, explained the goals for the Love Feast and other activities the group plans to present on campus.

"We're here for three reasons," he stated: "To meet and contact people, to present Christ from a real standpoint; to be one with every "Born-again" christian, regardless of previous religious background."

City College Christians in San Francisco meet Tuesday and Thursday at 11 a.m. in Cloud 224. They have sing-outs every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 11 a.m. near the Ram, and meet Saturdays at 5:30 p.m. at 2601 Lake Street to touch and enjoy the Lord."

Anyone who is interested in these activities should contact Mike Gordon, Jim Miller, or Keith Hauser at the regular Cloud Hall meetings or the Saturday night meetings.

Senator Hartke Addresses Rally

By Ed Hartzler

A campus rally, marked by a walk-out dissendent spectators, was the opening event in the two-day Northern California Anti-War Conference held at City College last week.

The walkout was staged by members of the Sparticists League immediately before a speech by Senator Vance Hartke (Dem-Ind) in protest against what they called "class war enemies on the program."

In his address, Hartke compared President Nixon to a man carrying a lantern through a tunnel with a mirror on the end.

"The closer he gets to the end," said the senator, "the brighter the reflection is. But when he finally realizes that there is no way out, he turns and runs past the bodies of dead Americans.

Hartke blamed the state of our economy ("Unemployment in South Bend, Indiana is over 7%), and stated that "While we are a nation that hates war, we are hooked on it."

"Our slogan should be, 'Out Now, Out Now!"

Earlier Father Eugene Boyle of San Francisco's Sacred Heart Church had accused the President of duplicity, saying that "Mr. Nixon is trying to make reality conform to what Mr. Nixon thinks reality should conform to."

The effect of the war on the domestic front was discussed at length by Jack Radey of the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice and Herb Mills of Local 10 of the International Longshoremens and Warehousemens Union, and Popeye Jackson of United Prisoners Union.

"If you only talk about war to workers, they won't listen. Their interest is survival." said Radey. Radey said that other evils, such as poverty and racism, must also be fought.

Also addressing himself to the prob-

(continued page 4)

More Students Run for Office

Two more City College students have entered the Supervisors' race on a slate of candidates representing the Socialist Workers Party.

Jeff Berchenko and Jane Sica are being sponsored by the Young Socialists for Jenness and Pulley, a campus group which is helping coordinate the National campaign of Linda Jenness and Andrew Pulley for President and Vice-President as well as those of candidates in municipal elections.

"Capitalist politicians in San Francisco," said Jeff Berchenko, "are trying to stop all movements that are in our interests. Only the Socialist Workers Party says to rely upon our power and build our own movement.

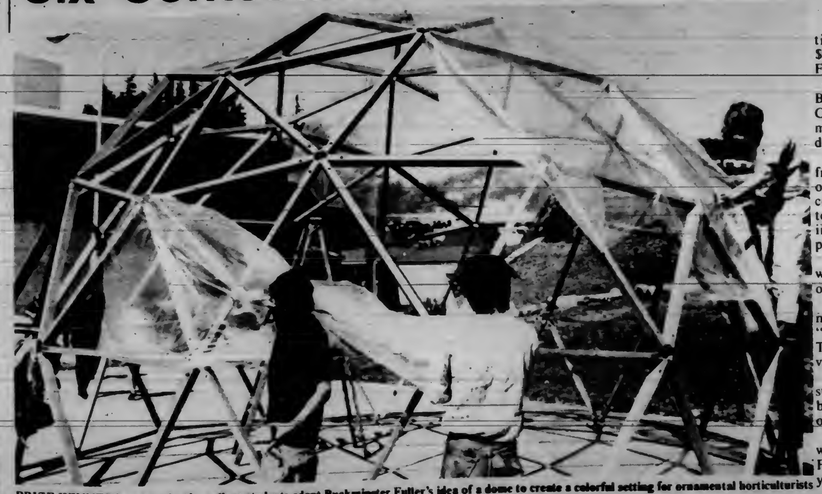
Berchenko called it "criminal" that the city hasn't done implement . The candidates are running on a platform calling for the right of Black parents to bus their children to white schools. Berchenko called the boycott of busing by white parents "a racist attempt to keep minority students out of white schools."

On the other hand, the group supports the boycott by Chinese parents on the ground that minority people have the right to control their own neighborhoods.

"No matter where a child is bused, schools are still controlled by the white business community," Berchenko stated.

Other points on the platform include nationalizing the means of production, including a 100% tax on income over $30,000 and no tax on income under $10,000, improvement in education facilities, repeal of abortion laws, end to police and prison brutality, and end to the war in Indochina and an end to San Francisco's complicity in the war effort (including the right of San Franciscians not to be drafted).

Jane Sica



Jeff Berchenko

Editor's note: As The Guardsman went to press it was announced that Bonnie Sheppard and Tom Ryan, members of the student body, are also candidates in the supervisor's race in San Francisco.

Mike Wong (see story in last week's issue), has been officially endorsed by the City College of San Francisco Sauceda Student Council.

Tom Ryan asked for an endorsement from council on October 4 but was turned down. He received only two votes from the councilmen. Sheppard has yet to ask for an endorsement.

Six Contestants Win With Geodesic Dome

PRIZE WINNERS — Imaginative college students adapt Buckminster Fuller's idea of a dome to create a colorful setting for ornamental horticulturists

Students from the Ornamental Horticulture department won a total of $990 at the recent San Mateo Floral Fiesta.

Ted Johnson, Terry Baldwin, Russ Bryant, Mike Nihil, Ken Parker, and Charles Sauceda captured the prize money with the help of a geodesic dome.

The prefabricated dome was bought from the art department (it was on view outside the visual arts building). Horticulture students added their own design to the wood and plastic dome by installing lights inside and a waterfall. The project was completed in seven days.

Creative landscaping inside and out won the award over 40 professional ornamental horticulturists.

Harry Nelson, chairman of the ornamental horticulture department, said, "The students did an outstanding job. They were practically on their own with very little assistance from the faculty."

The $990 prize money reverts to a student fund in the department and will be spent for books, a student picnic, and other student projects.

Johnson, Baldwin, and Bryant also won scholarship awards from the San Francisco Garden Club earlier this year.

GUARDSMAN OPINIONS, FACTS

Marijuana Bombs Out

The controversy surrounding the legalization of marijuana is now obsolete. Marijuana can not now be legalized in the United States and will probably never be.

In all the debates concerning marijuana's legalization one important fact seems to be omitted. We are bound by an international treaty to treat marijuana as a dangerous drug.

Throughout the years there has been much confusion and contradiction over international controls on narcotics and dangerous drugs.

In 1961, the United Nations decided to straighten out this mixed up situation. The U.N. called a conference for the adoption of a single convention on narcotic drugs.

The treaty adopted at this conference is called the Single Treaty. The

The treaty adopted at this conference is called the Single Treaty. The United States helped to draft it and the senate ratified it in 1967. The Single Treaty definitely, and without any doubt, outlaws marijuana.

The 38-page treaty lists cannabis, the plant that produces both marijuana and hashish as an illicit drug right along with opium, heroin, cocaine, morphine and some others.

In the treaty there are four lists of drugs to be controlled. Cannabis is on two of these lists. Opium is only on one of the lists.

In Article 28 of the Single Treaty, cannabis is specifically mentioned. "The parties (nations signing the treaty) shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to prevent the misuse of, and illicit distribution of the leaves of the cannabis plant."

The Single Treaty leaves no doubt that marijuana will have no chance of legalization in this country. As long as it remains in effect, even an act of congress attempting to legalize pot would be declared void by the supreme court, which has repeatedly ruled that when a law conflicts with a treaty, the treaty rules over the law.

With this realization it would be impossible for any city councils, county supervisors, or even state legislatures to legalize cannabis.

The Single Treaty remains in force indefinitely; a signing nation can withdraw from it after the first two years, if it gives six month's notice.

It is very doubtful that the United States would withdraw. This treaty replaced all previous treaties on drugs, and withdrawing from it would leave the U.S. with no agreement for controlling the international traffic in narcotics.

—Jim Toland

Parking: CCSF's Vicious Circle

Only a few students are within walking distance of the City College campus, many students are forced to utilize automobiles, buses or bicycles to get to school.

A problem on this campus is parking. It has been an unsolved problem for 30 years, because no one has bothered to solve it.

We can solve parking from two standpoints: bikes and cars. We need not worry too much about buses since four municipal buses serve the campus, with several others having nearby stops.

Bear in mind that many faculty members are hard pressed to find parking spaces for their automobiles due to staggered class hours. Some have to park their cars on Monterey Boulevard. Remember that the total on campus student parking, Phelan Avenue parking, and the north reservoir are not enough combined to hold the estimated number of cars students and faculty members drive (around 7,500).

Ban all student vehicles from the campus. They can park in an expanded reservoir. That is, there should be some material placed on top of both reservoirs and let these reservations be used. This would at least triple the current parking space.

The money for this could be paid for by student funds. Student Council could operate the lot by charging a low set rate. It would also reduce AS Card prices by eliminating the cost of a parking permit.

The main probem with bicycles is that it is unsafe to ride one on campus. The theivery rate is so high, the possibility of it being stolen five minutes after you have left it is tremendous.

The bike riders should have a special place (maybe in the reservoir) to place their bikes at no cost. They would then be watched by campus police, or anyone brave enough to take the job.

Another thing that must be improved is our chaotic bus system. It's great that the City College station is served by the "12" "15" "36" buses and the "K" street car. It's not so great when the busses come late.

Case in point: Wait for a "15" at the Arleta stop at 7 am. You arrive on campus at 7:20. The next "15" will get you here at 8:05 which is pretty bad if you have an 8 o'clock class.

Buses are supposed to come every nine minutes. What's going on! It's things like this that can cause a person to drive to school and keep on perpetuating our parking problem.

Our parking system seems like a vicious circle. Or is a triangle?

—Bruno R. Forner

THE GUARDSMAN

The Guardsman is published weekly by the Journalism students of City College of San Francisco as a workshop project in reporting, copywriting, editing, proofreading, layout, typography, and photography. The Editorial office is located in S-304, phone 587-7272, extension 446. The mailing address is 50 Phelan Avenue, San Francisco, California 94112.

Editor — Jim Toland
News — Ed Hartzler
Bruno R. Forner
Sports — Jim Parsons
Photography — Jim Serpilio
Exchange — Robert Forman

Reporters: Richard Blair, Bruce Bosso, Aushim Chaudhuri, C. Csavossy, John Gose, Maha Jaber, Al Levin, Mike Lorenz, Gregory McKeag, Paul Mobley, Mike Slattery, Paul Snodgrass, King Thompson, Oscar Vinson.

Faculty Adviser—Dorry Coppoletta

BATTLEFIELD BLUES: Ashby Gatrell returns to a field of death only to find that he is the lone survivor of a Civil War conflict.

"No Drums, No Bugles" Hits a Sour Note

No Drums, No Bugles, the film that opened last Wednesday at the Vogue Theatre is the story of one man's struggle to remain true to his convictions.

Ashby Gatrell, played by Martin Sheen, lives for three years of the Civil War in a cave in the woods, dodging military service.

The cave is only two miles away from his family and home in rural Doddridge County, West Virginia.

The war rages on, sometimes even encroaching on Ashby's own little sector of the world but he remains unseen, unkempt, and unwashed.

At one time he returns home in the middle of the night, looks at his sleeping wife and daughter, and without revealing himself returns to his desolate cave, a reaction that may have been the only escape from the drudgerous acting of his wife, played by Davey Davison.

It is a solitary and agonizing existence for the audience as well as for Ashby Gatrell, as he struggles to survive in the wilderness.

The movie, which runs 85 minutes features at least 40 minutes of Ashby running amuck through fields, streams, woods etc.

At times he nears suicide, but to the disappointment of the audiences, Ashby keeps on living. The struggle continues and Ashby finds new meaning by chewing a marijuana plant. He then runs psychedelically amuck through the same field.

A ripple of pleasure runs through the audience when Ashby, at the peak of his "high" gets bitten by a rattlesnake.

To the viewer's dismay Gatrell survives the bite and lives to the end of the war and returns to his hometown. He mysteriously dies in front of a church full of hymn singers. This unbelievable, but meaningful scene brings an overdue end to the film.

No Drums, No Bugles, was a movie with a message, the only problem was that the length of the message was too long and all of the dialogue was emotionless and unconvincing.

The West Virgina scenery was beautiful and the animals in the film acted well but the movie needed objective editing.

Clyde Ware wrote, directed and produced No Drums, No Bugles. The movie would have been more versatile if he had incorporated someone else's ideas into the script besides his own.

No Drums, No Bugles, could be a good movie if it was about half as long as it now is and if all of the dialogue was removed.

Kent State Re-Visited

In the two years since the Kent and Jackson State University murders, an enormous amount of money, time, and effort has been expended to find out what happened.

The Scranton Commission, the F.B.I., and the Akron Beacon Journal (which won the Pulitzer Prize for its efforts) conducted investigations of the shootings and came away with the same conclusions: that the National Guardsmen and state troopers were wrong in firing on the students.

While these conclusions are well-known to the American people, one very important fact has been ignored. The FBI, in a report prepared for the Kent State killings, stated "We have reason to believe that the claim by the National Guard that their lives were endangered by students was fabricated subsequent to the event."

In addition, the Scranton Commission found that all Jackson City policemen lied about firing their guns. Although ballistics experts found that bullets found in the students came from the guns of the policemen and state troopers, the lawmen denied that they had fired.

Apparently they wanted us to believe that the victims committed suicide.

The government collected all the evidence, studied it and did what it always does in these situations: it exonerated the killers and refused to open federal grand jury investigations into the shootings.

When Craig Morton, the student body president of Kent State, heard of the Justice Department's action, his only comment was that he didn't expect the Nixon administration to show any regards for the rights of students.

The problem runs deeper than this. If students would shoot policemen and then fabricate evidence to prove their innocence, the nation would be in a state of shock.

When this is done by lawmen with the co-operation of the federal government, the public reaction against this miscarriage of justice couldn't be measured on the most sensitive of seismographs.

When Blacks and students are murdered, and their killers made national heros, the law and order fanatics couldn't seem to care less.

— Ed Hartzler

FEATURES, NEWS AND REVIEWS

The Doctor's Bag

Arnold Werner, M.D.

The Guardsman presents the first in a series. Address letters to Dr. Arnold Werner S-60, 50 Phelan Avenue, San Francisco 94112.

QUESTION: I have heard that men go through a hormonal cycle every 55 days comparable to the female's cycle, causing grouchiness and irritability. Is this true or is this merely a "husband's tale?"

ANSWER: Man and other animals show rhythmic behavior in a number of areas of function, including the emotional. On a hormonal level, there are a variety of 24 hour cycles (circadian, from the Latin meaning "about a day") which correlate with sleeping and waking states. Sleep itself has a rhythmic pattern and often fluctuates from deep states to shallow states of sleep all night.

The menstrual cycle in the woman is perhaps the best known biological rhythm, with ovulation and menses being related to hormonal levels. There are other longer duration cycles in both men and women and women which show themselves through subtle changes in mood and physical activity. They tend to be between four and a half and nine weeks in length and the person might be unaware of their existence. Grouchiness and irritability can be one sign.

Other signs can include changes in the need for sleep and changing appetite. There probably are seasonal rhythms as well, but the longer the rhythm, the more difficult it is to observe. In extreme forms, there are emotional illnesses which occur periodically and, for some people, with remarkable regularity. Manic-depressive illness is the best known.

Knowing one's own cycle could conceivably have tremendous implications. For instance one could schedule courses around daily variation in mood and examinations around season variations. Men and women could have code numbers assigned based on their biological cycles making it possible to find someone with matching undulations by comparing numbers.

"Biological Rhythms in Psychiatry and Medicine," Public Health Service Publication 2088 is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402 for $1.75. It makes fascinating reading.

QUESTION: What is the phenomenon which occurs to make the ridges of the vagina stiff when a woman becomes sexually excited? Is this the same phenomenon which creates a stiffening of the nipples on the breasts of the woman when she becomes excited?

ANSWER: Yes. Responses to sexual excitement resulting in anatomic changes in both the man and women (regardless of body part affected) is due to increased blood flow with engorgement and/or increased muscle tone. These effects are involuntary.

New Improvisational Group Opens

The Illegitimate Theatre is a bright and clever improvisational group now in its' second month at the Powerhouse Theatre in Ghirardelli Square.

Like most improv groups, they work both from audience suggestion and from set routines. Unlike most improv groups, they are able to take any suggestion, no matter how banal, and turn it into something fast and funny.

The night I caught them, these ranged from a 30-year-old college freshman taking a sex education class (after three marriages and countless children) to a re-creation of what might have happened in the theatre — once the powerhouse of the old chocolate factory — during the Great Earthquack.

One of the more inspired bits sprang from a rather somber request for a sketch depicting a son telling his father that he will refuse the draft. Possibilities for humor are limited, right?

Wrong! It was done as the most hilarious spoof of Wagnerian opera.

The real gems, though, are the set pieces. The cocktail party, the 90-year-old rapist, the Russian poet, the neurotic child, and superbly, overwhelmingly, the expectant parents and their babe-to-be. This one alone is worth the price of admission.

The cast (Ray Barret, Shirley Coates, DeVera Marcus and Philip Schultz) is uniformly excellent and it would take several viewings to single out one above another, for their roles are interchangeable from one performance to the next.

A word of warning, however: Don't go to the Illegitimate Theatre looking for seathing attacks on the Establishment, the Administration, or whatever. This troupe is the most apolitical ever seen, and refreshingly so. It's a good, light-hearted evening of top-rate humor.

And they're clean! Even their 90-year-old rapist sketch, "the raunchiest thing we do," wouldn't offend Lawrence Welk's grandmother.

The Illegitimate Theatre is highly recommended for natives and tourists alike. Showtimes are 9 and 11 p.m. each Friday and Saturday. Tickets are $3; $2.50 for students. —Paul Mobley

Philip Schultz, Shirley Coates, DeVera Marcus and Ray Barret comprise the cast of The Illegitimate Theatre, an improvisational review now running at the Powerhouse Theatre in Ghirardelli Square.

Remember David Crosby's Name

Take some of the most beautiful modern music, take some beautiful songs nine to be exact), a slew of beautiful musicians, and the most beautiful album liner in years and you have If I Could Only Remember My Name by David Crosby (Atlantic SD 7203).

Crosby works with members of Santana, Jefferson Airplane, Grateful Dead, Quicksilver Messenger Service as well as with Joni Mitchell, his brother Ethan Crosby, and his colleagues Neil Young and Graham Nash. If it sounds like a super-super group you're dead right.

Most of the selections have a somber edge to them. Some of the tracks are deep enough to lull one to think very profoundly. It can have a very marked effect on most people.

But there is some great poetry in the songs. "Laughing" is quite sad. The words, coupled with a magnificent pedal steel guitar line qualifies it as the best song on the LP. There is also a gorgeousness to "Music is Love", the only commercial track on the album "What Are Their Names" is pacifist in nature, while "Orleans" (the only song Crosby did not write) is a melancholy French hymn.

"Cowboy Movie" is the closest "up-tempo" number in the package. The eight minute song is more of a narrative than anything else, and is the only song Crosby sings solo on. "Traction In The Rain" combines a harp with a guitar in an elegant essay on city life.

There are two instrumentals on the disc. "Tamalpais High (at about 3)" sounds a lot like "Wooden Ships" (that Crosby did with Crosby, Stills & Nash) It has a scat vocal that is also affected during "Song With No Words (Tree With No Leaves)". The final and shortest selection is "I'd Swear There Was Somebody Here" which uses Crosby's voice as an instrument (its done with echo effects).

• Campus Views •

QUESTION: Do you think City College should expand to a second campus?

Susan Megimness — Nursing
I think it's badly needed. It seems we have the largest student population ever had. Besides, the teachers could use the jobs. I just don't know where they'd put it.

Rocio Luna — Advertising
I think the increasing number of students warrants a new campus. I know a lot of people who just couldn't get the classes they needed. The government should utilize they have to build new facilities.

Lance Cochrane — Chemistry
Yes. There's just too many people here. I've been in an awful lot of classes that are unquestionably huge. They are way too big for the instructor to handle. If nothing else there'd be a larger class selection.

Mirian Lorenzen — Anthroplogy
I think it's basically a good idea. As long as the new campus is not used as an experimental-type college, I think the government should supply all the educational facilities that are in demand. Look at City now and you can see the demand.

Bob Faber — Hotel and Restaurant
I like the idea. There would be more of an opportunity for a larger number of people to get educated. Instead of being like sardines we could have room to breathe. I've been to other junior colleges and this is by far the most crowded.

Avonne Southall — Music
Sure. They're too many people here. They should put a new campus up on Mt. Davidson; it has a great view. They're about three times too many people here. A new campus is the only solution.

Vance Hartke Sounds Off

(continued from page 1)

lems forced upon the working people. Mills stated that the major burden of the war rests on the backs of the laborers.

Popeye Jackson, who has spent nineteen of the last twenty years in California prisons, said that while there was so much talk about the war in Vietnam, there was very little concern about brutality in our prisons.

"There is a war in America," Jackson stated, "a war against thousands of defenseless convicts who don't have guns to fight back."

He chronicled the many grievances that are faced by convicts such as brutality and killing of convicts by guards, poor food, poor conditions, lack of job training and problems of parolees ("You can't even get married without permission"), and ended by blaming the corrections officials and politicians for the prison conditions.

"They have money," he said, "For guns and guards, but nothing for vocational training or education, and things that would help prisoners."

James Lafferty of the National Peace Action Coalition defended the stress put on mass movements rather than political action.

"Congress has done nothing to end the war that they haven't been forced into the peace movement." He cited the number of senators who had supported the war but are now opposed.

A recent visitor to North Vietnam, Lafferty announced that the Vietnamese had told him that they were prepared to fight until all American troops have left Vietnam. "I made the same pledge to them in the name of the peace movement."

Spokesmen for the anti-war movement were pleased with the work done at the conference.

Stated Joe Ward of Student Mobilization Committee, "I feel that this demonstration to be held November 6, will be the largest in the history of the anti-war movement."

The conference's purpose was to prepare for the November 6 anti-war marches to be held in San Francisco.

People representing various constituencies within the movement met in workshops to develop ideas and strategy for the march.

STANLEY LEE COTTON - Candidate for mayor of San Francisco visits Guardsman office and is interviewed by staff reporter.

Cotton Comes to City

Stanley Lee Cotton, candidate for mayor of San Francisco, visited the Guardsman office last week.

Cotton, one of the last true soap box politicians, can be found on the corner of Post and Kearney streets where he hands out his one-page campaign sheet in a down-to-earth, homey campaign much like those in the days of the Gold Rush.

Cotton says of himself, "I am a man, a husband, a father, a lover, a poet, a musician, an artist, a carpenter, a painter of houses, a woman, a child, a thief, a scholar, a beggar, a welfare recipient, a pimp, a jailbird, a gay man, a dope dealer, a dope fiend, a homosexual, a freak, a businessman, a dog, a self doubter, a soldier, a seaman, and a cavalier."

Cotton's life has run in sevens; as he spent seven years in the underworld, seven years in prison for being a thief, and the last seven years barefooting and begging on the streets. He is also the seventh son in his family of ten children.

Stanley Cotton was the first mayoral candidate to be put on the ballot in February. He feels that it is a miracle that he is on the ballot as he has no campaign funds and was allowed on the ticket on the unconstitutionality of the filing fee.

"If the two major parties don't open up, a third party will arise," says Cotton. He is running on the theory that the disenfranchized in America must be recognized and represented through personification of the outcast."

According to Cotton, there are approximately twenty-million ex-cons in the United States. Including their families, this creates a block of approximately eighty-million persons, mostly registered in the Democrat Party. Cotton is running on the Democratic ticket in an attempt to open up the party rather than alienate these "outcasts."

Stanley Cotton is running on the theory that promises made outside of office cannot be fulfilled and that voters are tired of these promises. Cotton only promises hope. He believes that his job will be as an integrator and mediator in an attempt to "bring in a humanist approach toward government." He feels that the city needs non-professionals in government.

In a speech before the Civic League on September 21, 1971, he said, "No one here believes that I will be elected the next mayor of San Francisco. No one here believes that the machine vote, the automatic hypnotic block vote has been broken into and literally destroyed. Only when you have candidates who are of the same cloth do you get the luxury of saying that you have the labor vote... or the Italian vote... because people cannot differentiate one candidate from another... a voter will dedicate his vote the way that his particular organization decides.

— Greg McKeag

School News Roundup

The Duncan Company of Performing Artists will present a part of the highly acclaimed San Francisco production "Uhuruh" (Swahili for "Freedom") on Tuesday, October 12 from 11 AM until 12 noon at the Little Theater. This musical plans to go on tour and finally plans to extended run in New York.

*****

A program of classicial guitar music will be presented at the Little Theater on October 14 from 11 AM until 12 noon by George Sakellariou. Mr. Sakellariou, who is considered one of the Bay Area's finest guitarists, will conduct a guitar workshop at City College on the day of his performance.

*****

The City College chapter of the San Francisco Symphony Forum has begun its annual sale of student-discount priced symphony tickets. Tickets will be on sale starting October 4 and continuing until October 29. Tickets are being sold at the School Bank, E207, and are priced as follows:

1) For the full season fof concerts tickets are $36.00, $44.00, $48.00, $52.00, and $58.00. For either one of the 12-concert series, tickets are $18.00, $22.00 $24.00, $26.00, and $29.00. A few tickets for individual concerts may be purchased at pro-rated prices from Merrit Beckerman in Arts 204c.

Student tickets are being offered in most locations, at less than 50 % of regular season prices. Student identification, certifying full-time status, is required both for the purchase of student tickets, and for entrance into the Opera House.

The concerts will be held on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 p.m. and will feature many famous guest artists and conductors. Maestro Seiji Ozowa, the 35 year-old maestro will return to the podium.

*****

Hans Morgenthau, an expert on international relations and opponent of United States' foreign policy, will speak at City College on October 12 at 11 am in room V-115.

Morgenthau's topic will be "The future of Great Power Relations." It will be sponsored by the concert and lecture committee.

★★★★★ Campus Sports-O- Rama ★★★★★

City College gridders enjoyed brief success in the first few minutes of play here last Saturday against Delta College of San Joaquin.

Thereafter the Rams engaged in a nightmare of "give-away" football that allowed the Mustangs to score twenty-three points in the closing stanza. Final score: CCSF 6 - Delta 26.

With 11:07 remaining in the first quarter, the Rams posted their lone touchdown of the day on a 19 yard reverse scamper by Running Back Darrell Mitchell. George Waikola's PAT attempt was blocked.

A second Red 'n White scoring opportunity was muffed shortly after their initial tally after Defensive End Frank Johnson blocked a fourth down Mustang punt that the Rams retrived inside the enemy's 25 yard stripe.

A series of linebursts by Running Back Floyd Coleman, Ed Parker, Mitchell and Quarterback Tim O'Shea took the ball to the Delta four yard marker and a new series of downs.

Delta's defense held for three downs and on fourth down, with the ball on the four yard line, CCSF opted for an unsuccessful run instead of attempting a field goal.

The visitors scored a field goal in the second quarter, and in the fourth quarter registered two field goals, two touchdowns and two conversions.

Cross Country Outlook Good

The CCSF cross country team is off and running. The first meet is against San Mateo.

The returning stars Dave Muela, Comeseau Phillips, and Terry Smith will have to bear the load if the team is to reach the Northern California Championship meet. This meet will determine whether or not the team will advance to the state meet.

New stars Cirilo Morgan and Benito Rodriguez also will play vital parts in theteam's performance. Roger Cribble is out of the armed forces and would be a big help if he should get in shape.

Coach Vasquez said that this team isn't as strong as his Northern California Champions of two years ago. He does expect outstanding individual performances. The team record was 4-3 last year. With this galaxy of stars Coach Vasquez hopes to run away with everything in sight.

A schedule was not available.

Report of Race

Date: Sept. 25, 1971 1st Cross Country Race of the Season

Event: Cross Country 4 mile
Time: 10:00 a.m.
Course: Began at Speedway Meadows at a very fast pace, along south edge of polo field to So. Drive to pond, through sand traps and around north edge of polo field.

There were 214 runners from 22 J. C. Colleges. Some schools had five runners some had 20.

But no matter how many runners a school had only the total times of their first five runners was recorded to place the school for honors among the 22 involved. Here is the order of Places according to their respective times.

School	Time
1. Fresno	1:46:53
2. San Mateo	1:48:16
3. Santa Rosa	1:48:35
4. Marin	1:49:04
5. San Joaquin Delta	1:50:47
6. Diablo Valley	1:50:04
7. West Valley	1:49:52

The tempo of womens sports activities at City College accelerates considerably for the month of October with several important events highlighting the calendar.

Four opponents will be met by the basketball team as it points toward the all-important community college tournament at City College, Jan. 7-8.

Coach Wanda Aitch's cagers seek revenge Tuesday, 4:00 p.m., when they host the Cabrillo squad in what should be a rugged rematch. City's team lost to Cabrillo 23-22 on September 23.

Saturday, Oct. 23, the womens gymnasium will provide facilities for the annual Northern California Inter-collegiate Fencing Competition for community colleges. Approximately 12 schools will compete.

Last year's competiton was won by City College foilers.

Field hockey gets under way Monday, Oct. 28, 3:30 p.m., when Coach Tonako Dawkins sends her stick-wielders against the invading Diablo Valley aggregation.

A womens gymnastic clinic will be staged in the CCSF women's gymasium Saturday, 9 a.m. to noon, participation open to all junior college and high school coaches and students.

The primary purpose of the clinic is to demonstrate and analyse the new compulsory series as now required for competition within the division of girls and womens sports. A question period has also been scheduled.

Sue Conrad, City College womens gymnastics coach, will be in charge of Saturday's session. Admission fee of two dollars has been established for coaches and student tickets will be sold for one dollar.

Abortion, VD Birth Control Help at Center

V.D.? Birth Control? Abortion? Questions and problems regarding these issues can be asked and answered at the student health center in S-190.

"Facilities are available and very open and I encourage students to use what we offer. Come in and talk about your problem," stated Barbara Cabral, student health center adviser.

The health service offers educational pamphlets and treatment referal in the areas of contraceptives, pregnancy and veneral disease.

"We have limited resources in the area of VD," stated Miss Cabral. "Students want instant treatment, and we usually refer them to the clinic at 250 4th Street." The center offers pamphlets concerning detection and treatment of VD.

Birth control information is also available. Women interested in types of control devices and their specific uses, may obtain information at the health center.

Pregnancy counseling is also given at the center.

Barbara Cabral stresses that the services offered are stricity confidential. Any student who needs treatment referral or counseling, take advantage of the free services offered.

The other services available include:

Nursing:
- o Health counseling
  - evaluation and referral to Community Resources
- o Faculty Immunizations
- o Faculty Consultations

Mental Health Services
- o Individual Therapy
- o Group Therapy
- o Consultations

Vocational Rehabilitation Therapy
- Intake and Eligibility Screening

Miscellaneous
- o Elevator keys for students with physicial limitations

The Cleveland Wrecking Company, a popular Bay Area rock group, will perform in concert at the student union building on Friday evening, October 22, from 9 to 12.

All proceeds from the concert will aid the campus child care center and the draft counseling office, which are both part of the student supported Experimental College.

Admission will be $1.75 per person or $3.00 per couple.

Refreshments will be donated by the Coca-Cola Company and volunteers from the child care center.

The Cleveland Wrecking Company dance — concert is the first fund raising activity to benefit student supported services.

Campus Asked to Join Student Lobby

This week City College was invited to join a new political organization — the National Student Lobby. This is a non-profit, registered lobby in Washington, D.C. and is the only national student organization with a tax status which allows it to lobby Congress in behalf of student interests. It has a permanent staff and office in Washington to monitor the activities of Congress and the Executive.

The National Student Lobby was organized this summer by four students from the University of California who were involved in the creation of a successful student lobby in California.

The California Student Lobby is student controlled and financed and has been an effective voice for student interests in the state legislature. On 47 bills on which the lobby took a position, Dick Twohy, the legislative counsel of the California Student Lobby, has claimed a success rate of 81 percent. Twohy also pointed out that the California lobby has concerned itself with a wide variety of issues, "ranging from supporting greater aid to higher education to opposing a state 'no-knock' law."

Using the California Student Lobby as a model, the National Student Lobby will be controlled by students.

French Author Revel Calls Marxism Irrelevant to Culture

Jean Francois Revel, author of Without Marx or Jesus: The New American Revolution, spoke to an overflow audience in the Little Theater this week during College Hour.

Revel told the audience that he wrote the book from the European point of view on the modern "revolution" in America. He said he aimed the book at European readers and not particularly for Americans.

Frenchmen were struck by the fact that a sexual revolution was going on in America. They were impressed by the effectiveness of moratoriums against the war in Viet-Nam, according to Revel.

"Classical ways of fighting... have failed. The European is use to the idea of a coup d'etat — that is a quick and complete change."

"I like revolution," he admitted, "in which I am not imprisoned, and where I come under political power."

Revel also admitted that the traditional family as we now know it is finished. He cited trial marriage, the acceptance of divorce, and women's liberation as contribution to this aspect of the revolution.

The first American Revolution (of 1789) actually began about 50 years before, according to Revel. It began with Rosseau and Voltaire.

He claimed that the mechanical culture had a great influence throughout Europe and that the modern French young are still under the influence of the classical political parties.

Revel accused the Americans of making two mistakes in their modern revolution. One was that it was confined to the counterculture. The other is that it is a pure imitation of past revolutions.

Jean-Francios Revel

He called Marxism another problem in the revolution. Although he claimed to like Karl Marx (but not Marxism), he said that Marxism was totally irrelevant in our culture.

Revel called this the first revolution with nothing to imitate. "A revolution has to be an equation of revolution, itself," he emphasized. In summary, Revel called his book more of an examination of the new relationships between the American new left and the European new left.

He then opened the participated in a lively question and answer period.

The lecture by the French philosoper was sponsored by the concert and lecture committee.

—Bruno R. Forner

Editor Asks for Attica Inquiry

"The Attica uprising represents the highest point of struggle by inmates to be treated as human beings," stated Derrick Morrison, a staff writer for the Militant, who spoke Tuesday on campus in the first of several scheduled forums slated by the Young Socialist Alliance.

Morrison was a first-hand witness to the "Attica Massacre" since he was at the prison on that Monday that saw at least 42 inmates and hostages die and 30 or more persons injured.

During his talk, Morrison cited the mood at Attica which saw himself and many others representative of the community (including lawyers, relatives of inmates, and the press) gassed by helicopters of the same variety used in Viet-Nam.

'Sexy Rexy' Visits Favorite City for Tribute

BRITISH WEEK EVENT — Charles Mannaseri (far left) meets British actor Rex Harrison at a press conference.

Julius Caesar, Dr. Doolittle and Professor Henry Higgins met the press last week.

This assemblage of cinema notables was personified in Rex Harrison, actor, gentleman and bon vivant who is on his way toward having as many wives as the King of Siam, whom he portrayed on screen many years ago.

Mr. Harrison was in town for the tribute being given him by the San Francisco Film Festival.

Nattily dressed in a dark blue suit with white-on-white silk tie and silver pinkie ring, the actor fielded questions from the local newsmen and Guardsman reporters with wit and charm.

The interviewer began, "Mr. Harrison, when you made Midnight Lace with Doris Day, she was at the height of her innocence —"

"Really?" interjected Harrison, and brought down the house.

He was rather confused by the city's current celebration of British Week.

"When I saw all those flags," he commented, "I wondered who was paying for them."

San Francisco, he said, is his favotire city in the U.S. and he feels that the local film festival is regarded more seriously than the one in Cannes.

Harrison made his singing debut in the musical, My Fair Lady, for which he won both a Tony and an Oscar award.

"I took singing lessons for a while," he said, "but gave them up when someone taught me how to speek on pitch." Asked if he practiced singing, he gave an emphatic "No."

At 63, Rex Harrison known as "Sexy Rexy," is still going strong. He recently married again. The stunning 34 year old blond bride is his fifth wife!

Harrison's professional plans include a BBC production of "Don Quixote," with Harrison in the title role, and a stage stint with the Royal Shakespeare Company.

— Paul Mobley

GUARDSMAN OPINIONS, FACTS

Let the High Court Decide

It has been nearly four years since a prisoner in this country has been formally executed for his crime.

